Looking down time, then, our apostle says, "We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Even now by faith, tho' dimly' as the sun is viewed through smoked glass, we see him within the veil, witness his radiance, and compassion and sympathy. His name is familiar to many, but they discover no beauty in it, that they should desire him; often his titles provoke a smile of derision, and those who trust in him are pitied as weaklings and enthusiasts.—"Though we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Were he to burst you sky, we would be greatly solemnized, yet not astonished, as if some strange thing had happened unto us; we would be struck with the inferiority of our ideal conception of his lovely radiance, but after all, we would feel in the presence of a friend with whom we had long maintained, by spiritual sympathy, a close and sweet correspondence. When his arrival takes place, those who have despised his Gospel, and would none of his reproof, shall be summoned into his presence; for "every eye shall see him," "we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ;" but I hazard the assertion that his enemies will not see him as he is; they will be nearly as far aside as those of old who exclaimed, "Away with him, away with him; crucify him, crucify him!" To the avenger—the punisher, is his unusual abnormal character; judgment is his strange act. Only in this aspect—severe, stern, fiery and transient—shall they behold him, but the heaven of radiance behind the cloud—the paradise of beauty behind the waving, flashing sword, never dawns on their purblind eyes.—Night comes to them in the gulf of vengeance; they expire, for "the end of these things is death," as they had lived, ignorant of Jesus; not one of his features ever enchanted their gaze, no more than the flowers, and verdant leaves, and silver streams delights the optics of him whose eye-balls never learned to see. Jesus on the tribunal condemning the impenitent, is the sun in a total eclipse; Mount Sinai lifted for a while to the throne of God. But no such partial vision awaits his people. They shall see him as he is, and therefore they shall be like him. These vile bodies are to be fashioned like unto his own glorious body; we are to be one with him; the members all perfected like our perfected Head. No dimness of vision then; no passion warring against principle; no longer sense against faith; the inner eye opens to the purest light, and the inner ear opens to the sweetest and most thrilling harmonies. By a law of mind, the carnal alone comprehends the carnal—the mammonish the mammonized, and the spiritual alone comprehends the spiritual; in the same manner as the poetry in nature only shines out to the eye of the poet, and is unrevealed to the dull vision of the leaden brain. It requires a glorified eye to contemplate the glorified Redeemer's effulgence; just as when he pilgrimed here only certain spectators had the ability, in virtue of spiritual purgation of vision, to look beyond his weary form, and care-worn brow, to the divine vigor, and exalted philanthropy, that were concealed behind those fleshly coverings. Happy they who now appreciate his excellence and beauty; and happy they who at his apocalypse shall see him as he is, for they shall be like him,—transfigured and transformed, full of eyes, and full of bliss.

For the Crisis.

"God is Love."

There are thousand, thousand voices
Ringing through this world of ours,
From the hill-top and the valley,
From the shady dells and bowers;
From the little opening blossom,
Presage of the fruit so rare—
God is love, resounds through nature,
All its notes this truth declare.

Talk not of his frowning justice,
Of his dark and stern decrees;
Think not thou to win the sinner
With terrific thoughts like these.
Let the silvery tones of mercy
All his tender feelings move,
Tell him there is hope of pardon,
For the Lord our God is love.

He delighteth not in vengeance,
Nor in pain, or death, or wo,
But the prize of life eternal
Freely doth on man bestow:
Soon from off our groaning planet
He will all the curse remove—
Shout, O! earth—rejoice, ye heavens!
Sing for joy that GOD IS LOVE!

A. C. J.

For the Crisis.

Progress of the Strife.

I want to see the throne of Louis Napoleon topple! I wait for it; for if my apprehension of the apocalyptic prophecy is correct, he must (his government) go to perdition before the Lord comes, but, in immediate connection with that most glorious event. I discover that an Orleanist insurrection was rife before he left Paris. The Emperor was aware of the combination which included Changarnier and Lamoricieu, generals of revolutionary note; but made no arrests, for the obvious reason that the knowledge thereof would immediately reach the Austrians. He gave the conspirators to understand that he was aware of their operations and recalled the Duke of Malakoff from London and gave him charge of the home force, consisting of 200,000 men.

The Austrian policy is perfectly enigmatical; since they have not availed themselves of the advantage they had by first occupying Piedmont. It is said that one third of the Austrian army is composed of Hungarians, who, under Kossuth, defeated the Austrians in the Hungarian revolutions. These can hardly be found reliable, when the very approach of Russian forces on the Carpathian line, would be the proclamation of Hungarian nationality.

The "ten kings" must unite with France, if the views which I have published freely, several years since, (in this paper and elsewhere) upon the 17th chap. of Revelations be correct.—Parma and Modena have already joined with Sardinia, and one or two others, making a revolutionary wall in the rear of the Austrian forces. Already an army of 20,000 men, and a million sterling, are at the disposal of Sardinia, [illegible] old man, but does not believe it. He cannot trust the succession. The Pope has made him believe he will not die. "There is," says one qualified to judge, "no government at all at Naples." And the Sardinian ambassador says that he has applications from the populace to enlist in the Sardinian service, at the rate of a thousand a day. From this, it appears that the Neapolitans, the only people of Italy about whom there could be any doubt, would be glad to rise and throw off the Bourbon and Papal yoke. That insurrection may be continually expected and old Bomba, or his successor fly like the duke of Tuscany, or the duke of Modena.

The Emperor Napoleon has given an audience to a Cardinal, who presented that the Holy Father claimed the right to leave Rome in certain eventualities—i. e. the right to run away! He wants a chance to fly—perhaps to France or to America. He will not seek for an asylum again in the kingdom, of Naples, I presume! His flying after this, reminds me of Milton's Devil's Lament:

"Ah me miserable, which way I fly!
Which way I fly is hell—I myself am hell."

The structure, and, thus far, the process of this complicated political derangement, so far as it is possible to gather the idea in relation to prophecy—looks to the overthrow of the papal power, and the breaking up of despotic authority in Italy and other portions of Europe. But I consider the power of Napoleon in France endangered. The "beast power," which is the eighth form and dragonic, must go to perdition as it came from the "bottomless pit," (the abyss, place of darkness or obscurity.)

It is that "willful king" power in Daniel which "shall come to his end and none shall help." The manner of the great Napoleon's overthrow after all his glorious gigantic revolutionary achievements, is emblematical. Much more striking will be the end of this Napoleon; for it will not be the termination of the power of one man (and there is no prophecy to say "it was and is not, and yet is" more;) but the final fall of the dynasty. Now this occurs in connection with the action of the "ten kings" It was against the Italians that Bonaparte came like the whirlwind. Italy he delivered, and called it a republic, and then a kingdom. But Italy and the Pope are a curse to him. Austria was a trap and a snare to him, at last. Not when the shock of the imperial armies overwhelmed Vienna! Not at Wagram, Marengo, Austerlitz, nor elsewhere, that the conquering battalions of France came against the armies of Central Europe; but Napoleon was outgeneraled, and lost his crown. Thus, by some means, will it be with Louis. W. S. C.

Springfield, May 24.

For the Crisis.

Not Orphans.

"I will not leave you comfortless;
I will come to you."

How often has my heart been cheered by these words of the Savior, spoken to encourage his disciples, when they should be left alone in the world, without the counsel and sympathies of their beloved Master. I wonder not that their hearts were troubled, when they knew they were soon to be deprived of His sweet companionship. How often do God's dear children, at the present time, grow weary and long for Jesus to come and end the trials and temptations by which they are surrounded. We feel like pilgrims and strangers on the earth, and long to gain our rightful inheritance, where we shall dwell peacefully, and our enemies shall trouble us no more. But, amid all our afflictions, I thank God that he has not left us comfortless, but has given us His word, full of exceedingly precious promises, and more than all, he has left us the blissful assurance that he will come again. What though sorrows gather thickly around us, and the waves of opposition beat against us? we have God's word to sustain us; [illegible] he has said, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you."

Let us who are looking for the coming King, endeavor to keep [illegible] shining, that others may see [illegible] and be constrained to glorify our Father who is in heaven; for we [illegible] in perilous times, and [illegible] by a well ordered life and a godly conversation, to win souls to Jesus. [illegible] therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman [illegible] for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. [illegible] stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

[illegible]

For the Crisis.

The False Prophet.

Rev. 19: 20.—"And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image."

This description of the False Prophet, identifies him as the two-horned beast of Chap. 13. According to this chapter, it was the two-horned beast that deceived them and caused them to receive the mark of the beast in their foreheads. Hence, when John afterward alludes to him under these characteristics, and calls him the False Prophet, he gives us to understand that the two-horned beast is a prophetical or clerical character. The two-horned beast, therefore, is the False Prophet, according to the Revelator's testimony, and is described by him as follows:—"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake like a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." Chap. 13: 11, 12.

Imperial Rome under the Cæsars is represented as a great red dragon; and the dragon is represented as giving his "seat" (Greek throne) to the beast. The beast, then, must be that form of government that succeeded, or rather obtained dominion in Rome, in the place of the Cæsars; which was Catholic Imperial Rome. Imperial Catholic Rome was wounded to death, and yet lived—his wound was healed—which could only be done by putting the Pope in the place of the Emperor; for no one has occupied the imperial seat but the Pope, since the imperial head was wounded to death.

The Papal Hierarchy, which includes the Pope as head, constitutes another beast in its distinct ecclesiastical form of government. The Pope professing to be the vicar of Christ, appears like the Lamb of God. "But he spake as a dragon"—as an Emperor of Rome. "And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men; and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword and did live."—Vers. 13, 14.

History records, that "in the 457th year of the Christian era, Augustulus, the last of the Roman Emperors, was conquered and dethroned by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, who, at the head of an immense army of barbarians, overrun all Italy, and put a period to the western empire." Thus Imperial Catholic Rome received a wound by the sword, and has not lived since, only as Imperial Papal Rome. The latter being the image of the first, or "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." The Latin was the original language of Rome, but now is a dead language, and yet Papal Rome is made to speak in that tongue. Says a certain writer, "Papists Latinize everything. Their mass is Latin, their prayers are Latin, their litanies are Latin, the canons of their councils are Latin, their decretals are Latin, their bulls are Latin, Papal councils speak Latin," etc. The Papal Priesthood is that which gives life to Papal Rome to make this image speak Latin.

"And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."—Vers. 16, 17.

There are no others to whom this can apply but Catholics, as they alone are marked with a mark in their foreheads. The cross being an instrument of cruelty; and crucifixion being originated by the ancient Romans; it is an appropriate mark for the worshipers of the Papal Beast to receive, as a sign of cruelty and intolerance. Says a writer, in reference to this mark, "Is there any Roman Catholic who does not know what is designated by the 'mark in the forehead'? Is it not a fact known to every follower of this apostasy, that a mark in the forehead is received by all the subjects of the Romish church once every year? Many of my Protestant readers have seen the faithful on Ash Wednesday, which is the first day of Lent, coming [illegible] Popish chapels with a sign of [illegible] with ashes on their foreheads. This mark is received by Anti with [illegible] thus literally is the prophecy [illegible] that this apostate power should [illegible] both small and great, rich and poor [illegible] bond, to receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads." "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six."—Ver. 18.

[illegible] having first spoken of the "number [illegible]

In fact, it cannot mean anything else, as the beast cannot be counted as 666, aside from the numerical value of his name. "The number of his name" cannot of course mean the number of his names; for the number of a name, taken in that sense, could only be one.

The letters of the Greek Alphabet being used as figures, any one acquainted with that language, and with the numeral value of each letter, would naturally see that any name in that language would possess a numeral value, equal to the numeral value of each letter composing the name, when added up. This view is confirmed by the fact that John does not use the words, "six hundred and sixty-six," but uses four letters of the Greek to represent the number.

His number is the number of a man. That is, the numeral amount of each letter of the national name of a man belonging to that government will be 666. Thus the Greek name, Lateinos, is in the masculine gender and means a Latin, or a man of that nationality. It is said that, "Irenæus, the disciple of Polycarp, who was the disciple of St. John, the inspired writer of the Revelation, was the first who counted the number of the beast, suggesting the name Lateinos, the letters of which word, added, make 666." The numeral value of Lateinos is as follows:

L	30
A	1
T	300
E	5
I	10
N	50
O	70
S	200
	666

The author of the book from which we copy the above, says in continuation, "Let us examine the number of the beast's name, taking the Hebrew word Romith, which signifies "Roman kingdom," as the name in question, and we have the following:

R	200
O	6
M	40
I	10
T	10
H	400
	666

The writer uses the Hebrew letters which correspond to the English, employed here. The Hebrew letters having the numeral value which is here represented by the English.

Now, since the beast is known by his name Lateinos, that name expressing his nationality; and as this name is the name of a man of that nationality also; and as the number of this name is 666; the beast can be none other than the Latin, or what was once called "the western empire of Rome." And since the imperial head of that empire received a deadly wound by the sword, it has only been healed by the placing of the Pope in the imperial place. And as he is also the ecclesiastical head of the priesthood, he has two horns (emblems of power), civil and ecclesiastical. And since the Papal Hierarchy, only, occupies the position represented by "the two-horned beast," otherwise described by John as the False Prophet, the conclusion is unavoidable, that the Papal Hierarchy is the power thrice* mentioned as "the False Prophet" in the Apocalypse. Wm. Hobbs.

* Rev. 16: 13; 19: 20; 20: 10.

For the Crisis.

Camp Meeting.

Bro. Grant:—Having conferred with, and being consulted by a goodly number of brethren, I find a desire for a Camp Meeting in the vicinity of Boston. And the Lord willing, we purpose to have one in the vicinity of Boston, Lynn, Lawrence, or Lowell, which will be easy of access, so that our brethren in New Hampshire, Maine and Rhode Island may be accomodated with but little expense.

European movements begin to speak the fulfillment of prophecy, which declares "the end of all things is at hand." It is a time when all ought to be interested in a full preparation for an abundant entrance into the kingdom of glory and rest. I pen this to call attention to the interest of this meeting thus early, that we may select the best spot and have the meeting early in the season. If any of the brethren know of a good place or wish it with them, consulting comfort and economy, near the railroad, well situated, readily obtained, please write me, Groton, Mass. In due time there will be a call from the committee, notifying time and place. L. Boutell.

☞ Do you want a good little monthly paper, full of pointed, stirring exhortations and wholesome instructions, pretty much all corn, very little chaff, something for the children as well as the old folks? Do you want it? Well, if you do, send fifty cents to David F. Newton, Box 1212, New York City Post Office, and get "The Golden Rule," for a year. You will like it, I think. 50 cents per copy. 5 copies for $2. 20 for $6. 100 for $25. Now is the time to subscribe at the beginning of the year, and so help yourself and Bro. Newton, who is fighting sin and wickedness among a host of foes. Go on, Bro. Newton; God give you clear light and rich blessings.

☞ Nothing can be more unjust, or ridiculous than to be angry with another because he is not of your opinion.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 15, 1859.

The Spirit.—No. 11.

"The spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

We have now given examples of the four significations of the word pneuma.

1. It denotes the air we breathe, which is essential to sustain life.
2. A being, either good or evil.
3. An influence proceeding from a being.
4. A state of feeling in any individual.

We believe that all the examples in the Bible where the words rendered spirit occur, when rightly understood, may be arranged under one of these four heads.

When pneuma is used to denote a being, it never represents a disembodied one, or something that has been embodied, and is now existing in a conscious state away from its physical organism. We hold that such a belief is unscriptural, unphilosophical, and absurd. Neither men nor angels were ever known to exist and act independent of material forms, which are necessary to constitute them living intelligences. He talks at random who speaks of "disembodied beings." He might as well speak of riding bodiless horses, or ploughing with immaterial oxen, and feasting on nonentities, and then going to rest "beyond the bounds of time and space."

There is a passage, which may be somewhat obscure as it now stands in our received version, that needs a moment's consideration. It is in 1 Cor. 5: 5. "Deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the (pneuma) spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." One thing is very plain in the Bible; to wit, that the man is not saved when his physical organism is destroyed, because that is what constitutes the man. This one passage should not be so distorted as to contradict all plain Scriptures. Other translations remove much of the obscurity from this text, and show its harmony with that which is positive and clear. We know of no better way to settle a doubtful passage than to compare it with other translations and the original. Wakefield renders this:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan for the punishment of the flesh." This harmonizes with the idea that the Lord chastises his children, or suffers them to be sorely tried by the tempter, that the dross may be removed; then the individual has a right spirit, which prepares him for salvation "in the day of the Lord Jesus." Mace's translation reads:—"Deliver such an one unto Satan to suffer corporal punishment." The same idea as is conveyed in Wakefield. The Syriac renders it:—"That in spirit he may have life." Before his chastisement or "punishment," his spirit or disposition was such that the Lord could not accept him; but the rod of correction has subdued the carnal mind, removed the dross, and now he manifests the sweet spirit of Jesus, who will accept him when he comes in glory. Like David, such an one can say:—"It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." "Thou hast dealt well with thy servant . . . in faithfulness hast thou afflicted me."

Another objection is sometimes raised from Heb. 12: 18–24.

"Ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; . . but ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the (pneuma) spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

It is certain that "just men" are not "made perfect" before the coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead. Our opponents admit this. Paul says:—"Ye are come," speaking as though they were then there, but they were not then perfected in the kingdom of God; "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and THEN he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matt. 16: 27. When speaking on this passage, Dr. Clarke says:—

"The description in these verses does not refer to a heavenly state. . . . In heaven there is no need of a Mediator or sprinkling of blood; but these are mentioned in the state which the apostle describes. The 'first-born,' he says, are 'those who first receive the gospel of Christ, and who are elsewhere termed the 'first fruits,'—the spirits of just men made perfect.'" He says, "We can not understand these terms without the assistance of Jewish phraseology. The Jews divide mankind into three classes: first, the just perfect; second, the wicked perfect; third, those between both. The just perfect are those who have conquered all brutal appetites and gross passions; . . . the wicked perfect are those who never repent; . . . the intermediate are those who are influenced partly by the evil principle, and partly by the good. . . . The spirits of the just men made perfect, or the righteous perfect, are the full-grown christians."

We find no proof here that men have immortal spirits, that fly away to praise the Lord or blaspheme his holy name, when the men are asleep in death.

In 1 Pet. 4: 6, is an expression thought by some to favor the popular view in relation to the Spirit.

"For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the (pneuma) spirit."

It will be observed that those, who had the gospel preached to them, "are dead." Macknight renders this verse as follows:—"For this purpose the gospel hath been preached even to the dead, that although they might be condemned indeed by men in the flesh, yet they might live eternally by God in the (pneuma) spirit." Wakefield renders the passage:—"For this indeed was the effect of the preaching of the gospel to the dead, that some will be punished as carnal men, but others lead a spiritual life unto God." This shows "the effect" of preaching the gospel. Some believed and led "a spiritual life," others disbelieved and will eternally perish.

There is one more passage that demands a passing notice, found in 1 Cor. 14: 32. "And the (pneuma) spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." Paul is speaking about the proper order to be observed in their meetings. Only one should speak at a time, and he should give way for others at proper intervals, which are specified. Wakefield renders this:—"And the spirits of teachers be subject to teachers, (for God hath nothing to do with confusion, but peace;) and so in all the assemblies of the saints." Macknight translates it:—"The spiritual gifts of the prophets are subject to the prophets." This is in keeping with the teaching of the apostle, when he instructs us to be subject one to another.

We have now endeavored to notice the strongest passages which are thought to conflict with the position we have taken. If any of our readers find others which we have not noticed, which appear to favor the idea that there is a spirit which leaves man at death, and exists in a conscious state independent of the material organism, we desire them to forward all such, and we will publish them in the Crisis.

[In our next, we purpose to conclude these articles.]

"In the Day."—Gen 2: 17.

A correspondent asks for light on the expression "in the day," found in Gen. 2: 17.

It has been claimed that the penalty threatened Adam was a moral death, because he did not die a literal death "in the day" he sinned. Spiritual death, or sin, could not have been his penalty, unless the crime and penalty are alike, which is too unreasonable to believe. Were it so, it would be like requesting a thief to continue stealing as a punishment for his theft. It is more probable that the day is spiritual, i. e., a day for a thousand years, than that the penalty should be like the crime. Besides, if the penalty were a spiritual death, then that which dies must be spiritually mortal; and the spiritual death of a spiritual thing must as truly kill, or cause it to cease, as the literal death of a literal thing; so that in either case, there must be a cessation of conscious existence.

The margin reads;—"in dying thou shalt die." Dr. Clarke remarks on this passage: "From that moment thou shalt become mortal and shalt continue in a dying state till thou die. This we find literally accomplished." The Greek of Symmachus reads: "Thou shalt be mortal." Likewise the Syriac, which is approved by Jerome and Grotius. The Arabic reads:—Thou shalt deserve to die." The Targum of Jonathan,—"Thou shalt be subject to death." Vatabulus says:—"Thou shalt be subject to death, both of body and soul."

Had Adam died the day he sinned, our race would have ended there, as he had no children at that time. It is certain, however, that his Creator did not intend he should die the day he disobeyed, because he said to him;—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground."

The grand difficulty in this passage centres upon the little word IN. The Hebrew preposition be, translated "in," is rendered in fifteen different ways, one of which is after. When prepositions are translated, we choose from the varied renderings the one which is thought to convey the true idea of the writer. In this case our translators believed in the immortality of the soul, and concluded that the punishment threatened was a moral death, experienced the day Adam sinned, and hence rendered the preposition be, by the word "in," instead of after. If they had used the latter word, it would have harmonized with all the facts, and made the matter plain. As it now is, with the claim that the death, or penalty, on Adam was a moral one, the Universalist has the argument, when he quotes 1 Cor. 15: 22. "As in Adam all die, (a moral death,) even so in Christ shall all be made (morally) alive," and hence be saved. Their reasoning is correct, if the premises are sound. But we find it impossible to harmonize the Scriptures when we take the position that the death is a moral, instead of a literal and real one. Death comes upon us because Adam, by his sin, became mortal, and hence all his children must be mortal, till the Life-giver comes to give eternal life to all that have obeyed him, and thereby shown that they wish to be his subjects in the coming kingdom. Gesenius says we should render the preposition be by the word after, "where the mind rests more upon the end of a period, and spoken therefore of time already past." This is precisely the case in Gen. 2: 17. The passage shows that the mind of the Lord was resting upon the end or results that would follow Adam's disobedience. Death must certainly follow; but he is to live awhile, and earn his bread by "the sweat" of his face, "till" he should "return unto the ground." This is now accomplished and Adam sleeps in death because he would not obey God.

In Num. 28: 26, we have this preposition rendered both in and after in the same verse.—"Also in the day of the first fruits, when ye bring a new meat offering unto the Lord, AFTER your weeks be out, ye shall have an holy convocation." When the preposition be occurs in the original, we can use either of the fifteen words employed to translate it, which we think best conveys the idea of the writer. In the example now under examination, we are fully satisfied it should read,—"After the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die;" hence we read, "All the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." There the death penalty is executed; and, if there were no resurrection promised through Christ, it would be "eternal punishment;" but as man is to rise again, the first death is only a temporary punishment. When raised from the dead, and found guilty, not for Adam's transgression, but for our own sins, if we suffer the "second death," it is eternal punishment, because they are never raised to life again, but are buried forever beneath the waves of oblivion, and "shall be as though they had not been."

Queries.

M. L. Pratt inquires:—"Are not the terms immortality and eternal life synonymous?"

Ans. Mr. Webb defines immortality to be—"the quality of never ceasing to live or exist. Exemption from death and annihilation; life destined to endure without end." Eternal he defines as follows:—"Without beginning or end of existence." Without end of existence, or duration; everlasting; endless; immortal." The distinction between "immortality" and "eternal life," is so small, that it would be difficult to point it out. It is not proper to apply the term immortality to anything that is not susceptible of eternal life; hence it should never be applied to inanimate objects.

"Does not eternal life, or to live forever, imply immortality?"

Ans. Yes.—He who has immortality will live forever; and he who has eternal life will live forever.

"When Adam was driven from the garden of Eden lest he should partake of the tree of life, and live forever, does it imply that the partaking of it would have made him immortal?"

Ans. If a man is told not to take a certain dose of arsenic lest he die, we infer at once he will die if he does. If a man is deprived of food lest he eat and live, we conclude if he does eat, it will preserve life. Adam is driven away from the tree of life, "lest he . . . . eat and live forever." The inference is most plain, that he would live forever, or become immortal by eating, and is driven away that he might die and not be eternally miserable. If Adam had obeyed the Lord, then he might have been allowed to eat and live forever; or, in other words, been made immortal. In the last revelation from our Savior, he says:—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7. The tree of life here named is in the new earth, as we learn from Rev. 22: 2. If Adam had overcome, he would have had right to "the tree of life . . in the midst of the garden;" and then all his posterity would have been immortal, as those who now overcome, will be, after they partake of the life-giving tree in paradise restored. Those who do not overcome must be forever excluded, and consequently die and cease forever—be no more. Only the righteous will have right to "the tree of life, and eat and live forever."

"Many Shall Run To and Fro."

This prophecy of Daniel is literally fulfilled in these days. But it was not to be fulfilled till "the time of the end." There can be no doubt but that we are emphatically in "the time of the end."

"Signs there's no mistaking, Proclaim Messiah near."

Saying nothing about the lightning speed with which thousands of travelers are hurried over the land routes, the following shows that ocean travel is keeping pace, and rendering its aid to confirm the "sure word of prophecy:"—

The Atlantic Ferry.—Twenty-two steamships arrived at this port, Boston and Quebec, during the month of May, from Europe. Twenty-two steamers in thirty-one days! Almost as many went the other way. It is only twenty-one years since the little Cork steamer Sirius made her appearance off the Battery, the first to cross the Atlantic. She was eighteen days in making the passage. Now it is accomplished in nine days. The arrival of the Sirius produced a sensation throughout the country. Now the arrival of twenty-two steamers in one month scarcely excites a remark. Tempora mutantur.

Emphatic Diaglott.

We have received the fourth number of this very valuable translation. It is not only valuable for expressing the idea contained in the text in a clear and forcible style, but for placing the Greek Testament within the reach of the mere English scholar, who has scarcely learned more of Greek than the alphabet. It is just what the common people need, and is very convenient for those who are familiar with the Greek.

The four numbers now issued include the gospel according to Matthew, the first five chapters of Mark, and most of the sixth. Twelve numbers are furnished for $2.00, or at twenty cents a No. It is calculated that it will take about twenty-seven Nos. to complete the New Testament, with appropriate notes and references. The translator is a believer in the doctrine of life only through Christ, hence we may expect one translation that will show the harmony of the Scriptures on this subject.

Those who wish to subscribe for the work can send us their names, and we will see them forwarded; or they can address the publisher, Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill., including $2.00 for the first twelve numbers.

"Free Love."

The "free love" principles are spreading rapidly, from the fact that they are completely adapted to the natural heart. Spiritualism may very properly be called "natural religion," "animalism," or "demonism." A large number now advocate that the marriage laws should be abolished.

At the Spiritualist convention, in Kiantone Valley, Chautauque Co., Sept. 1st, '58, Mr. Codding, while under spiritual influence, is reported to have said,—"The marriage institution was slavery, and should be abolished. Those groaning beneath the galling fetters of matrimony, should be freed at once and left to bestow their affections when and where they pleased."

A lady said:—"Free love—it is God's law—it is heaven's command." Others advocated the same.

If the virtuous would continue so, let them beware of Spiritualism.

Hungarians and the War.

The Hungarians, who have so long worn the galling Austrian yoke, begin to hope for relief in the coming struggle. Those who have fled for safety, or been banished for their love of free air, free soil, and free speech, are sending soul-stirring proclamations to their brethren who are still groaning beneath their oppressive burdens, and weeping over desolated homes and down-trodden rights. The following is from Genoa, in Italy:—

"Magyars.—The Italians are your brethren! Recollect 1849, when the Sardinian Government, notwithstanding its difficulties, extended a friendly hand to you, the only one offered you in all Europe! Austria will, by a thousand promises, seek to induce you to fight for her. Do not forget that Italy is fighting for her Independence, and that the principle proclaimed by her is also ours. Recollect that Austria, when the danger is passed, will not recollect her promises. Magyars! The Italians and we are oppressed by the same yoke. Brethren in slavery, let us aid each other in conquering liberty. In laboring for the cause of Italy you will promote your own!"

Battle of Armageddon.

Dr. Saml. H. Cox, when speaking of the present state of the nations in Europe, says:

"Is it not general enough to say, that there will be no permanent peace in Europe while the ten horns of the beast, the nations and the monarchies there, continue to uphold that masterpiece of Satan, Popery? Is not the great battle of Armageddon yet to be fought? If it is to occur as the sixth vial is completed, must it not be near? Can it be far?" "I peruse the signs of this time, to expect a roaring procession of thunderous reverberations, mingled with copious blood, soon . . . avenging the impieties of the ten horns there that have one mind, giving their power and strength to the Beast, and making war with the Lamb." "Napoleon III. upholds him! Oh, what a token of perdition to his dynasty! So does the Emperor Joseph of Austria. So does the King of Sardinia—Victor Emanuel, by a grand misnomer! So does the diabolical King Bomba, Ferdinand II. of Naples. These doomed chieftains all give their power to the beast, upholding the most monstrous tyranny, secular and spiritual, the world ever saw, or history ever chronicled, or God ever denounced. Is it likely that their impious conspiracy for the man of sin is destined to prosper?"

War.—Says the New York Herald, when commenting upon the war aspect of the nations:—

"The war clouds that are gathering over the continent of Europe are pregnant with disaster to the financial and commercial systems of the nations that compose the great republic of trade. If their storm can be limited to the plains of Italy, and their effects circumscribed, in the main, to the two great combatants, France and Austria, a partial ruin only will result from the deluge of blood. But if England permits herself to be drawn into the contest, or if, as in a former period, she undertakes to subsidize and to lead one of the contending hosts, the devastation that will follow to the industrial interests of mankind will surpass all precedent in the history of the world."

The best statesmen and politicians now see but little probability that the war "can be limited to the plains of Italy." There is but a little hope that England can keep out of the coming, bloody struggle. Her sky is already clouded with the rising storm.

The following, from H. W. Beecher, would not be far out of the way, if spoken in some other places.

"There is sitting before me in this congregation now two hundred men, who stuff their Sundays full of what they call religion, and then go out on Mondays to catch their brother by the throat, saying: 'Pay me that thou owest; it's Monday now, and you needn't think that because we sat crying together yesterday, over our Savior's sufferings and love, that I'm going to let you off from that debt, if it does ruin you to pay it now.'"

For the Crisis.

The West.

Look here, brother and sister, I want to talk to you a little. Don't sneak off now, like a miser when the contribution box is passing, but hear what I have to say. God help me to say it right, and you to hear it as you ought to.

The West is a new country; rich in undeveloped material resources, and very poor in cash. Multitudes have gone there—with but little money,—paid that out for land, and have been almost penniless ever since. The hard times have come on. This has pressed more severely upon them than upon us at the East. Money cannot be raised. Debts cannot be paid. I have read letters from friends informing me that in some regions money could not be borrowed short of 50 per. cent interest per annum; 25 per. cent was offered in vain, with good security. Many persons there, who are in debt, want to pay but cannot! I have some experience in the matter. Since the panic of 1857, I presume I have not been able to collect more than 10 per. cent on all that was owing me in the West, for books and publications.

Well, what of all this? Why, this—God has children there,—good ones too, and they are interested in the work of God, and they feel interested in the spread of God's truth and the saving of men, but their money has n't come yet. They'll have it by and by if time delays, but not yet. They are good. Some of them we know, they have gone from our own sides. Their religion is pocket-deep, but, as Sr. D. says, "What good does that do, if there's nothing in the pocket?"

Further, we, that is you and I, must help these people. I can't go out there and preach just now. My health is too poor. I am crippled with a lame lung. I have done about three men's work, till it is now doubtful whether I can do more than one man's. I am not discouraged yet, nor inclined to give up, but I cannot travel and preach just now, as much as I have done. But you know I have been preaching for a-while past at intervals a little with my pen; just as I am now preaching to you. Well, I can help these people some in this way. Many there are hungry for knowledge. They are almost out of the book-world; beyond the realm of libraries, or even of flashy novels and newspapers. A stray paper that falls in their way gets read even to the advertisements. A book coming into a neighborhood inaugurates a new era. It is read and pondered, and lent and discussed and sifted; and if there's any thing in it in the line of light, they get it out, and that without using it to kindle fire within two hours after it gets into the house. These friends at the West want books and tracts. The preachers want them, but they can't sell books and tracts there—there is no money. If they could pay in corn, that would do; but cash! ah! they have n't enough to pay taxes. We have less land and more money. We;—you and I, I mean; for we are neither of us half as poor as we might be, or as Jesus was.

But hold—here are documents; let's read "the papers." Here is an extract from a letter from Sr. P——, whose face I well remember among the friends of other days.

"Wisconsin, Feb. 19.

Enclosed is ——. Please send me your Pilgrim Harp. I would not send such a stingy sum if we had more to send, but would send more to get some of your works, which we intend to do if the Lord prospers us. There are no believers near here. We are trying to hold up the much persecuted Truth of God in these dark regions, as well as we can. We have got the "Voice of the Church" and are lending it to the people; some of them think it is a great work. We are scattering other books and tracts round, thinking they can preach better than we can," etc.

God bless you, sister P——, hold on and let your light shine to the end.

Here is another. When in New York, last January, manufacturing a few thousand pounds of books and tracts, Bro. Charles Goodrich called in and wanted a few tracts sent to Bro. T. of Minnesota. He paid a little towards them from his own lean pocket, (and has since collected a few dollars more,) and so we packed a bundle and started it to the far West. Well, by and by comes back a letter as follows:—

"Minnesota, Mar. 8. 1859.

Dr. Bro. Hastings:—May grace, mercy and peace from God the Father be with you, evermore, amen. It is with thankfulness that I address you. God bless you for those books and tracts. I wish I could pay you for them, and I will if ever I can. (They are paid for. H.) When I received a letter from Bro. Goodrich informing me that you had sent me some books and tracts, I felt to rejoice, and yet was sad. I rejoiced that there was a prospect of an opportunity of spreading light and truth, and was sad to think I could not pay you for them; neither could I see any way to pay the Expressage, but by the help of God, I was enabled to borrow enough, and trust the Lord for the future. The Express was $4.05. As Bro. Deyo of Iowa says, There is no use in trying to sell tracts in the West. I have by the blessing of God been enabled to establish a church here of about twenty members, that love the truth and the Savior and his appearing, and we had just got all the money together that we could and sent for a dozen Hymn books; and at the time of your sending, I could not raise a dollar among all the members. Therefore there being no money here, I must give away the tracts, for they are very poor brethren here, and are giving up their tobacco and are getting ready for the kingdom. (Good!) The water is very hard and full of lime and does not agree with us. We therefore drink corn coffee and sage tea without sweetening. We live on corn bread and potatoes and God blesses us at the same time. My trust is in the Lord, and I expect to have all good things, bless God, forever, for no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. I pray for you, Bro. Hastings, and have done so, though not intimately acquainted with you, yet because your father (that now sleeps in Jesus, but will awake, bless God,) was the first I heard preach the blessed truth and also baptized me. I feel for you in your arduous labor of preaching the truth and publishing those tracts which are so good. As one woman said at our last prayer meeting, 'These tracts are so good that I can't see how any one can help liking them.' God bless you and reward you, and give you means to still scatter the truth is my prayer. That 'Voice of the Church', oh, how I love it! I have been trying for more than a year to get a spare dollar to send for it, and when I saw it, I could not help saying aloud, 'God bless Bro. Hastings.' I will try to use the books to the glory of God. My companion joins in sending love to you and yours," etc.

There! how do you like the reading of that? I've got a packet full of letters, and several more of the same sort. Now, what shall we do for those noble, self-denying ones, who, in their "deep poverty," yet strive to make "many rich?" "Who is he?" Well, I believe he is the man that might have been seen a few months since going thirty miles on foot to preach the Gospel, wearing thin shoes and thin pants, and treading through six inches snow into mud as much deeper, while you, dear reader, wrapped yourself up in comfort and talked about going "through much tribulation" into the kingdom. "Well, but who is he?" Do you really want to know? Have you got $5 to send to him? If you have, send me word and I'll give you his address. "Can't spare it!" Oh, you are the man that lives in that big house, over there—just been buying a little more real estate—got more than you'll need as long as you live—ah! well, "Thy money perish!"

Look here, my good sister, don't you wish the price of your new earrings and big breast pin was in that brother's pocket? Say, brother, don't you wish that that V. that you spent for tobacco the last six months was applied to get his wife some more comfortable clothes? Don't you wish, friend, that that money that you lent to Tom Noddy, Esq., because you thought he could give better security and bigger interest than the Lord could, had been invested in books and tracts and scattered all over that western territory, to teach men the Gospel and lead them to the Lamb of God? If you had lent it to the Lord, you would not have felt so bad as you did when you found Tom had "sloped" and his business had "gone up" "higher than a kite" and come down "flat as a shingle." Ah! the good Lord's bank doesn't smash like an egg shell in a panic, or flat out beneath a "run."

Well, what's past can't be helped, and very probably you will profit by it by doing just so again.

To return. These friends at the West need help. "Yes." They ought to have it.—"Yes." They must have it.—"Yes." Who will do it? "Well—I—suppose—we—shall—have—to." Who is we? "Why, everybody." Ah, yes! Everybody is twin brother to nobody and they work in company and do nothing! Who will do this work? "We must." Who is "we?" "You and I." I am on hand for it. I'll do something. "How much?" O, I'm a very modest man. I thought of giving my salary for the month, but as it has n't half paid my traveling charges I will not be so small as that. I've got a dollar though, one that I saved last week riding on the deck of the steamboat and sleeping on a roll of sole leather, with my head on a valise and my feet on a cotton bale. I'll give that to help—yes, and I have anywhere from ten to fifty thousand pages of tracts and books that are ready to send out. Who will pay the postage on them?

What shall we do? Get up a great wind-bag of a "society," with fourteen presidents and vice presidents, that will, as one of the New York Bible societies did last year, use up in salaries, expenses, etc., $16,-000, in collecting and expending, $18,000? Get so much machinery that it will take all the power to run it and all the oil to grease the wheels? Well, we'll think of that by and by. But the "circumlocution office," where men learn "how not to do it," will hardly answer to perform "the king's business," which requires haste. I go in for a hand to hand fight with the powers of darkness. Here is my plan. If you can devise a better one, do so.

1. You hungry children at the far West—you scattered sheep in the wilderness, who really want the work of God to prosper, and the truth of God to spread,—and you who preach the Word there and need every week publications to assist in the work—you who hate rum and tobacco and abhor cigars and snuff,—you who are prudent and diligent, neither thriftless nor lazy, but zealous for the truth, let us hear from you. What publications do you want to circulate? How many tracts can you scatter? What can you do to help pay for them?—anything, or nothing? Where do you live? What is your Post Office address? What the nearest depot, and on what railroad or stage route?

2. You rich men out there, what are you ready to do? What will you do by and by? Can you help if God gives you a good harvest, or will you hoard it all up till God curses you again, for robbing him, with blight and mildew and drought, and weevil and perdition? Let us hear from you.

3. You rich and poor, young and old, small and great, from east, west, north, and south, who are interested in this matter, let us hear from you. Have you any of God's money that you wish used for this work? How much? Is it ready now? When will it be? How much will you pledge within six months? Will you pay your pledges if the Lord will? Do you want to be dunned, teased and sued, to get you into the work? (If you do, don't write to us, we've got too many laggards around us now). Where are the live men? Who is on hand? Come, wake up. The day is breaking, bestir yourselves. Do you want to help preachers who are poor? Who? Do you want to scatter tracts? What kind? and where? Come, speak out. If you will raise $1000 dollars for this object I will pledge myself to furnish at least ONE MILLION, SIX THOUSAND PAGES of tracts in New York, boxed and packed for any quarter in the great West, east, north and south. Think of it! at least sixteen pages for a cent. I think I can furnish more than that, though the American Tract Society, with all their vast capital and great amount of donations, sell only fifteen pages for a cent. I will do better than that, and I'll be one of twenty to raise the thousand dollars besides. Who will be another? and another?

Come, brethren, who will put shoulder to the wheel? I have, I believe, about $50 that I can call my own, which is available; that shall go in if the rest of you will raise the other $950. Can we not send unto the great West a million pages of good healthy Gospel truth this very season? The season for Tent meetings is at hand. We must work fast. I want to begin the printing in a month, if possible, if anything is done. If this plan will work we will have five or six thousand pounds of publications afloat before winter. Do not forget your own localities, meanwhile. Scatter seed all round you, on cars, in steamboats, streets, stages and everywhere.

Brethren, pray over this matter. Pray, talk, agitate and act! Who shall do it? Who will oversee? Who shall attend to the disbursement of funds? Who shall be a committee of distribution and of publication? Let something be done at once. The Master bids us work in his vineyard. The fields are white—the laborers few. Who goes out to reap? He that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal. God bless and guide us all to his glory.

Your brother in Christ,
H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I., May 30, 1859.

P. S. Bro. Grant offers to give $50 towards making up the $1000. He has consented to serve as one of a committee with me. Who else subscribes $50? Speak out. Direct to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I., or to Bro. Grant.

For the Crisis.

Edward Irving.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

The writings of this extraordinary genius, whose pulpit ministrations, thirty-five years ago, shook all England, are too little known. An Episcopal clergyman once told me there were passages in them that fairly made him tremble to read them. We do not recollect in all the books of men anything equal in power and impressiveness to the following which I extract from Irving's "Oracles of God," p. 58. It is a burst of terrible eloquence. Let sinful men read it and be alarmed, for it is pregnant with deeper woe soon to come upon the ungodly.

"Obey the Scriptures, or you perish. You may despise the honor done you by the Majesty above, you may spurn the sovereignty of Almighty God, you may revolt from creation's universal rule to bow before its Creator, and stand in momentary rebellion against His ordinances; his overtures of mercy you may cast contempt on, and crucify afresh the royal personage who bears them; and you may riot in your licentious liberty for a while and make game of His indulgence and long-suffering. But come at length it will, when Revenge shall array herself to go forth, and Anguish shall attend her, and from the wheels of their chariot ruin and dismay shall shoot far and wide among the enemies of the King, whose desolation shall not tarry, and whose destruction, as the wing of the whirlwind—shall be swift—hopeless as the conclusion of eternity and the reversion of doom. Then around the fiery concave of the wasteful pit the clang of grief shall ring, and the flinty heart which repelled tender mercy shall strike its fangs into its proper bosom; and the [illegible] solved in voluptuous pleasures, shall dissolve in weeping sorrows and outbursting lamentations; and the gay glory of time shall depart, and sportful liberty shall be bound forever in the chain of obdurate necessity. The green earth with all her blooming beauty and bowers of peace shall depart. The morning and evening salutations of kinsmen shall depart, and the ever welcome voice of friendship, and the tender whisperings of full-hearted affection shall depart, for the sad discords of weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. And the tender names of children, and father, and mother, and wife and husband, with the communion of domestic love and mutual affection, and the inward touches of natural instinct, which family compact when uninvaded by discord, wraps the live-long day into one swell of tender emotion, making earth's lowly scenes worthy of heaven itself,—all, all shall pass away; and, instead shall come the level lake that burneth, and the solitary dungeon, and the desolate bosom, and the throes and tossings of horror and hopelessness, and the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched. 'Tis written, 'tis written, 'tis sealed of heaven, and a few years shall reveal it all. Be assured it is even so to happen to the despisers of holy writ. With this in arrear, what boots liberty, pleasure, enjoyment—all within the hour-glass of time, or the round of earth's continent, all the sensibilities of life, all the powers of man, all the attractions of woman!"

How awfully solemn are these reflections from one of the heralds of the grand advent! Not a little remarkable is it that the six greatest preachers who ever contributed to the glory and admiration of the British pulpit, were and are pre-millennialists. Robert Hall, with his rare and tremendous power; Edward Irving, with his gorgeous and almost inspired tongue; Thomas Chalmers, with his giant intellect; Hugh M' Neil, with his solemn majesty; John Cumming, with his unsurpassed eloquence, and Charles Spurgeon, with his thrilling oratory and world-wide youthful fame, all lend their well-nigh superhuman influence to this view and preach the soon coming of Jesus. Impressive fact! And is it nothing when such men grasp, and become the champions of, such a faith? And more important is the startling question,—"Is the Lord indeed just at hand?"

No. Wardsboro, Vt., June, 1859.

JEWISH DOCTORS: OR, THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED.—"Now what are the mighty promises of atheism in comparison with those (joys of heaven)? Let us know the glorious recompenses it proposes! Utter extinction and cessation of being; to be reduced to the same condition as if we had never been born. O dismal reward of Infidelity! at which nature does shrink and shiver with horror. What some of the learnedest doctors* among the Jews have esteemed the most dreadful of all punishment and have assigned for the portion of the blackest criminals of the damned—so interpreting Tophet, Abaddon, the Valley of Slaughter, and the like for final extinction and deprivation of being—this atheism exhibits to us as an equivalent to heaven.—Dr. R. Bentley's Computation of Atheism, Serm. I. Bogle's Lect. Ser. Vol. I. 7.

* See Pocock, Notæ in Portam Mosis, p. 158.

The above is but another evidence of the indisputable fact that many of the most learned of the Jewish doctors regard the Hebrew Scriptures as teaching that the wicked will finally be destroyed, and cease to be. More facts may be found in Hudson's Debt and Grace, and others also will be found in The Old Paths.

H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

To the Ministers.

BRETHREN:—I am doing a new work, in gathering statistics. Your aid is solicited. I am sending out several hundred circulars—these will explain themselves and open my task. I began this work last December. Many to whom I have written have done well, others have retarded my work. To such I wish to say that I am doing this work to benefit a great and good cause, and I desire to do it well. A complete list will be put into the hands of each of the four editors who may publish this call. It may be printed,—the names and post-offices, with or without the views attached. This will be as you shall say:—so then give your opinion concerning its publication. And do not be ashamed or afraid to state your views and position. Do not lumber your letter but reply systematically, briefly, fully, and early. Do not shirk from answering as some have. Please do not stop to lecture me on the vanity of my task. I'll take care of that. Do not give me the trouble of sending a second time. Do not guess at names of men or places, state only those you know. Further information in relation to the whole plan will appear in due time. Help me in it but do not hinder, so shall you have the benefit of the undertaking when completed.

For God and Truth,
DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. Wardsboro, Windham Co., Vt., June 10, 1859.

☞ A smooth sea never made a skillful mariner. Neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify man for usefulness or happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, rouse the faculties and excite the invention, prudence, skill, and fortitude of the voyager.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Argo. Advices of the 30th ult.

The Times says the report that M Beuriely is about to proceed from Paris on an extraordinary commission to the German Confederation, tends, according to some, to strengthen the supposition of a possible compromise, at no distant day, by means of Prussian agency.

The London papers of Saturday morning advert to the expedition of Garibaldi and his volunteer corps across the right wing of the Austrian army in upper Lombardy, which has been by far the most striking and successful episode of the campaign.

PARIS, May 30. The Moniteur publishes the following dispatch:

"ALESSANDRIA, May 29. The Emperor is enjoying perfect health. There are but few on the sick list. Weather beautiful: heat moderate. The harvest has begun.

The army is abundantly supplied, and the soldiers continue full of confidence and are in high spirits.

Gen. Garibaldi entered Como amidst the ringing of bells and a general illumination of the town.

All the steamers in Lake Como are in possession of Garibaldi, and the Austrians are in rapid retreat.

Advices from Lugano, dated 28th, noon, state that the Austrians were pursued by Gen. Garibaldi, the former withdrawing towards Milan. Gen. Garibaldi occupied Carmelita and Lucca.

Insurrectionary movements have taken place in the Valethine, and eight hundred Valethine insurgents are now on board an Austrian steamer.

The following advices have been received from Lugano to day. Yesterday evening, after a furious fight, which lasted from five to eight o'clock, Garibaldi entered Como. The combat was renewed at Carmelita, and the Austrians again gave way and retreated.

The town of Como was illuminated, and all the steamers in the lake were in the hands of the patriots.

This morning, an Austrian war steamer in Lago Maggiori kept up a three hours' cannonade on the Canobio, without much effect.

BERLIN, Saturday. According to advices from Florence of to-day, Russia, Prussia, England and Turkey are said not to have recognized the Provisional Government of Tuscany, and representatives of these countries are also said to have withdrawn their flags.

PARIS, May 28. The Pays of this evening contains the following semi-official dispatch:

"The Austrians, 50,000 in number, quitted Piacenza yesterday and re-entered Lombardy."

The same journal also states that England is endeavoring to renew diplomatic relations with Naples, but only on condition that France simultaneously do the same.

In Paris, unless through treachery or private means, we cannot know the truth or falsehood of the war bulletins. No foreign paper possessing the least contradiction to these is allowed to enter. Yesterday seventy papers, principally English and German, flourished on the list of prohibition, and the employees of the Post Office derived much amusement from the bitterness of the claimants thereof.

[Per Steamship Africa.]

There is nothing important from the seat of war beyond further details of the battle of Montebello. The Austrians profess satisfaction with the result.

Gyulai says his loss was 290 killed, 718 wounded, 283 missing. He says the French numbered 40,000, but abstained from all pursuit.

Count Stadion, Commander of the Austrian forces, was wounded.

Some French authorities still assert that not much over 4000 French were engaged. Other estimates say about 12,000.

It is reported via Turin that 5000 Austrians attacked Garibaldi's corps at Varese, were repulsed and pursued.

The country around Varese, was in insurrection.

There have been popular risings in favor of Sardinia in some parts of Parma.

The war excitement was high in Southern Germany.

Kossuth was expected to go to Genoa in about a week, with the full concurrence of Napoleon and the King of Sardinia, there to concert plans with Klapka and others to overthrow the Austrians in Hungary.

The new king of Naples has been acknowledged by telegraph, by nearly all the Powers, and the army have sworn allegiance.

The Paris Debats of the 25th, says the Austrians have twenty bridges thrown over the Po, either to attack or secure their retreat. The first is occupied by a corps of 40,000 men.

A dispatch from Trieste says that about 60 French men-of-war were in the Mediterranean cruising between the Adriatic and the Levant.

A flotilla of gunboats was ready to sail from Toulon, and was shortly to be followed by a second. It was supposed they were intended to act against Venice.

Five gun-boats which could be taken to pieces and remounted, had been sent to Genoa. They were intended for use on Lake Maggiore.

ENGLAND.

The Derby Ministers have issued a strong appeal to their Parliamentary supporters for an early attendance, to meet the opposition movements.

FRANCE.

The Empress Eugenie has received and addressed the members of the great bodies of the State. She said she placed full dependence on the patriotism of the Deputies, and upon the support of the entire nation, which, during the absence of their chosen chief, would never be found wanting to a woman and child. The speech was loudly cheered.

GERMANY.

Accounts from the southern states of Germany reiterate the reports that the war excitement there was most intense. Explanations are said to have been demanded respecting the passage of Austrian troops through Bavarian territory.

ROME.

A letter from Rome of the 22d inst., announces that General Guyon, who commands the French troops at Rome, had notified to the monks of the convent of Montorio, a position which commands Rome, that they must evacuate the convent, in order that it may be occupied by the artillery.

We learn from Rome, under date of the 21st inst, that active attempts have been made to induce the Swiss troops in the service of the Pope to revolt.

NAPLES.

MARSEILLES, May 28. The Vesuvio, which left Naples on the 24th, has arrived with a full complement of passengers, who hurriedly quitted Naples, from fear of a collision, which appeared imminent there. The Court is divided. The king, confiding in his army, is making preparations to suppress any outbreak of a revolution de palais. His Majesty has ordered the arrest of several suspected persons of distinction. It is asserted that the king will declare for neutrality.

TWO DAYS LATER.

The official Sardinian Bulletin says, that the Sardinians passed the Sesia in the face of the Austrians who were fortified at Palestro, after a severe conflict. The Sardinians, under the command of the king, carried Palestro and made many prisoners. Garibaldi was making bold movements in Lombardy.

On the 27th, after a furious fight of three hours, he entered Como. The Austrians retreated to Carmelita where the combat was renewed, and the Austrians again retreated towards Milan.

It is reported, via Berne, that on the 29th Garibaldi was defeated by a superior force, and withdrew into Canton Tessin. The dispatches give the impression that he was making further progress.

The Emperor was about to move his headquarters from Alessandria, and it was reported that he would go to Casale.

The Austrians in considerable force had occupied Bobbio.

It was reported in Paris that as soon as the French had entered Milan, England and Prussia would make most strenuous efforts to end the war.

The Red Sea cable is believed to be successfully laid from Suez to Perim, 1260 miles.

[From the London Times.]

It will be urged that the Austrian empire preserves the balance of Europe. In reality it disturbs that balance, and it is absurd to regard it as a barrier against Russia. On the contrary, the tyranny and misgovernment of Austria are so bitterly resented by her eastern provinces, that they would, probably, welcome Russia as a deliverer. Austria offered no opposition to Russia in the last war, but left England and France to bear all the burden. It is said that Austria is our ancient ally, and how has she proved her friendship? When the desperate struggle before Sebastapol was in progress, she occupied the Danubian Principalities, not to menace the Russians, but to interpose between them and the advance of the victorious Turks. Russia was thus enabled to withdraw from Bessarabia the battalions that attacked us at Inkermann, and the blood of our soldiers who fell on that 5th of November rests on the head of Austria. Such was our friend and ally in the hour of need. If Austria appeals to the faith of treaties we may point to Cracow, seized and annexed to the Empire, in time of peace, without a pretext, in direct violation of the Treaty of Vienna, and in the face of protests from England and France. Neither duty, nor policy, nor sympathy, urges us to support Austria, either directly or indirectly. We have never interfered in favor of liberty, and now we will not lend our arms to absolutism. There are signs that this war may become one of principle, and of antagonism between freedom and despotism. If we cannot strike for the right we must not assist in upholding the wrong. The nation must take heed that it is not unwittingly committed to a part in the contest. At all public meetings, and in every address to the Queen, let the prayer for neutrality be followed by an emphatic declaration that the people of England will not fight to consolidate the power of political despotism and religious intolerance as represented by Austria and Rome.

HUNGARY.—The intelligence which reaches me from Hungary is so alarming that I cannot venture to repeat it. The discontent and disaffection of the people increase from day to day, and it hardly admits of a doubt that there will, sooner or later, be serious disturbances if some concessions are not made to them.—Vienna Correspondent.

ATLANTIC CABLE

The negotiations between the English government, the Atlantic Telegraph Company, and the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company have reached a point which admits of no doubt about the Government's guarantee of 8 per cent. on the £600,000 capital being accepted. In view of this fact, as we learn from the same reliable source, the Atlantic Company are actively engaged in making the most thorough tests of the various kinds of cable adapted to the Atlantic line, and will be prepared to enter into the necessary contracts at an early day.

In the meantime the Company have decided to expend a sum not exceeding $100,000 to resuscitate the present cable, and active operations to this end will be commenced as soon as the weather will permit.

The heavy battery of Mr Henly, which arrived at St. Johns, N. F., late last Fall, has not yet been sent to the telegraph station at Trinity Bay, owing to the ice, but will be in position within the next few weeks or days.

The Atlantic Company will not attempt to lay the new cable until July of next year. 1860.

Married.

In Waterbury, Ct., June 6th, 1859, by Eld. J. W. Crabtree, Mr. GILBERT L. RICE of Springfield, Mass., and Miss CAROLINE E. HINMAN, of the former place.

In Tunbridge, June 7th, by Eld. Allen Cleaveland, Mr. JAMES M. DENSMORE of Hartland, and Miss MARTHA M. LYMAN of Royalton, Vt.

Notices, &c.

Conference in R. I.

The next meeting of the Conference in this State, is to be held at Carolina Mills, Wednesday, June 29th, 1859. Let all who come to take part in business come on that day, so that we may be able to do our business up at once, so as to have more time to devote to "prayer" and "preaching the word." We hope all will see the importance of this.

JOSEPH D. BROWN.

Notice.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd would say to churches that desire his labors, that he will visit them, as they shall request, the Lord willing. His address is 69 State St., Newark, N. J.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a quarterly conference holden with the Church of God in Springville, Bad Axe County, Wis., to commence on Friday, June 24th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Lord's day. As this is a new field, in which the harvest is great, we hope that all the way-worn pilgrims that can, will attend this convocation and participate in comforting each other. We especially solicit our preaching brethren to attend that can do so.

Y. HIGGINS, Evangelist.

Notice.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF ADVENTISTS IN MAINE, will be held at Lincolnville Corner, commencing June 23d, Thursday, P. M., at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Several places have been mentioned for it, but this seems to be the most central and easy of access for the greatest number. Those who think of attending from the West, should give notice of their intention, that carriages may be ready for them at Camden Harbor, where they will land six miles from the meeting. They can come from Boston, or Portland, by steamer Daniel Webster, to Camden, and call on Bro. Blanding, near steamboat wharf, arriving Thursday morning, in season for the meeting. Others from various parts of the State will come by such conveyances as may be had, and call on Bro. George McKenny at Lincolnville. We hope all Advent ministers in Maine, who wish to labor in the union and fellowship of the Gospel, for the good of the cause of our coming Lord, will come to this meeting. And as many other brethren and sisters as can well do so, come to pray, labor, advise, and counsel, unitedly, for the salvation of the lost, and the upbuilding of the saints, by spreading abroad the great truths of the Gospel.

N. SMITH, Moderator.
[illegible], Scribe.

Richmond, (Me.) May 21.

Notice of Dedication at Union Mills, Indiana.

The church edifice now in the way of completion in this place, it is expected will be dedicated on Saturday, June 18th, when the church will be pleased to see as many churches and brethren of the region present, as can find it convenient to come. It is hoped to see a number of ministering brethren present on the occasion. Let us pray for a profitable season.

P. B. MORGAN.

Union Mills, Ind.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday,........June 19th

Eld. S. W. Bishop will preach in Auburn, N. H.,................Sunday, June 12th
Epping, N. H., (eve. or at 5 o'clock).....June 14th
Lee, N. H., (as above)..................June 16th
Great Falls, N. H.,.....................June 17th
Dover, N. H.,..........................June 19th

Hold a Grove meeting in Chichester, N. H., Sunday, June 26th.

Danbury, N H, Saturday, P. M, July 2d and the Sunday following.

I will preach at Blackstone, or Chesnut Hill, Mass., as Bro. Bellows may direct, on the 3d Sabbath in June. If they are supplied then, they may write me at Pawtucket, R. I. JACOB BLAIN.

Eld. L. Boutell will preach in
Harvard, Mass.,..........................July 3d,
(where Brn. Withington and Rogers may appoint.)

Eld. J. Couch will preach at
Salem, Mass.,..........................June 19th
Portland, Me.,.........................June 26th

S. C Hancock will preach in East Otis,....................Sunday, June 26th

Eld. T. S. Canfield will preach in Chester Factories, Mass.,..............June 19th
Goshen,................................June 21st
Plainfield Pond,.......................June 26th
Bancroft,..............................June 29th

APPOINTMENTS FOR BRISTOL, CT.

Eld. S. S. Brewer......................June 19th
Eld. George Champlin....................July 3d

J. H. SUTLIFFE.

Eld. J G Smith appoints to preach in
Tuftonboro, N. H.......................June 19th
Danbury, N. H..........................June 26th

Eld. C. Goodrich appoints to preach in
Bancroft, Mass.........................June 19th
Chester Factories,.....................June 22d
Goshen, Mass.,.........................June 26th

Eld. Babcock appoints to preach in Springfield, (at Hubbard's Hall)........June 19th

Eld. J B Cook appoints to preach in Norwalk, O. (as Brn. may appoint).......June 18th

Eld. J K Bellows appoints to preach in Hampden, Ct., (at Bro. Dunan's).........June 19th
Fairhaven, Ct.,..................June 20th, 21st
West Haven, Ct.,.................June 22d, 23d
Bridgeport, Ct.,.......................June 26th

W. L. Blanchard appoints to preach in Plymouth Hollow, Ct.,..........June 19th and 20th
Northfield, Ct.,...............June 21st and 22d
South Farms, Ct.,......................June 23d

B. Locke will preach at
Danbury,.....................Sunday, June 19th,
(where the brethren may appoint.)

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

E. Bellows—The book will be out in the course of the summer.

D. Hull—There is no opening here for you.

Cash Receipts.

W Pittsinger 196 $3.00, H Raymond 222, $2.42, B F Kelsey 190 $1.50, P T Watson 208 $1.36.

N Cole 195, A Healey 208, I Case 208, H Austin 208, A F Servis 208,—50 cents each.

J Green 221, E Watson 201, A Gatchell 221, J H Sleeper 192, A H Watson 221, S Losey 222, J N Smith 221, J M Andrews 156, I McCandis 221, A Lawrence 162, J H Piper 218, E B Stearns 221, D B Pierson 174, J M Sanborn 221, H A Lord 204, E Morse 221, T Lewis 221, M H Irish 221, T C Taylor 220, J C Young 221, Eld. T Tripp 222, H Babcock 225, B H Couch 190, W. Freeman 222,—$1.00 each.

W C Pike 247, G Gould 182, N Hayden 208, E Allen 208, W Allen 241, Jasp. Stone 168, E G Osgood 208, S Walker 212, J Canterbury 196, E Redding 229, L Burgess 234, S B Gowell 246,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—A H Watson $1.00, E Allen 80 cts, J M Sanborn 32 cts, E L Briggs 24 cts, C B Walker 68 cts, A F Servis $1.50, J C Young $1.00, A Cole 60 cts. W Harriman 24 cts.

E Allen, for the poor, $2 20.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; [illegible] Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the [illegible] of the present day. Price [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong; or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single, 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St. New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: [illegible] designed for public and private worship. Selected by J. V. Himes. Price [illegible] per dozen. Pocket edition, [illegible].

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid, $1.50.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with camp-meetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By MRS. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $2.00 per hundred,—3 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $2.00 per hundred; 3 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 20 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 3c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, [illegible] $4 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the ... of Man; by Lambert. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by M. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 128 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos., which can be separated for distribution. The set contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, [illegible] 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, [illegible]; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are [illegible] that can be separated for distribution. [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another, [illegible] Resting Place; three, My [illegible] Love; five, Abounding Grace; [illegible] Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that [illegible] and sin are to end in the universe by a final destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 3 cts. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms: or, the Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $8.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above [illegible] of our agent in Portland, [illegible] street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. [illegible] Harp, by Elder [illegible] Children, [illegible] Great Controversy.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

The Return of the Blue Bird.

I.

[illegible] blue bird, messenger of spring,
With thee all nature seems to sing;
Thou prophet of the bursting buds,
And dancing streams and swelling floods;
With thee the harmonies of earth
[illegible] like living birth;
[illegible] heart with joy to-day,
[illegible] song of leafy May.

II.

I almost scent the perfumed gale,
[illegible] wafts from every vale;
Although yon hills are tipped with snow,
And passing storms still murmur low,
Thy swells of song bid fear depart,
That winter wove around my heart;
[illegible] with pulses new and strong,
Wells up to Him who gave thee song.

III.

Thou hast come from a sunny clime,
To greet me with thy merry chime,
So full, and soft, and sweet, and clear,
This lonely heart of mine to cheer;
Thou welcome here, thy strains prolong,
Thou hast no sorrow in thy song;
Secure from winter's storm or summer's heat,
No hand shall harm thee in this safe retreat.

S. A. W.

West Winsted, Ct.

For the Crisis.

The Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

BY P. B. MORGAN.

The character of Christ as a person of the eternal God-head, is one of the most profound subjects mankind has ever been permitted to contemplate. A subject, before which, the grasp of metaphysics and the subtleties of logic, are alike tame and powerless. It is a theme so vast and incomprehensible, that all efforts of unaided human reason to weigh the subject seem put at utter defiance; and the proud intellect, when it has ascended in the scale of human reason until it has reached the dizzy hights of the uppermost pinnacle, makes haste to return and congratulate itself that, with the aid of inspiration, it may exclaim—"great is the mystery of godliness." But, because mysterious, it becomes none the less real or precious; for, in the grand laboratory of nature, how much there is mysterious! but for which none think of calling in question its sublime realities. And let us rejoice, too, that the light of revelation comes to our aid where the light of reason fails us. Revelation enables us to look as through a celestial or divine telescope, ont upon this wonderful subject, although even then we are again compelled to feel, "great is the mystery of godliness!" Upon this word—this infallible word—the christian may plant his feet, and feel himself on an imperishable rock. Setting aside then the chimera of unaided reason and the vain dreams of spiritual diviners, we should confine ourselves, protestant-like, to the plain "thus saith the Lord."

In the beginning, we read—"And God said, let us make man in our own image, after our likeness."—Gen. 1 : 26. If this rendering be correct—and we believe it is, all the vigorous efforts of criticism to the contrary notwithstanding, then we have at the very outset a positive intimation of a plurality of persons in the God-head. The word Jehovah, (or Yahveh,) as used in the Old Testament, offers another and incontestable proof, not merely of the fact that there was a plurality of persons in the God-head, but further, that one of these persons should some time appear—as the deliverer of man—on the earth. But it is not until we turn to the New Testament, that we find this matter fully defined. Thus we read in the address of the angel to Mary; —"The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee. Therefore also that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."—Luke 1 : 35. In this announcement, we have the first declaration of the relation, He, who was to come, sustained to the God-head,—namely, that of Son. The same being yet more impressively declared upon the occasion of His baptism,—the Holy Spirit descending like a dove and lighting upon him,—"This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." —Matt. 3 : 12. From this fact some have labored to show that our Lord Jesus Christ could not be co-eternal, and co-equal with God the Father and Holy Ghost. But this we do not perceive. Although announced of that holy thing that should be born of the virgin, that he should be called the Son of God, yet it does not follow that in his superior nature, or essence, he was not of the very and eternal God. Indeed this we understand to be implied in the very fact, that he was that "Holy Thing" conceived of the Holy Ghost, and not of man, although born in the flesh, and possessed with all the essential elements and attributes of man. So also, we reason from the very fact that he is the Son of the Highest. According to the laws of generation, it is to be supposed of any person that he is possessed of the common nature and essential attributes of him by whom he was begotten. So that if it be conceded of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he was truly the Son of God—begotten of God—the argument we deem incontestable, that he was possessed of the nature and attributes of God—very God. [illegible] proof that our Lord Jesus Christ was possessed of the divine nature and attributes of God, we should deem this sufficient, and especially so, considering there is no intimation in the Scriptures to the contrary. But here we are not left. Thus we read again: —"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made. In Him was life, and the life was the light of men." "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."—John 1 : 1–4, 14. A clearer statement or more positive proof of this doctrine, could hardly be desired. Be it remembered such is the declaration and mind of the Spirit. Let us notice this argument again as stated in vers. 1 and 14. (1.) "In the beginning was the Word, and (2.) the Word was with God, (3.) and the Word was God; (4.) and the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (5.) and we beheld His glory, (6.) as of the only begotten of the Father, (7.) full of grace and truth." As further proof that the expression Word which is here said to be God, and which was made flesh and dwelt among men, is put for the person of Christ, we refer to Heb. 1 : 1, 2. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the Fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." In the former passage it was said of the Word—"All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made." "And the word was God." So Isaiah, many generations before angels and men rejoiced over the new born Savior of Bethlehem, sung in prophetic story:—"Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, [or Father of the everlasting age,] the Prince of Peace."—Isa. 9 : 6.

But let us listen to Him who spake as never man spake; Him who was made flesh and dwelt amongst men. "I and my Father are one."—John 10 : 30. And again, in chap. 17 : 11, 22, He prays the Father for those composing the church, "that they may be one even as we are one." Those taking an ex parte view of this subject, may attempt to prove by this passage that as the church cannot be one in person, so these passages weigh nothing in favor of our position; to wit, that Christ is God, equal in power and glory with the Father, altho' in the Sonship subordinate, as a Son. But this does not follow insomuch as it is not our effort to prove that God is one in person, but one in his nature and attributes. And this we as readily affirm of the church. Not as one in person or even in visible unity, but one in the mystical body of Christ—which is one body—not many bodies;—in nature and all essential attributes, one. So is God—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost—one God. Hence, He again says, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."—John 14 : 9. So also testify other portions of Scripture. Thus in Titus 1 : 3; 2 : 10, and elsewhere, He is called "God our Savior." But is it objected to this, that the appellative God must apply to the Father? Let us read again; —"But unto the Son He saith, Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever."—Heb. 1 : 8, So also in 2 Cor. 5 : 19, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." And again; 1 Tim. 3 : 16, "God was manifested (Marg.) in the flesh; justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."

Of the candid inquirer we ask, could the Scriptures possibly be more explicit and positive than are these passages?

Again, as Lord, it is said of him, "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit Thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts 2 : 34–5. See also Heb. 1 : 13. It was said of Christ to John the Baptist,—"Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his way."—Luke 1 : 76. And in Rev. 14 : 14, it is said of the Lamb—"He is Lord of lords, and King of kings." As Lord, therefore, we do him homage as one, and equal, with the Father.

Again. We come to this conclusion because He is represented in the Scriptures as an object of worship equally with the Father—before both angels and men. Of the Magi it is written—"Where is He that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the East, and are come to worship him." Of the Apostles it is written, "they worshiped him."—Matt. 28 : 17. And of the angels—those superior, holy, beings it is said;—"When He bringeth in the first begotten into the world, He saith, and let all the angels of God worship him." Heb. 1 : 6. So likewise Peter in his second epistle 3 : 18, ascribes to Him glory as to God—"But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To Him be glory, both now and forever. Amen."

The same thing is likewise implied in the apostolic benediction. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."—Rom. 16 : 24. And again, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen." 2 Cor. 13 : 14. Although the term God is here applied to the person of the Father only, yet the blessing of the three persons is equally bestowed in the benediction; so that in bestowing blessings, Christ is one and equal with the Father.

Once more We come to this conclusion from the fact that Jesus is exalted, and has given to him "a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth;" Phil. 2 : 10, 11;—"and to be the head over all things to the church."—Eph. 1 : 21, 22. Not above God the Father, but as one and equal with Him in power and glory. Hence, our Lord says—"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."—Matt. 28 : 18.

If these passages do not clearly teach the doctrine in question, it certainly must be conceded they go far toward it, [look very much that way] and if this be not their meaning, we apprehend it will be difficult to determine what they do mean.

But to recapitulate, we say, then, briefly, our reasons for receiving and worshiping Christ as one with the Father and Holy Ghost are these:—

1. The fact that the first annunciation of the being of God was in a manner implying a plurality of persons. For further proof of this, see criticism on Elahim.

2. Because Christ was that Holy thing conceived of the Holy Ghost.

3. Because as a Son—being begotten by the Father—He must nevertheless by the immutable laws of generation have possessed the nature of Him by whom he was begotten; that is to say, God.

4. Because he was worshiped by the Magi, by the apostles, and by the angels—while the Scriptures everywhere assert that God is the only proper object of worship. To worship anything else is sacrilege. Hence Christ is God.

5. Because He hath been exalted above every name that is named: therefore He must be God, or else possess a name above the name of God. But as there is no name above the name of God, therefore we conclude Christ is God.

6. Because all power in heaven and earth is given to Him. This we call Almighty power—an attribute of God only: hence Christ is God.

7. Because in the beginning was the Word which became flesh and dwelt among men—in the person of Christ; corresponding with the pronoun us used in our first argument, (Gen. 1 :) and likewise with the saying of Christ (John 17 : 5.)—"The glory I had with Thee [the Father] before the world was."

8. Because the Word that became flesh and dwelt among us, "the Scriptures of truth declare, "was God."

9. The fact that He is equally Lord with God the Father, shows that in rank, He is one with God—"Lord God."

10. Because He says—"I and my Father are one."

11. Because He declares—"Whosoever hath seen me hath seen the Father."

12. Because the Scriptures so often declare He is God.—John 1 : 1–4, 14; 2 Cor. 5 : 19; 1 Tim. 3 : 16; Titus 1 : 3; 2 : 10; Heb. 1 : 8

Added to these reasons, we may say first, we come to this conclusion because we know of no system of hermeneutics by which we can honestly make any other disposition of these passages than that we have made. And second, we the more readily do this, because with any other view we fail to perceive how Christ had any pre-existence, or was anything but a man—now raised from the dead and glorified. And finally, because we dare not trust in any short of an Almighty Being to accomplish the salvation our fallen nature demands.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 1.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

TO THE READER.

Having been invited by the editor to contribute something for the pages of the Crisis, I have, after careful consideration, selected the above title, under which it is my intention to write a series of short articles illustrating some of the most important scenes connected with sacred history. The above subject has been selected to give occasional employment to my humble pen, because, from a child, it has been my delight to linger in imagination around those scenes hallowed by the deeds of holy men, the footsteps of the Redeemer, or the woodrous miracles of Jehovah. And, further, because, in this age of wondrous wisdom, the many have come to regard the Bible as an obsolete book, as something too old fashioned to receive a careful consideration at their hands.

I have long regretted to see the growing disinclination on the part of the rising generation, to read the Book of books; hence, it will be my earnest endeavor to interest the younger portion of my readers, and point out in my humble way, some of the sacred scenes so glowingly described by the inspired penman.

I have no ambition to add any polish of my own to those descriptions of the bards and historians of the olden time, for that would be as vain as the attempt to paint the flowers of God's planting with new beauties, or to add lustre to the orbs that illuminate the dome of heaven.

The history of the Bible is a marvelous one—its scenes transcend the loftiest flight of the poet's fancy. It ranges through all time both past and future. If we turn to the past, we are conducted to that wonderful epoch when light first drove chaos from his throne of darkness. Thence we are led along through the ages as we view the development of earth's history. The resplendent beauty of primeval Paradise, the scene of man's transgression, his after life of care, the world's folly, and its destruction by a flood of waters. The peopling anew of the earth, the establishment of empires, and their wars, the wonderful dealings of God with his people Israel, and, more glorious than all, the first advent of the Redeemer, his holy life, his death, and triumphant victory over the grave, the establishment of the church, and its long and bloody persecutions. And then in prospective, the final triumph of the church, the renovation of the earth, and the reign of Christ with his chosen people. All these scenes and many others pass in review and fill with rapture the devoted student, who bends in awe and reverence over the inspired page.

Hackensack, N. J.

For the Crisis.

Lines on the death of a Friend's Child.

Thou'rt gone from us, our beautiful,
Thou'rt sleeping in the dust,
And our very souls are sorrowful
O'er thy unconscious rest.

Our heart strings have been severed,
And they quiver yet with pain;
And our bosoms throb so wildly
At the mention of thy name.

How oft in heart we wander
When the moonbeams shine so pale,
And bend above thy resting place,
In yonder distant vale.

The summer dews fell lightly
Around thy dreamless bed,
And winter drew his mantle
Above thy sinless head.

We'll leave thee with the Savior,
He'll bring thee yet again;
We did not fear to lay thee
Where Christ our Lord had lain.

But, oh! our hearts still miss thee,
The tear of grief will start,
Death leaves a wounded bosom
Where'er he aims his dart.

Oh, Savior and Redeemer,
Prepare us for thy reign,
When we with thee in glory
Shall find our lost again.

MARY E. WEST.

Selections.

A Word to those who seek entire Conformity to the will of God.

BY REV. C. LAREW, OF THE NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE.

You would choose for your happy and everlasting motto, "Holiness," or "wholeness," to the Lord.

Then, first of all, you will dedicate all to him. Not but what all you have is his, and has been from the beginning, but you have not so regarded it. You have taken your portion and gone your way heretofore, wasting your father's gifts in selfish living. Let all this cease at once; and let it be your language, the language of your heart, "What wilt thou have me to do?" In a word, consecrate all to your Heavenly Father. How will you do this? We answer,—consent and decide that all, whether act, word, thought, desire, or possession, shall be not as self, or men may will, but as God wills. This, you say, I have tried to do, again and again. Doubtless you have, and done it acceptably, too. But here you halted; you did not believe. Believe what? you ask. I answer,—the word of God to you at that point. That word is that He "accepted" and "received" you. Hear Him,—"Be ye separate and I will receive you." You separated yourself, "presented yourself a living sacrifice;" but did not believe, on the assurance of His word, that you were accepted. No, you waited for some sign, some sensible manifestation, to come up in your feelings, to assure you that all was received, thus making some preconceived emotion the ground of your faith. God does not say, faith cometh by feeling, joyous, peaceful, or otherwise, else you would be right in expecting it to rise and inspire you with faith. Nay, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Therefore, when you consecrate all, as well as you are enabled, you have God's word for the fact that He "receives you." This faith will inspire you with feelings of peace, gladness, and great quiet and power of soul. In God's order, faith gives rise to feelings, and not feelings to faith, as you have erroneously supposed. Hence, you may take God's word and rest upon that. There is no error in this. It is the only way of success, and has been tried and proved by hundreds, after having struggled and floundered in this same error.

To illustrate: suppose the Lord had said, in his abiding word, "If any man will place twelve stones upon the earth, and put a lamb thereon, and burn it to ashes, I will receive him, and be a father unto him, and he shall be my son." Now, I ask, if you should do this, and the lamb be consumed to ashes, would you not have God's word for your assurance? Yea, as convincingly as if heard audibly from heaven,—that He "received you."

The Lord has not said this; but he has said, as shown above, that if we "come out from among them, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing, he will receive us." Now, I ask, if we thus do, have we not the testimony of the Spirit, written in the word, that we are accepted? Do not fall into the common error of separating the letter of the word from the spirit of the word. You must by faith regard the letter as the testimony and expression of the mind and spirit of God to you; just as you believe the letter of a friend to be the expression of his mind and spirit. It is through this written word, directly or indirectly, that the Spirit speaks, testifies, or witnesses to us. To regard the word as a dead letter, is to remain in darkness and unbelief. To faith, "these words are spirit and they are life." Let us, therefore, "believe, nothing doubting."

But, says one, "How am I to know that the consecration is complete?" I answer, if you see nothing to the contrary, it is; for the Lord has said, "If in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal this unto you." The question is not, what will come up in the future to sacrifice and to suffer. In this, "Take no thought for the morrow," applies as well as in anything else. But do you accept of the will of God as it is made to appear at the present moment? If this is so, this is all that the King requires. Only let this continue, moment by moment, and all will continue acceptable to him. How great the rest of soul gained by him who thus comes into the truth!

But, you ask, into what state or degree of godliness may I now apprehend the Lord has brought me? Are my inward foes all dead? Shall I feel the roots of sin no more from this time?

This is an important question—one, the understanding of which may have much to do with your future peace and success in the way of holiness. Many, who have dedicated all, and believed, have been disappointed in finding, after a little while, the old self-nature stir within them, and either took it as an evidence that they were deceived, or soothingly called it "only temptation;" and have continued to try to believe that all was entirely pure within.

We forget that there are are two parts, or elements, in entire sanctification. The one is the placing of the creature, or sacrifice, upon the altar,—consecration. The other is the consuming of it to ashes, or its primitive elements, by God's own fire. The gold must first be put into the crucible, and then melted and purified by separating all its inner dross.

We must first consent and covenant to give up "all things," and then "suffer the loss of all." First be nailed to the cross, and then "die daily," till "the world is crucified to us," and "we live not, but Christ in us."

With the first, you have now complied, I trust. If so, you are "sanctified," but perhaps not "wholly;" you are "holy," but perhaps holiness is not yet "perfected." You are now as the gold in the crucible, and can begin to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him;" and hence ready to "abide the fire," "abide his coming," as a refiner and purifier. If so, you are fully in the hands of the "potter," and he can now begin to mould you as he will, for you will now be enabled to "abide," and not "draw back," as you once did when trial came, erroneously considering it an evidence that God was displeased, and no longer accepted you.

We often make a joyous and gladsome state of mind the only evidence of our acceptance with the Father. This is a very mischievous error. To do this, is to make the faith of our acceptance depend upon our emotions or feelings, as we saw above; whereas "the word" is the only true basis of faith; on compliance with which all the promises become ours. We forget the word which saith; "If need be, ye are in heaviness." That our Savior endured this, and yet was just as acceptable to the Father as when his emotions were the opposite. And now, as we are called to "endure hardness," and it is given us to "suffer with Christ," and also to bear some "afflictions for a moment," we must certainly not consider any one state of feeling the only acceptable one. For if, "when need be," we are in heaviness, then heaviness must be felt. If to endure hardness, then hardness must be felt. And if we are to have "afflictions," then we must sometimes feel "afflicted." You therefore see that if you take one class of emotions to be the evidence of your acceptance, when you feel thus, your faith in God will abound. But, since our feelings necessarily change and vary, as we have seen above, our faith in this case will sometimes be lost, and we fall into consequent weakness and sadness, if not into gloom and total discouragement. Nay, such anchorground is too unstable. We need the immovable promise of God, which holds "both sure and steadfast," amid all the varying storms, winds, and rolling billows that come upon us.

The only true test point required of us is in the will. If this be true,—if it be in the heart to say, "Thy will be done," we are accepted, let our feelings be what they may; for where there is a willing mind, it is accepted. Ah, this living by feeling, instead of by faith, has made sad havoc of many a promising disciple. It reverses the order of God, and keeps the soul off its only true and immovable foundation—the promise of the Father. It is being much as the spoiled child, who, because it is not permitted constantly to feed upon confections, pastries and sweetmeats, but is called by its parent to partake of substantial fare, and sometimes to take that which is bitter, and also to go forth and endure that which is "hard and afflicting," loses confidence in the love and wisdom of its father, and sadly refuses to do his will.

Oh! my brother, let your motto be,—"Not my will but thine be done." "Do unto me as seemeth unto thee good," and all will be well.

Remember, "he sitteth as a refiner and purifier of silver," whose business it is, not to see that there is no fire to try us, and no dross revealed, but to see that the fire gets not too hot, lest it injure and destroy; nor too cool, lest it do not accomplish its end, the purification of the heart from all its selfish nature.

Neither is he at a loss for fuel from which to make these purging fires. They come from any and every circumstance around us, that is needful to cross our wills; from many little things connected with ourselves, our families, our tenderest friends, and the common businesses of life, and even from our religious services. He will cause a fire to glow forth, giving us a sense of the cross, mortification and death which are necessary to the perfect submission of our wills, and entire acquiescence with God. And if these fiery trials which are to try you reveal hidden forms of selfishness and sin, as the lance reveals offensive matter not before seen because lying hid deep within, be not disheartened. It is your physician at work wisely, and accomplishing the object of your desire, a perfect cure. Courage, brother! Keep your confidence! The ore must be fused before the dross can separate and pass off. We must die, in order to live. And His soothing encouragement to you is, "After ye have suffered awhile, I will strengthen, establish and perfect you."

Selected for the Crisis.

The Groaning Creation.

BY H. L. H.

I hear a groan!
A deep—a solemn tone—
Echoing from far,—like ocean's mighty roar,
Rolling and breaking round its rock-bound shore.

I hear a sigh
Of prisoners doomed to die!
The mournful sigh, caused by the latest breath
That's drawn ere life goes out 'mid shades of death.

Such sounds I hear—
Sounds of despair—of fear!
They're like the howl of the dark-rolling surge,
That moans the shipwrecked seaman's funeral dirge.

Creation groans!
I sorrow—not alone!
From this vast world of sin and anguish drear,
The deep, loud, wailing notes of woe I hear.

Why is this? Why?
This moan—this groan—this sigh?
'Tis a rehearsal! Soon these sounds of wo
Shall sing the death-song of all things below.

O! Savior, come!
With power and glory come!
Hush this sad wail that has been heard so long!
O, bid the ransomed earth break forth in song!
1850.

Speak ye Comfortably.

The weary need sympathy and encouragement. They are prone to despond. Their work is burdensome to them. They do it listlessly, carelessly, mournfully; sometimes they are tempted not to do it at all. They are disposed to magnify their difficulties, and to underrate their own capabilities. They take a gloomy view of things. Their hands hang down; their knees are feeble; their brow is clouded. And it would be both unwise and unkind to blame them. Would it lessen their fatigue, do you think, to censure them for being tired? Or would they be likely to grow more hopeful through your scolding them for their faint-heartedness? No, they want comfort, not reproof; gentle counsels, not harsh animadversion. When the wearied and dejected prophet sat under the juniper-tree, and, with fretful impatience, exclaimed, "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life," how gently God dealt with him! An angel was sent to minister unto him, who prepared for him a table in the wilderness, and bade him arise and eat, and recruit his strength.—S. S. Times.

A TRUTH APTLY PRESENTED.—When we were at the water-cure, a man who had been pining for years, and nobody could tell what ailed him, was put into the cold packing, and very soon an eruption of measles came out all over him. It turned out that the man had the measles years before, and the docter drugged it out of sight, and ever since it had been tormenting him inwardly. Even so the grief of childhood may be violently flogged out of sight, instead of being drawn to the surface by more gentle methods, and the result may be a sorry temper that never knows the relief of tears, but always sulks and whines.—Monthly Religious Magazine.

Deliverance will Come.

BY C. T. CATLIN.

I saw a way-worn trav'ler,
In tattered garments clad,
A struggling up a mountain—
It seemed that he was sad.
His back was burdened heavy,
His strength was almost gone,
But he shouted, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

The summer sun was beaming,
The sweat was on his brow,
His raiment was all dusty,
And his step was very slow.
Still he kept pressing forward,
For he was wending home,
And he shouted, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

The songsters in the arbors
That grew beside the way,
Attracted his attention,
Inviting his delay.
His watchword being "Onward!"
He stopp'd his ears and ran,
Still shouting, as he journey'd,
"Deliverance will come!"

I saw him in the evening,
When the sun was bending low,
He overtopp'd the mountain,
And reached the vale below.
His elder brother met him—
His journey it was done,
And he shouted, as it ended,
"Deliverance will come!"

His eyes were dim and heavy,
His body weak and wan,
Therefore, his brother gave him
A couch to lie upon,
And closed the blinds around him,
And locked him up alone,
Till deliverance should come.

Hope made for him a pillow,
And Faith a garment rare,
To wrap him in his slumbers
Till Christ his home prepare.
But when the dawn of morning
Broke in his little room,
He rose and cried, astonished,
"Deliverance has come!"

Then I heard the song of triumph
He sung upon that shore,
Saying, "Jesus has redeemed me
To suffer never more;"
And casting his eyes backward
On the race that he had run,
He shouted loud, in glory,
"Deliverance has come!"

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

How to enjoy Health.

It is the indispensable duty of every person, and especially of parents, to study the laws of health. This is apparent from the consideration that it is only in conjunction with a sound body, that even a sound mind can fully perform its legitimate functions.

The want of system, or regularity in eating and sleeping, and exercise and rest, is one of the common evils in many families, and with many individuals. The human body is a machine, requiring order and regularity in its management to keep it in a good and healthy condition. Food should always be taken at the same hours every day, and totally abstained from during the intervals. So in reference to sleep; the system requires the strictest regularity. Whether business or inclination may decide that an individual sleep six, seven, or eight hours, they should always be the same part of every twenty-four, and as a general rule, early hours.

Proper ventilation is also a law of life. No animal, and man least of all, can enjoy health for any considerable length of time without having a pure atmosphere in which to breathe, and a healthy atmosphere can never obtain where proper ventilation is wanting. There is a lamentable negligence upon this subject in almost every department of life. Meeting-houses, school-houses, dwelling-houses, and especially sleeping apartments, should be thoroughly ventilated. The rooms should be so constructed that, while the fresh air is entering at the windows, the impure air may escape at the ceiling. It is a mistaken notion that ventilation is only necessary in hot weather. It is equally so in mid winter; and when rooms are warmed by the use of stoves, it becomes especially necessary. Much injury is sustained by neglecting to ventilate bed-rooms, particularly when the apartments are small and occupied by several persons.

Bad cooking, or what is usually called "good cooking," is one of the most prolific sources of sickness at the present day. There are no class of persons to whom the doctors are so much indebted as the mothers and daughters, and others who have the control of the culinary affairs of life. Most of the articles usually composing the ordinary bills of fare, seem to have been prepared not only without regard to the laws of digestion, but in positive opposition to them. Hot bread, fried meats, hard boiled eggs, and the whole of those two popular families, "Pickles" and "Preserves," with the various spices, condiments, and pastry which occupy so large a space in our bills of fare, should all be banished from the tables of those who have any regard for the health of themselves and families. Unless we return to the plain simplicity of former days, we must make up our minds to suffer with dyspepsia, and the thousand and one fashionable ills of modern times.—Christian Luminary.

Uses of Ice.

In health no one ought to drink ice water, for it has occasioned fatal inflammations of the stomach and bowels, and sometimes sudden death. The temptation to drink it is very great in summer; to use it at all with any safety the person should take but a single swallow at a time, take the glass from the lips for half a minute, and then another swallow, and so on. It will be found that in this way it becomes disagreeable after a few mouthfuls.

On the other hand, ice itself may be taken as freely as possible, not only without injury, but with the most striking advantage in dangerous forms of disease. If broken in sizes of a pea or bean, and swallowed as freely as practicable, without much chewing or crushing between the teeth, it will often be efficient in checking various kinds of diarrhœa, and has cured violent cases of Asiatic cholera.

A kind of cushion of powdered ice kept to the entire scalp, has allayed violent inflammations of the brain, and arrested fearful convulsions induced by too much blood there.

Water, as cold as ice can make it, applied freely to the throat, neck and chest, with a sponge or cloth, very often affords an almost miraculous relief, and if this be followed by drinking copiously of the same ice cold element, the wetted parts wiped dry, and the child be wrapped up well in the bed clothes, it falls into a delightful and life-giving slumber.

All inflammations, internal or external, are promptly subdued by the application of ice or ice water, because it is converted into steam, and rapidly conveys away the extra heat, and also diminishes the quantity of blood in the vessels of the part.

A piece of ice laid on the wrist will often arrest violent bleeding of the nose.

To drink any ice-cold liquid at meals retards digestion, chills the body, and has been known to induce the most dangerous internal congestions.

Refrigerators, constructed on the plan of Bartlett's, are as philosophical as they are healthful, for the ice does not come in contact with the water or other contents, yet keeps them all perfectly as cool.

If ice is put in milk or on butter, and these are not used at the time, they lose their freshness and become sour and stale, for the essential nature of both is changed when once frozen and then thawed.—Hall's Jour. of Health.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Bro., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if paid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pay the American postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers of [illegible]. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY, AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 198. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 17.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT.
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

§ 5. Do the phrases zoe aionios (rendered in our version "eternal" or "everlasting life," by Universalists, "aye-lasting" or "aionian life,") and its equivalent zoe eis ton aiona, imply immortal life?

It is freely admitted that aion and aionios are often used in a limited sense. The former word does not necessarily mean eternity; nor the latter a duration strictly eternal. The same is true of their English equivalents. The word ever is apparently derived from the Latin aevum, which is the same as aion. When one says, "I have ever loved flowers," the phrase limits the term to a very few years. Yet when it is asked whether the earth will endure forever, we understand an absolute eternity. In the same way the phrase eis ton aiona, like its Hebrew equivalent l'olam, may signify a duration without any limit, assigned or conceived. And the word aionios is doubtless thus used (Rom. 16: 26; 2 Cor. 4: 17, 18; 5: 1; 1 Tim. 6: 16; 2 Tim. 2: 10; Heb. 5: 9; 9: 14, 15; 1 Pet. 5: 10.)

As already remarked, the phrase zoe aionios is used forty-five times in the Bible, and in most instances partitively, or with reference to a class. It is therefore important to the Universalist argument to show, if possible, that the phrase does not signify "eternal life" in the strict sense of that expression. Either the adjective aionios does not refer to duration at all, but signifies the nature or kind of life spoken of, or it refers simply to the future age or dispensation as distinct from the expiring Jewish economy. The latter view, I think, is that preferred by Universalists. The phrase eis ton aiona would of course be taken in a similar sense.

To the first view,—that zoe aionios denotes a gospel or spiritual life, derived from Christ as the Lord of the gospel age; or (according to Maurice) a divine life, that relates us to the Eternal One,—I simply reply: Granting this as the primary sense of the word, then is not the endless continuance of the life implied as a secondary sense? and if so, do not the "perishing," "death," and "not seeing life," put in contrast with it, denote a falling short of immortal life?

To the second view I find several objections:

1. The matters of contrast, and the connected and parallel expressions, do not favor a reference merely to the gospel dispensation. Contrasted are the expressions, to "perish," (John 3: 15, 16; 6: 27; 10: 28); "persecutions in this time," (Mark 10: 30; Luke 18: 30); "death," (John 5: 24; Rom. 5: 21; 6: 23); "abiding in death," (1 John 3: 14, 15); "corruption," (Gal. 6: 8.) The following expressions are connected: "Ye judge yourselves unworthy of" (Acts 13: 46); "As many as were ordained to" (ver. 48); "To those who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality" (Rom. 2: 7); to "lay hold on" (1 Tim. 6: 12, 19.) The phrase "to live forever" (eis ton aiona) occurs in John 6: 51, 58, which should be compared with chajah l'olam (Gen. 3: 22; Deut. 32: 40; Ps. 21: 26; 49: 9.) The following expressions are also important: "They [Christ's flock] shall never perish" (shall not perish, eis ton aiona, John 10: 28); "Shall never die" (shall not die, eis ton aiona, John 11: 26); "shall never see death" or "taste of death," (eis ton aiona, John 8: 51, 52); "Shall never thirst" (eis ton aiona, John 4: 14); "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (eis ton aiona, 1 John 2: 17.) I also venture to name as parallel the phrase, "neither can they die any more" (Luke 20: 36), because it stands in connection with the phrase, "to obtain that world" (ton aionos ekeinou, ver. 35.)

2. If the phrases in question are referred to the Christian dispensation, many of the passages where they occur will be hard to translate. The following are examples: "Shall not thirst during the Christian dispensation." "Shall not perish during the Christian era." "Shall not perish for the age to come, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." "Shall live during (or into, eis) the future age." "Abideth during the Messianic kingdom." "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have life for the age." "Whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall not die during the aion. Believest thou this?"

I do not wonder that in the argument which confines these phrases to a dispensation, the terms "aionian life," and "aionic life," are found so convenient and occur so often. But this is not to translate the words of life; and we should not be content with a mere transfer, when a translation involves or betrays no difficulty.

3. It would follow that immortal life is one of the rarest things named in the Bible. It follows that He who "brought life and immortality to light," and who "had the words of eternal life," spoke of immortal life in only a single recorded instance, (Luke 20: 36.) In this view about fifty passages are given up at once as containing no assurance whatever against the final annihilation of all mankind. And the whole doctrine of immortality, either for all men or for any select class of men, rests upon half a dozen passages or less. For not only the fifty passages that speak of "aionian" life will fail in this great argument, but all which speak merely of "life" or of "salvation;" for life and salvation might be only for a temporary existence. But if these words are supposed to imply immortality, then those who have not life or salvation, may have no immortality.

And here, before proceeding to the few passages on which depends the last hope of immortality, I must repeat the caution against the assumption of man's immortal nature. Mr. Balfour, in his "First Inquiry," has very properly remarked on this subject: "Is not the doctrine of the soul's immortality revealed in the New Testament? No; for if it was taught there, it would be no revelation from God to the world, for it was a popular doctrine among the heathen nations many centuries before the Christian era. With more propriety it might be said that the heathen revealed this doctrine to God than that God revealed it to them. Had the New Testament writers believed the soul to be immortal, why did they never speak of it as such?" (pp. 332, 333.)

The sum is this. The Scriptures reveal no "immortality of the soul." And they announce the "aionian" life, not of all mankind, but of those who through faith become righteous or good. If, now, "aionian" life does imply immortal life, the numerous passages in question teach most decidedly the immortality of a class.

§ 6. If "aionian" life does not imply immortal life, then do any who fail of it finally attain immortal life?

This question is important in the Universalist argument, and complicated generally. Important, because some Universalist writers admit that a sin has been committed of which it is said there is never forgiveness, neither in this age (aion,) nor in the age (aion) to come, (Mark 3: 29.) Mr. Balfour, treating on this passage, makes temporal death the irremissible penalty in either age. He says: "It is generally admitted that temporal death was the punishment of crimes under the old dispensation; and that temporal death was inflicted for crimes under the new, no one will dispute; for Ananias and his wife, persons in the church at Corinth, are noted examples; and John speaks of a sin unto death, for which even christians were not to pray. 1 John 5: 16, 17." (Second Inquiry, pp. 279, 280.) Thus Mr. Balfour. It remains to be shown that Ananias and Sapphira, failing signally of "aionian" life, shall yet attain pardon of soul and immortal life. Is there a third dispensation of forgiveness for sins unpardonable in the second? The language of the Epistle to the Hebrews I think hardly allows that. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the age (aion) to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame," (6: 4–6.) "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and of fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries," (10: 26, 27.) Granting this "judgment and fiery indignation" to signify the destruction of Jerusalem, where is the "sacrifice for sins" thereafter?

Mr. Paige endeavors to show that Mark 3: 29, does not preclude final forgiveness, with a noticeable remark: "If, by never forgiveness, it be denoted, strictly speaking, that the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit shall never be forgiven, then there is a direct contradiction between this verse and verse 28; for there it is positively asserted, without any limitation or exception, that 'all sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme.'" (Comm. in loc.) This would be called by Coleridge an asthmatic exegesis. Need any one be told that the 29th verse is the limitation and exception to the statement made in verse 28? This statement is in fact worse than nonsense without such a limitation. Aside from the qualifying exception, it is a proclamation of unbounded license to sin and blasphemy. If any one doubts this, let him read the 28th verse without the 29th. And then, as he shudders at the repeal of all moral law which stares him in the face, let him ask what the 29th verse does mean. I do not see how one can then avoid the notion of an unpardonable sin.

And if we take the whole expression as a strong, proverbial mode of speech,—as if it were said, "That is the blackest guilt of all; God will forgive any thing else but it,"—I do not see how we can escape the same conclusion, that there may be a sin unforgiven in the age to come, whether that age or aion be temporary or eternal.

And some of the expressions before cited show that the Jews regarded a certain guilt as finally unpardonable. "This hath been decreed by the Lord, that this sin shall not be forgiven them until they die the second death." "They shall die the second death, and shall not live in the world to come, saith the Lord."

But the question I have raised is also complicated. For it involves the whole doctrine of the Resurrection. Is this moral and spiritual, consisting in the conversion of the soul? or is it physical, initiating the immortal life? Does it occur at the death of the body? or is it an event yet future to the human race? If future, is it simultaneous, and homogeneous for all? or is there a two-fold resurrection, one to immortality, and another abortive, ending in a sleep that knows no waking?

I shall have neither time nor occasion to resolve all these complications. All these shades of opinion are found in almost every denomination of christians, and only one of them is peculiar and essential to the Universalist view. I need only show that there is not a final resurrection of all to immortal life. The supposed proof of this rests upon two or three passages, which must be the final resort of the Universalist faith. I have already alluded to them, and we will now examine them.

Luke 20: 34–38: "The children of this world (age, aionos) marry and are given in marriage. But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age, aionos), and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed, at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him."

Some have supposed that the expression, "a God of the living," proves that the dead are now alive. But this would manifestly vacate the proof of a resurrection—the very thing that Christ was to show. What need of a resurrection for those who live? Thus Tyndale, answering the Platonic Thomas Moore, says: "Ye destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?" The sense is this: God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, not because they were then alive, for the Jews never thought of them as such, but because they were to live in the resurrection. Here is the figure of prolepsis, before noticed. God "calleth the things that are not [yet] as if they [already] were." The heirs of life belong to the living God; they "live unto him" because his eye is upon them, and no power can pluck them from his hands, but they shall be raised up at the last day. They have a life hid with Christ in God. But not so the children of death. This explains an expression already cited from the Apocryphal book of Wisdom, ii. 23: "By the envy of the devil death came into the world, and they follow him that are of his side."

But it is said, "For all live unto Him." This expression is important in the Universalist argument. But it proves nothing; for the context naturally refers the "all" to the subjects of discourse, either the patriarchs just mentioned, or those "accounted worthy to obtain that world," in ver. 35. Then it will be [illegible] proper to read, "For they all live unto him." The Greek always allows this whenever the context can suggest it; for the pronoun is implied or rather contained in the verb, and is never separately expressed when the context does suggest it. And in the Syriac, as given us by Dr. Murdock, we actually have the translation I offer: "For they all live unto him."

The same phrase is used in Rom. 6: 10, 11: and Gal. 2: 19, apparently with reference to the future and immortal life. There is nothing in either contest to suggest its application to the entire human race.

This phrase has also a historical interest. It occurs twenty-four times in the "Book of the Shepherd," written by Hermas, about A. D. 140. Clement of Alexandria cites a passage from it as "divinely expressed." Origen thought the book "divinely inspired." Chevalier Bunsen calls it "one of those books which, like the Divina Commedia and the Pilgrim's Progress, captivate the mind by the united power of thought and fiction, both drawn from the genuine depths of the human soul." All these admirers of the book rank as Universalists. It was read by the churches of Greece as late as the time of Jerome, and was the great exponent of the religious mind of the second century. But this favorite phrase, "shall live unto God," is in every instance referred to a class and never to all mankind. As used by Hermas it seems to refer to the future and immortal life.

But it is asked, Is not the resurrection here spoken of, universal? This cannot be inferred from the expression "the dead" (ver. 37); for the article does not of course make the expression universal, and in several of the like expressions in 1 Cor. 15, the article is omitted.—Again, the expression in ver. 36, is peculiar. The "resurrection from (ek) the dead" is different from "the resurrection of the dead," and there are strong reasons for referring the phrase to the so-called "resurrection of the just," as if this were a resurrection from among the dead, either by priority in time, or by their prerogative as being worthy of life. In Luke 14: 14, we read, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." In Acts 4: 2, we read of "the resurrection of Jesus from (ek) the dead,"—the last phrase being the same with that under consideration. So likewise in Acts 26: 23, and Rom. 1: 4. In Phil. 3: 10, 11, Paul says: "That I may know him [Christ], and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." In this remarkable passage the term rendered resurrection in ver. 2, is itself peculiar. It is not anastasis, but exanastasis—an outrising, or a rising up from among the dead. Universalists think Paul can not here refer to a literal resurrection because he was sure of that, and because it would be absurd to say of it, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect" (ver. 12). But there was reason why Paul should say this. There were those who said that the resurrection was past already, subverting the faith of some (1 Tim. 2: 18.) These were the Spiritualists of that day, denying that Christ had come in the flesh, and affirming that the resurrection was rather an escape from the body or the "form," than a being clothed upon after the pattern of Christ's glorious body. Paul had, moreover, good examples to follow,—some in that "great cloud of witnesses,"—in striving after a resurrection. Women had received their dead raised to life again; and others accepted not deliverance from torture, "that they might obtain a better resurrection." (Heb. 11: 35.) This could not have been conversion. Again, the phrase "were already perfect" evidently does not refer to moral perfection, or holiness, but recalls the expression in Heb. 12: 23; "the spirits of just men made perfect;" and this apparently signifies the being made complete, in the resurrection state. It is in almost so many words "the resurrection of the just."—Again, to say that Paul was sure of a resurrection is not to touch the point in question. To be sure of an anastasis was not to be sure of the exanastasis. In this might specially appear "the power of Christ's resurrection,"—in a "resurrection of life," clothing the heirs of life with spiritual bodies, of which his own risen form was the type and the assurance to all that "live and believe" on him, or have living faith in him, that they may "never die." Compare what is said in Rev. 20: 5, 6: "This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." This might be emphatically the resurrection, compared with which that of "the unjust" should be sometimes nameless or forgotten. "Why, then, should Universalists dwell so much on "the resurrection of the dead," both of the just and the unjust, (Acts 24: 15) as literal, while they take as simply moral or spiritual the words in John 5: 28, 29? All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life: and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation."*

And once more. We have already remarked that the expression, "they which shall be accounted worthy," is, in form, the description of a class of persons, and does not refer itself to all mankind. The equivalent expression in ver. 36, "the children of God," also frequently occurs apparently denoting a class, in Matt. 5: 9; John 11: 52; Rom. 8: 16, 21; 9: 8; ("They which are the children of the flesh, these are the children of God"), 26; Gal. 3: 26: 1 John 3: 10 ("In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil"); v. 2. It is sometimes urged that the phrase "accounted worthy" does not denote moral fitness, but simply being thus "honored." This I admit for argument's sake. Still we read of those who "judge themselves unworthy of eternal life" (Acts 13: 46), and who were apparently taken at their word.

And this suggests my closing remark on this passage. What was this eternal or aionian life, which Luke records as having been rejected (Acts 13: 46), if not the very life of which Christ is here speaking (Luke 20: 34–38)? The "that world" of which certain are "accounted worthy," is the aion, precisely the age, dispensation, or whatever it be that is contained in the expressions "for ever" (eis ton aiona) and "world to come" (ho mellon aion), and which gives us the adjective aionios, so often rendered "eternal." It is the word used in Mark 3: 29, where it is said that for a certain sin there is "never forgiveness." But Universalists confess that in such an aion the sin is unforgiven. Now these were not two distinct aions. The phrase "world (or aion), to come," often used in the New Testament, seems to have been also proverbial with the Jews, so Christ might speak of it as "that aion." If, then, the phrase "hath never forgiveness," applied to this aion, admits an after forgiveness, why does not the phrase "neither can they die any more," admit a subsequent dying? The adverbs (oudepote, Mark 3: 29, and ouk eti, Luke 20: 36,) are equally strong. If the latter signifies immortal life for all, the former gives us contradiction. Who will tell us the way out of this dilemma? It may be said there must be some distinction between the two aions. But the utmost I can conceive is, a difference in form, leaving the aion single; the aion of the church militant, and the aion of the church triumphant; the kingdom on earth, and the kingdom in heaven; but each including the same persons, and leaving to those who hear the gospel the duty to "lay hold on eternal life" as if no other life were immortal.

* The words in verse 21 certainly look to the literal sense. "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Also verse 20. "Greater works than these, that ye may marvel." Christ had just healed the impotent man. The resurrection of the son of the widow of Nain, and of Lazarus, occurred not long after. This may explain the expression in verse 25. "The hour is coming, and now is," which is not repeated in verse 28.

For the Crisis.

The Symbols.—No. 5.

In my "No. 4," the effort was made to show that the symbols in Rev. 12 and 13, the dragon and ten-horned beast, were not, and cannot be coetaneous with the diverse symbols of "the seven heads." But as the attention of some was not secured to the facts and Scripture statements there adduced, allow me a few words more.

I. Rome, religiously, has had but two forms, not seven to synchronise with "the seven heads."

First. Rome was Pagan,—only Pagan under all the first "FIVE heads;" and so on into the sixth. Rev. 17: 8–10.

Second. Rome Papal was made Papal by the Justinian code, 533, and confirmed by Phocas, 606—both of them and others belonging to the sixth head, in title, in position, and in the guidance of Rome's body-politic. (The head guides the body, whether Pagan or Papal, or openly anti-christian.)

II. As Rome Pagan may embrace "five" heads, and exist on into the period of the sixth, then it follows that Rome Papal may exist under the Imperial sixth head; and through the period of the seventh and last, to the judgment.

III. These and all historic and prophetic facts prove that neither Paganism nor Papalism was "a head" as such. The Imperial authority was the sixth head through [illegible] of Paganism, and still more [illegible] of Papalism.

IV. It follows necessarily that Roman [illegible] cannot all [illegible] in this series of symbolic "seven heads." They cannot be made synchronous with the dragon and the beast that followed; because the head that guided Roman affairs was the sixth or Imperial, through that whole period.

V. The title of Cæsar, etc. etc., "Emperor of Rome," worn in the apostolic age, was worn by Justinian, Phocas and their successors, to Francis II. of Austria in 1802, who abolished it.

VI. The name, geographical locality, and prophetic, frog-like character of the head or dynasty that then was rising, was, diverse from the sixth. Napoleon I. wore a new title, unknown to the rulers, Pagan, or Papal, known under the sixth head! He was styled "Emperor of France and king of Italy," (a title unknown to the sovereigns of the house of Hapsburg or their predecessors in the Imperial, sixth head form.)

J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

To the Crisis.

Welcome, messenger of light,
To a world that 's wrapped in night;
Comest thou from realms above,
Telling of a Savior's love?

Wisdom o'er thy pages gleams;
Faith with brighter lustre beams,
Speaking ever to the heart,—
"NEVER from God's word depart."

Still the onward way pursue,
Ever faithful, ever true;
Leading age and sprightly youth
To the holy Fount of Truth.

S. LIZZIE BAKER.

For the Crisis.

Who is Right?

What would they have for the foundation of it all? Can men preach when they have nothing to speak unto the people? Can there be any practical, experimental or spiritual preaching where there is no doctrinal exhibition?

Now it is the doctrine that the church needs—in suitable proportion and in proper time and adaptation, to make wise unto salvation. And the doctrine we must have; but we need not harp upon one set of opinions, however true, till they become our everlasting "hobby." We need not make incidentals the main line of our expositions, and employ our own inferences as if they were the clear and positive expressions of the unerring oracles of heaven. These "gospel sermons," which people speak of, must be drawn from the fountain, if indeed they are worthy of the name. The fountain is "the doctrine of God our Savior." "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." He will understand the gospel! It is one feature of his will that we hear the word,—another, that we believe, and still further that we obey. All this will depend upon divine doctrine. What is the letter and what the spirit? Strange that people cannot see that the word and spirit are not separated. But if by the letter is meant the word, as such, then they are separated, for one "killeth" and the other "giveth life." No man can preach the Gospel, and not preach the letter when abstractly considered; but in the figurative use of it, by Paul, it refers to the Mosaic ritual in opposition to gospel worship.

We are not Quakers, Perfectionists, Shakers, or Spiritualizers, of any kind, that can have a gospel in spirit without the word. Never complain of too much of the word of truth, in preaching; but pray God that the minister may give it a practical bearing, and counsel with him to that effect. May all of us show by a life of devotion that we appreciate the truth and love the experience and practice of it! If you want preaching that is merely good talk, go and get it! You can find enough. It will make you feel nicely, if that is what you seek for, only, and do not love "sound doctrine." If you seek for the mere excitement of appeals, the exhilaration of impassioned exhortation, the land is full of it. Full, too, of the fine, beautiful, tender pathos which borders so much on the sentimentalism of the novel, or the flash newspaper—splendid nonsense, that! fit to excite the silly, simpering sympathies of the imbecile and palsied intellect of this degenerate age.

Do you want the eloquence of an angel? Better have the real eloquence of men. It is better adapted and would be more serviceable. If you seek for the most elegant style, you can find it and not trouble the gospel much, nor us who have been thrust into the vineyard to declare "the unsearchable riches." But there is logical argument, eloquent appeal, clear and powerful deduction, splendid rhetoric—in preaching the gospel of doctrine—which angels and Christ the heavenly, with holy men of God, have waited on men of earth to communicate. You may have all, and very cheaply. [illegible] satisfied in the living God all that should be sought to satisfy your [illegible] satiety. Never, if you love Christ [illegible] kingdom! Never, if you prize the hope of immortality!

Preach, with power! [illegible] power? Power of God. In [illegible] In wisdom! "In demonstration of the Spirit." But what will the Spirit demonstrate? The word of truth in [illegible] upon the hearts and consciences of those who hear! That's it. Do you need it? Will you have it? Seek, I pray you, the knowledge of God in the divine position of the properly called and empowered living instructor, if possible, and in this way find the Spirit and the power. Ah! it is power we need; power of God, of truth, of faith, of love, of union.

Defend the word of the Lord! Advance the glorious doctrine of the Bible! Exhibit the heaven-wrought structure. Let the world see its symmetry. God help even the church to believe! And will they ever properly appreciate the effort required for "the work of the ministry . . . edifying the flock," and staunching the life-blood of faith, so fast flowing away?

W. H. F.

For the Crisis.

"Watchman! What of the Night?"

WATCHMAN! AWAKE FROM YOUR SLUMBERS! LOOK ABROAD, AND TELL US OF THE NIGHT.

Have the signs been hung out in the heavens—the signs that were to precede the great and terrible day of Jehovah? Has God yet shown "wonders in the heavens, and in the earth,—blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke?" Has the sun been hidden? Has the moon appeared as blood? and has its light been hidden? Have the stars fallen from heaven? Tell us, Watchman, have these things been seen? Aye. Then sound the alarm, (Joel 2:). "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion! Sound the alarm in my Holy Mountain:" that "all the inhabitants of the land may tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, and is nigh at hand; a day of darkness and of gloominess: a day of clouds, and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains; . . . for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?" There have been times, we hear, when men's souls were tried: will not the day of the Lord try men's souls? Now, then, blow the trumpet in Zion, that the people may turn to their God "with all their heart; and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning . . . Rend your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God; for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness."

"Watchman! what of the night?" Hark, ye, that cry beyond the sea! WAR! WAR! WAR! Tell us, Watchman, Are not the Gentiles "preparing war?" Are not the nations angry? Are not the mighty men awake? Do not the men of war draw near, and come up to the plain? Has not the hour come that "plowshares are to be beaten into swords, and pruning hooks into spears?" Do not the weak say "I am strong?" Are not the nations already drinking the wine of God's wrath? (Jer. 25: 15—34.) Are they not unconsciously near the judgment? (See Joel 3: 11–15.) "Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen; and gather yourselves together round about; thither cause thy mighty ones to come down. . . Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the HARVEST is RIPE; come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." Rev. 14: 20 [illegible] the wine press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine press, even unto the horse bridles, to the distance of a thousand six hundred furlongs. "The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain . . . But Judah shall dwell forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion." Joel 3: 15–21.

Watchman! have you [illegible] Can you not [illegible] wrath to come? [illegible] of your stupidity [illegible] the summer is ended, and we are not saved. [illegible]

And how can you see the sword coming unless you watch? Know you not that a responsibility rests upon you, that many are looking to you, and depending upon you for their safety, that you, by stupidity, unfaithfulness, or unbelief, may not realise the nearness of the day of vengeance, and, consequently, neither watch nor wish others to, and so the day come upon you unawares, and take away those unprepared together with yourself? Who will howl then? But if you are faithful to your calling, and watch for the coming sword—for we have an assurance that the sword is coming, when the slain will lie from one end of the earth even unto the other, and none shall bury nor lament them,—you will see its approach and give the alarm, and thus save many; and you yourself, instead of being cut off from the kingdom, will be there, and will "shine as the stars forever and ever." See Ezek. 33: 6. "If the watchman see the sword coming, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned: and, if the sword come and take away any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; BUT HIS BLOOD WILL I REQUIRE AT THE WATCHMAN'S HAND."—Joel 1: 13–15.

Now, watchman, if you can save souls from the slaughter, and do it, could you do a better thing? Then awake,—look from your watchtower; and just over the sea, what do you behold? What means that din among the nations? Does it not look like the beginning of the end? And is not the sword coming? Is not that day of the Lord near? and the "time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation?" Then "blow the trumpet in Zion; sanctify a fast: call a solemn assembly: gather the people: sanctify the congregation: assemble the elders—gather the children and those that suck at the breasts; let the bridegroom go forth from his chamber, and the bride from her closet. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, oh Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?" Joel 2: 15–17.

Watchman! ye who are dozing—ye who were placed upon Zion's walls to watch the signs of the times—to sound the alarm when the danger is seen, and ye do not do it; why do ye disregard the admonitions of your God? Why do ye not weep between the porch and the altar, and cry unto the Lord to spare his people? Did you sleep when the signs were seen, that you understand not? Why use such efforts to persuade your fellow men who stand on the very verge of the judgment, that all is well; and cry "Peace! peace!" saying in your heart, "My Lord delays his coming?" "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom the Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them MEAT IN DUE SEASON? . . . But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 24: 45–51.

S. D. BERRY.

Portsmouth, N. H.

For the Crisis.

The West—Tracts—Extracts from Letters.

"WISCONSIN, May 30.

I have not been in many places lately, and I have not sold many books. There is a better chance to sell them East than West. But then, I think that there never was a better place in the world to give books away than here. I have given a goodly share of those books you sent me, and now I shall have to pay the best way I can. But, Bro. H., it is sure. You can not publish books for nothing. Would to God that I had means so that I could send thousands to poor men's doors, but I am also poor. I can see good coming from my little donations. A few books may be the means of getting some poor souls into the kingdom. We are having good seasons in northern Wisconsin. Truth is gaining ground, and there seems to be a general giving away of prejudices, and men are asking how they may best learn their way home to God. Brother, let us be faithful to our trust, and God will reward us in due time."

The above is but a specimen of letters which I am constantly receiving from acquaintances and from strangers. Brethren "unknown and well known." Now what shall we do to aid these struggling reapers in the great harvest field?

Another preaching Bro. writes from Wis.—"Can't you visit the West this season? If so what sum will be necessary to raise to defray the expense? Please inform me. I could sell many books if the people had money to buy with. But poverty is the lot of the day."

[illegible] West, but fear I can not this summer. My health, I hope, is gaining a little since I left the vicinity of Lake Ontario, and I hope that the milder climate and the [illegible] of Providence will [illegible], with the aid of hydropathic and homœopathic treatment, and with the blessing of God. Meanwhile I shall preach what I can, but shall have to decline numerous calls. As to the amount needful to be raised to pay expenses I know nothing about that. The good Lord has been my "committee of ways and means" for several years, and he always raises money enough some way, and frequently there is some to spare. So I do not fret about that. But I am inclined to think that the amount of expense it would cost to visit the West, if laid out in publications would very likely do as much good as the personal presence of a preacher with one weak lung. I shall preach Sundays, if the Lord will,—write some things that have long been in contemplation, seek health, and try to help at the West by my pen and go there when it is duty.

Brethren and sisters, some of you whose faces I have never seen, and others who are well known to me, you have often cared for and supplied my wants. I was sick and ye ministered to me. Ragged and ye clothed me. You would, I know, respond to a call that said I was in need. Thanks be to God and to his children, I am not in present personal want. But I plead for my brethren in the great West. I plead for the perishing millions there—those that perish for lack of knowledge." Shall the light of coming glory shine along by the poor man's path and break in through the log cabins of those sheep without a shepherd? Or shall they languish and die while we get rich, enjoy luxuries, eat and drink and dress better far than Christ's brethren there can afford to, and have preaching ourselves constantly because we have money, while others hunger and thirst for the truth of God; O brethren, you WILL help. Pray for the truth of God to spread in the West, and pray with hands and with pockets too.

Brethren, shall we send them a million pages of tracts before the snows of winter shall whiten this earth again? Will not Christ be pleased with such a work as this? Who will assist? Men of Israel, help! Shall we have a rush of letters and pledges to raise the $1000 for this purpose? Don't distress yourselves now, poor humble lambs of Christ, to do too much. Be careful. You have constantly been casting in "all of your living," but ye that have these world's goods, will you not be generous, noble-hearted, and faithful stewards of God's bounty. Come, can't you spare $50 or $100 for this work as easily as you can spare it for a new carpet or for luxurious apparel? "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive." Recollect each cent you give to this fund purchases at least 16 pages of Tracts—probably more than that.

I will also say that all who will remit money to me in advance for tracts for distribution in sums of $5 or $10 or more or less, up to the time of issuing these tracts shall be entitled to receive them when issued at the same price—16 pages for a cent. Those who only buy one or two to read, can of course pay the usual price, and those who wish them at these reduced rates must send their orders to me, at Providence, R. I., and direct how they shall be sent from N. Y. when printed.

One word in parting, to brethren at the West. Be kind. Beware of bitter controversy. Love people, even those who differ from you. Don't spoil good, sweet truth, by giving it in a sour spirit. Don't expect a man to see in five minutes what you fought for five years. Don't split hairs. Keep to the great, grand, solemn truths of God. Preach with a direct object in view—to save men. Pray for help from on high. Preach with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven! See that your good news comes not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. 1 Thess. 1: 5. Then men will turn from idols to serve the living God and to wait for his Son from Heaven.—1 Thess. 1: 10. Beware of those who "privily bring in damnable heresies," denying the Lord that BOUGHT them," saying that Christ only died as an example, instead of PURCHASING the flock of God with "his own blood." Shun those "that separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit;" and remember that "many will follow their pernicious ways," by reason of whom the way of truth (through their bad conduct) shall be evil spoken of. But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever. Grace be with you evermore. Amen.

Your brother in Christ Jesus,

H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

P. S. For a plan to raise the $1000, see last Crisis. Letters and communications for me may be addressed to Providence, R. I.

☞ Religion is not a perpetual moping over good books. Religion is not even prayer, praise, holy ordinances. These are necessary to religion—no man can be religious without them. But religion is mainly and chiefly the glorifying God among the duties and trials of the world; the guiding of our course amid adverse winds and currents of temptation, by the starlight of duty and the compass of divine truth; the bearing us manfully, wisely, courageously, for the honor of Christ, our great Leader in the conflict of life.

☞ Be not too hasty to believe reports to the disparagement of any one.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 22, 1859.

☞ We publish no communications which bear no signature. Those sending such, need not be surprised because they are withheld.

The Spirit.—No. 12.

"The spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

In this, our last article on the Spirit, we purpose to give all the examples where pneuma is not rendered spirit, or ghost, prefixed by the word holy. It will be recollected, we stated that Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost mean the same thing in the New Testament, and that the former expression is the proper one, and is adopted by the American Bible Union in their new and valuable translation, now in progress. In these days the word ghost conveys an idea of some disembodied, shadowy, ethereal form, appearing about grave yards or some old deserted mansion; but ghost in the Bible has no signification corresponding with the popular view, hence the propriety of rendering it Holy Spirit instead of Holy Ghost, meaning an influence emanating or proceeding from the Father, which comforts the christian and causes him to feel like his divine head, loving all that is good, and delighting in the ways of righteousness. When this influence or spirit is grieved away, we are no longer united to Christ; for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." When ghost is properly used, it is in the sense of expire. We will now give the varied uses of the word pneuma.

1. Pneuma is rendered ghost twice. "Jesus, when he had cried with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost."—Matt. 27: 50. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, it is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost."—John 19: 30.

2. Pneuma is rendered life once. "He had power to give life unto the image of the beast."—Rev. 13: 15.

3. Pneuma is rendered spiritual once. "Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church."—1 Cor. 14: 12.

4. Pneuma is rendered spiritually once. "To be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Rom. 8: 6.

5. Pneuma is rendered wind once. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth."—John 3: 8.

When the word pneuma is preceded by the word holy, it is usually rendered ghost in the received version. It is thus rendered ninety times out of ninety-three. We do not need to burden the reader with a list of these, as he has only to bear in mind that the phrases "Holy Spirit" and "Holy Ghost" are synonomous. As we have before remarked, the word ghost conveys a wrong idea to many readers; especially when it is said one gives "up the ghost." The literal rendering of this phrase, as given by the Amer. Bible Union, and others, is "expire," or "expired." All the examples in the Old Testament have this signification.

From a careful examination of the word ruakh in the Old Testament, and pneuma in the New, we are fully satisfied that these words are never used in the Bible to represent conscious entity, or being, that leaves man at death to enter heaven, hell, or the "spheres." When "the breath of life" permanently leaves the man, he lives no more till the resurrection, when his physical system is reorganized. This "breath of life" is no more the man, than the steam is the engine, or the wind the wind-mill. It did not enter us an intelligent organism, neither does it leave as such. In all the four hundred passages in the Old, and three hundred and eighty-five in the New Testament where these words occur, we do not find one which teaches that when this spirit or breath is in man, that it is the thinking, accountable part; or that it ever did, or ever will think. Why is the Bible wholly silent on this point? Why are we not taught somewhere, that the ruakh or pneuma is "the real man?" The answer is obvious. The Spirit of God acknowledges no such doctrine, therefore the word of the Lord does not teach it to the children of men.

It is very comforting and strengthening to the child of God, to find the Bible in harmony with itself on this point, and with reason, facts and philosophy. If it were not so, we should have reason to doubt. As it is, we have no misgivings about the matter. We are conscious that we have great reason to thank the Lord for the light he has shown us upon this subject. It has removed the dark mysticism that once beclouded our minds, and presented to us a "blessed" and reasonable hope, established upon the immutable promise and oath of God. We do not see how any one can understand the plan of salvation, or have a true gospel hope, till it is seen that the whole man sins, repents, dies, and lives again at the resurrection, when Christ comes. The evidence now thickens about us showing that the time is at hand when they "that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

"[illegible] the welcome day."

Diary Leaves.

Wednesday, June 1st.—At 5 1-2 o'clock, P. M., we took the Steam Boat Train, in Boston, for New London, in company with Mrs. Grant, Sr. A. A. Webster, and Bro. Hastings, and arrived in safety about 11 o'clock, en route to the Indians on Long Island. Our journey to New London was pleasant through the varied scenery of the way, while associated with our agreeable company.

Thursday, June 2nd.—After refreshing ourselves with a night's rest, we took passage on the Island Belle, for Sag Harbor, and arrived about 9 o'clock, having enjoyed a delightful sail, cheered by the sweet tones of music as we floated along upon the briny deep. Sag Harbor, on Long Island, is a pleasant place, of considerable business, from whence sail a number of whale ships; though at present the whaling business is very dull.

We found Bro. David Bunn, one of the Indians, at the Harbor, and we were soon on the way for the Indian settlement at Southampton, a distance of fourteen miles. As usual, we met a hearty welcome, not in word only, but in kind deeds. Hospitality is a reality among these "Native Americans." Their kindness is but the legitimate fruit of generous hearts. Theirs is true politeness, entirely opposed to the hypocritical, affected, silly palaver, now so common among those who wish to cover a black heart with costly apparel and assumed gentility, living upon the fruits of fraud, and trampling upon the rights of the poor.

Their word is as good as their bond. We have never seen more amiable and well behaved children, or better family government, than is here exhibited. When John or Thomas is desired to do this or that, we do not hear them say, "I shan't," "I don't want to," but on the contrary, we are delighted with their prompt and cheerful obedience. They have not kept pace with the downward march of this degenerate age, but seem more like the well-governed families thirty years ago, before the children began to rule and disobey their parents, as at the present time. Paul must have had his prophetic eye on these times, when he said:—"This know also, that in the last days" . . . . they will be "disobedient to parents." It was comforting to find one place where this Scripture seemed to have no special application.

This tribe has been sorely crowded, robbed and oppressed by the whites, but they bear it with christian patience. Several of these "True Americans" love the blessed hope of the gospel, and are fondly looking for the return of Him who will let the oppressed go free, and unbind the weary captives. We had interesting meetings on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings.

Lord's day, June 5th. The first Lord's day in this month, they have what is denominated their "June Meeting," when absent members of the tribe and their children return home, as at our New England Thanksgivings. A large number of whites assemble with them, thus affording a fine opportunity to present the truth to those who seldom hear preaching. At an early hour, Lord's day morning, the white sails of the fisherman's boats might be seen in Shinnecock bay, gently floating for the Indian shore; while from the opposite direction, light and heavily loaded teams were bringing home long absent loved ones for a happy greeting in the pleasant family circle; affording pleasure to those who are but spectators of the pure friendship exhibited by these true-hearted sons and daughters of a noble race, now nearly extinct.

At the usual hours of worship, we met to praise the dear Redeemer, who is as willing to adopt the Indian as the white man and call him brother. Thank the Lord that he is no respecter of persons. The beautiful, rich and learned, are not esteemed by the King of kings more than the poor, ill-favored and ignorant. He abides only with the humble christian, to whom he gives the promise of life eternal in the pilgrim's happy Eden home.

At the close of the evening meeting we sat down to the sacramental table, and enjoyed an interesting season with these friends of Jesus. They all expressed their determination to endure to the end, and obtain the crown of life. We trust our visit to them was mutually profitable. It is pleasant to visit those who love the pure word as do these true-hearted disciples of our Lord. We hope soon to see these kind friends where the oppressor's hand is never felt, and where sorrow's tears never flow. May the peace of God rest upon them till Jesus comes.

Monday, June 6th, we parted from Bro. Hastings and the rest of our company, loaded with good wishes and kind expressions, and took passage on the Island Belle to Lyme, thence to Hartford on the Steamer L. Boardman, Capt. Bates, where we arrived about 6 o'clock, P. M., after a very pleasant sail up the Connecticut river, whose banks were lined with most beautiful foliage, interspersed with very pleasant villas. We have never sailed on the waters of the Connecticut when the scenery was so delightful as at this time. We passed many a wide-spread sail pressing for the harbor, besides the noble steamers hastening to and fro, laden with those whose countenances betokened feelings of delight while beholding nature's summer dress so chaste and beautiful. It seemed as though they could not help loving the Author of every good and perfect gift.

In Hartford, we met a hearty welcome at Bro. Pearson's, where we tarried for the night. We learned that an increasing interest is awakened in this city by the labors of Bro. Edwin Burnham, and that the great truths of the gospel are spreading.

Tuesday, June 7th, we went to Winsted and commenced our discussion with Mrs. C. M. Tuttle, a trance speaking medium. A very attentive, orderly, and intelligent audience was present to hear us discuss the following question:—

"Resolved—That man is naturally immortal, possessing the capacity to communicate with minds of this earth after his departure therefrom."

Mrs. T. sustained the affirmative in the trance state, asserting that man is an "eternal being" naturally immortal, feeling that he has an "immortal nature." The spirit admitted that it is not possible to exist without an organized form, but failed to show from the Bible, facts or reason, that such a form leaves man at death. She introduced the portions of Scripture usually presented by our opponents to uphold the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, but none could be found to sustain the position taken, but a saying of Satan—"Ye shall not surely die."

In our reply, we remarked that our feelings taught us that we are mortal as the Bible, facts and reason most plainly show, and earnestly requested any reliable evidence to the contrary.

Wednesday, 8th. We met this evening to discuss the following resolution:—

"Resolved—That the material body, called Christ, was not raised from the dead, consequently, the resurrection of man is also spiritual."

The spirit speaking through Mrs. T. said:—"I do not care what became of Christ's body." The speaking intelligence claimed that spirits show scars; that nothing dies; that wherever there is motion there is life, and hence when a putrefying body falls in pieces, it is evidence of life. It was stated that our new body will be of "the same kind and order, having the same organs." The spirit also admitted that Paul believed in the literal resurrection of the material organism just as we argued. This was frankly admitting that we were in harmony with the Bible; and our opponent was not able to bring a single passage of Scripture to show that Christ's material body was not raised; while, on the other hand, the very best testimony was abundant to show that Christ is risen from the dead. As the apostle says:—"He showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs." The spirit professed love for Jesus, but denied the Bible record of his birth and mission, stating that he was no more the Son of God than any man then in our audience. The spirits deny both Father and Son, and hence we know that they are antichrist; for says John—"He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." The demoniacs declare that God does not exist as a being, but only as a principle, like attraction.

Thursday, 9th. This evening we discussed the following resolution:—

"Resolved—That Christ's kingdom is a spiritual one, and now it is being made manifest that Christ has already come."

This resolution seems to be in harmony with one of the signs of the Lord's coming; when he says:—"If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." The spirits teach that he has come all around us, and is coming through the various mediums now operating in the different parts of the world. Yet this does not vary much from popular theology, which asserts that Christ comes at death; if so, we might well say, "Lo, here is Christ; or, Lo, he is there." Our opponent claimed that those who saw Christ after his resurrection were in a clairvoyant state, but admitted that signs indicate his return as very near, and that there will be a change in the physical system of the world. The arguments used by the spirit were about the same as are used by many members of churches who assert that the kingdom is already set up. Through the entire discussion, we could discover but little difference between the positions and arguments taken by these lying antichristian spirits, and the popular theology of the day. It was often remarked of Mrs. Tuttle—"She is defending popular theology, and its supporters ought to sustain her." The spirit said:—"Our mission is not to undermine any thing that is good. We elevate." We replied, "Then the Bible and christianity are not good, for Spiritualism undermines both." They freely admit that the Bible and Spiritualism can not both stand; then of course, christianity goes too, for it is founded on the Bible. We look upon Spiritualism as the last great work of Satan, one which will eclipse all his other diabolical designs against Christ and his church; yet but few seem to have their eyes open to the magnitude of this delusion.

Large audiences were present, and we learn that several individuals have become satisfied that the Bible teaches truthfully that "the dead know not any thing;" and that it is folly to try any longer to sustain the position that any part of a dead man is alive and conscious. They see that the Bible, facts, common sense, and reason, are all opposed to the present theology; and though they may be reproached and lose their reputation among men, they are resolved not to be ashamed of Jesus or his words. The struggle between truth and error, right and wrong, is not less earnest than that between Monarchy and Republicanism in the vallies of Piedmont. The result is not uncertain.

"Make her Desolate."—Rev. 17: 16.

For years, we have been anxiously waiting for the fulfillment of the 17th and 18th chapter of Revelation, and it now looks as though a chain of events had commenced which will ultimate in their fulfillment, the fall of "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," and the establishment of the kingdom of Christ. If we are right in the position, that the Napoleonic Dynasty is symbolized by "the beast that was, is not, and yet is," then the ten divisions of Italy, that have sustained the Pope in his pontifical seat at Rome, will "give their strength and power unto the beast," or the French power, headed by Bonaparte; and afterwards hate the harlot, "make her desolate . . . . and burn her with fire." All things now indicate that they will unite with Napoleon and aid him in liberating Italy from the Papal yoke. Causes begin to be manifested which will lead Bonaparte and the "allies," who have thus far protected the Pope, to hate and destroy the great harlot, "with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication;" "for God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will." What is to be her portion? "Double unto her double according to her works: in the cup she hath filled, fill to her double." "Her plagues shall come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

We learn that the Pope has blessed the Austrian arms, and that the south of Germany "is stirred up by the priests, who are all devoted to Austria." It is also rumored "that two priests have been shot at Alessandria for conspiring to assassinate the Emperor Napoleon, as an enemy of the Pope and of the Roman Catholic church." If these things are so, it would seem that the time is not far distant when Bonaparte and his allies will begin to manifest their hatred towards the Papal hierarchy. We shall wait with anxiety for the tidings to show that the war current is setting towards the Vatican at Rome. As the Medes and Persians were ministers of vengeance for the destruction of old Babylon, so, it seems, the French and their allies are to be employed against mystical Babylon. Before ancient Babylon was taken, her waters were dried up by the conquering army; so now, before modern Babylon is taken, the waters must be dried up. We learn from Rev. 17: 15, that the waters of mystical Babylon symbolize "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues;" or those who have supported her. Then, just before her destruction, her supporters will ally themselves against her, and "make her desolate . . . . and burn her with fire."

Let us watch and be sober.

Advice to the Oppressed.

"Fret not thyself because of evil doers . . . . because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass." "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass." "Cease from anger and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil." "What glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it PATIENTLY, this is acceptable with GOD. For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps . . . . who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself (Marg. "his cause") to him that judgeth righteously." Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves." Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not." "Recompense to no man evil for evil." "Pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

For the Crisis.

Good Things.

It is a good thing to know who is going to preach for us. It is a good thing to let others know it through the paper, as some would attend that otherwise would not. It is very convenient to an Evangelist to see the appointments at different places in the paper; it saves him much perplexity and expense in writing, and others to answer him. If the brethren believe that good is being done by going out into highways and hedges, then something ought to be done to encourage those that will go.

Is there a call among us for Home Missionary exertion? If so, is there anything like a proper Christian cooperation in carrying it on? Ought not a little attention to be paid to this work? Think of it, brethren.

HIRAM MUNSON.

For the Crisis.

"It Looks Dark."

So said a friend of the writer a few days ago, when conversing on the state of affairs in the world. "It looks dark" to the philanthropist who hoped the day of peace was near. Now, hopes of peace have vanished away, and an awful scene of carnage is opening, while the poor philanthropist mourns that his work has been thus retarded half a century. Poor, deluded man! why not let the plans of Jehovah be carried out, without murmuring? "It looks dark" to the statesman: he sees confusion ahead, and entanglements at present. Hear them in tones of wonder and alarm: "The war has actually begun. This generation will see what it has not been the lot of every generation to behold, a general conflict among the European nations. We stand on the verge of momentous events. The cloud has broken in Europe: it is looming above our own horizon even now. Let us be ready to act the part of men and freemen."

"The following remarks by Lord Derby, in the House of Lords of England, exhibit pretty clearly, he being at the head of the British Ministry, the view of this great power in relation to this great contest. He says:

'I think my noble friend underrates the magnitude of the danger, if he supposes that the war will be confined to Italy. It will be a war, in the first place, of a most sanguinary description, because a war of principle and passion. It will not be a war between two great nations contending for some definite object, but a war exciting the most violent passions, and once begun in Italy, it will extend far beyond the limits of that country. Other passions will be roused, other interests will be touched, other nations will be called upon to interfere, and the war originating in Italy will at no distant period extend far and wide, wrapping the whole of Europe in one general conflagration."

The London Times says:—"What we see before us is war. The end of that no man can see. While we write the die may be cast, and the Continent in a flame. Our only assurance must lie in the reflection that England has done its utmost to avert the catastrophe, and also, we trust in the resolution of this country and its rulers to stand aloof from the strife which they have vainly endeavored to prevent."

"It looks dark" to the Pope of Rome: he has requested the prayers of his faithful to avert the danger to his subjects. A gentleman writing from Genoa says: "When the proper time comes the Pope will be invited to lay down his temporal power, and he will not decline the request, for he cannot help obeying." "It is asserted that the American Minister at Rome thinks it is not improbable that the Pope may be compelled to take refuge in the United States during the European war." It is said that he is virtually a prisoner at Rome; having wished to escape to Ferrara, he was informed that if he was not satisfied with French protection at Rome, the French Government would be happy to protect him in France or Algeria, but did not think it for his interests to trust himself to Austrian bayonets. The French garrison have laid an embargo on him, and he is not allowed to quit the capital.

"It looks dark" to the kings and rulers of the earth. The Pennsylvania Inquirer makes the following remarks:

"Louis Napoleon is not an ordinary man. He has always made his mark. Not a step has he taken backward. Even misadventure has aided his cause, and it seems as if Providence had mingled the blood of Napoleon and of Josephine to re-occupy the throne of France, to teach the world that there is a power above the strength of nations, and of the most holy of political alliances. Europe to-day trembles at this man. Great Britain asks him to save her from the shock of battle. Her Queen humiliates herself to write to the nephew of the man that Great Britain basely wronged, and put on board the Bellerophon, anticipating, as only a woman can foresee, the retribution attending a broken pledge. Napoleon III. replies that he will not take any steps to alarm the royal lady; but who can say where the event hangs that will render it unnecessary for him to be as false as Great Britain was to the First Emperor? Napoleon III. will triumph over Great Britain when the hour for comparing broken pledges shall arrive, and history will show which government proved itself most exalted in the scale of national and political morality.

We have never witnessed in all the records of history an alarm so prevalent as that which now stirs the veins of the English people. As if by intuition they seem to apprehend an inevitable peril before them, and an encroachment upon the power with which, by the subtlest arts of diplomacy and the most unprovoked terrors of war, they have belted the globe. We say this in no spirit of complaint, with no desire to see her humbled; but we do believe that the hour is approaching when the dismemberment of the British empire is destined to begin. The wrongs committed by her chartered wealth on the North West Indian Territory of this country—her massacres thro' her East India Company—her slaughters of the Chinese—her aggressions upon defenceless and semi-barbarous people everywhere throughout the world—the terrorism of her rule over weak powers, drawing wealth for her throne in the shape of jewels, and gold, and silver, from the princes of the earth, and holding them up to the light of Heaven as trophies of her Christian greatness and power, these things must proclaim the necessity of a humiliation, to be brought about by the agency of a man who is descended from the greatest, if not the best captain that the world ever saw."

"It looks dark" to those working for the world's conversion. They have prayed often for the nations to learn war no more, and thought they saw evidences that spears were being beaten in ploughshares, and swords into pruning-hooks; but their zeal was mistaken. Said a good deacon of the Baptist church to me:—"I believe Christ is coming too—but perhaps not as you do exactly, at present." That is it; they want Christ to come in their way, at present. They lament these warlike times, thinking it retards the progress of Christ's kingdom. How can men be so blind? The day of universal peace sung by poets, is far distant; aye—never will dawn. True, there are some who affect to believe all these notes of preparation will end in nothing; but they are like the boy walking through a grave-yard at night, who whistles to make himself think he is not afraid. What do all the preparations mean?

"The United States have recently furnished a large quantity of fire-arms and gun-making machinery to Great Britain, and extensive additional orders have recently been received by the Ames Manufacturing Company. The Journal of Commerce reports that the agents of the British government bearing these orders also bring a large installment of sterling gold, and are unrestricted as to the amount of work to be done. The American machinery already in England is worked up to its fullest capacity, turning out several thousand guns per month, under the direction of workmen from the shops at Chicopee.

A couple of monster rifled guns have been made at Chicopee, and the results of the trial are reported to be of an extraordinary character. Three balls were thrown thro' the same perforation, with only a trifling variation, at the distance of half a mile."

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says:—"I hear an Englishman has lately contracted to supply the Austrian Government with some newly invented engines of death, which are to surprise the world. Military men consider that these inventions will in a great measure change the ordinary route of campaign and seige operations."

"An agent of the French government is in Baltimore, making a contract for the purchase of several clipper ships of large class."

Certainly "coming events cast their shadows before." A gloomy shadow hangs over the earth, and it grows darker day by day. But, it is always darkest before day, and soon the "bright and morning star" will appear in splendor, and we can then sing,

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears."

J. N. BERRY.

Dorchester, Mass.

For the Crisis.

The Harlot's Doom.—Rev. 17.

"And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters; with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. So he carried me away into the wilderness," (somewhere in the 1260 years of tribulation, and from this point he says:) "and I saw a woman (symbolizing a church) sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. (Those blasphemous names and horns belong to the beast, and not to the woman.) And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration. And the angel said unto me, wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

Here we have the scenery, in connection with which is the harlot's doom. And here we are led to inquire,

What beast, or government, is this that sustains, or carries, the woman in Rev. 17? We reply, it is the ripening up of the leopard beast of Rev. 13. A comparison of the two will prove this point.

1. The leopard beast has seven heads and ten horns: the scarlet beast has the same.

2. One of the heads of the leopard beast is wounded to death, and the wounded head is healed: the scarlet beast has also a wounded and healed head.—"The beast (or head) that was, and is not, (dead) even he is the eighth."

3. Concerning the leopard beast, it is said, "and upon his heads the names (Marg.) of blasphemy." The scarlet beast is "full of names of blasphemy."

4. The leopard beast has a mouth given it which he opened in blasphemy. The scarlet beast has a woman sitting upon him from whose mouth these blasphemous words proceed.

5. The leopard beast with its wicked mouth makes war on the saints. The harlot woman on the scarlet beast is drunken with the blood of saints. Thus they are identified as one and the same power. We should not confound these Papal heads,—heads that have supported the harlot—with the Imperial heads. John's stand-point of observation is when five of these Papal heads are fallen, and is in close connection with the one that shall "continue a short space."

"And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth." This shows geographically her position; and as the Catholic church has been drinking the blood of martyrs for twelve centuries and has her seat at Rome, classically called the "seven hilled city," she must be the doomed harlot. "They are seven kings;" (Cov. trans.) also Wesley, Whiting, Dr. Clarke and Bishop Newton.—Cranmer, Wm. Tyndale, The Bishop's Bible, and the Geneva render it, "they are also seven kings;" i. e., the seven heads also represent seven kings or kingdoms; five being fallen when John saw the vision, the sixth in existence, it requires only the one of short continuance and subsequent revival to complete the number, and thus bring the beast to perdition and the harlot to the flames.

I have no longer to urge the Napoleonic dynasty as the "short space," seventh head. Facts incontrovertible prove it. It is said of the revived wounded head in Rev. 13: "All the world wondered" after it. "The beast that was, and is not, and yet is," Rev. 17, causeth the dwellers on the earth to "wonder." And in spite of all Europe, the "short-space," world-wonder dynasty has revived, and no monarch on earth is feared like him. Our own papers speak of his "superhuman agency."

But this is not all the evidence that we have concerning this wonder-working beast; for says the prophet,—"And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." What ten kingdoms have arisen since the "short space" dynasty, save those of Italy, and where? Echo answers—where?—Neither have these ten kingdoms of Italy received "power as kings," as yet, but have been crushed beneath the Austrian tyranny. These have never agreed to give their power and strength to Austria. The Austrian yoke was forced upon them by the Vienna treaty, which they have striven in vain to throw off; but "these have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast." What beast? That one that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, and which bears the harlot to her judgment.

Are those ten kingdoms now giving their power and strength to the beast? Says the Springfield Republican:—Not Sardinia only, but Italy will be under French instead of Austrian occupation." No, not Sardinia only. Tuscany has joined with her, and Parma is following in her steps, and while I write the beast may have received her vassal kingdoms, in which condition they will remain until the words of God shall be fulfilled. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire." "And again they said, Alleluia."

Brethren, "take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand." "I've listed for the war."

H. PRATT.

Fault-Finders.

In Chapman Hall, last Sunday, Bro. Moncrieff in speaking of a certain class of religious professors, said—"They have ferret eyes, and souls no larger than squirrels. They discern apostasy in a handsome neck-tie, and perdition in an ostrich feather. Church pruners, spiritual scourers and white-washers—they should hang out their sign accordingly. Their talent consists mainly in fault-finding: with them calico is piety, and silk profanity; they shudder at broad-cloth, and see all the virtues in "home-spun."

June 17th.

Fables of Infidelity and Facts of Faith.

[From S., in the Cong. Herald, Chicago.]

We have read with exceeding interest the "series of tracts on the absurdity of Atheism, Pantheism and Rationalism," comprised in this volume. After a careful perusal of the volume, we are disposed to give in our adhesion to an opinion we had heard expressed of the work, as being "superior to Dr. Nelson's famous work on Infidelity." These tracts bear the following titles: "I don't believe in Religion." "Did the world make itself?" "Is God every body, and every body God?" "Have we any need of the Bible?" "Who wrote the New Testament?" "Is the Gospel fact or fable?" "Can we believe Christ and his Apostles?" "Prophecy." "Moses and the Prophets." "Infidelity among the Stars." "Telescopic views of Scripture."

The author is evidently conversant with the various forms of modern skepticism, as well as with the proper modes of refutation. He most thoroughly exposes the ignorance of the skeptic, by appealing both to science and revelation, between which he shows a correspondence surprising to one not familiar with both. We have ourselves been delighted to find how perfectly the Bible teachings on scientific truths are made to harmonize with the most recent discoveries in Geology and Astronomy. Indeed, we have followed the author to some of his conclusions with a yet deeper feeling—we have exulted in the triumphant vindication of God's character and word.

The author has done himself honor and the cause of truth a noble service in this direction of modern infidelity. Ministers and private christians, and we believe not a few deluded men, will rise up from the perusal of this volume and bless the man through whose efforts it has been given to the public. We hope the volume will obtain a wide and rapid circulation.

☞ FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH, Editor of the Youth's Cabinet, the Uncle Frank of that charming monthly for the young, died June 5th, on board the steamship Savannah, while entering the harbor of New York. Many tender hearts will mourn his death.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per Europa. Advices of the 4th.]

THE WAR.

Sanguinary encounters have taken place at Palestro.

The Sardinian Government have issued the following official bulletins:

TURIN, May 31. A fresh victory was gained by our troops at 7 this morning. 25,000 Austrians endeavored to retake Palestro. The king, commanding the fourth division in person, and Gen. Cialdini at the head of the third regiment Zouaves, resisted the attack for a considerable time, and then, after having successfully assumed the offensive, pursued the enemy, taking one thousand prisoners and capturing eight guns, five of which were taken by the Zouaves. Four hundred Austrians were drowned in a canal during the combat at Palestro.

Another fight took place at Confienza, in the province of Lomelline, in which the enemy were repulsed by the last division of Infantry after a two hours' conflict.

Last night a picket of the enemy endeavored to pass the Po at Cervesina, but were repulsed by the inhabitants.

The Austrians have evacuated Varzo, in the province of Bobbio.

TURIN, June 1. The victory gained yesterday has been followed by a second victorious combat, which took place at six o'clock in the evening at Palestro, which the enemy endeavored to re-enter, but was repulsed by the division of Cialdini, composed of Zouaves and Piedmontese Cavalry. The king pressed forward where the fight was most furious, the Zouaves vainly trying to restrain him.

On Tuesday the Austrians attacked the Sardinian vanguard at Sesto Calende. The fight lasted two hours. Our troops crossed the Ticino in pursuit of the enemy.

A numerous Austrian corps d'armee appeared. Garibaldi ordered the National guard not to resist, and held back on Lago Maggiore.

An attack was attempted by our troops against Laverno, on Lago Maggiore, but without any decisive result.

Additional details of the battle of Palestro state that the Sardinian right wing was at one time out-flanked by the Austrians, who threatened the bridge of boats across the Sesia, over which Canrobert was to effect a junction with the king. At this juncture the Zouaves came to the rescue, and turned the tide against the Austrians. The Zouaves lost one officer and twenty men killed, and the Austrians 200 killed, including ten officers.

The Sardinians are believed to have been terribly cut up, but their loss is not mentioned. An Austrian General is reported killed.

Louis Napoleon subsequently visited the battle-field, and congratulated the Sardinians on the result.

A Turin dispatch of the 21 says that the Austrians advanced that morning from Bobbio towards the French outposts, but retired after a short fight.

A movement was made to conceal the retreat of the Austrians, who had begun to evacuate Bobbio, carrying with them about a thousand wounded.

On the 3d a dispatch was received from Turin, stating that the Austrians had retired to the eastern bank of the Po, and had abandoned Terre Berilli and the neighboring country.

The Paris Moniteur publishes dispatches from Vercelli, which the Emperor had made his head quarters, confirmatory of the Sardinian bulletins, and saying the Sardinians behaved most valiantly at Palestro, and stating in regard to the part taken by the Zouaves, that they performed wonders. Although unsupported, and in front of an Austrian battery of light guns, the Zouaves crossed a canal, ascended the heights which were very steep, and charged the Austrians with their bayonets. More than four hundred Austrians were thrown into the canal and six pieces of cannon were taken by the Zouaves. The loss of the French was inconsiderable.

Garibaldi had met with a reverse. A Vienna dispatch of the 1st announces on official authority that Garibaldi was driven back from Sandrio into the mountains, General D'Urban's troops pursuing him. The only issue open to Garibaldi was the Stelvio.

An official dispatch from Milan states that on the 1st Varese was cannonaded and taken by D'Urban, who reinstated the legal authorities and levied a war contribution on the city.

It was telegraphed from Turin on the 3d that Garibaldi had surprised and beaten the Austrians at Varese, and that town was again free of the enemy; and also that Garibaldi re-entered Como on the night of the 2d.

Gen. Niel entered Novara on the 1st, after a slight encounter with the Austrian outposts, who shortly fled. The Emperor arrived there the same evening amidst the acclamations of the people.

The Austrians endeavored to cross the Po at Bassignano, but the inhabitants opposed their passage, firing upon and destroying the Austrian bark.

The Vatteline was in a state of insurrection, and the town of Sandrio had proclaimed Victor Emanuel.

French officers of Engineers had arrived at Intra, and were collecting vessels to cross Lago Maggiore with five hundred men.

The French squadron in the Adriatic had captured thirty-five Austrian vessels, the estimated value of which was four millions of francs.

The London Daily News of Saturday has a special dispatch dated Turin, Friday night, saying that the Austrians, in full retreat, were re-crossing the Ticino. Garibaldi had gained a new victory. The insurrection in Lombardy is spreading.

FRANCE.

The recall of French soldiers on leave of absence had added 120,000 veterans to the French army.

Flat-bottomed gun-boats were being constructed in France for the navigation of Po, Ticino and other rivers.

Extraordinary excitement had prevailed in Paris, on account of rumors that a general action was progressing all along the line—that Gen. Gyulai was killed, etc., all of which proved unfounded. Preparations were even made for a grand illumination, in honor of the expected victory.

Twenty-two additional battalions of foot chasseurs were to be organized.

GERMANY.

The feeling in some of the German States is so strong that a French manufacturer at Hesse Cassel, employing seven hundred workmen, has been compelled to quit the place, on account of the excitement prevailing.

Latest intelligence represents that the rising of Christians in the whole of European Turkey was imminent.

The correspondent of a London paper referring to the state of feeling in Germany, says:—"I believe that the Rhine for the moment attracts more official attention than the Ticino. The tension of German opinion is represented as extreme. All the officers of the Prussian army living on famille have been ordered to provide for the summary [illegible] of their wives, and other domestic impediments, so as to be ready to move at a moment's notice. This I learn from the wife of an officer of the Royal Guard, an Englishwoman, who has recently arrived here from Potsdam. Prussia is straining every nerve to keep the peace. But her diplomatists look grave if questioned as to the probability of her being able to keep her hold on the leash much longer; the 'dogs of war' are struggling as furiously to be loose."

TURKEY.

The garrison of Belgrade had been reinforced, and it is reported is to be trebled.

It is also reported that the Porte is about to send a strong naval force to the Adriatic.

Herzegovina was reported in open revolt.

ITALY.

The French Minister of Marine has just given orders for the shipment for Italy of the siege material accumulated at Marseilles and Toulon. It will be put on board forty vessels. The guns are all rifled, and are 8 and 12 pounders; the field pieces are 4 and 6-pounders. The range of the small siege guns is from 4000 to 6,000 yards.

BERNE, May 30. An insurrection has broken out in the Valtelline. The population is repairing in masses to Sondrio, the centre of the revolutionary movement. The Austrian gendarmes, who have retired into Switzerland, have been disarmed by the Swiss authorities, and sent into the interior of the country. The Federal Council has dispatched troops to the frontiers of the Grisons.

Count Persigny has arrived at Paris from London, with the object, it is believed, of persuading the Count Walewski to proceed to Vercelli, and beg the Emperor to stop short at Milan; where, as Bradshaw would say, "he is due before the close of next month." Count Persigny is believed to be provided with guarantees from the English and Prussian Cabinets, that they will summon Austria to evacuate Lombardy, and abandon the contest, on the Emperor's arrival at Milan.

SPAIN.

The Madrid journals of the 28th ult state that the insurgent Carlist band which had appeared near Valencia had been attacked by the Queen's troops and dispersed, four horses being taken from them. A letter from a semi-official source says: "Contrary to what has been stated, the Pope has never thought of requesting a Spanish garrison to be sent to Rome. He could not, in fact, make such a demand without previous concert with the French government. The Spanish government, being firmly convinced that neutrality is favorable to Spain, will remain neutral.

VERY LATEST.

Per Anglo Saxon. From Liverpool the 8th instant.

The latest news by the Europa, reporting the Austrians in retreat across the Ticino, is fully confirmed.

The French crossed the Ticino at Buffalora and Turbigo. There was considerable fighting at both places.

On the 4th a great battle took place at Magenta, twelve miles from Milan. Napoleon's dispatches claim a decisive victory, and Paris was illuminated. He says they took seven thousand Austrian prisoners, and placed twelve thousand more hors du combat, besides capturing three cannon and two standards. The French loss is stated by the Emperor at three thousand men. The Austrians took one cannon.

The French General Espinasse was killed, and Marshal Canrobert was mortally wounded.

Milan was insurgent, and had declared in favor of the King of Sardinia.

The Austrians had retired from Milan, but the French had not occupied it.

Rumors prevalent in Paris represent the French loss at Magenta from nine to twelve thousand men.

The forces engaged in this last battle are reported: Austrians one hundred and fifty thousand to one hundred and eighty thousand, and French a hundred thousand to one hundred and thirty.

The Austrian accounts speak of a series of battles with various success on both sides, but still undecided up to the night of the 6th, with great losses on both sides.

The Austrians admit they had four Generals and five staff officers wounded.

It was reported that Gen. Hess commanded the Austrians, and also that the Emperor Napoleon partially commanded the French.

THE BATTLE OF MAGENTA.

Another great battle was fought on the 4th.

The following is the first announcement by telegraph from Napoleon to the Empress:

NOVARA, June 4, 11 30.—A great victory has been won at the bridge of Magenta, 5000 prisoners taken; 15,000 of the enemy killed or wounded. The details will be despatched by telegraph.

The above was published in Paris on Sunday, the 5th, and on the evening of that day, cannon at the Hotel des Invalides announced the victory, and the city was brilliantly illuminated.

On the following day, Monday, the Moniteur published the following dispatches from the Emperor to the Empress:

MAGENTA, June 5th.—Yesterday our army was under orders to March on Milan, across bridges thrown over the Ticino at Turbigo. The operation was well executed, although the enemy, who had repassed Ticino in great force, offered a most determined resistance. The road way was narrow, and during two hours the Imperial Guard sustained, unsupported, the shock of the enemy. In the mean time, McMahon made himself master of Magenta, after a sanguinary conflict. We repulsed the enemy at every point, with a loss on our side of about 2000 men. The loss of the enemy is estimated at 15,000 killed and wounded, and 5000 Austrian prisoners remained in our hands.

June 5th—evening. The Austrians taken prisoners are at least 7000; Austrians placed hors du combat, 20,000; three pieces of cannon and two flags captured from the enemy. To-day our army rests, for the purpose of reorganizing itself. Our loss is about 3000 killed and wounded, and one cannon taken by the enemy.

The following dispatch, also from the Emperor to the Empress, was received on the 6th, and bulletined at the Bourse:

"Headquarters, Monday, 8 A. M. Milan is insurgent. The Austrians have evacuated the town and castle, leaving, in their precipitation, the cannon and treasure of their army behind them.

We are encumbered with prisoners, and have taken 12,000 Austrian muskets."

A dispatch dated Paris, Monday night, to the London Post says: "The municipality of Milan have proclaimed for King Victor Emmanuel, and presented an address to him, in the presence of the Emperor. To-morrow the King will make his entry into Milan."

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that the Emperor Napoleon was present at the battle of Magenta, but did not command in person.

The opinion was becoming current in London that the victory of Magenta was a victory in which the French were defeated, and their failure to occupy Milan, only twelve miles from Magenta, strengthened this view.

The movements which preceded the battle at Magenta are not clearly stated, but it was previously announced that the allies were to cross the Ticino to the number of about 100,000 men, and it is presumed the rapid movement of the allied army prevented the Austrians from completing that retreat which they had commenced, and compelled them to accept battle on the banks of the river.

There were rumors in Paris on the 8th that the French loss was 8000 to 12,000 and [illegible] hors du combat.

The Paris papers variously estimate the forces engaged as follows: French, 100,000 to 120,000; Austrians, 120,000 to 180,000.

☞ The following extract is from a recent letter from an American gentleman abroad:

"At Paris, during the few hours that I have been here, I gather something for the reverse of the shield. It is said that the Emperor, before leaving, declared that he would not have another Prussia on the South of France, from which it was inferred that the beautiful kingdom of Alta Italia would never be tolerated by him; some say that he will contrive to get a slice for himself or his family; others say, that Lombardy and Venice will be organized under an Austrian arch-duke, but without Austrian armies; others say that this is the first step in a scheme of mighty ambition, where he begins by lopping off from Austria, and then will take Prussia next up to the Rhine, and that the fear of this will arouse Prussia and the whole Confederation against him. Others say that there will be soon a coalition against France, and that he has already put himself where his uncle was in 1813. I do not think so,—as things stand at present. Of course, with the great flood gates open, nobody can tell confidently how high the waters will rise; but disliking the Emperor as I do, I am yet disposed to believe that various circumstances, among which are, early education, full of sympathy for Italy, and a desire to do a generous deed that may make people remember with less bitterness the coup d'etat, these and other things conspire for the moment to keep him faithful to the idea of Italian independence. But this is a great moment in history—nothing like it since 1815."—Springfield Republican.

Correspondence of the Oswego Palladium, June 17.

The Meteoric Phenomenon.

BOYLSTON, Thursday, June 16.

On the receipt of your dispatch at Pulaski, I started at once for Boylston, to inspect in person the scene of the startling phenomenon of Wednesday.

The facts in regard to the time and circumstances preceding the fall of the aerolite I have from Mr. James Hadley, an intelligent and responsible citizen of the town of Redfield, who resides about one mile from the scene, and the rest is from personal observation.

MR. HADLEY'S STATEMENT.

I was awakened at about 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning, by the room in which I slept being filled with light, and immediately heard a rushing sound like the coming of a great wind. This did not last above a few seconds after I was awake, when an explosion followed of which I can give no description—it was terrific. The whole house shook as if a hundred cannon had been fired under the windows; quite a number of panes of glass were broken out of the windows, and the plastering of the room I was in came tumbling about me. The light, which was so brilliant that I could plainly see every object in the room, was at once extinguished. The window of my room is on the opposite side of the house from the place where the meteor fell, so that I can only judge of its direction. The light seemed to come from some body moving very rapidly and from south to north, and seemed to increase rapidly during the brief space that preceded the explosion.

The aerolite struck the earth in some timber land belonging to Mr. Sanger, in a thinly inhabited portion of the town. We believe Mr. Hadley's is the nearest dwelling. It seems to have been an almost spherical body of, (as near as we can judge from the fragments remaining) about seventy-five feet in diameter. Its course was from southwest to northeast, and descended at an angle of not more than thirty degrees from the horizon, which is proved by its track through the heavy hemlock trees before it touched the earth.

The trees are cut through as a cannon ball would cut through a hedge, leaving a clear track. The velocity must have been immense. The earth is torn up for several rods, and the huge trees are splintered and piled up like brush. One large hemlock, at least four feet in diameter, near whose roots the meteor struck, was thrown bodily for eighty yards, crushing the surrounding trees like pipe stems. Fragments of a huge sandstone boulder which lay in its course, under the surface, were thrown in all directions, and one weighing half a ton was found in the road three-fourths of a mile away.

A VEGETARIAN CONGREGATION.—They have in Philadelphia a sect denominated the Church of the Bible Christians, of which the Rev. Mr. Metcalf is pastor. Originally its creed was that of the Swedenborgians, but a separation occurred in regard to enforcement of certain points of discipline. The Swedenborgians contended that Christ arose in the material body from the tomb. The Bible Christians took the opposite ground, asserting it as their belief that, after the crucifixion, the body which ascended to Heaven was not merely spiritual but divine. About this time the doctrine was broached of entire abstinence from the flesh of animals as food, and total abstinence from all intoxicating beverages, as religious duties. These differences being irreconcilable, a schism occurred, and the Society of the Bible Christians was formed as an independent body. They believe that Christianity, to be beneficial, must be practical. They exercise no dominion over the consciences of men, but all desirous of joining them in abstaining from flesh, fish and fowl of every kind, and from all intoxicating beverages, and in appropriating to practical life the precepts of the Bible, are freely admitted members. Out of Philadelphia there is no other regularly organized society in the country.

Married.

In Cheshire, Ct., May 21st, by Eld. S. G. Mathewson, Mr. CHARLES M. MATTHEWS of Southington, and Miss FRANCES E., daughter of Geo Morgan of Cheshire.

In Cheshire, Ct., June 5th, by Rev. Mr. Eaton, Mr. WARREN P. MORGAN, and Miss MARIA, daughter of Bradley Miles, both of C.

In Stoughton, Mass, June 12th, by Eld. George Waugh, Mr. HENRY A. WAUGH of Stoughton, and Miss LOVINA A. MILLIKEN of Ellsworth, Me.

Notices, &c.

NOTICE OF THE GENERAL CAMPMEETING AT NORTH WILBRAHAM.—It is thought best by the committee of arrangements, that this annual meeting commence Monday, August the 22d, and continue one week. Particulars hereafter.

H. MUNGER,
Committee, R. E. LADD,
GEO. T. ADAMS.

Notice.

A grove meeting will be held in Gloucester, R. I., on the 3d and 4th of July, near the residence of Mr. David Randall, about one mile north of the old Scituate Academy. Eld. Hemenway of Danielsonville, and Eld. Durfee of South Kingston, R. I., are expected to be present to preach the word. Preaching at 10 A. M., and at 1 and 4 P. M. A general invitation to the preaching brethren is extended. D. A. JONES.

Conference in R. I.

The next meeting of the Conference in this State, is to be held at Carolina Mills, Wednesday, June 29th, 1859. Let all who desire to take part in business come up that day; that we may be able to do our business up at once, so as to have more time to devote to "prayer" and "preaching the word." We hope all will see the importance of this.

JOSEPH D. BROWN.

Notice.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd would say to churches that desire his labors, that he will visit them, as they shall request, the Lord willing. His address is 69 State St., Newark, N. J.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a quarterly conference holden with the Church of God in Springville, Bad Axe County, Wis., to commence on Friday, June 24th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Lord's day. As this is a new field, in which the harvest is great, we hope that all the way-worn pilgrims that can, will attend this convocation and participate in comforting each other. We especially solicit our preaching brethren to attend that can do so.

Y. HIGGINS, Evangelist.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday, ...June 26th

Providence permitting, I will preach in New Bedford the first and second Lord's day in July.

MILES GRANT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR CHESHIRE ST., CT.

S. S. Brewer, ...June 26th
E Burnham, (eve.), ...June 25th, 29th, 30th, and July 1st
Daniel A. Jones ....July 10th

GEORGE MORGAN, for the brethren.

Eld J. Couch will preach at Portland, Me., ...June 26th

S. C. Hancock will preach in East Otis, ...Sunday, June 26th

Eld. T. S. Canfield will preach in Plainfield Pond, ...June 26th
Bancroft, ...June 29th

Eld. J. G Smith appoints to preach in Danbury, N. H. ....June 26th

Eld. C. Goodrich appoints to preach in Goshen, Mass., ...June 26th

Eld. J K Bellows appoints to preach in Bridgeport, Ct., ...June 26th

W. I. Blanchard appoints to preach in South Farms, Ct., ...June 23d

APPOINTMENTS FOR BRISTOL, CT.

Eld. George Champlin ....July 31

J. H. SUTLIFFE.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Eld. Israel Damman's P. O. address is Dexter, Me.

H. L. Hastings' P. O. address is Providence, R. I.

S. E. Maybe—Yes.

L. G. Humphreyville.—No order been received.

Cash Receipts.

J Kelsey 221 $3.75, L Hart 188 $2.50, C W Baker 208 $1.40, J Tasker 198 32 cts, J J Joslyn 194 48 cts, W Paine 208 $1.33, R Scoville 145 $1.50, L L Tuttle 212, $1.12, W Conslin 249 $3.06, Israel Rice 350 $4.00.

B Perkins 209, J Jeffrey 209, W J Hale 210, C Shepherd 209, E Weston 209, J T Howland 221,—50 cents each.

A Elliott 221, I T Neal 234, Mrs. E Barnes 222, J F Baker 22?, Dl. Hull 222, Harriet Clark 223, W H Plummer 222, C Churchill 222, P Haynes 182, Mrs. A Grimes 219, D Finch 222, L A Lang 227, J Kenyan 222, Wm Payne 220, H Ford 222, D M Burns 222, J Outbank 227, M Sperry 198, L Hart 233, L Moses 208, Sol. Morse 224, C Hart 233, J Saunders 208, J W Doten 223, A Corliss 228, S Potter 246, J W Ireland 221, P Richards 223, W A Chase 223, J W Martin 223, Mrs. G S Flint 210,—$1.00 each.

P W Jones 210, H L Streeter 231, G French 194, S G Griffin 234, Hannah Stone, M Benham 208, E Lloyd 182, S Johnson 213, C H Cotton 234, L D Pond 228, H W Pray $2.00 each.

W Harris 248, E Piper 234,—$3.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—A H Balsley $14.54, Mrs. French 23 cts, A H Watson $1.08, E G Emmons 54 cts, H H Abbott 56 cts, L A Lapham 34 cts, C W Baker 60 cts, D A Jones $1.75, W Pratt $2.00, H W Pray 46 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 6 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $16.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 6 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 10 cents; postage 1 ct.

The Rights of Women; or, Is Hell Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. [illegible] per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, [illegible] New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and [illegible] & Co., Chicago.

[illegible]

Crozier's [illegible]

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

Words of Warning [illegible] postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have [illegible] ments so that we can furnish them at lower [illegible] than they can be bought at any other place.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many [illegible] connected with [illegible] by himself. This is a [illegible] and will be read with interest [illegible] —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—8 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the reader. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $2.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price 32, postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 5 cts; cloth gilt, 60 cts.—postage 10c.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) [illegible] pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred; postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths, by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Duties of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Landis. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by [illegible] 6—Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks, separate; 3—Forty Questions on [illegible]; 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us receive them. Orders with the cash are solicited. [illegible] Those who buy books to sell will receive a liberal discount. [illegible]

Address H. L. HASTINGS, [illegible]

For sale also by H. Brooks, [illegible] G. W. Young, 138 William street N. Y.

☞ The Landmarks [illegible]

☞ The Olive Leaves [illegible]

Glad Tidings [illegible]

The Three [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 198.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Death.

[illegible]
O, must I die?
[illegible]
[illegible] shall close?
O, must I 'mid the countless fallen lie,
[illegible] ah, must I die?
O, must I die?
O, must I die?
In [illegible] morning, 'ere the opening ray
[illegible] of a bright and working day?
[illegible] sun, obscured, decline so soon,
And night close in be ere I see its noon?
O, must I die?
O, must I die?
The scorn of foes—ah, shall their fury kill?
[illegible] their envious will?
My work undone, purposes unperformed,
My [illegible] run—the slumbering world unwarned,—
O, must I die?
O, must I die?
[illegible] restless heart,—God doeth all things well;
[illegible] rules in heaven, and earth, and hell;
And he shall love in life and death the same,
[illegible] thee with his love's undying flame.
Peace! all is well.
H. [illegible]
[illegible], May 9, '59.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 2.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

THE CREATIVE ACT.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." This is the inscription which we find engraven over the sublime portal that conducts us into the grand arena of revolving worlds and all created being. It is simple in expression, yet grand in meaning. "In the beginning!" The very sound of these words carries us back through the cycling ages, to that period when time was not, ere earth existed, ere light had dissolved the night of chaos. Back to "the beginning" the mind quickly wanders; but how soon it folds its wearied pinion, when it strives to enter the mysterious region that stretches beyond. All before this belong to eternity, to God.

Who, then, can peruse the account of creation, as recorded in Holy Writ, without emotions of awe and reverence for the Almighty Architect who reared the vast temple of Nature, and adorned its fair proportions with beauty and loveliness? Who can look forth upon the universe as we now behold it, and not feel that there is a God who rules in the heavens above, and guides the worlds in their onward march through boundless space?

It is not our design to discuss any mooted question of geology in this connection, but simply to follow the divine record as it stands. Basing our conclusions on that record then, we find that when the time had arrived that the vast designs which the Almighty had purposed from eternity, were to be fulfilled, the Omnific command was given, and a mighty universe rode out of chaos. The golden sun, the moon, and all the brilliant orbs that glitter in the dome of heaven, and this our fair earth, though shapeless and unseemly at first, came forth at the sound of the Creator's voice.

At first, "the earth was without form and void." Chaos swayed his dark sceptre over the unformed universe, which was submerged by a mighty abyss of waters, whose turbid waves rolled on through the murky darkness, and found not a shore to impede their flow. A night of rayless darkness brooded over the chaotic world, with its impenetrable gloom. But at length the command was given that there should be light; and light, pure, etherial, though dim at first, stole in upon the darkness, softly diffusing its mild radiance through the gloom. "Next, God made a division between light and darkness. He then instituted the alternation between them which has continued ever since, the 'grateful vicissitude of day and night.' Now it was, perhaps, that the earth began to revolve round its axis. God laying his finger on it, and giving it the precise impulse needed. How simply is the division effected! No vast curtain alternately drawn and undrawn, no large cloud wrapping the earth in its foldings, and again disappearing, no alternate kindling and quenching of the great source of light. God speaks, or stretches out His hand, or sends out one of those 'angels that excel in strength, and the earth begins to revolve.'"

Thus ended Creation's first eve and first morn. But the Creator paused not in his work. He next enshrouded the earth with the subtle atmosphere, that it might receive the superincumbent mass of vapor, which, [illegible] had not been separated from the [illegible]. Thus the vast expanse of ether [illegible] was formed, into which the unseen mist of the ocean continually [illegible] again descends in the form of [illegible] showers, which revivify the earth with freshness and beauty. [illegible] the third day, the earth [illegible] from out the dark abyss; and the waters rolled [illegible] into their [illegible] receptacle, [illegible] earth must have [illegible] with its towering mountains [illegible] plains spread out at their base, all bare and unadorned, its dim outlines just discernible in the uncertain light. But the earth soon presented a different aspect. The Creator spread a mantle of green verdure over the bare and rugged form of nature, and decked her broad fields with beauteous flowers of every hue. Then stately forests rose spontaneous from the luxuriant soil, and spread their giant forms over the mountains' sloping sides, or crowned the hills with their exuberant foliage. The majestic oak, the graceful palm, and the stately cedar, were not wanting to grace the forests with their presence. Lovely trees, yielding ambrosial fruit, or gemmed with blossoms, were scattered in rich profusion over the plains. The great Architect now beheld the work of his hands and pronounced it "good." A goodly earth with its forest-crowned mountains, and flower-clad vales, its wide plains of living verdure, and its vast ocean of unpolluted blue. A beautiful earth, fit for the haunt of angelic beings, fit to be impressed by the feet of Jehovah, while he held sweet converse with unfallen man, amid the groves of Paradise.

Now, when the dim light of the third day of creation had been succeeded by the deeper shades of night, the veil, which till then, had obscured the sky, was drawn aside, and the lovely moon stole forth from her hiding place, attended by a bright retinue of celestial orbs, which then, for the first time, gazed upon the new made world, adorned with enchanting loveliness. What a beauteous eve, yet none but immortal eyes gazed upon its silent beauty. Methinks 'twas then, that the morning stars first sang their notes of harmonious melody over young Creation's birth. The far distant spheres caught up the triumphant song, and echoed it along their ranks, till it swelled up with its sweet volume of joyous melody to the golden gates of Heaven. Thus the sweet hours of night stole softly by, till at length the rosy light of morn lit up the eastern sky with the bright beams of the rising sun, which soon burst forth with the full radiance of his effulgent glory, and for the first time gazed out on the young world, smiling with radiant beauty and freshness of youth, just from the hand of the great Master Builder. The forests hung out their "leafy banners" to meet the gaze of the morning sun. The lovely flowers shed sweet tears of joy as he kissed their roseate cheeks. All nature rejoiced in the gladsome influence of his bright beams. The cataracts sent up their sweet anthems in the forest glades, and the jocund rills lent their mimic music to swell the joyous melody of nature in her youthful rapture.

But as yet there was naught of animate life to partake of the universal joy. In this we behold the beautiful order of creation. Life sustaining is first created, then animate life is brought into existence. But the fifth day beheld the mighty ocean teeming with life, from the minutest animalcule to the huge leviathan of the deep. The air was filled with the feathered tribe that mounted aloft on soaring pinions, and the forests, solitary till then, were made vocal by the joyous birds which flitted about in their gay plumage of variegated hues. And when the fair eve again stole over the scene, the lonely nightingale ceased not her warbling, "but all night tuned her soft lays."

At length, the last and brightest day of creation dawned on the lovely scene. The vital spark of life was imparted to the inanimate dust, and myriads of beasts with perfect forms and graceful limbs arose out of the earth, as the lion springs from his lair when roused from repose. What a wondrous spectacle! Thousands of varied forms springing into life at a breath; from the huge Behemoth to the humming insect, floating on zephyr's breath. Now, the earth, the air, the ocean, were teeming with life in a thousand varied forms, yet there wanted a higher order of intelligence; something in which might be reflected the image and likeness of the universal Creator, with whom might be intrusted the rule and dominion of the earth. For this purpose, man was created and endowed with wisdom and knowledge suited to his high station. The Creator, however, left not man to seek for himself a place of abode, but planted a delicious garden in Eden, which was stored with the choicest fruit, and adorned with ambrosial bowers, and sparkling fountains, while broad rivers flowed through its verdant plains, ever adding beauty and freshness to the scene. To this Elysium was Adam conducted, yet, as he gazed around him and beheld the countless enjoyments which awaited him at every step, a feeling of solitude stole over him, for in nature's vast realms he found not a congenial companion, with whom he might hold sweet communion, and whose love might flow with his heart's warmest affection. But Adam soon found a companion in the angelic form of Eve, in whom he beheld one who could share his every joy, and who, though then unknown to him, was to soothe his sorrow and solace his lonely heart, when sin had expelled him from the ambrosial bowers of Paradise into the cold and bitter world of gloom and sadness. They were now left in the sunny clime of Eden, in the enjoyment of unalloyed bliss, without a shade of care to dim their azure sky of happiness, and with but the prohibition by which their fidelity was to be tested.

Thus closed the sixth, and last, wondrous day of creation, and the Creator having finished his work, surveyed the universe, adorned and beautified by his own hand, and pronounced it "good." Yes, it was a goodly earth, with its fair proportions of hill and dale, its flower-interwoven bowers, and sequestered groves with their murmuring fountains, which glided in sweet music on; its laughing streamlets leaping merrily down the velvet hill sides, and its ocean-bound rivers rolling their crystal waves along with a murmur ever sweet, at whose banks the graceful gazelle often drank, then bounded away over the lovely lawns with lightsome gladness. It was a lovely world, fit counterpart of that clime

"Where beauty never fades,
But blooms perennial, with freshness
Of eternal Spring."

Now the Architect rested from his labors after he had pronounced his benediction upon his handiwork. Then the first Sabbath threw its holy and sanctifying influence over the smiling earth, blushing with the freshness of youthful loveliness. Methinks the angelic choir filled the wide empyrean with their jubilant voices of symphonious melody, as they caught a distant view of the young Paradise reposing lovingly amid the bright galaxy of resplendent worlds, revolving round in harmonious circles. Methinks they gave their golden lyres a higher note, and attuned their seraph voices to strains of loftier praise, as they sang of Jehovah's mighty works.

Thus closed the first grand act in the opening drama of earth's destiny. An act, than which no greater shall ever take place, till that great day that shall witness the consummation of all things, and which shall usher in the dawn of the Millennial Age.

For the Crisis.

[The following lines were written by our poetical correspondent, E. S. Woodford of Winsted, Ct., who is mourning the recent death of a devoted companion. The family of the Editor of this paper spent the day-dreams of their youth in that once happy family, (of which the husband is now the only survivor) and deeply sympathize with the afflicted.]

Alone.

I.

The morning dawns, I wake to meet no fond embrace,
No heart with mine its genial pulses interlace;
And when Aurora's tintings from the east unroll,
I startle at the shadows which invest my soul.

II.

I wake to hear the music of my own blue streams,—
They cannot chase the sadness from my spirit's dreams,
Earth seems enshrouded in a dark funereal pall,
And spectral shadows flit across my chamber wall.

II.

No bright green oasis along my pathway lies,
And every hope pursued e'en like an arrow flies;
The sunny vale of life is wrapped in cheerless gloom,
And all that made life joyous once, sleeps in the tomb.

III.

And there within that quiet shade,
Beneath my own bright sunny sky,
May I with those I love be laid,
Whene'er it is my time to die.

IV.

Where they are sleeping let me sleep,
Till Eden's second morn shall break;
I would not call them back to weep,
I would not their sweet slumbers wake.

E. S. W.

West Winsted, May 25, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 6.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

Not only did God predict by his prophets the utter extinction of the city of Babylon, and the desolation of its fertile plains, but he also named the prince who should conquer the city, and described the method by which it would be accomplished, for more than a century previous to its destruction! It is thus described by the prophet Isaiah 44: 27, 28; "That saith to the deep, be dry; and I will dry up thy rivers: that saith of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure . . . And I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut."

The points in this prophecy which we wish particularly to notice are, first, Cyrus, the agent employed by God to accomplish his purposes against Babylon. Second, the river dried up. Third, the gates not shut. Fourth, the loosing of the loins of kings. We will elucidate these several points by facts from history.

Cyrus, a Persian king, came against Babylon to besiege it. He dug a trench around the city, erected towers, and encamped his army around it, for two years, without effecting anything of real importance. In the language of prophecy, "the mighty men of Babylon forbore to fight; they remained in their strongholds." In vain Cyrus challenged them to the combat—with impregnable walls surrounding them, fertile fields within their boundaries, and provisions sufficient for twenty years' sustenance, stored in their treasure houses, they derided Cyrus and his soldiers for their folly in presuming to overcome them. Unable to bring them to the field, and knowing it were vain to attempt to scale the towering walls, or break through their gates of solid brass, Cyrus had recourse to stratagem. He determined on changing the course of the river Euphrates, which flowed directly through the city, a[illegible] laborious work, [illegible] undertaking; for had the [illegible] of their danger they could with little trouble have defeated them in their enterprise, and effected the entire destruction of the Persian army. Cyrus chose for the execution of his purpose a night, when the Babylonians were having a great festival, and, forgetful that they were surrounded by foes, and unconscious of danger, were engaged in feasting, dancing and merriment, until many were made drunken: and it was in the midst of their feast, in which they desecrated the vessels of the Lord's house, by drinking wine from them in honor of their gods, that suddenly there came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick, upon the wall of the king's palace, the doom of the golden city. Then it was the king's countenance turned pale with terror, and the joints of his loins were loosed, so that his knees smote one against another. The writing was, "MENE, MENE," he hath numbered, he hath numbered: "TEKEL," he hath weighed: "UPHARSIN," they divide. While this revelry was going on within the palace, Cyrus, having turned the waters of the river, marched his army without any impediment into the city, the gates of the river, through neglect, having been left open. "The gates shall not be shut." He made his way directly to the gorgeous palace of the king, whose hands were now waxed feeble, and upon whose spirit anguish had already taken hold, by the fearful warning and interpretation given by Daniel the prophet. When the noise of the tramping of horses was heard, and the outcry of alarm fell upon his ear, in his confusion and terror he commanded the gates of his palace to be thrown open, in order to ascertain the cause of the disorder, and thus were the "two-leaved gates" opened, and Cyrus with his army took the king by surprise, and slew him.

In the language of the prophet:—"A snare was laid for Babylon, it was taken, and it was not aware; it was found, and also caught, for it had sinned against the Lord. How is the praise of the whole earth surprised! For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness and thy wisdom, and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee, therefore shall evil come upon thee, and thou shalt not be able to put it off. None shall save them. In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord. I will make drunken her princes and her wise men, and her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men, and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep."

How exactly does the history accord with the prediction. The turning of the waters from their native channel did indeed cause Babylon to be taken in a "snare;" evil came indeed from an unexpected quarter, and there was no escape. The prophet, with his prophetic telescope, saw that banquet spread—more than a century before—he saw who would feast at the royal table, "princes," "wise men," "captains," "rulers," and "mighty men," and that they would drink until drunken, and thus be overtaken before they could awake from their unconsciousness, and thrown into a "perpetual sleep." Says Daniel:—Belshazzar made a feast unto a thousand of his lords." He commanded the golden vessels to be brought that were taken from the house of the Lord, "that the king, and his princes, his wives and his concubines might drink" wine in them.

W.

Selections.

Is Silence enjoined upon Women in Religious Meetings?

This question is certainly one of much moment, and as its disposition must affect the conduct of vast numbers in the Church, of Christ, it is desirable to have a correct and Scriptural solution of it, if such can be obtained. It is admitted that Christ, as the chief corner-stone of his Church, has the right to establish rules to regulate and control his members while engaged in his service. Nor is the propriety or justness of his requirement to be questioned by any light or sense of ours, but cheerful obedience should characterize the disciple when the knowledge of his will is attainable.

Although a diversity of opinion exists in the Church as to the right as well as fitness of women being heard in the assembly of religious worship, yet it would appear that the subject could be so far divested of ambiguity as to arrive clearly at the mind of Christ on this point. Education and custom are powerful controllers of opinion and argument, and may prove the foundation of inveterate prejudice, while at the same time they may lack the essentials of truth and candor. Very much of the sentiment existing requiring women to keep silence in the assembly of the saints, may be due rather to prejudicial habit, awaking the feeling that she is about to assume too much, than to a right understanding of Scripture, and a proper and sensible appreciation of woman's sphere and woman's aid. If absolute silence is required, then why call in her help, so valuable and so pleasing, in praise, and reject it in prayer? The truth, indeed, appears that Paul in his Epistles did not design sternly and irrevocably to denounce and forbid all utterance from women in the religious meeting, but to rid the practice of certain abuses that had arisen and obtained in certain quarters.

The position which God has assigned to woman is one of subordination. Her husband is her head, whom she is to reverence, and to whom she is in subjection. Her life however, is not lost in that of her husband, nor is her responsibility merged in his; and as she retains the latter, so she retains a liberty of individual thought and action. An evidence of her dependence and subjection in Paul's time, and her [illegible] recognition of [illegible] superiority was asserted by his having the head uncovered. This was a divinely appointed and natural order, and the practice of it evinces a propriety and decency of conduct altogether becoming. Among the Greeks and Romans a custom prevailed to this effect, and among the Jews a law required it. The Corinthian church, established in a most dissolute, depraved, and debauched city, corrupted by the flooding tide of vice around it, had departed so far from this wholesome order as to practice even the very reverse of it—the women having the head uncovered, and the men the head covered. Paul hears of this irregularity, and to correct it directs a portion of his letter to this church against it. He says in 1 Cor. 11: 4, 5: "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesyeth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." Could any one mistake as to what it was that the Apostle was anxious to condemn here? If praying and prophesying were reprehensible in a woman, why should he have given directions as to the way she should perform these portions of worship? Can we suppose that he knew and felt that the practice itself was wrong, and yet contented himself with simply pointing out their defective manner of doing the wrong? Besides, by what law of logic or language, since Paul merely prescribes a rule to guide both man and woman in the discharge of a service, shall we claim that the act is right and proper in the man, and wrong and improper in the woman? He proceeds in the verses following to give reasons why he had called their attention to this point, and then in the 13th verse recurs again to the same, and says, "Judge in yourselves," I put it to your own sense of propriety, "is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?" Is it not clear that the Apostle concedes to women the privilege and right to pray in public, only let it be done with the head covered?

What was prophesying? The word appears to have described different acts at different periods. In Samuel's day it meant praising God by singing prophetical hymns, etc. It signifies, also, the foretelling of future events, preaching, exhortation, interpretation of Scripture. But whatever it meant at this time, the ability to prophesy was the result of the Holy Spirit's impartation, a gift superior to that of speaking with tongues, and the communications thus made were fitted to instruct and comfort the church. 1 Cor. 14: 3–5. Was prophesying by women a novelty in the churches? at this time, an offensive peculiarity of the Corinthian church, growing out of their corrupt tendencies? Nay, so far from this being true, had not woman been in the possession and exercise of this gift, an intelligent and close observer of signs and events, looking out for evidence of Christ's having appeared upon the earth, would have an occasion to deny that fact, since prophecy which stands in close connection and companionship with it touching this point, had never been fulfilled. We refer to Joel 2: 28, 29: "And it shall come to pass afterwards, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit," and, as Peter adds, "they shall prophecy." This prophecy, on the great day of Pentecost, when the multitude came together, astounded by what they saw and heard, Peter took up, and built upon it an effectual refutation of the charge of drunkenness made against the disciples, declaring the prophecy that day to be fulfilled by what they witnessed. Would any one dare to say that the "all" of the disciples who, on that wonderful day, "were with one accord in one place," and the "all" who were "filled with the Holy Ghost," included only the men of Christ's dear ones, and not the women? To assert this would leave out a half of "that which was spoken by the prophet Joel," since it "came to pass" that the sons and the daughters alike prophesied or published the great truths of God. In confirmation of the prophecy is the following: "The same man (Philip the evangelist) had four daughters which did prophecy." Acts 21: 9.

We have proceeded thus far in our examination, guided by clear and safe light and conviction; and we come now to the grand and sole resource and refuge of those who maintain that women should have no audible participation in any public assembly of religious worship. We turn to Paul's declarations in 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35, and to 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12. The language and the sentiment in both these passages are essentially the same. He says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."

We had said that disorderly irregularities have been introduced into this ostentatious and sensual church at Corinth. This was true to a wide extent, and here in this fourteenth chapter Paul applies himself to the correction of some of them. It appears that there were members in the church who had the gift of speaking in unknown tongues, and were zealous to display their ability. They were forward to speak, though not able to interpret to the spiritual profit of the church. This gift seems to have been held in high repute, and was much coveted; so when the whole church came together, many were ambitious to speak with tongues, and the time so occupied was without spiritual profit, and an unlearned or unbelieving hearer present, looking on, comprehending nothing, would be led to say, "Ye are mad." This was not fulfilling the mission of the Church of Christ, but was a reprehensible grievance. The spirit of tumult and contention also lurked in the church. And in their meetings, instead of following any certain order, some were for spending the time in one method of service, and some in another, pressing their claims to be heard; several would speak also at the same time; the result was confusion and uproar.

In such disorderly scenes as these women even mingled, and thrust in their voices, asking questions and otherwise interrupting. The Apostle rebukes them all alike for such a course. This is not worship. God is not with you in this, nor his love, for "God is not the author of confusion;" truth cannot abide in such contention. Especially is it unseemly and indecorous in women to contend with men in the public assembly [illegible] quiet, and if they will [illegible] their husbands at home." Let not woman arrogate to herself such a superiority as is given to those who are appointed teachers, whose office it is to instruct in the public congregation. Let her not "usurp authority," but remember subordination, and if she is divinely moved neither to praying nor prophesying, then "keep silence." Must we suppose that these words of Paul, written to reach such a fault as this, shall be so rigorously interpreted as to preclude for ever a woman from rising in a social religious meeting, and with modesty expressing her loving attachment to her Redeemer, or inviting others to the same refuge, or offering prayer for their salvation? Such an interpretation is certainly altogether too far-fetched. It cannot be supposed that the Apostle entertained such a thought, or was even looking in that direction. The example of the earliest Christians goes also to sustain the argument recorded in Acts 1: 14; "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren."—R. W.—Independent.

Sacred Love.

Who ever saw the earliest rose
First open her sweet breast?
Or, when the summer sun goes down,
The first soft star in evening's crown
Light up her gleaming crest!

Fondly we seek the dawning bloom
On features wan and fair,—
The gazing eye no change can trace,
But look away a little space,
Then turn, and lo! 'tis there.

But there's a sweeter flower than e'er
Blush'd on the rosy spray—
A brighter star, a richer bloom,
Than e'er did western heaven illume
At close of summer day.

'Tis love, the last, best gift of heaven;
Love, gentle, holy, pure;
But tenderer than a dove's soft eye,
The searching sun, the open sky,
She never could endure.

Even human love will shrink from sight
Here in the coarse, rude earth.
How then should rash, intruding glance
Break in upon her sacred trance
Who boasts a heavenly birth?

—Keble.

Pleasant Words.

1. They don't cost much. They come bubbling up in a good-natured heart, like the freely gushing waters of a fountain. It is as easy to speak as naturally and as easy from the lips kindness, as the rays from the sun.

2. They make the man happier who uses them. They react upon him. Hot words make the user's wrath hotter. So loving words help to make a more loving heart.

3. Kind and pleasant words touch other peoples' hearts, and make them kind. They fall like flakes of fire on the cold and selfish hearts, not to scorch but to melt, not to irritate but to subdue, and shame people's coldness and unkindness out of them.

4. Pleasant words beget other words like themselves to other people. We have been in a crowded omnibus. A few snappish, sulky words have multiplied their scope, till most of the travelers have shares in the same stock. But a genial soul enters. His kind words get wings. They produce an epidemic. Growler number one and growler number two change voice and visage. The magic of a few kind words has done wonders. Ill nature has jumped out of the coach and left for parts unknown; and good nature keeps all things in excellent trim for the rest of the trip.

'Tis only when it mourns and fears,
The loaded spirit feels forgiven,
And through the mist of falling tears,
We catch the clearest glimpse of heaven.

☞ The Nashville Gazette says:—"A man that has a soul worth sixpence, must have enemies. It is utterly impossible for the best man to please the whole world, and the sooner this is understood, and a position taken in view of the fact, the better. Do right, though you have enemies. You cannot escape them by doing wrong; and it is little gain to barter away your honor and integrity, and divest yourself of moral courage to gain what? Nothing. Better abide by the truth—frown down all opposition and rejoice in the feeling which must inspire a free and independent man."

Reading for Youth.

The Tolling Bell; or, Susie's Faith.

A STORY FOR GIRLS.

Some years since, when Rev. Mr. Perkins, the Persian missionary was traveling through the states with Mar. Yohanan, the Nestorian Bishop, they spent one or two weeks at the village of A. S., visiting Rev. Mr. K——, a college friend of Mr. P's, I believe. While there, they held several meetings, one of which was devoted to the Sabbath-school children, at which Mar. Yohanan repeated the Lord's Prayer in the Nestorian language, showing the singular sort of pen they wrote with, and enumerated some of the many blessings which the children of our free country enjoyed to what the poor little Nestorians did. There was none of the children that enjoyed those meetings better, if as well, than little Susie E. Childs, and it was a source of great grief to her, if she was prevented from attending. They were to hold their last meeting on Wednesday afternoon, and Susie was very anxious to attend, but she said nothing about it till the bell began to toll, which it usually did fifteen minutes before the service commenced. Susie had a step-mother, a stern, severe woman, who used to allow Susie ten minutes to prepare for church, and five for school; if she was not ready in that time, she had to go without being ready, or stay at home, but she would work quick, therefore she was generally ready. When the bell commenced tolling, Susie went to her mother, and asked if she could go to church that afternoon. Now Susie stood in great fear of her mother, and when she said "No," she never thought of teasing, but going to her bedroom, she knelt down in front of her bed, and laying [illegible] great faith [illegible] this time; but what do you suppose she prayed for? Why, that if it was best (she always put that in) for her to go to church, that day, that the bell would toll till her mother would say she might.

Now, was not that a singular and unreasonable prayer? Methinks I hear you all say "Yes," and so it was, in one sense, for her mother seldom retracted her word; so there was every reason to think, that if God answered her petition, he must cause her to change her mind soon, or the bell must toll a long time. But Susie arose from her knees with implicit faith, that if it was best that she should go to church, she would go, and she went about her duties cheerfully, listening to the bell's ding-dong, and almost trembling for fear it would stop before her mother would come and tell her she might go.

The clock struck two, but the bell did not stop—quarter past, ding-dong went the bell—half past, ding-dong; quarter to three, ding-dong. Even Susie began to open her eyes in astonishment; what could it mean? Just then, her mother came into the room where she was, "Well, Susie, I do not see as the bell is going to stop today; I do not see into it, but if you can get ready before it stops now, you may go." Happy Susie, she did not wait to be told twice, but ran to her room, and kneeling for one minute by her bed, returned sincere thanks for the privilege. Then hastily dressing, she reached the church before the bell was done tolling.

That evening a neighbor called, and in the course of conversation, asked Mrs. Childs if she knew the reason of the bell's tolling so long? Mrs. Childs did not, but would like to, and this is the woman's story: "Mr. K., the minister, had appointed the meeting at three o'clock, but the sexton understood him to say two, and so rang the bell for that hour. After tolling it about twenty minutes, without calling the people together, very much to his surprise, he saw the minister passing by, and called to him, asking the reason for such a singular proceeding. 'Oh, there is nothing the matter,' said Mr. K., 'only you have commenced one hour too early.' 'Well, what is to be done now?' asked the sexton, rather dolefully, for it was no easy matter to pull the heavy bell-rope for any length of time. 'I do not know, unless you keep on tolling till three, for I cannot commence now,' and the clergyman passed on, and the sexton continued his work, "which," concluded the woman, "amused those very much who knew the cause, and astonished those who did not."

Mrs. Childs and her visitor laughed heartily over the poor sexton's laborious mistake, but it did not shake Susie's faith, for she thought God knows and does all things, and he ordered it to be so. I think Susie was right; what do you think, reader?—Pacific.

A Word to Boys and Girls.

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS.

Young readers, be kind, tender-hearted, pitiful, merciful to all, every one—to animals—the horse, the cow—the little lambs, the merry songsters, creeping things—don't tread foot on a worm thoughtlessly or cruelly. Be merciful to the beast. Life is dear; none but God can give it. "A righteous man," says God, "regardeth the life of his beast; but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

Who made the insect? God. Who feeds it? God. God hears the ravens cry. Who knows how dear life may be, even to a worm, or a fly? Never, little friends, never, never cruelly or wantonly torture or crush an insect or a worm.

O, turn that little foot aside,
Nor crush beneath its tread
The smallest insect of the earth,
That looks to God for bread.

Young friends, will you, dare you kill the innocent birds, that sing so sweetly and melodiously? that hop from branch to branch, and tune their little harps in grateful praise? Have they not as good a right to live, inhale God's pure atmosphere, enjoy life, as you have? God says, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." And the merciful man is merciful to his beast.

"A man of kindness to his beast is kind,
But brutal actions show a brutal mind.
Remember, He who made thee made the brute;
Who gave thee speech and reason, formed him mute.

He can't complain; but God's all-seeing eye
Beholds thy cruelty—he hears his cry.
He was designed thy servant, not thy drudge:
And know—that his Creator is thy judge."

What says Cowper, the poet?

"I would not enter on my list of friends,
* * * * * the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm."

—Golden Rule.

☞ TO THE YOUNG.—If the Spring put forth no blossoms, in Summer there will be no beauty, and in Autumn no fruit. So if youth be trifled away without improvement, riper years will be contemptible, and old age miserable.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months............1.00
For a single copy 3 months............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months....[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months [illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county, and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States. [illegible] age on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above, i. e. $1 will pay for twenty-[illegible] bers, or $2 25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 199. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1859. | VOL. IX. NO. 18.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER III.—Concluded.

The next passage to be considered is,—

1 Cor. 15: 22; "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Two questions arise here. 1st, Does the term "all" in each number of the verse include the entire human race? 2d, If so, does it preclude the distinction of a two-fold resurrection, of the just and of the unjust, one class to life and the other to condemnation?

1. There would be no exegetical violence whatever in applying the word "all," in each member of the verse, to the subjects of discourse in the previous context. These were, those who had "fallen asleep in Christ." It was doubt respecting their destiny, that troubled the Corinthian Christians. The expression, "if in this life only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable," goes to make the case of believers,—who then found little good in life and who were killed all the day long,—the burden of the argument. Again, where our translation speaks of "the dead," the article is commonly omitted in the original. This is a matter of some account, if the being "made alive" is taken as the "resurrection of life." The article is found only in verses 29 (baptised for the dead), 35, 42, 52. Here the righteous dead, whether a part, or all mankind, are doubtless intended. But in every other instance (ver. 12 (twice), 13, 15, 20, 21, 32,) the article is omitted. We may them translate, e. g. in ver. 16, "If dead persons rise not, then is Christ not raised." We are not warranted in saying that in these verses, "the dead" means of course all the dead. For all these reasons I find no difficulty whatever in rendering ver. 22 with reference to Christians, designated in verses 18, 19, 20: "For as they all die in Adam, even so in Christ shall they all be made alive." The Greek admits this no less than in Luke 20: 38, where as we have seen, the Syriac requires it. The very common word "all," very naturally used as I have taken it, does not require a sudden extension of the subject to embrace all mankind.

Yet granting that the word "all" in the first member of the verse applies to all the children of Adam, it may in the second member apply to all the "children of God" in Christ, and to none others. Such a comparison of two families and of their respective heads would not be unnatural. I choose, however, not to argue this point, partly because this would require some space, and partly because it is done by those in the Orthodox view, and is less necessary for me.

2. But admitting that the word "all" applies in the second clause to the whole human race, we find in the next verse a distinction which may imply a resurrection of some "to condemnation." "But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's, at his coming." Here it seems to be implied that there are some who are not Christ's. After Christ, the first instalment of the resurrection is of a special "order" or company; evidently the same with that spoken of in 1 Thess. 4: 14, 16, where Paul writes with much the same purpose (ver. 18): "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. . . . The dead in Christ shall rise first." And this reminds us of the "first resurrection," on whose subjects "the second death hath no power" (Rev. 20: 5, 6). And as we read on in 1 Cor. 15: 24, 25, about "the end," and the putting down all rule and all authority and power," and "putting all enemies under his feet," we find no warrant in inferring the conversion of these adverse forces. The same event seems to be predicted in Ps. 2: 8; "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." But the next verse indicates a severer conquest than conversion: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." And ver. 12: "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way."

We have cited 1 Thess. 4: 14-16, which doubtless describes the same fact with 1 Cor. 15: 23. The passage in 2 Thess. 1: 5-11 apparently refers to the same period. Here Christians are spoken of as "counted worthy of the kingdom of God" (ver. 5,) and Paul prays that "God may count you worthy of this calling" (ver. 11), using the same word that occurs in Luke 20: 35. But here wicked men are explicitly said to suffer a very grievous destruction. They "shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This everlasting or "aionian" condemnation, is apparently in or from the same aion that is named in Luke 20: 35, and which is the period of Christ's kingdom. Grant, for argument's sake, that this coming of Christ was at the destruction of Jerusalem. Still where is the proof that they who suffered the "destruction," and who are so plainly excepted from the "order" or company named in 1 Cor. 15: 23, are yet the heirs of immortality?

Passing on to verse 26: "The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed," this is good against the orthodox view of immortal death. But it proves nothing against the view I hold, either in reason or interpretation. There is no more death, when all who live are immortal. So it is said in Rev. 21: 4; "And there shall be no more death." But it had been previously said (20: 13, 14) "Death and Hades delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." That this "second death" may have had power upon some, seems implied in verse 6. The resurrection which precedes it may be an after instalment, of another "order" or company of the dead, not particularly named in 1 Cor. 15. And that some may suffer the "second death" seems also implied in ch. 2: 11; "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death."

And the failure to name the secondary "order" of those raised up, agrees well with what I regard as the scope of the chapter. This was to comfort the doubts of the Corinthian Christians respecting their deceased brethren, and to meet certain difficulties respecting the possibility or the nature of a resurrection. In this view the closing argument of the chapter is plain enough, without supposing any allusion to the ungodly. As the immortal life was to be in a spiritual body, Paul might speak to those who professed to be spiritual, and with reference to such only. "He that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." But the early Christians seem to have regarded the ungodly as having a soul without the spiritual nature, a view which agrees with the proper sense of Jude ver. 19: "Sensual, (or psychical, psuchikoi,) not having spirit." And Paul draws his glorious argument to its close, not with any raptures in behalf of all mankind, but using such narrow pronouns as might make the glories of this resurrection the special privilege of those that "by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor, and immortality" (or incorruption, aphtharsia, of vers. 42, 50, 53, 54), He says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." (ver. 51), "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (vs. 57, 58). And he next speaks about a "collection for the saints." (17: 1.)*

Rom. 5: 18: "Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."

It is in this one verse of the whole passage (vers. 12-21) that the word "all" is used in the second member of the comparison. And it is used with the word "men." This apparently denotes all mankind, and their salvation. It seems to me the strongest passage that is or can be adduced in support of that view. And if this interpretation at all agreed with the general tone of Scriptural language,—if it were not an apparent exception from the usual style of the Bible,—I should joyfully and without hesitation accept it as proving the final holiness and blessedness of all.

But the very frequent distinction made between the "saved" and the "lost" compels me to hesitate and examine the passage more narrowly. And I can not rest so fond a hope upon it for the following reasons:

1. The passage is indisputably valid against all theories of a limited atonement. And even more; it seems to assert that in Christ's name the sentence of death for sin is annulled in behalf of all. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them" (2 Cor. 5: 19). In this view the relation of persons unconverted to God is this: they have not to ask for the pardon of past sin, so much as to accept the pardon already made out. But this is all I can prove from the passage in hand. Comparing it with passages parallel, I at once find a plain distinction between pardon granted, and a pardon accepted and received. In ch. 1: 16, I read of the gospel as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," Jew or Greek. In chap. 3: 22, I read of God's righteousness, or plan of justification, which is "by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe," Jew or Gentile. Here the distinction seems to be fairly made by two prepositions, "unto" (eis), and "upon" (epi). In the passage in hand the first of these only is used. The phrase might therefore be rendered, "by the righteousness of one the free gift came unto (eis) all men, unto justification of life." In this view all men are virtually justified or pardoned, though by unbelief they may not be actually saved.

But it will be said the same preposition is used in the first clause, "upon (or unto, eis) all men to condemnation;" and if all actually die, why are not all actually saved? I answer, the sentence of physical death, even, is only virtual, not actual against all. Enoch and Elijah did not die. And Paul believed and taught that a whole generation of Christians would never die, but be "changed," at Christ's coming. All these are born mortal as others; the sentence was "upon" or against (eis), them, but it fails to reach them. So there may be those within the range and reach of the great salvation, who yet fail of it.

2. In ver. 17, it is said "they which receive abundance of grace, etc., shall reign in life." But the word rendered "receive" (lambanontes) is slightly ambiguous. It may also mean accept or embrace. It is often used in the active sense, as well as in the passive sense. Its original sense is to take; and it is used in the common phrase "respect of persons" or acceptance of persons. It is also the root of the word used 1 Tim. 12: 19, "lay hold (epilabou) on eternal life."

3. In vers. 14, 15, 16, 19, the distinction is made, not between "all" as dead and alive again, but between "many" and "many." The main argument may then rest on the comparison of the children of Adam with the children of God in Christ, which agrees so well with the general tenor of Scripture, and with which the 18th verse as above explained, does not at all conflict.

4. The whole passage shows that what is gained in Christ has once been lost. This is something more than bodily immortality. It is salvation, in the broadest sense of the word. And the "free gift" or gratuity is said to superabound, or to cover more space than the condemnation could, not because it gives more than was lost, but because one divine act of justification avails against "many offences." Thus salvation is exceedingly gratuitous.

But it inevitably follows that the salvation has been once forfeited. In other words eternal death was not an unjust sentence to be pronounced upon sin; and Adam might have perished, and the whole race in and with him, without wrong to man. The passage confirms what I have before remarked,—that annihilation has been invited and confronted. That God interposes to save is doubtless in keeping with his nature as Love. We may even say that in saving man God is simply just to Himself. But to man he is more than just. It is strictly true; "by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gratuity of God." "The wages of sin is death; but the amnesty of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

I dismiss this passage by remarking that Tholuck, a learned Restorationist of whom hereafter, in his Commentary on the Epistle, finds no proof here of the final salvation of all.

There are several other passages on which Universalists more or less rely, all of which I have not time to examine. Of the whole class given at the close of my "general tenor of Scriptural language" I will say that while they show a final universality of holiness and blessedness, or an end of evil, and are thus valid against the Orthodox view, very few can even be offered as applying to all individual beings now living. And one or two might be applied to all brute creatures, as well as to all human beings (Rev. 5: 13). I may hereafter consider such as my affable opponent shall offer. But I will here say a word respecting two or three.

Acts 24: 15.—"And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

The word "hope" here used is frequently insisted on as showing that the resurrection of "the unjust" is a blessing, a resurrection of salvation. But I think this does not follow, for three reasons:

1. It was natural that Paul, quoting that Jewish faith which he accepted, should name the whole of it; and that he should name it as his hope, if it were on the whole desirable. Now Christ very strongly asserted some sort of two-fold resurrection,—of well doers to life, and of evil doers to condemnation. Does the latter sound like a thing desirable? No more so than a thousand calamitous events that have actually occurred. I should never have hoped for the Lisbon earthquake. Yet it did happen, and the existence of all Portugal was desirable nevertheless. So the complex resurrection Christ named was desirable; and no less to be hoped for was that which Paul named, though it were the same; especially if it ends in an immortality of goodness, and a universality of righteousness.

2. The Scriptures elsewhere speak of things partly good and partly evil as matter of thanks. There is an apparent instance in Rom. 6: 17: "God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." A plainer example occurs in the 136th Psalm: "O give thanks . . . to him that smote Egypt in their first born; . . . and slew famous kings; for his mercy endureth forever." Such thanksgiving seems at least as misanthropic as Paul's "hope" in question. Yet the whole Psalm means doubtless well enough. But

3. The resurrection of the unjust, though it be unto condemnation, and to the "second death," yet may not be for that purpose, as if God were vindictive, or as if the claim of his law for so much penal suffering were inexorable. The orthodox, regarding annihilation as better than the lost deserve, sometimes represent it as a "coup de grace," to end their woes. Not thus do I "hope" for it. But if their resurrection be itself the overflowing of the fountain of life, if they who "will not come to Christ that they may have life," do yet in spite of themselves get more than they wish, so that they die by instalments and even die hard, I can rejoice in all the preternatural life they have. In all God's realm no vitality is wholly lost that has lived, though it come to an end. So I can very comfortably "hope" as I think Paul did.

1 Tim. 4: 10.—"The living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."

It is noticeable that the only instance in which God is said in so many words to be "the Savior of all," is with such an immediate qualification. I simply remark: 1. In the Universalist view of the final faith and salvation of all, the more natural phraseology would have been, "especially when they believe." 2. This is one of the few instances in which God is called a Savior, rather than Christ. The word (Soter) has in the classic Greek the more general sense also of Preserver, which it may have here, in obvious harmony with the specification named. 3. Waving this, the distinction between salvation in the reach of all, and salvation "laid hold on" by all, will allow the especial deliverance here indicated.

§ 7. The Two Theodores. Change for Authorities.

In the late discussion between my opponent and the Rev. Dr. Adams, the concession of Rev. Theodore Parker that the Scriptures teach the doctrine of eternal punishment was adduced, against which was offset the Rev. Theodore Clapp's recantation of that view after an independent examination. In a grave question of this kind no one should, or honestly can, rest his belief on any other man's opinion. Neither Dr. A. nor Rev. Mr. C. wished the names they respectively gave to turn the scales of judgment in any man's mind. That would not be a Protestant wish. Yet both those names were properly offered because men must respect the honest opinions of learned and thinking men. They have their weight, their importance, and their office, to command attention, and invite people to ponder a subject for themselves.

Partly for this purpose I shall offer a few names from my corner of the triangle, in my next chapter. But I may here offer one or two names in the question between my respected friends, which may command the attention of them both. And it is specially proper for me to offer such a name, to gentlemen both right and both wrong in my opinion.

The first name is that of Augustus Tholuck. A few of your readers may need to be informed that he is the man who has done more than any other man in Germany to secure a hearty love of the Scriptures, opposing at once the rationalism and the dead orthodoxy which are their equal foes. He is master of more languages than almost any other living man, especially of those which contribute to a right understanding of the inspired Word. Nor is he a mere book-worm, with more of uncommon than of common sense. He spends a large part of his time in walks and entertaining conversation with students in the University, and in visits and varied correspondence. He is one of the most eloquent pulpit orators of Germany. He is an admirable teacher and lecturer, fresh and suggestive, with none of the pedantry or false profundity of German scholarship.

He has written commentaries in the Gospel of John, the Epistles to the Romans and to the Hebrews, the Sermon on the Mount, and the Psalms. Most of these have been republished in English translations. Dr. Schaff tells us: "As a theological writer, Tholuck has devoted his best hours to Biblical exegesis. Here he has achieved his most enduring merits."

Now Tholuck is both Orthodox and Universalist. He was one of those who in the World's Evangelical Alliance opposed the article on future punishment. His attitude on this subject is indicated by the following conversation between him and Dr. Sears of this country, in London some years since. I take the account from Prof. Crosby's "Appeal to the American Tract Society," pp. 49, 50.

"Tholuck. I suppose my American brethren would consider me Orthodox in general, except in my Universalism.

"S——. Where did you find this doctrine, in the Bible, or in your philosophy?

"T. In both.

"S. What are the passages of Scripture on which you principally rely?

"T. My main passage is 1 Cor. 15: 28. . . . Also Rom. 11: 36. . . . Another passage is Phil. 2: 10. [His argument may be considered in the sequel.]

"S. Do you find no passages of Scripture which positively assert the everlasting punishment of the wicked?

"T. Yes: Matt. 25: 46, and others like it.

"S. Can these passages, which you think favor Universalism, be understood in any other sense without violating the fundamental laws of interpretation?

"T. Yes, they can, but the construction would not be so easy and natural.

"S. Can the other passages, which speak of endless punishment, possibly bear any other construction?

"T. I do not see how they can.

"S. Well, what are you going to do with them?

"T. That is my only difficulty." . . .

The remainder of the conversation I can not quote. But it sustains the following statement by Tholuck, made in 1837, of what he had said in 1834: "Dogmatically, i. e. as a theologian, I feel myself drawn toward this opinion [the Universalist]; but exegetically, i. e., as an interpreter, I do not know how to justify it." (Selections from German Literature, by Edwards and Park, p. 215.)

I will close with a passage from one of the best biblical scholars of this country, Dr. G. R. Noyes, Professor in Cambridge Divinity School. He is a restorationist. In his review of Maurice's "Theological Essays," (Christian Examiner, March 1855, pp. 294, 295,) he says: "Even in the writings of Paul, who is very strong in denouncing punishment against the wicked, there are passages in which he speaks of the purposes of God, and of the riches of his grace, in such a manner as to make it difficult to believe that he contemplated the strictly eternal punishment of all who die in sin. We refer to the manner in which he speaks of the salvation of all Israel in Rom. 11., and the putting down of all enemies to the kingdom of Christ in 1 Cor. 15: 25-28. We can not, indeed, find an express declaration in the Scriptures of the final salvation of all men. Enemies may be put under one's feet by confinement in a place of punishment, as well as by being converted into fiends. But the spirit of these passages, which makes so much to depend on means which the wisdom and mercy of God have, as it were, in reserve, is not very favorable to the doctrine of the endless misery of all who are leaving the world with a sinful character, or who have left it since the creation of man. The thought of Paul logically carried out leads to a very different conclusion, and awakens the most cheering hopes." He adds in a note: "The impartial and sharp-sighted De Wette finds still more actually expressed in 1 Cor. 15: 28, than we can."

This passage is very good argument against the Orthodox view. But the words I have italicised would reduce the Universalist view very nearly to an arcanum. These words are the more note-worthy because the writer was in so close neighborhood to verse 22, which Universalists regard as so fully stating their view. But in the view that all who live forever will be holy we find a restitution of all things, and a universal dominion of Christ; and "the thought of Paul logically carried out" may prove no more than this.

* I should here say that while I regard the resurrection as yet future, I do not regard it as bringing back the identical dying body. "That which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be." The [illegible] is a "spiritual body," not pure spirit, but an embodiment suited to the higher nature of spirit (pneuma) as compared with soul (psuche). Of the interval between death and the resurrection the Scriptures say little. The early Christians [illegible].

For the Crisis.

The Beautiful World.

I have heard of a beautiful world,
  Of a country bright and fair;
And my heart is sick of the present earth,
  And I long, O I long to be there.

I have heard of a golden city,
  With towering jasper walls;
Where vapors never vail the sky,
  Nor evening shadows fall.

I have heard of a crystal river,
  That wanders o'er sparkling sand;
That the Tree of Life, with ladened boughs,
  On either side doth stand.

They say no storms nor chilling winds
  Break on that peaceful shore;
No lightnings flash along the sky,
  And thunders never roar.

They say no sickly forms are there,
  No pale or care-worn cheek;
All bloom with immortality
  Who walk the golden street.

They say that birds, with starry wings,
  Are warbling in the trees;
And perfumes from sweet rosy bowers
  Come wafted on the breeze.

O, I've heard of a beautiful world,
  And of a truth can say,
The glories of that better land
  Have stolen my heart away.

JULIA S——.

Upper Woodstock, N. B., 1859.

For the Crisis.

Manner of Procedure.

ITS EFFECTS.

My usual course has been for the last year, when holding a series of meetings to allow questions at the conclusion of the discourse. I have found it beneficial, especially when presenting evidence on the "Life" theme. Prejudice exists, and objections arise in the minds of the people, for they think the doctrine to be something new under the sun; hence, by giving them liberty to catechise, I learn all the objections in the minds of my hearers, and can more fully, readily and satisfactorily answer them, as I progress in my lectures, than I have been able to do by any other course I ever adopted.

To meet an objection which might arise in the minds of some, I would say, if severe language be urged, and the inquirer treated discourteously, the insult would be disastrous. But, however much feeling the inquirer may manifest, if the speaker maintains his dignity, and does not inhale the excitable element, but by kindness and forbearance shows the people by soft words and hard arguments that his object is to enlighten, and bring before them a harmonious system of truth, the elements are easily controlled, and the effect is salutary. Ah! truth loses nothing by investigation; and all, I think, have learned that fact, whenever I have permitted them to catechize. One preacher—a Restorationist—clearly demonstrated this fact. I had given ten discourses, and he did his best (so he told me in the presence of others after my lectures,) to entangle me, and make me contradict something I had said in former discourses; but, said he, "I confess I have not got the first hold of you. It is the best system of truth I ever saw brought out of the Bible, my own, of course, excepted."

When at Newburg, the brethren urged a friend of theirs—he was a Mormon preacher—to catechise me. My subject was "immortality through Christ." The Mormons are blind as bats on that subject. In fact, they had not so much as heard, out in Utah, there were any that called in question the immortality of men. He concluded to say nothing. He was to preach the next eve in the same place, and friends wished to have his views tested. They told him (so I afterwards learned) he "must put up every bar and pin them—leave no gaps down—or his bars would get pulled down and the gaps shown to the people."

The time arrived, and a good congregation was comfortably seated in a commodious school house to listen to one of the "Angels sent out to gather the elect." Here are his main positions:

1. Man is a fallen creature.

2. God has [illegible] privileges to restore him. First, He had established the Apostolic church for this purpose—to restore man. Second, no one could be saved unless he came through the Apostolic church.

3. The Apostolic church was destroyed when the Apostles passed off the stage.

4. The church is restored in these last days, (referring to the Mormons—the latter day saints.")

In presenting the above positions, he endeavored to show they and the Mormons were on the Apostolic ground. They had their Apostles and Prophets, and wrought miracles the same as the ancient Apostles. Their ministers were the angels sent out to "gather the elect from the four winds." Their church, in connection with their locality, was "mount Zion," etc.

The reply was for the purpose of bringing out truth. It was in the form of questions. The truth is of great value;—by the truth we were sanctified—made free. The command is, to "buy the truth and sell it not." By obedience to truth, redemption is sure. By disobedience, damnation is just and certain.

If none are saved, except those that are connected with the Apostolic church, (in the first order) that church, our friend tells us, passed off the stage with the Apostles, how then are the three millions of martyrs saved that fell in the ten persecutions, A. D. 64–324? Or how are the many millions saved that have been slain since that time? They were slain on account of their faith in Christ. The Reformers must be lost with the rest. In fact, our friend must tell how any one has been saved since the Apostles, or how they can be unless they go to "Utah?" If the Lord designed Apostolic order—unless in a modified sense—could we not reasonably expect they would have appointed their successors, or left on record a command to that effect to some one or more of the churches? This we do not find. If the Lord intended to have restored the Apostolic order in "the latter days," twelve apostles would be all sufficient for the world. Have you not twelve in "Utah?" "Yes." Well, there are twelve more in the modern Apostolic church, some in New York, the rest in the Old World, (say nothing of the smaller bodies.) Here are twelve too many. Now if there are any here that wish to join the Apostolic church, where should they go, to England, New York, or out to Utah—Salt Lake—provided the character of both are the same?

Our friend informs us, they are the angels sent out to "gather the elect." If so, we may expect they can discern who is, and who is not righteous. When God sends out his angels to separate and gather the good, they gather the wheat; not the tares! They gather the sheep, not the goats! All that is pure, holy, righteous, God-like, the angels find and take them along, (sometimes by force—case of Lot.) Now if this has been the work of the Mormons for the last few years, I should expect that at Salt Lake there are the most pure, holy and devoted people in the world. Our friend will please inform us on this point.

Our friend informs us, that they are following the footsteps of the Apostles. This I fail to see. Did the Apostles gather all the saints at Jerusalem, Ephesus, Rome, or any other town, city or particular place? Did they have their post or station to help those that had received truth on to Mount Zion? Or did they establish them in the place where they were converted, that others might see their good works, and believe in the Life-giver?

What relation do the saints sustain to the world? Are they not lights in the world? Are they not the salt of the earth? Would it be wisdom to take all the lights in the world and put them into one city, county, or state, or out in some far off territory among the mountains, where no one could receive any benefit from them? Did Christ or the Apostles pursue such a course? If the saints are really the salt of the world, should they not remain in it until the world is given over, or as long as there can be any good accomplished? What should we think of that farmer who puts his meat in one barrel and the salt in another to preserve the meat? Would you think he was wise? How can we then adopt a [illegible] that ignores the wisdom of God, and is revolting to common sense, and of course, is a departure from Revelation.

Our friend tells us they have great faith. All I have to say on that point is, their works will show how much—actions speak louder than words.

He spoke of their being the true church, because they had a Prophet. I may at some future time give an article on this subject for the benefit of many friends. I will only say now, their prophets, if true, will speak in harmony with [illegible] claim? But, a perfect [illegible] the [illegible]

Our friend [illegible] said is quite [illegible] If the Mormon [illegible]

city of the living God," my ideas of its grandeur are very greatly diminished. Is Mount Zion to be overturned after God gathers his elect? Has not the Mormon city or settlement been overturned time and again? Once in Ohio, then again in Missouri, then routed from this State and county in which I live, and now on the point of taking another exit to some unknown region, and I call such a place Mount Zion? Who can believe such an absurdity? Come to dissect our friend's views they do not look consistent.

On my concluding, our friend arose. The only point to which he replied directly was the question "whether they were all saints in Utah?" He answered, "No, there are many there, that God, man and the Devil would not have, they are so wicked." The angels for years had been gathering saints, and they have turned out worse than demons. I thought it was not necessary to sum up, but let the case go to the Jury as it was.

W. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

A Voice from "The Gulf!"

Rush on! Rage in the "broad ways." Thunder through the gorge! 'Tis the lightning train! The still night breaks by the rattle of iron wheels upon the iron track. Hear the shrill steam whistle! The darkness is doubly awful by the lurid glare of that "flaming torch," darting through the gloom. This was long called "the gulf." Civilization crept carefully around the edges and looked from the hills. "The day of his preparation" came. Then came the paper mills. Then followed the people; and the preachers of the gospel; and so here, to-day, we have a goodly meeting of those who believe in the coming and kingdom of the Redeemer. The doctrine of immortality, only through Christ, has taken deep root. If I understand the question rightly, this meeting is an offshoot of the one at Chester Factories. One of the points to which the "word sounded out," after the early fashion. How many places within the last twenty years have become a Jerusalem, where only one or two families have at first appeared? They have made a nucleus of light! Have lit the altar-flame of faith. Anon, the region has been ablaze with truth.

Three miles below is that same red cottage of Bro. Wait, in the quiet nook, where hospitality reigns as of yore. There is the camp ground where Fitch once preached,—a man of holy remembrance,—who has long slept, awaiting the trump of Gabriel, which will awake a host to life when the seed has taken root among the hills. On that ground several other meetings were afterward held. Do you remember, up the tumbling brook, a rocky basin—a "baptismal font," of natural proportions and beauty, far exceeding any artificial one?

* * * *

A beautiful, peaceful Sabbath morn! The "rage and jostle" of the "chariots" is still! We assemble for worship in this once dark and desolate hollow. A congregation of God's children! Here is knowledge of God. How much better instructed are these humble christians than most professors in the large towns and cities, who are bound to their theological predilections!

* * * *

They have a good place for meeting. Bro. S. S. Brazee supplies, once in four weeks, and not only here, but through this mountain region on a circuit extending to several counties, does he go on this message of warning and salvation.

Can you allow a moment's reverie? Sad memories will crowd in upon the subdued spirit. Five years ago, on a splendid summer Sunday, like this, I preached here, and returned at evening, to find darkness gathering thick around our threshold! Death, menancing frightfully the hushed household, mocking with ghastly levity the little light yet glimmering around our hopes! Heavenly mercy! The grave-cloud went by.

The conflict deepens some! Scenes of labor, and the same work. Shall we find the long-sought quiet of heaven? Time brings the curtain fast down upon the past. The old hope alone can stay the heart in this life-long storm. The swelling flood takes us away from earth's tumult. I leave its bright smile—its dark frown! Enough. Its labor and glory—its love and hate will soon be alike. Over all this sin-scathed world will come a redeeming Presence.

W. S. C.

Bancroft, Mass., May 30, '59.

For the Crisis.

Quarterly Conference at Hardin.

BRO. GRANT:—Our meeting was well attended, considering how scattered we are. Six preachers present, and three sermons each day. The last two were preached by Bro. Higgins. Subject, "The present war in fulfillment of prophecy," which left a deep impression on the people. In the evening we celebrated the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

PETER S. W. DEVO, Evangelist.

Strawberry Point, Iowa, June 3, '59.

☞ Could you hear in what manner one speaks to the poor and despised when he thinks himself unobserved, you might form a judgment of his character.

☞ An honest man is believed without an oath, for his reputation swears for him.

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy.—No. 7.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

There is a tradition, whether well founded or not we cannot say, that the king appointed this banquet to rejoice over the supposed failure of Jeremiah's prediction respecting the seventy years' captivity of the children of Israel. Jeremiah said that they should serve the king of Babylon for seventy years, and then God would break his yoke from off them. The last day of the appointed time had come, and nothing had transpired to indicate the fulfillment of the prophecy, and the proud monarch felt himself secure, and made this feast to rejoice over the "passing of the time," which he had heard from the Jewish captives was appointed for their service to the king of Babylon. But even while making merry with his lords, the last sands of the specific time run out—the prophetic time expired—his kingdom was numbered, and the number was now complete—the yoke of the king of Babylon was that very night broken—and Darius, a Median, took the crown.

Says the prophet: "The king of Babylon heard the report of them (the army of the Persians), and his hands waxed feeble; anguish took hold upon him." Before he heard the outcry at the gate of his palace, the writing upon the wall had caused his knees to smite one against another, and the interpretation given by Daniel the prophet, whose wonderful skill was by no means unknown to him, had not at all quieted his fears, when the noise of the tramping of horses was heard, and the sound of wailing fell upon his ear, and in his alarm, and the consternation of the moment, he gave orders to have the gates of the palace thrown open to learn the cause of the disorder, and thus was egress given to the Persian army, and the king was slain.

In view of the method by which the city was taken, how impressive are the words of the prophet,—"A snare was laid for Babylon, it was taken and it was not aware; it was found, and also caught, for it had sinned against the Lord. How is the praise of the whole earth surprised! For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness and thy wisdom, and thy knowledge it hath perverted thee, therefore shall evil come upon thee, and thou shalt not know from whence it riseth, and mischief shall come upon thee, and thou shalt not be able to put it off. None shall save thee. In their heat I will make their feasts, and will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord. I will make drunken her princes, and her wise men, and her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men, and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep."

How accurately does the history accord with the prediction, "I will dry up her sea!" The Euphrates was drained by Cyrus, so as to become fordable into the city through which it ran. When Cyrus arrived at the gates of the palace, he found the guards drinking beside a blazing fire, and were thus surprised and taken. "One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end." Boothroyd renders this last clause, "from end to end." Cyrus separated his troops into two detachments, placing one at the northwest, where the Euphrates entered the city—the other at the southeast, where it went out, and thus they entered, and possessed themselves of Babylon. A post stationed at the one end, seeing the approach of the army, would hie to the king's palace to give the alarm, and a post stationed at the other end, beholding the same thing, would also hasten in the same direction, and thus meet each other, burdened with the same message to the king, that "his city is taken from end to end."

"The young men shall fall in the streets." Cyrus sent troops of horsemen throughout the streets, with special orders to slay all they found there. He first, however, issued a proclamation, that all who were in their houses should remain in them, for all who were found without should be slain. In reference to this, the prophet says, "They shall wander every man to his quarter."

"I will fill thee with men as with caterpillars." History informs us that Cyrus appointed 400 guards before the palace gates, and 200 on each side. These advanced to meet Cyrus as he approached, while 200 spearmen followed them. These were succeeded by four squares of Persian cavalry, each square composed of ten thousand men, and to these were added in order the Median, Armenian, Hyrcanium, Caducian, and Sacian horsemen, all riding upon horses, every man in array, while lines of chariots, four abreast, concluded the train. Afterward Cyrus reviewed his army at Babylon, which consisted of 120,000 horse, 2000 chariots, and 600,000 foot. Thus was Babylon the Great surrounded, though it was with gigantic walls, and mighty towers, and strengthened with massive gates of brass; literally "filled with men;" and men as destructive in their ravages as the "caterpillar."

W.

☞ Make thy recreation servant to thy business, lest thou become a slave to thy recreation. When thou goest up into the mountain, leave thy servant in the valley; when thou goest to the city, leave him in the suburbs; and remember, the servant must not be greater than his master.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 29, 1859.

IMPROVEMENT.—We are glad to learn that Eld. D. C. Wheeler, Springfield, Vt., who was published some time since, now gives evidence of reformation and of a well ordered life and conversation; and that his labors have been blessed to the good of the people where he labors.

What will the End be?

The Liverpool Courier of June 8th intimates that the coming struggle of the nations will be terrible. In speaking of the battle of Magenta, where about 150,000 Austrians met nearly the same number of French in a most bloody conflict, the Courier says:—"This battle is but the beginning of the end." If this is "but the beginning," how awful must be the end. A man well posted in the wars of Napoleon I, when contrasting those with the ones now in prospect, compared those to one day, the coming ones to a whole season. Truly the future of the wicked nations looks dark! No bright ray illumines the political horizon, but it grows continually more threatening and tempestuous.

Is it not strange that professed expounders of the Bible still teach that the conversion of the world is about to begin? If they meant to Satan, they would need to adduce but few arguments, for the case is already so clear that nearly all are members of his church, that farther proof would hardly strengthen the point. The masses seem to have no fear of God before their eyes, neither have they any conception of what is coming on the earth. They refuse to see any light from the book of prophecy, consequently, they must walk in darkness. The Bible is an object of contempt and ridicule, rejected as something obsolete, unworthy the attention of liberal and thinking men. "In the last days," says Paul, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

Personality of God.

In these days of fables when so many are departing from the faith, it is becoming a christian to inquire for the "old paths." When the spirits of demons are teaching that God does not exist as a being, but only as a principle in and about all matter, like caloric or attraction, and hence no more to be feared, loved or adored than magnetic currents, it is time for the saints to look well to their armor and see if they are fully equipped to meet the Goliahs of these last days. Pantheism in a modified form has crept into the churches unawares. By Pantheism is meant the belief that "the universe is God," or that he is a part of everything, "without body, parts, or passions."

Henry Ward Beecher preached a sermon in his church, last Feb. 27th, phonographically reported, from which we make the following extracts:

"I hold, secondly, that the Scripture teaching on this point is simply this,—that man was made in the image of God that he might understand him."

"Assuming this to be so, I proceed to remark that no man can form any conception of God except as a person, such as a man is in some respects. We cannot know him in such a sense as that he shall manifest himself to us and abide with us, except as a living person; not even as a personage, which means something more than person—which means an impersonal God, such as fancy imagines; a vast diffusive power; the essence or the life of the universe; a spiritual vitality—and all that trashy nonsense. I hold that such a view of God as this, is waste matter—mere fantastic moonshine. No man ever felt as though he would like to lay his head against such a God, that has no heart; no man ever thought of walking with such a God, who is nothing but a sort of spiritual blood diffused throughout the universe."

"You can form no true estimate of the moral attributes of God until you have a right conception of what God himself is."

"It is not to be wondered at that we have such imperfect views of God, when we remember how we come by them; that we derived them from catechisms and creeds, and confessions of faith which were rammed into us."

"The best I can do is to give God the form of the glorified Jesus Christ."

"Therefore, there is given to us the person of Jesus Christ, who is a fit form by which to conceive of God."

"I do not believe any man who thinks of God as an abstract form, having no resemblance to what we are, ever has a God whom he fondly loves."

"I think that the general view entertained of God by men in the church is, that he is a sort of etherealized, abstract, impersonal being; that somehow or other he is the aggregate of certain attributes. I don't believe there is one in ten who really has a God that abides with him, and manifests himself unto him. And I do not hesitate to say that, in my experience as a teacher, one of the greatest difficulties I have found to contend with in professors of religion, as well as those that are seeking religion, has been to get them to have anything but an impalpable God."

"I think this is owing partly to the nature of man, partly to the philosophical view of God which many hold, and partly to the theological annihilation of God as a personal being. I think we have got to go back to the pictorial method, which represents God as a person. We want something which the mind of man can look upon, and say, 'It is my personal God; it is a reality.'"

"If you lift up your conception of God, so that you have no distinct view of him; so that you regard him as an effluence of ether diffused radiently throughout the universe, you may experience reverence for, but you cannot love him. I stand up fearlessly, and say that it is not in the power of a human being to love that which does not come to him as a person. And I will say further, that it is not in the power of any human being to think of a person except in some form. You don't think of God as composed of flesh and blood; but you can't think of a spirit, as a spirit; you have got to give it some form."

"I will defy any man to have a distinct conception of a moral, spiritual being, without form and without matter. It is not within our capacity, in our present state, to do this. You can never have a God that you can take hold of and say, 'My Lord and my God,' or one that you can love, so long as you regard him as a mystic something filling all space, and having no personality."

"I will say, frankly, I can form no definite idea whatsoever of any being which has not a personality. I can form no definite conception of a being with a personality that is purely spiritual."

Battle of Magenta.

The following description of the battle at Magenta, from the pen of the special correspondent of the London Daily News, gives a faint idea of the horrors of war. Let the coming of the Prince of peace be speedy. The writer says:—

"Yesterday evening, not without great difficulty, I succeeded in getting here to inspect the field of the glorious battle fought on Saturday last. My pen is not adequate to describe the heart rending scenes which surround me. Trees thrown down by the dreadful effects of artillery; heaps of dead bodies, human limbs scattered about, carriages broken, farm houses burnt, crops trampled, vineyards devastated, houses plundered—such is the deplorable sight which has met my eyes since my arrival in this town. Town, however, Magenta is no more. The small inn, whence I am now writing these lines bears marks of the tremendous struggle, for it was thrice taken and retaken during the action. Not a piece of furniture is to be found; not even a chair to sit upon."

"The Tendencies of the War.

In speaking on "the tendencies of the war," the Springfield Republican remarks:

"The example of Tuscany and Florence in throwing off the despotic rulers, whose powers had been sustained by the moral and physical support of Austria, and their declaration for the cause of Sardinia and of Italian independence, is being followed also in Parma, and a similar uprising will undoubtedly occur in the other Italian states as the Sardinian successes give the people the requisite courage and hope."

There is but little doubt now that "a similar uprising will . . . occur in the other Italian states." If positions taken are correct, all the political divisions of Italy will unite with Buonaparte, and then overthrow the Papal power. We anxiously wait the issue of events. It was thought that Ferdinand the Second, king of Naples, being a member of the Bourbon dynasty, would never submit to Napoleon, but since his death, the prospect is changed. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Francis the Second, of whom it is said:—

"This prince, the issue of Ferdinand's first marriage, to a Sardinian princess, is closely related to Victor Emanuel. His step-mother, an Austrian princess, had been intriguing to obtain the succession for her eldest son, the Count of Trani; so that Francis the Second represents the Sardinian party, in contradistinction to the Austrian party, in Naples. This consideration, his family ties, and the popular sentiment of his subjects, may induce Francis to declare in favor of Italian independence."

Christ's Second Coming.

[We give the conclusion of Bro. Moncrieff's second Lecture in Chapman Hall, on the above subject, June 26th.]

"At a time like this, we may naturally rejoice in His approach, to accomplish the world's deliverance. War rages among the eastern nations; but he comes to make an end of war,—to burn the chariot in the fire. War is a tremendous curse, and the globe has been polluted by its crimes, and crimson tide, well nigh since our race began. It may be dazzling in its pomp and circumstance—in the waving of banners and the storm of music; but humanity shudders at its stern realities. Go up to the conqueror and his laurels are wet with the tears of widows and orphans; enter the battle field and you are made familiar with ghastly wounds and heart rending wailings; you behold the living mangled in every form, and hear the bones of the warriors crash, like glass in a hail storm. Suddenly stricken the soldier falls; his wife and smiling babe flit for a moment before his vision and he expires.

Turn your eyes toward Continental Europe, and what do you see? Hypocrites and despots sporting with the poor and down-trodden nationalities; one tyrant going and another coming; one blood-sucker displaced, another inserting his remorseless fangs.

No wonder than we long for the return of MESSIAH to give peace on earth, and good will to men; to terminate oppression, and diffuse the joys of liberty from shore to shore; to enrich the fields with his blessing that have often been fattened with the blood of the slain; to expand and ennoble the human faculties, so long crushed down by the intolerance of priests and the exactions of tyrants.

Except in him, there is no discoverable hope for the world! Men tell us that science will yet do wonders; but science lends its discoveries more readily to the tax-gathering exactor, than to the plundered subject; she renders the oppressor's arts more perfect, and makes resistance,—the last virtue and resource of the down-trodden,—a hopeless endeavor. The fruit of liberty has been tempting the weary millions for ages; but the fruit hangs far on high, and an iron wall of cannon, swords and lances, prevents them from pressing the golden clusters to their lips. Welcome they are to the crab-apples, and the thistles and the thorns,—for crowns or couches; but they will never eat the fruit of liberty except in their dreams, from which divine banquet no alarm can withhold them.

The woes of this planet are real, and it is no mystic remedy that will bring relief. There is the roar of artillery; let us hear the voice that will say to that fiery tempest, be still! There is the groaning of the prisoner, let us see his fetters broken, and his limbs set free! There is toil and no recompense,—women, fair and virtuous, plying the needle for sixteen hours a day to save themselves from starvation or shame; men slaving at the mercy of little oppressors, and afraid to speak lest their infants should be deprived of bread,—we desire to witness the bounties of earth dispensed with a more impartial hand! There are millions of souls to whom is denied the sweet light of science, and the sweeter one of Gospel mercy, over whose starless ignorance, and abject degradation, men who minister at christian altars, chuckle with infernal joy, as they count the gold and drink their wine, "Come, Lord Jesus, come!" and end this mockery of heaven, and this mockery of earth!

For the Crisis.

Ferdinand II.

The king of Naples is dead. The greatest of modern tyrants is no more. I look upon his decease as providential at the present time, for if living he would doubtless be one of the most formidable obstacles to the realization of the prophecy in Rev. 17th with respect to the ten kings giving their power to the beast. The king of Naples is doubtless one of those kings; but Ferdinand II. would never have turned his hand against "the whore, to make her desolate and naked, and to burn her with fire;" so I take it that God has removed him out of the way. He has been one of the strongest supporters of the Papacy. Now, whether the French dynasty be the beast that "was and is not and yet is," or some other power, the way is now opened for the combination of those ten powers who "shall agree to give their kingdom unto the beast until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

The sympathy of the people of Naples is on the side of freedom, and it has taken a strong arm and many foreign troops to keep them down. It is stated that there have been more than three hundred ecclesiastics in the galleys for having dared to oppose themselves to the supremacy of the Pope. And the people are now very anxious to enlist in the cause of Sardinia to uproot Austrian rule in Italy, and free themselves from ecclesiastical power.

Whether Francis, the new king, will be more liberal to his subjects than his predecessor remains to be seen. It will doubtless be our privilege soon to know still more definitely our position in history and prophecy.

To those who are looking for the fulfillment of particular prophecies, the following letter, written in 1851, on the "State of things in Naples," by Rev. E. A. Lawrence, of Marblehead, may be interesting. It was written while on a visit to that country, soon after the subsiding of the revolutions which commenced in 1848.

The government of Naples is the most absolute despotism, and is oppressive to the last degree of endurance. Everything is in the hands of the King, whose views of government are narrow, and whose policy is suicidal. Force and fraud are the two points on which his administration turns. He is like an exile in his own city, and his palace is a prison to him. Surrounding himself with an army of fifty thousand, in a population which makes every eighth man a soldier, still Ferdinand II. does not appear among his subjects except under the escort of a strong body-guard. Before the revolution of 1848, public schools had begun to be established; but since that time they have all been suppressed as tending to discontent. Only two newspapers are published among a population of five or six millions, and these are tolerated as necessary evils, though both are in the hands of the government.

On the maps of the world allowed in Naples, the United States is scarcely permitted a place, and all tolerated histories are required not to know that there was ever such a republic in existence; and of George Washington, the king and the priests have taken care that most of the people should know nothing, so much is the influence of our example feared by them. At that wonderful and never to be repeated World's Exhibition at London, in which almost every other government on earth participated, not one of Ferdinand's subjects were allowed to appear. In this respect, he stands alone in his peerless absolutism, and jealousy of freedom. He has established the most rigorous custom house inspection, lest some ideas of civil freedom should be smuggled into his darkened dominions. He would, if it were practicable, fence off the fresh breezes that come from every free land, and wall out the pure light of heaven, that he might be more secure on his precarious and tottering throne. In ancient Rome, with a population of one million and an half, one prison was sufficient for all the state criminals. The King of Naples has four in a single city of only one-fourth of that number, and besides, almost every old castle in his kingdom he has converted into a dungeon, and filled with convicts, guilty of no crime save that of thinking men ought to be intelligent and free. From twenty to thirty thousand of his subjects are said to have been thus incarcerated during the last four years, many of them of the highest character in the nation for intelligence and virtue. A few of these have already paid the penalty of free thought and aspiration in a barbarous execution; others linger in confinement, some to pine and die, and others, probably, to have their prison doors thrown open upon the outbreak of another revolution, and to be called to a terrible vengeance upon the head of their blind and guilty oppressor. The day of doom is coming. Volcanic elements are working towards an eruption; the smouldering fires must sometime break out; the days of tyranny are numbered; and on the same gallows which, Haman-like, it has prepared for the people, shall it be hanged by the people. If the tyrants would learn wisdom, and relax the rigors of government, and enlighten their subjects, and share with them the responsibilities of governing,—if they would be fathers, instead of despots, to their people, and give them the Bible instead of the Breviary,—if they would do this, then they would abide their time in quietness and safety. But no; they will not learn wisdom. Once has Europe been shaken by the uprisings of the people, as by a sudden and mighty earthquake. The despots turned pale and trembled in the hour of strife; and some of them, as the king and queen of Russia, were compelled to stand whole hours in the open air, with their heads uncovered, while were borne by, with funeral honors, the dead bodies of their subjects who had fallen in the fight.

They proposed reforms. They accepted constitutions, and a popular government. But when they felt the crisis to be past, and themselves to be a little more secure on their throne, reactionary measures commenced. All this concession was to deceive the people, and thus give time to combine their forces. They increased the army, and withdrew the constitution. They took back all they had given, and laid a heavier yoke upon the neck of the people. This is now their policy, to tighten the bonds of oppression. Russia, Austria, Prussia, Naples, and the Pope, are in firm and diabolical alliance on this principle. But the bands will burst. A storm is gathering—a day of vengeance is nigh; the heart sickens at the sight, but it will come, and the first scene in the bloody drama will exterminate the whole race of oppressors. They will never, by concessions and promises, dupe and enslave the people again. 'At one blow we will cut off the head of the tyrant, and his race, and it will be the first that is struck.'

C. H. P.

For the Crisis.

The Symbols.—No. 6.

"THE GREAT RIVER EUPHRATES."

This phrase in Rev. 16: 12, has been made a symbol, and so it is made to mean, first, the Ottoman Empire; and second, the mystic waters of the Apocalyptic Babylon,—anything but what the language itself must mean, and, by common consent, does mean in every other text where it occurs. Note the plain proof of its import.

I. In Gen. 15: 18, Deut. 1: 7, Josh. 1: 4, this language is used to denote the geographical boundary of Palestine on the north-east. All the land was given to Abraham from "the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates." This river was known from the time that man was made, and placed in Eden.—Gen. 2. The Euphrates is now, and has been for about six thousand years, the name of one and only one "great river" in Asia. Babylon was built on its banks.

II. This is its import and application in the Apocalypse itself. "Loose the four angels that are bound in (at or near) the great river Euphrates."—Rev. 9: 14. These four agencies were the nucleus of the Mohammedan empire. They were located (geographically) on the river Euphrates; and thence they spread over into Europe, and conquered the "third part"—the eastern division of the old Roman world, called the whole habitable world.

Note.—It would be absurd to say that the nucleus of the Mohammedan empire was bound at, or near, the Mohammedan empire. It surely was not "bound" in itself; nor could it possibly be "loosed" from itself. Nor could this four-fold germ of the Mohammedan empire have been bound in or loosed from the mystic waters of Papal Rome—the Babylon of this book. But these "four angels" did exist at or near the literal Euphrates. They did issue thence; and Mohammedanism has about fulfilled its perverted career of conquest and decay, preparatory to the seventh—the Kingdom-trump.

Thus far, the sole use of this phrase applies to one, only one object—"the great river Euphrates."

III. To crown, and consummate, and "seal up" this proof, we all know that the ascertained Bible usage of all such phrases is the true one; and the only one authorized to faith. All others are erroneous, and may tend only to ruin.

"The kings of the East" were not symbolic, but the literal kings who commanded with Cyrus the Persian army, at the conquest of Babylon. Isa. 44 to 46; Jer. 51. "The kings," as revealed in symbol, were "ten horns." The ten kings are the inspired explanation of this ten-fold symbol. Hence the conclusion is certain that "the kings of the East" are designed to denote here, literally, the very same idea that the words expressed. If so, then "the great river Euphrates" is that river, and not a symbol of some unfathomed, unexplained mystery. And if it were, it must forever remain such, because God has given no explanation to it. The rule is to believe God. What he says is symbol, is so; and his explanation of all such symbols is the sole ground for faith as to its import. Babylon and her "waters," (never called "Euphrates" in Scripture, but "peoples, nations," etc.,) are to be believed in only as revealed; and not after any one's varying imagination. It is a mere modern imagination to say that "the great river Euphrates" means Mohammedanism, or anything, except as it is actually expressed.

The beast, the dragon, are Scripture symbols; and they are explained in Scripture. Ezek. 29: 1–4; Isa. 27: 1; 51: 9; Dan. 7: Rev. 17. The symbol, woman, is "mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots;" and "the waters where she sitteth are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." But it is not said to be "the Euphrates" in mystery, or in its explanation; and hence it may be an opinion or imagination, but never can be intelligent or real faith. The language of these prophetic "seven plagues" is derived mainly from the Old Testament.—Ex. 12; Ps. 78: 12; 105: 27–38. There it is plain, literal language, like "the kings of the East"—then Cyrus and his royal commanders from the East. But here, the kings east of the Euphrates, in Persia, etc., who must be "gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Note.—We are told near "ten times" that the scenes at the final judgment on the Gentiles and the gathering of Israel, shall be after the (example or) manner of Egypt. Isa. 10: 24–26; 11: 16; Micah 7: 15–18; all which demands that the prophetic seven plagues should be believed according to the plain historic import of the language in the Old Testament.

Again. There was no symbolic "blood," or "lice," or "sore," or "scorching," or "darkness," or "death of the first born" in Egypt! And as there is no authority for—but all the authority of Bible usage against—making this language figurative, symbolic, or mysterious, my faith accepts it in its God-given form. "And let all the people say Amen!" If so, as all actual evidence indicates, then these plagues are all future! They follow the seventh trump, chap. 11: 18; the sign in heaven, 15: 1–4; the opening of the heavenly tabernacle, 15; 5–16; 1: 18; Dan. 12: 1; Isa. 11: 12; 26: 19. Then further, the seven angels and the plagues; the sores and the blood; the earth and the sea; the sun and the scorching heat; the river Euphrates and the kings; the great God and the battle of the great day, are revealed realities! They are not mystic fancies, to be so fulfilled that only an expert expositor can tell the subjects of these awful judgments of them afterward. The mystic fulfillment is not found out save in theoretic exposition! Such an exposition is simply satanic,—to cover up the truth, and kill faith in God, as in the first temptation.—Gen. 3: 1–4.

The established usage in Scripture is the only authority for understanding the language of this closing book of all direct revelation. The established usage of this phrase—"the great river Euphrates," applies it to the literal river that watered the plains of Babylonia. That is its acknowledged import in the New Testament—Rev. 9th; and as the leading terms (not explained as symbols) are always literal in all other passages of Scripture, and history and geography, I conclude that this is its only meaning in this also.

In the history of Israel's dispersion, it is said that God showed his signs and parted the Euphrates; 2 Esdras, 13; and the opinion is expressed that he will interpose again for them at the close of their long captivity. However this may be regarded, we know that God did open the river Jordan before Joshua and Israel—did open the Red Sea under the rod of Moses; and has distinctly promised the like again in Isa. 11: 15; Zech. 10: 10–11; Hos. 10: 11.

All this and other evidence sustains the plain reading of the text, that "the river Euphrates" is indeed itself, and not something aside from the terms and the usage of Scripture. Rev. 17 is but the sixth vial expanded; the seventh is more fully unfolded in Rev. 18.

J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

A General Conference.

TO THE BRETHREN:—May I be allowed to suggest a few considerations in respect to the Wilbraham Camp Meeting, which the committee have been so kind as to appoint the 29th day of August? It will have been two years since we engaged in conference action, to any extent, and hence, many brethren feel the importance of action of that kind. Changes are coming over us. The cause presents many new and interesting features. The necessity of union and harmony of action is apparent. The Camp Meeting will furnish a good opportunity for brethren to assemble from all parts. We might, at least, compare notes. We might decide upon a course of action for time to come, which shall be more successful. Much interest is beginning to be felt in the approaching annual convocation. May the Lord direct.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

☞ To teach the truth to those who are prepared and wishing to receive it, is an important part of a good life.

Correspondence.

From G. Dillabaugh.

Dearly Beloved in Christ:—It is through the goodness and long suffering of God that I am again permitted to let my name appear before you. Perhaps some ere this have made the inquiry and wondered where G. Dillabaugh is, and if he still holds on to the Blessed Hope, as his name has not appeared so frequently in the papers as it used to. Permit me to say, I still cherish a warm desire for the return of Christ, and to be with him. This sin-cursed earth, with all its stains of blood and cruelty, of man's inhumanity to man, is too dark and drear for me to love. For twelve years past, I think I have never seen the time when I looked forward with greater heart-burning desire, for the return of Him who was rich but for my sake became poor, that I through his poverty may be made rich, than I do at the present, knowing as I do from the sure word of prophecy, which is as a light shining in a dark place, and shines more and more the nearer we come to the perfect day, that we have not followed cunningly devised fables when we have made known to the world, the (kingly) power and coming of our Lord. Though we have not been eye witnesses of his majestic power, we have the sure word of prophecy which teaches that he will soon come and rule in the midst of his enemies.

How much this world needs a righteous governor, one who will reign in righteousness and execute justice and judgment in the earth. Those who will not have the despised Nazarene to reign over them, will have to submit to his kingly power and be slain before him. The natinos of earth are now going through their last course of studies in learning war—or preparing for war, on the most gigantic scale. But man's time of misrule has nearly expired. Then nations will learn war no more; and can any one who has a heart beating in unison with God and his truth object to such a time? Every faithful soldier needs to see well to his armor and stand ready.

"We must fight, if we would reign, Increase our courage, Lord!"

We think there is a fearful engagement (though for a short time) between truth and error yet future. But we need not fear if we keep on the armor. I am determined by the help of the Lord to fight on, but oh, how much wisdom we need that we may walk worthy of the Gospel. How very narrow and straight the way is, and few find it or are willing to walk in it.

The Crisis is increasing more and more, and I hope it will continue to herald forth truth until He comes whose right it is to reign.

Seneca Falls, May 28, '59.

From A. F. Servis.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis, expressive of my hope of soon seeing the King in his beauty. The time for the consummation of the hope of God's people, whether they wake or sleep, is at hand. An abundance of prophecy shows that we are living in the last hours of the time of the end. And while the wise fully understand their position, by the light of God's word, the wicked continue to do wickedly, and none of the wicked understand. While the faithful, way-worn pilgrims in Christ can see that the end of all things which mark the present dispensation is at hand, and the time to make themselves ready for the reception of their long absent Bridegroom is still lengthened out to them, the wicked scoffingly inquire, "where is the promise of his coming?" "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." "For this," says Peter, "they are willingly ignorant of."

No one, truly desiring the light which the word of the Lord reveals, can remain in ignorance as to its real teaching. What reason have I, and others, who are looking for Christ's return, to rejoice that we have seen the light and embraced the truth which can sanctify, and save its subjects in the everlasting kingdom. O Lord, hasten thy coming, and hasten the means made use of for the salvation of all that will come and submit to Christ and the Gospel.

Holly, Mich., June 7, 1859.

From Elder J. Wilson.

Bro. Grant:—I am well and now laboring for the N. Y. Conference. I preached here three times last First Day. There is great encouragement for Bible laborers in this region. Truth begins to pass at par amongst a great circulation of popular errors, and some are willing to give a premium for it where the other circulating medium is plenty, so I am now Evangelizing these Bible type bills. If the Lord will, I intend to be at the Wilbraham Camp Meeting, where I expect to see many brethren and sisters that I have seen, and many I never have seen before, and perhaps shall see none of them any more after the meeting until the King comes.

Eagle Harbor, N. Y., June 14th.

☞ Prayer and praise are the lungs of a christian; by the one he draws in a happy life from heaven, and by the other he breathes it back again to him who gave it. Thus do the virtues of religion circulate. They come from God in a principle and return to him in an offering. He teaches the believer both to receive his gifts and to own that he does so.

For the Crisis.

Are All the Signs in the Past?

Bro. Grant:—We often hear it remarked that the signs that were to precede Christ's coming are all in the past. If this be so, when did they take place?

One class of teachers would have us believe that they all took place prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, but the record shows such teaching to be false. If the tribulation had reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, as such teachers tell us, then the signs took place immediately before, instead of immediately after, the tribulation of those days.

Again, some of our Advent teachers tell us that these signs are all fulfilled. Others tell us that we have had none of them, but all are in the future. Where doctors disagree, the word of God must decide.

These signs are but so many sermons. They are second Advent sermons, too, of the strongest kind. The first was to be preached by the sun; the second by the moon; the third by the stars; the fourth by nations, distressed with perplexity, driven to anguish and despondency; the fifth by the sea uttering its voice in roarings; the sixth by floods as they rush furiously and foaming along; the seventh by heaven, while her powers are being shaken, uttering her voice, causing men's hearts to fail or expire through fear and apprehension of those things that are coming upon the world; the eighth by the Son of man, while he causes his sign or representative to ride forth upon a white cloud, having in his hand a sharp sickle, convincing the world that the great gathering day, the harvest of the world, has come, and causing all the tribes of the earth to mourn and wail.

In my opinion, the first of the signs occured May 19th, 1780.

The second the night following.

The third, Nov. 1833.

The fourth, during the great financial crisis—1857–8.

The fact, that the first four of these signs have had a literal fulfillment, excludes all just grounds for supposing that the remaining ones will not be as literally fulfilled.

These signs are given in consecutive order, and in that order must be fulfilled. If the last four of these signs have been fulfilled, it must have been since 1857. If since then, when, where, or how has it been done?

Men's hearts must and will yet fail them for fear, or as Campbell renders it, "expire with fear and apprehension of those things which are coming upon the world."

Evil tidings or bad news affect mankind more than some imagine. Bad news weakens the action of the heart, oppresses the lungs, destroys the appetite, stops digestion, and partially, and frequently, wholly suspends all the functions of the system. Powerful emotions often kill at a single stroke. The news of a defeat killed Philip V. The door keeper of Congress expired on hearing of the surrender of Cornwallis.

A little from this men's hearts will fail them as they never yet have done; it must be so or it will not prove a sign.

J. F. Baker.

West Winsted, June 19, 1859.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

WAR NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Kangaroo, we have news from Liverpool to June 8th.

Napoleon and the King of Sardinia made a triumphant entrance into Milan on the 8th of June. They were both received with the most enthusiastic and extravagant demonstrations of joy.

The Austrians had evacuated Pavia.

A dispatch from Vienna of June 8th, says Milan was evacuated by the Austrians on Sunday. The Imperial functionaries have withdrawn to Verona, but it is possible they may resume their posts and functions in Mantua.

At a meeting of the Atlantic Telegraph Company on the 8th, it was decided to accept the offer of the English government, and to raise immediately the requisite new capital.

A Te Deum in honor of the victory of Magenta was celebrated at Notre Dame yesterday. The Empress and all the authorities were present.

It is affirmed that the Austrians amounted to 150,000, and the French about as many.

At Magenta the French artillery behaved with great bravery. They were killed at their guns.

The real loss of the Austrians is estimated at 13,000 or 14,000.

NAPOLEON IN MILAN.

Paris, Wednesday. The Emperor entered Milan at 8 o'clock this morning. His reception was most enthusiastic.

THE VICTORY AT MAGENTA.

Turin, June 7. Official Bulletin published to-day—The allies took in the battle of Magenta four pieces of cannon, two flags, 7000 Austrians prisoners, and 20,000 put hors du combat, out of 120,000 engaged. The loss of the French was about 5000 killed and wounded. Among the former are Generals Espinasse and Clerc.

Milan has been barricaded and defended by 6000 National Guards.

Turin, Wednesday—Official Bulletin. That part of Upper Lombardy which has been freed from the Austrians, has proclaimed Victor Emmanuel King.

Volunteers are rapidly arriving to join Garibaldi's corps, which is pursuing the enemy beyond Monza.

Urban's army, after a precipitate retreat from Varese, has been dispersed, and is scattered. Soldiers have been taken prisoners and disarmed.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

[Arrival of the Persia.]

It was reported that the Prussian army is to be mobilized, and that Prussia will soon take part in the conflict.

It is also reported that Prussia is negotiating for the passage of troops through Germany.

The Austrians are at Lodi, upon which place the allies are advancing.

Garibaldi was between Austrian forces at Prescoa.

Five hundred Zouaves were killed and wounded at Marignano. The Austrians lost 1500 killed, and 1200 made prisoners. The battle lasted nine hours.

The armies were preparing for another general engagement.

The Times' correspondent at Vienna says that the official Austrian bulletins of the battle of Magenta had produced an indescribable effect in that capital. For a moment, says the correspondent, the public appeared to be stunned. Military men are indignant that the finest army Austria ever possessed should have been entrusted to such a bunglar as Count Gyulai appears to be.

The Austrians evacuated Laveno, abandoning all materials of war, and taking shelter in vessels in Swiss waters.

The Emperor and King attended mass at the Cathedral in Milan on the 9th, where a Te Deum was sung. Subsequently they rode through the city. The enthusiasm of the people was indescribable.

The King issued a proclamation to the Lombards, saying—independence having been secured, a regimen both liberal and durable will be established; eulogizes Napoleon, and calls upon the Lombards to join them on the battle field.

The Post's Paris correspondent says, that over 4000 of the prisoners are Italians, who took the earliest opportunity to give themselves up. They were always placed in the front and threatened by the Croats in the rear if they did not fight well. Many have offered to join the allies, but have not yet been accepted.

The Swiss government have ordered the immediate fortification of their Austrian frontiers.

Three Austrian armed transports, with vessels in tow, were stopped in Swiss waters and surrendered.

The Emperor of Austria has issued a proclamation to his subjects in Tyrol and Zoralberg, calling them to arms, "to defend the most righteous cause for which the sword was ever drawn," confides to them the task of defending the frontiers against the enemy, who has made himself the ally of revolt against the legitimate dominion established by God.

The Duchess of Parma has quitted the duchy, leaving the government to the municipality, and releasing the troops from their oath of allegiance. The municipality had despatched a deputation to the King of Sardinia, requesting him to accept the government.

A Hungarian legion has been organized at Turin.

FRANCE.

There was a report of the formation of a camp at St. Omer.

A strong detachment of infantry has been sent from Paris to Italy, and two regiments are being actively formed.

Two hundred Zouaves arrived from Africa, to form a third battalion of Zouave guards.

The Times' correspondent says disapprobation is expressed by foreign governments, including Russia, at the manner in which matters are conducted in Tuscany.

The Bulletin sums up the results. Five days after our departure from Alessandria, our army had three combats, and gained one battle; freed Piedmont from the Austrians, who, since Montebello have lost 25,000 killed and wounded, 10,000 prisoners, and 17 cannon.

The defeat of the Austrians at Magenta is said to have produced an immense sensation in Germany.

The Marseilles correspondent of the Times says that in less than two months 120 flat-bottomed steam gun-boats will have been completed in the French navy yard, each armed with a rifled cannon. They are intended to act on the Po. By the same period 40 steam transports will be finished, each capable of conveying 1000 troops and baggage.

The Emperor and King were always in the thickest of the fight.

Military men are unanimous in their praise of the strategic combinations of the Emperor.

[Per steamer Bremen. Advices of the 14th.]

THE WAR.

The following telegrams are from the Times of the 13th June.

Vienna, Sunday evening, June 12. The following official news has been received: Benedick's corps was again attacked at Melegana on the 9th. Loss between two and three hundred men.

The total loss at Palestro on May 31 was 15 officers and 513 men killed; 1 general, 23 officers, and 878 men wounded, and 6 officers and 774 men missing.

Garibaldi's corps threatens the Southern Tyrol from Val Canonica, Val Trompia and Bagolino.

It is reported the French fleet in the Adriatic received powerful reinforcements yesterday, and it is expected that a landing of troops will soon be attempted on the coast, between Venice and Trieste.

It is not positively known where General Gyulai's head-quarters now are, but probably at Mantua.

Prince Metternich died yesterday.

Paris, June 11. An announcement posted up at the Bourse states that Borgaino has been taken by Garibaldi.

The Austrians have evacuated Lodi.

Turin, June 11—evening. The Austrians evacuated Piacenza yesterday, after having blown up the citadel.

Five thousand prisoners have arrived at Marseilles and Toulon.

Marseilles, June 10. Three steam frigates have landed 2400 Austrian prisoners here.

The remains of Gen. Espinasse have been brought to this town by sea, and will be sent on by railway.

Turin, June 10. (Official Bulletin.) The Austrians have definitively evacuated Pavia, and are said to be at Lodi. The allied armies are advancing. General Garibaldi occupied Bergamo on the morning of the 8th, and then having learned that fifteen hundred Austrians were coming from Brescia, sent a detachment to meet them, which, though inconsiderable in numbers, nevertheless beat the enemy.

Turin, June 11. The Austrians evacuated Piacenza, after having destroyed the citadel and other fortifications. They abandoned to the allies a great quantity of provisions, cannon and ammunition. Our troops entered the town, invited by the municipalities. The Austrians have been reinforced at Procedo, a village in Modena.

Turin, June 11. The evacuation of Pavia and Lodi has been confirmed. After having crossed the river Adda, the enemy destroyed the bridges.

Turin, June 12. Last night the Austrians left Bologna, taking the direction of Modena.

After their departure a popular demonstration took place, expressing the sense of the people in favor of the national cause.

Paris, June 13. The Patrie says that the Austrians have completely evacuated the States of the Church, including even Ferrara. The same paper states that the people of Parma have asked that French troops may be sent into their country.

Bologna, June 12. The Austrians have evacuated Ancona, and are retiring by land in the direction of Ferrara.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says the news from Vienna is warlike. The Emperor, Francis Joseph, will take command of the army himself, acting on the defensive it is believed, and taking up the line of the Adda.

THE PAPAL STATES.

The Times has received the following:—Rome, June 9. A grand demonstration was made at Rome on Monday last. "Long live the French government!" was shouted before the residence of the French Ambassador, the Casino, and the residence of the Commandant. On Tuesday there was a general illumination.

ONE DAY LATER.

Wiener Zeitung (official) says that the Emperor of Austria will forthwith assume immediate command in chief, and had ordered a new position for the army, which is to be taken up in the best manner.

Large reinforcements were about to leave France for the seat of war.

Napoleon, on the 12th, moved his headquarters to Gorgozola.

The Herald, in publishing the Berlin telegram that six Prussian corps d' armee are mobilised, says of course this means war. The advent of Lord Palmerston to power has evidently induced Prussia to take this decisive step, and to join Austria in the struggle against France.

The Effect of Magenta on Prussia.—The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald writes, June 8th:—

"It will be readily imagined that these startling events have created a deep impression here. In all probability the Austrian army will not make a stand on the Adda, but retire at once beyond the Mincio; and the question will then arise whether Prussia is not bound to take measures for the defense of the German soil, which, if the Austrians are dislodged as quickly from the line of the Mincio as they were from that of Ticino, might soon be menaced by their pursuers. There seems very little doubt that the army will be mobilized to meet this contingency, and to enable Prussia to give weight to that attitude of sound meditation which she is desirous of assuming; but up to the present moment, I believe, government has not come to a definite resolution on the subject. The little German States are taken rather aback by the sudden prostration of their great champion, Austria, and in future, I presume, they will be more willing to rally themselves round Prussia, and leave off their silly vaporing about going to war on their own book, marching to Paris, and parceling out France between them. It has hitherto been the policy of Prussia to avoid giving France any unnecessary provocation, and she will continue to employ her influence in the interest of peace, and to urge Austria to make such concessions as are required by the exigencies of the situation; but she will not easily be brought to consent to the total expulsion of that power from Italy; and as Louis Napoleon will scarcely be satisfied with less, there seems little chance of the difference being settled by the intervention of diplomacy."

Description of Garibaldi.—The following description of Garibaldi is given in a communication from Lombardy:

"I have only had a glimpse of Garibaldi; he is lofty of stature, broad shouldered, the head of a lion on the shoulders of an athlete. His long black, grizzly, uncombed beard; his eyes flashing with lightning gleam; his black felt hat, ornamented with dark plumes; his scarlet mantle tied round his throat, present to you a personage of no ordinary stamp. I am everywhere assured that he is really a gentleman, gallant to ladies, severe to men, still more severe to himself, sober to excess, animated and cold at the same time. He inspires in his little army a confidence only equalled by the terror he inspires in his enemies. Ever the foremost in the fight, urging his charge into the thickest battalions, dismounting now to seize a musket, sharing with the meanest follower the labor of the march, he gives evidence alike of courage and coolness that astonishes all.

It is said that he issued the following address to his soldiers:

'My children: You are one to five. Before you is death; behind, the muskets of your comrades, who will shoot like a dog the first who retreats. Cannon we have none; we will take them. Let us die; what matters it. Italy must be free. Behold your real recompense.'

This man, who resembles a chief of brigands, will become more than a distinguished General; he will be a great and mighty captain, unless an Austrian bullet arrests him in his career."

Possibilities of the Future.

The impression is gaining ground here, that the present war in Europe will become general. In that event it may not be uninteresting to know how the nationalities will be divided. The population of the different European States may be put down as follows:

France	36,000,000
Italy	25,000,000
Spain	17,000,000
Total	78,000000

Add to this Russia, with 70,000,000, and we have a total of 148,000,000, that will be under the control or league with Louis Napoleon.

On the other hand, or allied against Napoleon, will be:

Great Britain	30,000,000
Austria	36,000,000
Prussia	17,000,000
Other German States	15,000,000
Total	98,000,000

Thus in a point of numerical strength, should Russia remain firm to the French alliance, Napoleon will greatly outnumber his adversaries. But the States in combination against him have the advantage of uniting and concentrating their forces. For instance, Germany and Great Britain lie near together, and before the Russian levies could be marched from the steppes of Liberia and Ural, through Poland, to the Rhine, the opposing forces might strike a decisive blow against the French and Italians.

It is evident that if Great Britain is forced into the war, she will calculate to benefit by this advantage. Remaining neutral until forced into the contest, she will be none the less efficient, and she will unquestionably profit from what transpires in the meantime between the present belligerents.—N. Y. Express.

A Disgraceful Fraud.—It appears that the lengthy and detailed account published by the Oswego Palladium of the falling of a monster aerolite in the vicinity of that city was a falsehood from beginning to end, prepared and published by the editor of the Palladium with the design of deceiving the public. He acknowledges his guilt, and excuses himself by saying that "he only meant to play off a good joke."—Boston Herald.

Terrible Suffering on the Plains.

We shall probably never hear of half the instances of suffering and death occurring between the Missouri river and the Kansas gold region. The reports received are shocking enough. The Rocky Mountain News of May 17th, published at Denver City, gives the following accounts:—

"A few days ago a man arrived at Russellville, and reported that his companions—nine in number—had given up and laid down upon the prairie some miles distant. A relief party was sent out, who found one of the number dead from actual starvation, and two others so far gone that they died soon after reaching the settlement. A few days later a party of thirteen reached here who had followed the Smoky Hill as far as practicable, and then struck across the divide to the Platte, by which route they reached here nearly starved, having been obliged to kill their pack horse and subsist for days upon his flesh.

Three days ago nine men reached Fort St. Vrain, whilst we were there, mere tottering skeletons. They stated that they had not tasted bread for more than ten days, part of which time they had lived upon the flesh of a dead ox, which they found upon the prairie, but partially devoured by the wolves, and for four days they had nothing but roots. They stated that they traveled more than one hundred miles without finding water, and must have perished of thirst but for some snow squalls that occurred.

Great destitution prevails all along the latter part of the route. Emigrants are wandering over the plains in all directions, discouraged and bewildered. Some are striking for the Arkansas, some for what does not exist—the Smoky Hill road. Men leave their trains to search for a road, and are never seen more; others lie down and die and become food for wolves. One man tells us he knows of seventeen men who have thus perished or disappeared; another says the remains of one hundred may be seen along the track they have followed. We hope the reports are greatly exaggerated, and that time will show that the missing are not lost, but we greatly fear the worst, and give the reports precisely as they were given to us."—Springfield Republican.

☞ The Emperor of Austria is one of the best linguists in the empire. It is said that he speaks thirteen languages perfectly, and that he is in the Imperial Council the only man who understands all the languages of his vast dominions.

☞ An important circular from Prince Gortschakoff to the Envoys of Russia at the several courts of Germany, declares that if Germany goes to the aid of Austria, the political equilibrium, resulting from treaties by which the German Confederation is constituted, will be destroyed.

Editorial Notice.

European War.—We have received an interesting tract from Bro. George Storrs, entitled:—"The European War; or the position and prospects of the Papal Roman Power and the Napoleon Dynasty, as indicated in Scripture Prophecy." Price 10 cents. Address George Storrs, Box 4658, New York.

Notices, &c.

Time of the Wilbraham Campmeeting changed to August 29.—This change will accommodate two other campmeetings and not discommode us as much as it will accommodate either of them. To be good neighbors is the way to have good neighbors. Our Methodist brethren, that hold their annual campmeeting in the same place, very much wish to commence their meeting the 22d of August, on account of their other arrangements. After consulting Bro. Ladd and others, I think it best to commence our meeting August 29th. Hiram Munger, For the Committee.

Notice to the Brethren in Maine.

We arrived in Boston on the 24th, quite unexpectedly to all, as our letter containing information of our visit East miscarried. Sunday 26th, we listened to preaching during the day from Bro. Moncrieff. the evening was given to us, and we enjoyed a very good season with the brethren. We leave for Camdem, Me, this week, and will spend two weeks there, visiting our friends, and will preach on the 3d and 10th of July, where the brethren in Camden and Lincolnville may appoint. We will spend five or six weeks with the brethren in Maine, and preach for them on Sundays where they may think best. Our P. O. address is Camden, Me.

Brethren, can we not get up a general conference, tent, or grove meeting, to take up the subject of the speedy coming of Christ and a preparation to meet him? Will brethren write me on the subject?

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Boston, June 27th, '59.

Notice to Western Brethren.

Those Brethren in Iowa, Wis., and Minn., who have solicited my labors, are informed that I cannot comply with their wishes before fall—then I hope to be at liberty. Those who still desire my services can see me at our Conference in Iowa in the fall, and arrange with me. The notice of the time and place of Conference will soon be given.

W. Sheldon.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. Preble.

Notice.

The Advent Society in Lawrence, Mass., have hired the house formerly occupied by the Christian Baptists on Common St., where they will hold their meetings for the future. I would say to our preaching brethren, come in the name of the Lord, and help us. In behalf of the church,

R. F. Cram.

The Prophetic Chart.—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John engraved on stone. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. Price 10 cts., postage included. Address Bartholomew Bubler, Philadelphia, Pa.

Notice.

A grove meeting will be held in Gloucester, R. I., on the 3d and 4th of July, near the residence of Mr. David Randall, about one mile north of the old Scituate Academy. Eld. Hemenway of Danielsonville, and Eld. Durfee of South Kingston, R. I., are expected to be present to preach the word. Preaching at 10 A. M. and at 1 and 4 P. M. A general invitation to the preaching brethren is extended.

D. A. Jones.

Notice.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd would say to churches that desire his labors, that he will visit them, as they shall request, the Lord willing. His address is 60 State St., Newark, N. J.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday, ... July 3d

Providence permitting, I will preach in Springfield, Mass., ... July 3d
Worcester, ... July 10th
H. PRATT.

Bro. B. P. Manning appoints to preach in Warner, Robie's Corner, (school house) .. July 10th
Danbury, where Bro. C. Ford may appoint, July 17th

Bro. D. R. & Sr. M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at Orrington, Me., ... July 17th

I will hold a meeting in Southampton, L. I., at the Indian settlement, July 10th to the 13th.

Peace Dale and vicinity, R. I., from Thursday 14th to Tuesday following, where Bro. John Dixon directs. The week following, where a door opens to do good.—Letters, after July 8th, direct to Peacedale, R. I., care of John Dixon.

HIRAM MUNGER.

I will preach as follows:—
Lawrence, Mass., ... Sunday, July 10th
Vernon, Vt., ... Sunday, July 17th
Northfield, Mass. .... July 20th
as Bro. Gage may arrange.
Goshen, Mass., ... Sunday, July 24th
Springfield, Mass., ... July 27th
as Bro. S. F. Otis may arrange.
Palmer, Mass., (eve.,) .... July 28th
Worcester, Mass., (eve.) .... July 29th
Holden, Mass., ... Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H., ... Sunday, Aug. 7th

I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me. S. W. BISHOP.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Holden, Me., (Conf. Sat.) .... July 10th
Orrington, Me., (Advent Chapel) .... July 17th
Surrey, Me., (school house) .... July 24th
Carmel, Me., (meeting house) .... Aug. 7th

Eld J. G Smith appoints to preach in
Milton Mills, N. H. .... July 3d
Manchester, N. H. .... July 10th
Warner, ... July 17th

Bro. W. Shepherd appoints to preach at Plymouth Hollow, Sunday, July 3d. We hope to see our brethren from abroad.

For the Church, W. BASSFORD.

Providence permitting, I will preach in New Bedford the first and second Lord's day in July.

MILES GRANT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR CHESHIRE ST., CT.
Daniel A. Jones .... July 10th
GEORGE MORGAN, for the Brethren.

APPOINTMENTS FOR BRISTOL, CT.
Eld. George Champlin .... July 3d
J. H. SUTLIFFE.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

J. D.—Kitto.

Cash Receipts.

Rev. J Gibson 221 $2.50, A B Reed 182 $1.34, Major Dodge 208 $3.31, G Messenger 182 $1 36, B F Good 206, A Benson 206, G W Turner 195, S H Rice, Josh. McCoy 211, Mrs. S. Taylor 208, Dr. J Davis 211,—50 c's. each.

B Bemis 216, L T Cunningham 223, Benj. Hill 221, S D Clark 209, Asa. Dolloff 221, M Jennings 223, Jos. Sarle 223, El. Wilcox 223, L Bunting 223, J E Ainsworth 225, J R Brown 260, S F Newcomb 216, E E Richardson 208, A D Blackman 223, H S Montague 222, C E Burk 221, Z M Aldrich 223, P Fuller 219, F Grott 219, E Wadleigh 223, B Moody 220, B B Hoyt 212, T Griswold 224, L D Allen 221, Amb. Curtis 208, R E Wood 224, W P Wentworth 236, J R Randall 224, D Coggswell 220, C Farrington 195, H H Hall 182, J S Moulton 208, J P Blaisdell 208,—$1.00 each.

C H Smith 236, J M Withington 236, W C Nettleton 234, J P Nofsinger 250, T Stockdale 250,—$2.00 each.

C S Lougee 197, Jas. Baker 197,—$3 00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J Clapp 28 cts., Thos. John $5.00, Major Dodge 69 cts. G P Persons 65 cts.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid, hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 6 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 123 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts.; postage 9 cts. 1-4 off per dozen. Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.50.

Bible ... 2 cts. single ... $1.50 per hundred.

Words of W... postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower, than they can be bought at any other ...

Life and Religious Experience of ... Munger, including many singular ... connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very ... and will be read with interest by all. Price 40 cts. —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By ... Seymour. An excellent treatise ... the Scriptures, and upon the theological ... day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—6 cts. single. Postage 2 ...

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the ... mind. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tracts on Hell, $2.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $6.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.—

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 10 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 221 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us ... Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 123 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six. ... which can be separated for distribution. The ... contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by ... Clarke; Hope and Duty of ... ry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning ... Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by ...

† The Olive Leaves are ... that can be separated for ... Little Children, Love one another ... Resting Places ... Love, &c. Abundant Grace, &c. ... Hastings. Just the thing to ... classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or ... and six are to ... structure ... ment. All texts ... and arranged. By ...

The Three Kingdoms ... God the Father, the ... of the Lord Jesus Christ ... as it ... Preble. ... 10 cts. ...

☞ The ... [illegible]

☞ The following ... of J. B. ... [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Jesus is Near.

Hark! hear the joyful sound,
Pilgrims to cheer;
Ringing through earth around
Jesus is near!

Ages have rolled away,
Earth [illegible] old;
Soon will the perfect day
[illegible] saints.

Death has been victor long,
Soon it must die;
While the triumphant song
Echoes on high!

Hear the Life-giver's voice—
"Quickly I come!"
Soon shall the saints rejoice,
Resting at home.

Faith looks with earnest eye,
Seeking for rest;
Love, with her banner high,
Waits for the blest.

Soon the redeemed shall sing,
On yonder shore,
Glory to Christ our King
Forevermore.

S. Lizzie Baker.

For the Crisis.

Privileges of Saints.

"And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."—Acts 5: 41.

There are a great many good, but simple minded people, who are perpetually harping upon the sacrifices which they have made, thereby, as it were, thrusting into the Almighty's face their good deeds, as a set-off to all and every blessing which they may, can or will receive. Without thinking, they place themselves in a position strongly assimilating that of the pharisee, who recapitulated before the world his fastings, his almsgiving and his prayers, in self-pleasing contrast to the prostrate publican yonder. Without doubt, there are many who have nobly devoted themselves and all they possessed to the cause of God; yet, even those who have bound worldly influence, riches and friends, and laid them upon the altar, and on the top of all laid down their lives, have counted themselves honored in being called upon to make the sacrifice, looking forward with joy to that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," which casts into the shade the glare and glitter of worldly pomp and splendor, and promises them a crown unfading and eternal. After glancing at some of the privileges of saints, we will leave our readers to judge whether it be worth while to murmur at trials, or boast of sacrifice made, even if the first surpassed Job's, or the latter that of Cranmer.

In the first place, the privilege of the christian is to abide in Christ. In the parable of the vine, Christ says, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me." Almost every one can understand this metaphor. How beautiful its wide spread branches, bending with rich clusters, and giving food and shelter to the hungry and the weary. But if perchance any of the branches, no matter how healthy it looks, should be severed from the parent trunk, it quickly becomes withered and dead, "and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned." Jno. 15: 4, 6.

It is a christian privilege to partake of the Divine nature. This is undeniably a mighty change from the evil which naturally belongs to man, and could only be brought about by the divine power of God, who "hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust." 2 Pet. 1: 3, 4. This Divine nature, of which we are partakers, of necessity, saves us from the multitude of evils which spring from corruption inherent upon indulgence in the lusts of the world. Every earthly pleasure, which springs not from virtue, has its pain. The drunkard and midnight reveler have their hours of remorse and wretchedness. The glutton, even more beastly in his vice, has his gorged seasons of repletion, when nature groans under an overburdened stomach; and many nameless sins bring with them their own condemnation and punishment. Surely, then, to become imbued with a nature which works such good, is a privilege of the highest order. Besides being kept from so many evils, it is the privilege of saints to have promise of the possession of all things. "Therefore let no man glory in men, for all things are yours. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours." 1 Cor. 3: 21, 22. What more does man require? But the concluding verse swallows up every hope and desire of the christian's soul,—"And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

Yet, further, all the already named privileges might be enjoyed in a subordinate state, where the recipient held the position of a menial, such as the repentant prodigal [illegible] have embraced. But let us [illegible] which belong to the believer, and then talk of sacrifice which we have made! Besides having God as our King, Ps. 5: 2; 44: 4; Isa. 44: 6; Deliverer, 2 Sam. 22: 2; Ps. 18: 2; Strength, Ps. 18: 2; Refuge, Ps. 46: 1, 11; Isa. 25: 4; Light, Isa. 60: 19; Lawgiver, Neh. 9: 13, 14; Isa. 33: 22, etc., it is the privilege of saints to call him by the endearing name of Father. "Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou O Lord art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting." Isa. 63: 16. The Jews would exclusively have confined to themselves the blessings of a Messiah, but here the great prophet preaches free salvation. The narrow pale of Hebrew sectarianism is broken away, and all who will may come and take of the water of life freely.

As we are not by nature the children of God, we can assume nothing by virtue of our own right. It is therefore by adoption that we are admitted into His family; yet we are, through grace abounding, partakers in all the privileges and dignities belonging to the only begotten of the Father. "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father." Rom. 8: 15. It was in these very words that the Son of God, when bowed under the weight of his unparalleled sorrow, fell to the earth and prayed for the amelioration of his agony. "And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee: take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt." Mark 14: 36. Abba is a Syriac word, and is expressive of great filial tenderness and respect, such as a dutiful and affectionate son might give to a loving father, and which no slave or bondsman dared to utter. The Jews were under bondage as well as the Gentiles. The former under the law, the latter under Idolatry, and each, owing to the fallibility of human nature, transgressing. Those who were believers in Christ were brought from under the yoke of a multitude of rites and ceremonies, by the spirit of adoption, and introduced into the "glorious liberty of the children of God." "And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Can any imaginable destiny be more glorious than this? For a poor, homeless child to be taken from misery and rags, and placed in the mansion of an earthly sovereign, and made an equal with the prince imperial in power and inheritance, surpasses all the wild conception of oriental fiction. Yet the transition from the depths of sin's degradation to the exalted position of "joint heirs with Christ" is immeasurably greater. We cannot now comprehend the exceeding happiness and glory of that state which shall be ours, "if so be that we suffer with him that we may also be glorified together." That soldier, who would shrink from his duty because the fight waxes hot and the angel of death sits brooding over the field of war, shall have no laurel bound around his brow; neither shall the christian, who turns back through the fear of persecution, see "the glory which shall be revealed" to those who endure to the end. Although the dreadful extremes of persecution are unknown in our day, yet the very smoothness of the path renders it slippery. The outward of religion is become so fashionable that there is danger of the saint hob-nobbing with the sinner, and an enemy is never more dangerous than when he approaches us in the garb of a friend.

This suffering for Christ was considered no mean privilege by the apostles, who, when beaten by order of the Sanhedrim, rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. See Acts 5: 41. "For unto you it is given, in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." That is to say, that God has highly honored you in being called to suffer in the cause of his Son; "Having the same conflict which you saw in me, and now hear to be in me." Phil. 1: 29, 30. Paul had suffered terribly in Philippi. He was stripped, scourged, put into a dungeon and his feet fastened in the stocks. These persecutions the Philippians had witnessed, and rumor had also borne to their ears the intelligence of other suffering which the indomitable apostle and martyr had undergone. But such was his hope of reward, he says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8: 18.

With such noble examples before us, in those who flinched not at the grim heads-man, hugged the stake and stretched out their arms to welcome the devouring flames, shall any one among us do otherwise than think it our greatest privilege to sacrifice all we have and are, and give up ourselves wholly and unreservedly unto the Lord, "Looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Lord Jesus Christ?"

Another of the privileges of christians is to endure opprobrium. "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Matt. 5: 11. There is perhaps nothing more difficult to endure with patience, than slander. The stoicism of the tortured Indian arises from the knowledge that he will be spoken well of, even among his enemies, when dead. The warrior who "seeks the bubble reputation in the cannon's mouth," endures the dangers and toil of a bloody campaign, solely that a good and honorable name may be handed down to his posterity and a marble slab in some honored aisle may chronicle his chivalry and his mighty deeds. But touch his character, and his suffering and glory vanish. And yet even this, if need be, the christian is called upon to endure. For, shall the servant be above his master? If we would be like Christ in the fulness of his glory, we must be like him in patience under revilings. How much deeper does the dagger pierce when thrust by the hand of a friend. Cæsar defended himself gallantly against his assasins until he saw the deadly poinard raised by his cherished comrade. "And you too Brutus!" he exclaimed, and

"Ingratitude more strong than traitors arms,
Quite vanquished him."

Among the perils enumerated by Paul is one from "false brethren." This is a fearful thing. It is our duty as well as privilege on being thus traduced to take it patiently. We shall triumph then, while on the slanderer's head falls burning coals. Verbum sapienti.

Jno. F. Cotton.

For the Crisis.

The Blessed Hope—A Balm.

While dark the mystery,
Our Father and our God,
Trusting the promise of Thy grace,
We bow beneath the rod.

We thank Thee for a balm,
Which hath a power to heal—
The resurrection morn we wait,
Our risen Lord the seal.

Such hope may well sustain
Those who in Him abide—
The promised land, and death no more,
When Christ shall claim his bride.

Come, great Physician, heal
The wounds which sin hath made,
How long thus shall Creation groan,—
In mourning be arrayed?

It comes, that day of days,
The blessed dead awake;
Immortal loved ones we shall join,
Meet, but no parting take. S. B.

Rutland, Vt.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 3.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

MAN'S TRANSGRESSION.

The Almighty Architect had created the world, adorned and beautified it by his loving hand, when Adam and Eve were introduced into the delightful haunts of Paradise. They were beautiful and perfect in form, innocent in their nature, with capacities suited to enjoy the felicity which every where surrounded them. No corroding fears marred their happiness, no dreadful danger lurked in their path, as they wandered over the elysian fields of their Eden home, happy in each other's love; for guile, as yet, had not stained their angelic purity. All around was radiant with the smiles of innocence and love, for peace and harmony reigned over all. How long they continued in this state of bliss, we are unable to determine, but infer that it was of comparatively short duration. For by transgressing the law of their Creator by partaking of the forbidden fruit, they forfeited all claim to their blissful abode, as well as to life and happiness. Thus in the bright morn of their existence, was their azure sky of joy overspread with gloom and bitter sorrow.

Let us wander back in imagination thro' the lapse of circling ages, and contemplate the scene of that eventful morn, which brought sin and its attendant evils into the world.

The gentle shades of night had disappeared before the rosy light of glorious morn. The bright orb of day had risen above the gentle slopes of the eastern hills, and was shedding his golden radiance upon the enchanting vales of Eden. All around was joy and gladness; the groves were vocal with the sweet hymnings of gay plumaged songsters, and the beasts of the forest, innocent and harmless were roving together in their quiet retreats without fear. Gorgeous flowers distilling their fragrance on the balmy zephyrs, and delicious fruits bending in tempting clusters on every side. Every object was full of beauty, shadowing forth the tender love and goodness of the Creator.

As the bright beams of the morning sun danced over the boughs of the garden, the human pair came forth from their bower of sweet repose, to regale amid the spicy groves of ambrosial fruits or mingle their voices of love in praise to their Maker. With joyous hearts they engaged in their morning avocations, for no irksome task or disagreeable toil was theirs. On that lovely morn, as Eve with her modest beauty and innocence, wandered from bower to bower, training the creeping vines and opening flowers, she little dreamed that an enemy was concealed in those shades who sought her ruin; yet so it was, even in Paradise, and has ever been in this world of sorrow; the tempter is lurking in the path of the innocent, ever seeking to allure them into the path of vice by his fascinating promises. Thus it was with Eve, for when at length she stood beneath the wide spreading branches of the prohibited tree, she presented a fit opportunity for the tempter to accomplish his evil designs, by placing herself within the range of temptation. At first he caused her to doubt the certainty of the execution of the penalty attached to the command, then by creating a desire in the mind of Eve for the fruit, he so operated on her mind, that in an unguarded moment she ate of the forbidden fruit, and being pleased with its taste, persuaded her husband, who also partook with her. Thus the command of Jehovah was broken, and the first sin committed, which brought death and its multiplied woes into the world. Ah! methinks angels shed tears of sorrow, if ever they weep over the follies of sinful man, when they beheld that sad scene which deprived man of his innocence, and sent him forth a lone exile from the bliss-haunted bowers of Paradise.

When our first parents had become guilty by disobedience, their eyes were opened, and they saw their deplorable condition; so that when they heard the voice of God in the garden, they shrank from his presence, fearful of the result that would follow. Each vainly endeavored to hide their sin by the faults of the other; but the law of God was imperative, and no reprieve could be granted. Ah! how sadly fell the sentence of condemnation from the lips of the Supreme Judge, that was to deprive man of the pleasures which he enjoyed and doom him to a life of toil and care. "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field; for in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Sad sentence! and sad, too, were their emotions as they prepared to bid adieu forever to Paradise and its joys. Well might Eve in the pathetic language of Milton thus exclaim:—

"O unexpected stroke, worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
Thee, native soil, these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of gods? where I had hoped to spend,
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day
That must be mortal to us both? O flowers,
That never will in other climate grow,
My early visitation and my last
At even, which I bred up with tender hand,
From the first opening bud, and gave ye names,
Who now shall rear ye to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?
Thee lastly, nuptial bower, by me adorned
With what to sight or smell was sweet! from thee
How shall I part, and whither wander down
Into a lower world, to this obscure
And wild? How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits?"

With sorrowing hearts and lingering footsteps they bent their course into the untrod solitudes which stretched out before them; long and wistfully they gazed upon the delightful scenes which they were never more to behold, till at length they stood without the bounds of Paradise, then turning back again, they beheld the flaming cherubim guarding the entrance to the tree of life, forever precluding their return to taste of its immortal fruit.

A great change had now passed over man's moral nature; he had descended from his high position to that of a transgressor, which resulted in producing a still greater change in the physical world. The seeds of decay, though imperceptible at first, were sown amid the beauties of the young world, which, in the shades of coming centuries would spread gloom and desolation amid the fairest scenes of earth. Noxious plants soon began to appear, requiring the patient labor of man to extirpate them. The beasts of the fields began to grow fierce and untameable, the stronger overpowering the weak, subjecting man to constant fear and dread. Thus sad and mournful changes were introduced into the physical world, and death and suffering entailed upon man on account of sin. And now after the revolution of nearly sixty centuries, in their untiring course, scarce a vestige remains of the beauties that man beheld when he first awoke to life amid the vine-wreathed bowers of Paradise.

But still the earth is destined to bloom again with more than its primeval loveliness, notwithstanding the mighty changes that have passed over it. It will be created anew by the same hand that first brought it into existence, and made a fit abode for his people to inhabit, who then will no longer be subject to the scenes of woe and distress that now spread sadness and mourning on every side. For then every tear will be wiped away, and the unclouded sunshine of joy will shed its sweet radiance over all, without a shadow of gloom to obscure its brilliancy.

"O Eden, fair Eden! where now is thy bloom?
And where are the pure ones that wept o'er thy doom?
Their plumes never brighten our shadowy skies,
Their voices no more on earth's breezes arise.

But joy for the faith that is strong in its powers,
A fairer and better land yet shall be ours;
Where sin shall be vanquished, and death seals its prey,
And earth with her nations Jehovah obey.

Thus nobler than Adam—more charming than Eve,
The Son of the Highest his palace shall leave,
While the saints who adored Him arise from the tomb
At the triumph-strain, telling "His Kingdom has come."

☞ A mother teaching her child to pray, is an object at once the most sublime and tender the imagination can conceive. Elevated above earthly things, she seems like one of those guardian angels, the companion of our earthly pilgrimage, through whose ministrations we are inclined to do good and turn from evil.

☞ The choicest pleasures of life lie within the range of moderation, [illegible]

Selections.

"Too Big to Pray."

I tarried for a night with an old friend, who had always seemed indifferent on the subject of religion. His wife was pious, and endeavored to impress the minds of her children with proper views of God and eternity. Her little boy of two or three years when about to retire to rest, knelt down by his mother, and reverently repeated a child's prayer. When he rose from his knees, he turned to his father, with a seeming consciousness that he had performed a duty, and addressed him, "Father, I have said my prayers: have you said yours? or are you too big to pray?" I thought it was a question that would reach that father's heart, and it might yet be said of him, "Behold he prayeth."

I have since noticed many who were too big to pray. I knew a young man, a student of brilliant talents and fascinating manners; yet he would sneer at pious men. He was considered a model by a certain class around him. In a revival meeting it was supposed that the Spirit of God had reached his heart. He professed to see his danger and resolved to reform. Then he thought of his companions who had witnessed his past life. They would say he was weak-minded and fickle. He would lose their respect. He could not come down from his high position. He could not take up the cross through good and evil report, and his serious impressions passed away, perhaps forever. He was too big to pray.

I knew a man who had passed the middle age of life. His children had grown up around him, while he had been careless and unconcerned about their eternal welfare. A change seemed to have come over him, and he felt that duty called on him to pray in his family. But how could he assume such a task before his household, which would be astonished at such a strange event? He shrank from the effort, and finally relaxed into his former coldness and indifference. He was too big to pray.

I knew a physician who held a high rank in his profession. The urbanity of his deportment, joined with an intelligent mind, made him a pleasant companion. But he was skeptical in regard to the doctrines of the Bible. He witnessed the happy death of one who triumphed in the last trying hour, and his infidel opinions were shaken. "Almost he was persuaded to become a Christian." But the pride of his heart was not subdued. He could not humble himself at the foot of the cross. He was too big to pray.

How many thousands there are around us, who have been elevated to high places in our land, who would not dare to be seen upon their knees, supplicating the Majesty of heaven. They are too big to pray.

Now, in all such cases, there is something wrong. The heart once fairly pierced by the sword of the Spirit, there will soon be prayer. The fear of God will speedily overcome the fear of man. This is proved by all history and all experience. Where the Spirit descends in power, men in multitudes, with the royal psalmist, will on all sides be crying out, "Come all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul."

The Prayer of Habbakkuk.

It is said of Dr. Franklin, that during his long residence in Paris, being invited to a party of the nobility, where most of the court and the courtiers were present, he produced a great sensation by one of his bold movements, and gained great applause for its ingenuity.

According to the custom of that age and country, the nobles, after the usual ceremonies of the evening were over, sat down to a free and promiscuous conversation. Christianity was then the great topic. The church was always ridiculed, and the Bible was treated with unsparing severity. Growing warmer and warmer in their sarcastic remarks, one great lord commanded for a moment universal attention, by his asserting, in a round voice, that the Bible was not only a piece of arrant deception, but totally devoid of literary merit. Although the entire company of Frenchmen nodded a heavy assent to the sentence, Franklin gave no signs of approval.—Being at that time a court favorite, his companions could not bear even a tacit reproof from a man of his weight of influence. They all appealed to him for his opinion. Franklin, in one of his peculiar ways, replied, that he was hardly prepared to give them a suitable answer, as his mind had been running on the merits of a new book, of rare excellency, which he had just happened to fall in with at one of the city bookstores; and as they had pleased to make allusion to the literary character of the Bible, perhaps it might interest them to compare with that old volume the merits of his new prize. If so, he would read them a short section. All were eager to have the Doctor read a portion of his rare book. In a very grave and sincere manner, he took an old book from his coat pocket, and with propriety of utterance read to them a poem.

The poem had its effect. The admiring listeners pronounced it the best they had ever heard or read. "That is pretty," said one. "That is sublimity," said another. "It has not its superior in the world," was the unanimous opinion. They all wished to know the name of the new work, and whether that was a specimen of its contents.

"Certainly, gentlemen," said the Doctor, smiling at his triumph, "my book is full of such passages.—It is no other than your good-for-nothing Bible; and I have read you the prayer of the prophet Habbakkuk."

Let every reader learn wisdom from this incident, and learn to appreciate the unequalled sublimities of the Bible.—Ladies' Repository.

The Man of Honor.

The man of true honor ever forgets an insult; or, if remembered, it is only with the kindness of a superior mind looking above the shafts of envy. True honor gains nothing by feeding the spirit of contention; for if once that evil is harbored, it is sustained by the sacrifice of every just and manly principle. The gentle rivulet becomes a torrent when the elements contend; but when the tempest is past, the waters contract to their former limits, flowing with more freshness and adding new beauty to their progress. So the elevated mind, if ever disturbed by the malice of ignorance and envy, like that little stream, soon regains its wonted gentleness and feels the happier for the test. True honor acknowledges itself in rags as well as in costly raiment—it needs no covering—most beautiful when undisguised. It exalts itself in all conditions, for it is of its own creating. The world would be its arbiter, and false distinctions of society would restrict it to high station, but the world would have been made to worship it when clothed in the garb of the lowly. Detraction has no blemish for it—it abides all worldly tears.

Selected for the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—I select and send the following beautiful lines, which I very much desire to see in the Crisis. They may prove interesting to some tried, trusting heart. They exhibit, in my estimation, the true christian position, and a state of grace which is the true perfection of faith's attainments.

Yours, praying Thy kingdom come,
P. Campbell.

New Britain, Ct.

"I Hold Still."

Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And in his hottest fire hold still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so
Into his own fair shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er and beats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And, in his mighty hand, hold still.

Why should I murmur? for the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will, to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me:
So I say trusting, As God will!
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles for my profit purely
Affliction's glowing, fiery brand,
And all his heaviest blows are surely
Inflicted by a Master-hand:
So I say praying, As God will!
And hope in him, and suffer still.

From the German of Julius Sturm.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Water Cure.

Invalids who are seeking rest, kind treatment, good company, air, food and exercise, will have to go far before they find a pleasanter place, take it all in all, than "Our Home" at Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y. I have shared the pleasures of the home for a few brief days—would that they had been longer—and so speak from experience.

Our Home is not a Cold Water Cure, where poor mortals sit in ice water, their teeth chattering like so many frighted spectres, nor is it a hot water cure, where you are steamed and scalded and parboiled; but it is a place where men are fed on good wholesome vegetable food, and then by exercise and the use of good soft water are relieved of some of the "evil diseases" that are induced by dirt, laziness, hog-eating, and worse than all, by taking huge doses of vile compound from murdering M. D.'s, who give to cure a sick man poison enough to kill two well ones.

I saw persons there from whose bodies the hidden poison and scrofula had been brought out till they were covered for several square feet with an eruptive skin, (and to tell the truth, a wet bandage has done about the same thing for me in the last month) and in one case I saw a bandage which had been worn three weeks, eaten in large holes through several thicknesses of cloth by poisons which had thus been drawn out of the wearer, which he had taken of one of the leading Boston M. D.'s.

The proprietors of the establishment, F. Wilson Hurd & Co., and the corps of physicians, with Dr. J. C. Jackson and Miss H. N. Austin, M. D., at their head, do all they can to make the stay of patients profitable and agreeable. Persons seeking health will do well to send to them for a circular, and consider the propriety of visiting "Our Home." Terms for examination, $5. Board and treatment from $7 to $10 per week. Thanks to the proprietors of the "Home" for their kindness to a Pilgrim there.

H. L. H.

Providence, R. I., June 13, '59.

[From reports, we have formed a very high opinion of "Our Home" at Dansville. —Ed.]

Cultivation of the Voice.

It has already been observed that the relative strength or weakness of the voice depends partly on the capacity of the lungs, and the general condition of the vocal apparatus, and partly on the number of muscles thrown into action. Experience has also proved that the respiratory organs and the vocal muscles are not only as susceptible of a high degree of development as other portions of our frame, but even to a higher degree. The cultivation of the voice is, however, required on grounds altogether irrespective of the art of singing or public speaking. It is indirectly, perhaps, the most important branch of physical education; for the amount of vital power depends chiefly on the health and vigor of the respiratory process, the regulation of which must be the first step in the cultivation of the voice.

Parents are not generally aware how much might be effected by a proper mode of physical training in those constitutions where the chest is narrow, indicating a predisposition to pulmonary disease. In all such cases, regularly repeated, deep inspirations are of paramount value. On account of the elasticity of all the parts concerned, the expansion of the chest is in early childhood easily effected; the capacity of the lungs is increased, and the tendency to disease is counteracted.

There should be a sufficient pause between the acts of inspiration and expiration. In order that children should perform these chest exercises slowly, regularly, and effectually, they require to be carefully watched, guided, and encouraged; for they soon get tired of them when left to themselves. Even adults will derive considerable benefit if, immediately after rising, they regularly, for some time, take deep inspirations, in order that the whole lungs may be properly inflated; and then retain the breath as long as possible. The body must be in an erect position, and the shoulders thrown back. It may also be observed that these exercises are best performed in the open air, or, at least, in a well-ventilated room, the windows being open for the time.—The Philosophy of Voice and Speech.

Summer Sours.

Physiological research has fully established the fact that acids promote the separation of the bile from the blood, which is then passed from the system, thus preventing fevers, the prevailing diseases of summer. All fevers are "billious," that is, the bile is in the blood. Whatever is antagonistic of fever, is cooling. It is a common saying that fruits are "cooling," and also berries of every description; it is because the acidity which they contain aids in separating the bile from the blood, that is, aids in purifying the blood. Hence the great yearning for greens and lettuce, and salads in the early spring, these being eaten with vinegar; hence also the taste for something sour, for lemonades, on an attack of fever.

But this being the case, it is easy to see, that we nullify the good effects of fruits and berries, in proportion as we eat them with sugar, or even sweet milk, or cream. If we eat them in their natural state, fresh, ripe, perfect, it is almost impossible to eat too many, to eat enough to hurt us, especially if we eat them alone, not taking any liquid with them whatever. Hence also is buttermilk or even common sour milk promotive of health in summer time. Sweet milk tends to billiousness in sedentary people, sour milk is antagonistic. The Greeks and Turks are passionately fond of sour milk. The shepherds use rennet, and the milk dealers alum to make it sour the sooner. Buttermilk acts like watermelons on the system.—Hall.

Noises in a Sick Room.

It is extraordinary how many persons, unused to the sick room, mistake certain noises for quiet. When such people have to walk across the room, they do so with a balancing sort of movement, that makes every plank creak uneasily. Their very dress rattles in a way that would make the fortune of a rattle-snake. If anything has to be said, it is spoken in a loud whirring whisper, that conceals the words but makes the most irritating of noises. Now the silence of a sick room must not be labored, it must be natural. Shoes that do not creak must be worn, and in walking, the foot must be put down carefully, of course, but with a firm step, that come, gently, yet steadily on the floor. This will not make the creaking sound caused by the toe-pointed, gingerly mode of movement so much adopted by those whose experience of sick rooms is small. The dress must be made of some noiseless material, wool or cotton: silk must be avoided, for it squeaks with every movement. In speaking, the pitch of the voice must be slightly raised, and the words, instead of being hissed, as in whispering, should be clipped short, and cut distinctly. By this means the person spoken to can hear what is said, while the least possible sound accompanies the word.—Barwell's Cure of the Sick.

An Important Fact.

Exercise for the body, occupation for the mind—these are the grand constituents of health and happiness; the cardinal points upon which everything turns. Motion seems to be a great preserving principle of nature, to which even inanimate things are subject; for the winds, waves, the earth itself are restless, and the waving of trees, shrubs, and flowers, is known to be an essential part of their economy. A fixed rule of taking several hours' exercise every day, if possible, in the open air, if not, under cover, will be almost certain to secure one exemption from disease, as well as from the attack of low spirits, or ennui, that monster who is ever waylaying the rich and indolent.

"Throw but a stone, the giant dies."

Low spirits cannot exist in the atmosphere of bodily and mental activity.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brs., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

Canada Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to [illegible], or $2.26 a year. [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Jesus is Near.

Hark! hear the joyful sound,
[illegible]
Ringing through earth around
Jesus is near!

Ages have rolled away,
Earth groweth old;
Soon will the perfect day
Beauties unfold.

Death has been victor long,
Soon it must die;
While the triumphant song
Echoes on high!

Hark the Life-giver's voice—
"Quickly I come!"
Soon shall the saints rejoice,
Resting at home.

Faith looks with earnest eye,
Seeking for rest;
Love, with her banner high,
Waits for the blest.

Soon the redeemed shall sing,
On yonder shore,
Glory to Christ our King
Forevermore.

S. Lizzie Baker.

For the Crisis.

Privileges of Saints.

"And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."—Acts 5: 41.

There are a great many good, but simple minded people, who are perpetually harping upon the sacrifices which they have made, thereby, as it were, thrusting into the Almighty's face their good deeds, as a set-off to all and every blessing which they may, can or will receive. Without thinking, they place themselves in a position strongly assimilating that of the pharisee, who recapitulated before the world his fastings, his almsgiving and his prayers, in self-pleasing contrast to the prostrate publican yonder. Without doubt, there are many who have nobly devoted themselves and all they possessed to the cause of God; yet, even those who have bound worldly influence, riches and friends, and laid them upon the altar, and on the top of all laid down their lives, have counted themselves honored in being called upon to make the sacrifice, looking forward with joy to that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," which casts into the shade the glare and glitter of worldly pomp and splendor, and promises them a crown unfading and eternal. After glancing at some of the privileges of saints, we will leave our readers to judge whether it be worth while to murmur at trials, or boast of sacrifice made, even if the first surpassed Job's, or the latter that of Cranmer.

In the first place, the privilege of the christian is to abide in Christ. In the parable of the vine, Christ says, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me." Almost every one can understand this metaphor. How beautiful its wide spread branches, bending with rich clusters, and giving food and shelter to the hungry and the weary. But if perchance any of the branches, no matter how healthy it looks, should be severed from the parent trunk, it quickly becomes withered and dead, "and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned." Jno. 15: 4, 6.

It is a christian privilege to partake of the Divine nature. This is undeniably a mighty change from the evil which naturally belongs to man, and could only be brought about by the divine power of God, who "hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust." 2 Pet. 1: 3, 4. This Divine nature, of which we are partakers, of necessity, saves us from the multitude of evils which spring from corruption inherent upon indulgence in the lusts of the world. Every earthly pleasure, which springs not from virtue, has its pain. The drunkard and midnight reveler have their hours of remorse and wretchedness. The glutton, even more beastly in his vice, has his gorged seasons of repletion, when nature groans under an overburdened stomach; and many nameless sins bring with them their own condemnation and punishment. Surely, then, to become imbued with a nature which works such good, is a privilege of the highest order. Besides being kept from so many evils, it is the privilege of saints to have promise of the possession of all things. "Therefore let no man glory in men, for all things are yours. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours." 1 Cor. 3: 21, 22. What more does man require? But the concluding verse swallows up every hope and desire of the christian's soul,—"And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

Yet, further, all the already-named privileges might be enjoyed in a subordinate state, where the recipient held the position of a menial, such as the repentant prodigal [illegible] gladly have embraced. But let us [illegible] which belong to the be[illegible] and then talk of sacrifices which we have made! Besides having God as our King, Ps. 5: 2; 44: 4; Isa. 44: 6; Deliverer, 2 Sam. 22: 2; Ps. 18: 2; Strength, Ps. 18: 2; Refuge, Ps. 46: 1, 11; Isa. 25: 4; Light, Isa. 60: 19; Lawgiver, Neh. 9: 13, 14; Isa. 33: 22, etc., it is the privilege of saints to call him by the endearing name of Father. "Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignored of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou O Lord art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting." Isa. 63: 16. The Jews would exclusively have confined to themselves the blessings of a Messiah, but here the great prophet preaches free salvation. The narrow pale of Hebrew sectarianism is broken away, and all who will may come and take of the water of life freely.

As we are not by nature the children of God, we can assume nothing by virtue of our own right. It is therefore by adoption that we are admitted into His family; yet we are, through grace abounding, partakers in all the privileges and dignities belonging to the only begotten of the Father. "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father." Rom. 8: 15. It was in these very words that the Son of God, when bowed under the weight of his unparalleled sorrow, fell to the earth and prayed for the amelioration of his agony. "And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee: take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt." Mark 14: 36. Abba is a Syriac word, and is expressive of great filial tenderness and respect, such as a dutiful and affectionate son might give to a loving father, and which no slave or bondsman dared to utter. The Jews were under bondage as well as the Gentiles. The former under the law, the latter under Idolatry, and each, owing to the fallibility of human nature, transgressing. Those who were believers in Christ were brought from under the yoke of a multitude of rites and ceremonies, by the spirit of adoption, and introduced into the "glorious liberty of the children of God." "And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Can any imaginable destiny be more glorious than this? For a poor, homeless child to be taken from misery and rags, and placed in the mansion of an earthly sovereign, and made an equal with the prince imperial in power and inheritance, surpasses all the wild conception of oriental fiction. Yet the transition from the depths of sin's degradation to the exalted position of "joint heirs with Christ" is immeasurably greater. We cannot now comprehend the exceeding happiness and glory of that state which shall be ours, "if so be that we suffer with him that we may also be glorified together." That soldier, who would shrink from his duty because the fight waxes hot and the angel of death sits brooding over the field of war, shall have no laurel bound around his brow; neither shall the christian, who turns back through the fear of persecution, see "the glory which shall be revealed" to those who endure to the end. Although the dreadful extremes of persecution are unknown in our day, yet the very smoothness of the path renders it slippery. The outward of religion is become so fashionable that there is danger of the saint hob-nobbing with the sinner, and an enemy is never more dangerous than when he approaches us in the garb of a friend.

This suffering for Christ was considered no mean privilege by the apostles, who, when beaten by order of the Sanhedrim, rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. See Acts 5: 41. "For unto you it is given, in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." That is to say, that God has highly honored you in being called to suffer in the cause of his Son; "Having the same conflict which you saw in me, and now hear to be in me." Phil. 1: 29, 30. Paul had suffered terribly in Philippi. He was stripped, scourged, put into a dungeon and his feet fastened in the stocks. These persecutions the Philippians had witnessed, and rumor had also borne to their ears the intelligence of other suffering which the indomitable apostle and martyr had undergone. But such was his hope of reward, he says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8: 18.

With such noble examples before us, in those who flinched not at the grim heads-man, hugged the stake and stretched out their arms to welcome the devouring flames, shall any one among us do otherwise than think it our greatest privilege to sacrifice all we have and are, and give up ourselves wholly and unreservedly unto the Lord, "Looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Lord Jesus Christ?"

Another of the privileges of christians is to endure opprobrium. "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Matt. 5: 11. There is perhaps nothing more difficult to endure with patience, than slander. The stoicism of the tortured Indian arises from the knowledge that he will be spoken well of, even among his enemies, when dead. The warrior who "seeks the bubble reputation in the cannon's mouth," endures the dangers and toil of a bloody campaign, solely that a good and honorable name may be handed down to his posterity and a marble slab in some honored aisle may chronicle his chivalry and his mighty deeds. But touch his character, and his suffering and glory vanish. And yet even this, if need be, the christian is called upon to endure. For, shall the servant be above his master? If we would be like Christ in the fulness of his glory, we must be like him in patience under revilings. How much deeper does the dagger pierce when thrust by the hand of a friend. Cæsar defended himself gallantly against his assasins until he saw the deadly poinard raised by his cherished comrade. "And you too Brutus!" he exclaimed, and

"Ingratitude more strong than traitors arms,
Quite vanquished him."

Among the perils enumerated by Paul is one from "false brethren." This is a fearful thing. It is our duty as well as privilege on being thus traduced to take it patiently. We shall triumph then, while on the slanderer's head falls burning coals. Verbum sapienti.

Jno. F. Cotton.

For the Crisis.

The Blessed Hope.—A Balm.

While dark the mystery,
Our Father and our God,
Trusting the promise of Thy grace,
We bow beneath the rod.

We thank Thee for a balm,
Which hath a power to heal—
The resurrection morn we wait,
Our risen Lord the seal.

Such hope may well sustain
Those who in Him abide—
The promised land, and death no more,
When Christ shall claim his bride.

Come, great Physician, heal
The wounds which sin hath made,
How long thus shall Creation groan,—
In mourning be arrayed?

It comes, that day of days,
The blessed dead awake;
Immortal loved ones we shall join,
Meet, but no parting take. S. B.

Rutland, Vt.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 3.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

MAN'S TRANSGRESSION.

The Almighty Architect had created the world, adorned and beautified it by his loving hand, when Adam and Eve were introduced into the delightful haunts of Paradise. They were beautiful and perfect in form, innocent in their nature, with capacities suited to enjoy the felicity which every where surrounded them. No corroding fears marred their happiness, no dreadful danger lurked in their path, as they wandered over the elysian fields of their Eden home, happy in each other's love; for guile, as yet, had not stained their angelic purity. All around was radiant with the smiles of innocence and love, for peace and harmony reigned over all. How long they continued in this state of bliss, we are unable to determine, but infer that it was of comparatively short duration. For by transgressing the law of their Creator by partaking of the forbidden fruit, they forfeited all claim to their blissful abode, as well as to life and happiness. Thus in the bright morn of their existence, was their azure sky of joy overspread with gloom and bitter sorrow.

Let us wander back in imagination thro' the lapse of circling ages, and contemplate the scene of that eventful morn, which brought sin and its attendant evils into the world.

The gentle shades of night had disappeared before the rosy light of glorious morn. The bright orb of day had risen above the gentle slopes of the eastern hills, and was shedding his golden radiance upon the enchanting vales of Eden. All around was joy and gladness; the groves were vocal with the sweet hymnings of gay plumaged songsters, and the beasts of the forest, innocent and harmless were roving together in their quiet retreats without fear. Gorgeous flowers distilling their fragrance on the balmy zephyrs, and delicious fruits bending in tempting clusters on every side. Every object was full of beauty, shadowing forth the tender love and goodness of the Creator.

As the bright beams of the morning sun danced over the boughs of the garden, the human pair came forth from their bower of sweet repose, to regale amid the spicy groves of ambrosial fruits or mingle their voices of love in praise to their Maker. With joyous hearts they engaged in their morning avocations, for no irksome task or disagreeable toil was theirs. On that lovely morn, as Eve with her modest beauty and innocence, wandered from bower to bower, training the creeping vines and opening flowers, she little dreamed that an enemy was concealed in those shades who sought her ruin; yet so it was, even in Paradise, and has ever been in this world of sorrow; the tempter is lurking in the path of the innocent, ever seeking to allure them into the path of vice by his fascinating promises. Thus it was with Eve, for when at length she stood beneath the wide spreading branches of the prohibited tree, she presented a fit opportunity for the tempter to accomplish his evil designs, by placing herself within the range of temptation. At first he caused her to doubt the certainty of the execution of the penalty attached to the command, then by creating a desire in the mind of Eve for the fruit, he so operated on her mind, that in an unguarded moment she ate of the forbidden fruit, and being pleased with its taste, persuaded her husband, who also partook with her. Thus the command of Jehovah was broken, and the first sin committed, which brought death and its multiplied woes into the world. Ah! methinks angels shed tears of sorrow, if ever they weep over the follies of sinful man, when they beheld that sad scene which deprived man of his innocence, and sent him forth a lone exile from the bliss-haunted bowers of Paradise.

When our first parents had become guilty by disobedience, their eyes were opened, and they saw their deplorable condition; so that when they heard the voice of God in the garden, they shrank from his presence, fearful of the result that would follow. Each vainly endeavored to hide their sin by the faults of the other; but the law of God was imperative, and no reprieve could be granted. Ah! how sadly fell the sentence of condemnation from the lips of the Supreme Judge, that was to deprive man of the pleasures which he enjoyed and doom him to a life of toil and care. "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field; for in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Sad sentence! and sad, too, were their emotions as they prepared to bid adieu forever to Paradise and its joys. Well might Eve in the pathetic language of Milton thus exclaim:—

"O unexpected stroke, worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
Thee, native soil, these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of gods? where I had hoped to spend,
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day
That must be mortal to us both? O flowers,
That never will in other climate grow,
My early visitation and my last
At even, which I bred up with tender hand,
From the first opening bud, and gave ye names,
Who now shall rear ye to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?
Thee lastly, nuptial bower, by me adorned
With what to sight or smell was sweet! from thee
How shall I part, and whither wander down
Into a lower world, to this obscure
And wild? How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits?"

With sorrowing hearts and lingering footsteps they bent their course into the untrod solitudes which stretched out before them; long and wistfully they gazed upon the delightful scenes which they were never more to behold, till at length they stood without the bounds of Paradise, then turning back again, they beheld the flaming cherubim guarding the entrance to the tree of life, forever precluding their return to taste of its immortal fruit.

A great change had now passed over man's moral nature; he had descended from his high position to that of a transgressor, which resulted in producing a still greater change in the physical world. The seeds of decay, though imperceptible at first, were sown amid the beauties of the young world, which, in the shades of coming centuries would spread gloom and desolation amid the fairest scenes of earth. Noxious plants soon began to appear, requiring the patient labor of man to extirpate them. The beasts of the fields began to grow fierce and untameable, the stronger overpowering the weak, subjecting man to constant fear and dread. Thus sad and mournful changes were introduced into the physical world, and death and suffering entailed upon man on account of sin. And now after the revolution of nearly sixty centuries, in their untiring course, scarce a vestige remains of the beauties that man beheld when he first awoke to life amid the vine-wreathed bowers of Paradise.

But still the earth is destined to bloom again with more than its primeval loveliness, notwithstanding the mighty changes that have passed over it. It will be created anew by the same hand that first brought it into existence, and made a fit abode for his people to inhabit, who then will no longer be subject to the scenes of woe and distress that now spread sadness and mourning on every side. For then every tear will be wiped away, and the unclouded sunshine of joy will shed its sweet radiance over all, without a shadow of gloom to obscure its brilliancy.

"O Eden, fair Eden! where now is thy bloom?
And where are the pure ones that wept o'er thy doom?
Their plumes never brighten our shadowy skies,
Their voices no more on earth's breezes arise.

But joy for the faith that is strong in its powers,
A fairer and better land yet shall be ours;
Where sin shall be vanquished, and death seals its prey,
And earth with her nations Jehovah obey.

Thus nobler than Adam—more charming than Eve,
The Son of the Highest his palace shall leave,
While the saints who adored Him arise from the tomb
At the triumph-strain, telling "His Kingdom has come."

☞ A mother teaching her child to pray, is an object at once the most sublime and tender the imagination can conceive. Elevated above earthly things, she seems like one of those guardian angels, the companion of our earthly pilgrimage, through whose ministrations we are inclined to do good and turn from evil.

☞ The choicest pleasures of life lie within the range of moderation, a [illegible]

Selections.

"Too Big to Pray."

I tarried for a night with an old friend, who had always seemed indifferent on the subject of religion. His wife was pious, and endeavored to impress the minds of her children with proper views of God and eternity. Her little boy of two or three years when about to retire to rest, knelt down by his mother, and reverently repeated a child's prayer. When he rose from his knees, he turned to his father, with a seeming consciousness that he had performed a duty, and addressed him, "Father, I have said my prayers: have you said yours? or are you too big to pray?" I thought it was a question that would reach that father's heart, and it might yet be said of him, "Behold he prayeth."

I have since noticed many who were too big to pray. I knew a young man, a student of brilliant talents and fascinating manners; yet he would sneer at pious men. He was considered a model by a certain class around him. In a revival meeting it was supposed that the Spirit of God had reached his heart. He professed to see his danger and resolved to reform. Then he thought of his companions who had witnessed his past life. They would say he was weak-minded and fickle. He would lose their respect. He could not come down from his high position. He could not take up the cross through good and evil report, and his serious impressions passed away, perhaps forever. He was too big to pray.

I knew a man who had passed the middle age of life. His children had grown up around him, while he had been careless and unconcerned about their eternal welfare. A change seemed to have come over him, and he felt that duty called on him to pray in his family. But how could he assume such a task before his household, which would be astonished at such a strange event? He shrank from the effort, and finally relaxed into his former coldness and indifference. He was too big to pray.

I knew a physician who held a high rank in his profession. The urbanity of his deportment, joined with an intelligent mind, made him a pleasant companion. But he was skeptical in regard to the doctrines of the Bible. He witnessed the happy death of one who triumphed in the last trying hour, and his infidel opinions were shaken. "Almost he was persuaded to become a Christian." But the pride of his heart was not subdued. He could not humble himself at the foot of the cross. He was too big to pray.

How many thousands there are around us, who have been elevated to high places in our land, who would not dare to be seen upon their knees, supplicating the Majesty of heaven. They are too big to pray.

Now, in all such cases, there is something wrong. The heart once fairly pierced by the sword of the Spirit, there will soon be prayer. The fear of God will speedily overcome the fear of man. This is proved by all history and all experience. Where the Spirit descends in power, men in multitudes, with the royal psalmist, will on all sides be crying out, "Come all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul."

The Prayer of Habbakkuk.

It is said of Dr. Franklin, that during his long residence in Paris, being invited to a party of the nobility, where most of the court and the courtiers were present, he produced a great sensation by one of his bold movements, and gained great applause for its ingenuity.

According to the custom of that age and country, the nobles, after the usual ceremonies of the evening were over, sat down to a free and promiscuous conversation. Christianity was then the great topic. The church was always ridiculed, and the Bible was treated with unsparing severity. Growing warmer and warmer in their sarcastic remarks, one great lord commanded for a moment universal attention, by his asserting, in a round voice, that the Bible was not only a piece of arrant deception, but totally devoid of literary merit. Although the entire company of Frenchmen nodded a heavy assent to the sentence, Franklin gave no signs of approval.—Being at that time a court favorite, his companions could not bear even a tacit reproof from a man of his weight of influence. They all appealed to him for his opinion. Franklin, in one of his peculiar ways, replied, that he was hardly prepared to give them a suitable answer, as his mind had been running on the merits of a new book, of rare excellency, which he had just happened to fall in with at one of the city bookstores; and as they had pleased to make allusion to the literary character of the Bible, perhaps it might interest them to compare with that old volume the merits of his new prize. If so, he would read them a short section. All were eager to have the Doctor read a portion of his rare book. In a very grave and sincere manner, he took an old book from his coat pocket, and with propriety of utterance read to them a poem.

The poem had its effect. The admiring listeners pronounced it the best they had ever heard or read. "That is pretty," said one. "That is sublimity," said another. "It has not its superior in the world," was the unanimous opinion. They all wished to know the name of the new work, and whether that was a specimen of its contents.

"Certainly, gentlemen," said the Doctor, smiling at his triumph, "my book is full of such passages.—It is no other than your good-for-nothing Bible; and I have read you the prayer of the prophet Habbakkuk."

Let every reader learn wisdom from this incident, and learn to appreciate the unequalled sublimities of the Bible.—Ladies' Repository.

The Man of Honor.

The man of true honor ever forgets an insult; or, if remembered, it is only with the kindness of a superior mind looking above the shafts of envy. True honor gains nothing by feeding the spirit of contention; for if once that evil is harbored, it is sustained by the sacrifice of every just and manly principle. The gentle rivulet becomes a torrent when the elements contend; but when the tempest is past, the waters contract to their former limits, flowing with more freshness and adding new beauty to their progress. So the elevated mind, if ever disturbed by the malice of ignorance and envy, like that little stream, soon regains its wonted gentleness and feels the happier for the test. True honor acknowledges itself in rags as well as in costly raiment—it needs no covering—most beautiful when undisguised. It exalts itself in all conditions, for it is of its own creating. The world would be its arbiter, and false distinctions of society would restrict it to high station, but the world would have been made to worship it when clothed in the garb of the lowly. Detraction has no blemish for it—it abides all worldly tears.

Selected for the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—I select and send the following beautiful lines, which I very much desire to see in the Crisis. They may prove interesting to some tried, trusting heart. They exhibit, in my estimation, the true christian position, and a state of grace which is the true perfection of faith's attainments.

Yours, praying Thy kingdom come,
P. Campbell.

New Britain, Ct.

"I Hold Still."

Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And in his hottest fire hold still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so
Into his own fair shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er and heats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow:
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And, in his mighty hand, hold still.

Why should I murmur? for the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will, to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me:
So I say trusting, As God will!
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles for my profit purely
Affliction's glowing, fiery brand,
And all his heaviest blows are surely
Inflicted by a Master-hand:
So I say praying, As God will!
And hope in him, and suffer still.

From the German of Julius Sturm.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Water Cure.

Invalids who are seeking rest, kind treatment, good company, air, food and exercise, will have to go far before they find a pleasanter place, take it all in all, than "Our Home" at Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y. I have shared the pleasures of the home for a few brief days—would that they had been longer—and so speak from experience.

Our Home is not a Cold Water Cure, where poor mortals sit in ice water, their teeth chattering like so many frighted spectres, nor is it a hot water cure, where you are steamed and scalded and parboiled; but it is a place where men are fed on good wholesome vegetable food, and then by exercise and the use of good soft water are relieved of some of the "evil diseases" that are induced by dirt, laziness, hog-eating, and worse than all, by taking huge doses of vile compound from murdering M. D.'s, who give to cure a sick man poison enough to kill two well ones.

I saw persons there from whose bodies the hidden poison and scrofula had been brought out till they were covered for several square feet with an eruptive skin, (and to tell the truth, a wet bandage has done about the same thing for me in the last month) and in one case I saw a bandage which had been worn three weeks, eaten in large holes through several thicknesses of cloth by poisons which had thus been drawn out of the wearer, which he had taken of one of the leading Boston M. D.'s.

The proprietors of the establishment, F. Wilson Hurd & Co., and the corps of physicians, with Dr. J. C. Jackson and Miss H. N. Austin, M. D., at their head, do all they can to make the stay of patients profitable and agreeable. Persons seeking health will do well to send to them for a circular, and consider the propriety of visiting "Our Home." Terms for examination, $5. Board and treatment from $7 to $10 per week. Thanks to the proprietors of the "Home" for their kindness to a Pilgrim there.

H. L. B.

Providence, R. I., June 13, '59.

[From reports, we have formed a very high opinion of "Our Home" at Dansville.—Ed.]

Cultivation of the Voice.

It has already been observed that the relative strength or weakness of the voice depends partly on the capacity of the lungs, and the general condition of the vocal apparatus, and partly on the number of muscles thrown into action. Experience has also proved that the respiratory organs and the vocal muscles are not only as susceptible of a high degree of development as other portions of our frame, but even to a higher degree. The cultivation of the voice is, however, required on grounds altogether irrespective of the art of singing or public speaking. It is indirectly, perhaps, the most important branch of physical education; for the amount of vital power depends chiefly on the health and vigor of the respiratory process, the regulation of which must be the first step in the cultivation of the voice.

Parents are not generally aware how much might be effected by a proper mode of physical training in those constitutions where the chest is narrow, indicating a predisposition to pulmonary disease. In all such cases, regularly repeated, deep inspirations are of paramount value. On account of the elasticity of all the parts concerned, the expansion of the chest is in early childhood easily effected; the capacity of the lungs is increased, and the tendency to disease is counteracted.

There should be a sufficient pause between the acts of inspiration and expiration. In order that children should perform these chest exercises slowly, regularly, and effectually, they require to be carefully watched, guided, and encouraged; for they soon get tired of them when left to themselves. Even adults will derive considerable benefit if, immediately after rising, they regularly, for some time, take deep inspirations, in order that the whole lungs may be properly inflated; and then retain the breath as long as possible. The body must be in an erect position, and the shoulders thrown back. It may also be observed that these exercises are best performed in the open air, or, at least, in a well-ventilated room, the windows being open for the time.—The Philosophy of Voice and Speech.

Summer Sours.

Physiological research has fully established the fact that acids promote the separation of the bile from the blood, which is then passed from the system, thus preventing fevers, the prevailing diseases of summer. All fevers are "billious," that is, the bile is in the blood. Whatever is antagonistic of fever, is cooling. It is a common saying that fruits are "cooling," and also berries of every description; it is because the acidity which they contain aids in separating the bile from the blood, that is, aids in purifying the blood. Hence the great yearning for greens and lettuce, and salads in the early spring, these being eaten with vinegar; hence also the taste for something sour, for lemonades, on an attack of fever.

But this being the case, it is easy to see, that we nullify the good effects of fruits and berries, in proportion as we eat them with sugar, or even sweet milk, or cream. If we eat them in their natural state, fresh, ripe, perfect, it is almost impossible to eat too many, to eat enough to hurt us, especially if we eat them alone, not taking any liquid with them whatever. Hence also is buttermilk or even common sour milk promotive of health in summer time. Sweet milk tends to billiousness in sedentary people, sour milk is antagonistic. The Greeks and Turks are passionately fond of sour milk. The shepherds use rennet, and the milk dealers alum to make it sour the sooner. Buttermilk acts like watermelons on the system.—Hall.

Noises in a Sick Room.

It is extraordinary how many persons, unused to the sick room, mistake certain noises for quiet. When such people have to walk across the room, they do so with a balancing sort of movement, that makes every plank creak uneasily. Their very dress rattles in a way that would make the fortune of a rattle-snake. If anything has to be said, it is spoken in a loud whirring whisper, that conceals the words but makes the most irritating of noises. Now the silence of a sick room must not be labored, it must be natural. Shoes that do not creak must be worn, and in walking, the foot must be put down carefully, of course, but with a firm step, that come, gently, yet steadily on the floor. This will not make the creaking sound caused by the toe-pointed, gingerly mode of movement so much adopted by those whose experience of sick rooms is small. The dress must be made of some noiseless material, wool or cotton: silk must be avoided, for it squeaks with every movement. In speaking, the pitch of the voice must be slightly raised, and the words, instead of being hissed, as in whispering, should be clipped short, and cut distinctly. By this means the person spoken to can hear what is said, while the least possible sound accompanies the word.—Barwell's Cure of the Sick.

An Important Fact.

Exercise for the body, occupation for the mind—these are the grand constituents of health and happiness; the cardinal points upon which everything turns. Motion seems to be a great preserving principle of nature, to which even inanimate things are subject; for the winds, waves, the earth itself are restless, and the waving of trees, shrubs, and flowers, is known to be an essential part of their economy. A fixed rule of taking several hours' exercise every day, if possible, in the open air, if not, under cover, will be almost certain to secure one exemption from disease, as well as from the attack of low spirits, or ennui, that monster who is ever waylaying the rich and indolent.

"Throw but a stone, the giant dies."

Low spirits cannot exist in the atmosphere of bodily and mental activity.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Bre., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write [illegible].

All who wish to receive the Crisis [illegible], in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

Canada Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to [illegible] $2.25 will pay the [illegible] numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 200. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 10.

The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING

AT

No. 187 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER IV.

THE HISTORICAL ARGUMENT.

In the words and by the work of Christ "Life and Immortality were brought to light." But that light, either for its original obscurity, or by its passage through the clouds and shadows of eighteen centuries, has come to have three widely different interpretations, of which one only can be true. How shall we select this and correct the errors of the remaining two?

Besides the examination of the Scriptures themselves, another method is perfectly legitimate. We may also inquire, What light was needed when Christ came? What light seemed to be immediately contributed by his coming? or, How did the early Christians understand his words? and again, What effect had philosophy when afterwards added to the gospel? In reply to these questions I propose to show,

1. That Christ came at a time of general despondency and despair respecting all future life.

2. That the early Christians understood his words as assuring immortal life to be received by faith in him.

3. That the subsequently added doctrine of the soul's proper immortality was the common occasion, first of the orthodox and then of the restorationist view.

§ 1. There was deplorable need of light on the subject of immortality when Christ came.

Because man was made for immortality, there had ever been, both among Jews and Gentiles, many thoughts about it. There could not have been any welcome of the coming light, if there had been no thoughts—even anxious thoughts—on the subject. But notwithstanding the natural thinking respecting a future life, and even the strong desire for it, the opinions of men just before Christ came indicate a growing, often an utter despair. Among the Hebrews, it has been questioned whether the Scriptures taught, or were designed to teach, any thing clear on the subject. Certain it is that the Sadducees, denying all resurrection and spiritual existence, formed a most respectable party among the Jews, being sometimes represented in the Sanhedrim and in the priesthood. They to whom were intrusted the oracles of God, in which some "thought they had eternal life" (John v. 29,) were in need of light.

Much more the Gentiles. If among the Jews, by various culture and intercourse with other peoples and influence from their opinions, there had been progress in the doctrine of an after life, on the other hand there was among the Greeks and the Romans a great and manifest decline of faith. The immortality of the soul was as old as Homer. It was older. Herodotus said that the Egyptians were "the first of mankind who defended the immortality of the soul." But the Hindoos probably had it quite as old, and the Persians not much younger. Yet in the very form in which it was held by the Hindoos, and afterwards by the Pythagoreans and the Platonists, we discover the need of a revelation, and some cause of the doubts that followed. The Bhagavad Gita, which contained the essence of the Brahminical philosophy, asserted that the soul is not only immortal but eternal. This was the doctrine of Pherecydes the Assyrian, the hearing of which converted Pythagoras from a wrestler into a philosopher. I need not follow the Greek philosophy on this subject through its forms and changes. The decline of faith which I [illegible] is apparent in Socrates [illegible]. He calls the soul's immortality an [illegible] doctrine, long ago shadowed forth by the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] spiritual, undying nature of the soul, against the scepticism of his age. "Can the soul," he asks, "which goes to the presence of a good and wise God, (whither, if God will, my soul will shortly go,) can this soul of ours, when separated from the body, be immediately dispersed and destroyed, as most men assert?" Aristotle, it is now generally, conceded, neither taught nor held an after life, but the opposite. The famous argument of Cicero, who so greatly admired Plato, does not even pretend to prove the doctrine in question, as its very name imports ("De Contemnenda Morte," on the Contempt of Death.) He labors to show that death is not an evil because if it is an eternal sleep we shall not suffer during its continuance. This explains the passage in which his pupil wishes that if the birds of prey should come for his body, he might have a stick to drive them away. And all are familiar with the expression about the Phædo of Plato: "I have read it, over and over again; but, I know not why it is, while I read, I give my assent: but when I have laid the book down and begin to think on the subject myself, all that persuasion glides away." And this is said by one who "would rather err with Plato, than think the truth with those contemptible philosophers" who denied a future life. And the familiar letters of Cicero, in which he would most naturally express his real sentiments, show no hope beyond the grave. To one friend he says: "Even we who are happy should despise death, since we shall have no sense nor feeling beyond it." And Seneca, whose "morals" are thought by modern pantheists about as good as those of the Bible, writes to one bereaved: "Death is the release and end of all pain, beyond which our evils do not pass. It restores us to the same tranquillity in which we were before our birth." And in one of his poems he says:

> "Chaos and hungry Time devour us all.
> Inevitable death the body kills,
> Nor spares the soul."

Epictetus is another moralist of that age for whom some would dispense with the gospel light. "Whither do you go?" he asks. "Nowhere to your hurt; you return from whence you came,—to a friendly consociation with your kindred elements. What there was of the nature of fire in your compositon returns to the element of fire; what there was of earth, to earth; what of air, to air; and of water to water." And the older Pliny: "The vanity of man, and his insatiable longing after existence, have led him to dream of a life after death. A being full of contradictions, he is the most wretched of creatures, since the other creatures have no wants transcending the bounds of their nature. Man is full of desires and wants that reach to infinity, and can never be satisfied. His nature is a lie,—uniting the greatest poverty with the greatest pride. Among these so great evils the best thing God has bestowed on man is the power of taking his own life."

Such were the doubts and despair of men, waiting in the gloom of the shadow of death for the true life and light. And when the Life-giver came, how natural, if all mankind were the appointed subjects of immortal life, that this should appear in the ordinary speech of him who "had the words of eternal life."—How strange that he and the Apostles who heralded all through the Roman Empire what they called a Gospel, should only speak of a certain "aionian" life, and even of that ambiguous duration as if it were the prerogative of a special class, to be had by striving for it; leaving the great and long debated question of immortality in as great obscurity as it was before. Truly, if man is at all immortal, his immortality was not then at all brought to light. It was not revealed in that phrase, "the resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust;" for this was a tenet of the Pharisees, to which Paul made appeal on a certain occasion of self-defence. If this was the revelation, it came not so much from Christ as by those of whom he said, Beware! For the doubts which Christ found prevailing, there were, as I have intimated, various causes. The philosophers had tried to prove too much; not only that all souls are immortal, but that the soul is eternal. And the new revelations on the subject would have to encounter men's philosophy. How natural, if man has immortality in any form, that he who contributed the great light on the subject should have somehow recognized the essential fact; so that one thing at least should be settled.

Does the objector anticipate the varying opinions of the second century, and say that nothing was settled by Christ's revelation? I answer, one thing was settled, so as to be never since disputed as a Christian truth. And that is, Whoever shall [illegible] [illegible] accept and receive the life.

If this is a Universalist formula, I yield the argument. Whether anything else was settled on the side of universal immortality, we are next to examine.

§ 2. As the early Christians were not "orthodox," so they were not Universalists.

An orthodox writer, in a late work, says "it is to be lamented that they [the apostolical fathers] either wrote very little, or else their writings have, for the most part, perished."—(Hovey, State of the Impenitent Dead, p. 131.) I think I have elsewhere shown that there is reason for such regret as respects the orthodox argument; or that the early Christian writings do not support that view, but rather the view I offer. I will now cite a few expressions to show that they were not Universalists.

The so-called Apostolical Fathers were Barnabas, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Polycarp, and Hermas. The epistle ascribed to Barnabas is probably not genuine, though of a very early date. The writings now extant under the other names are partly genuine and partly spurious. I will quote from the former, making allusion to the latter only as indicating the sentiment of the age in which they were written.

Bunsen assigns the so-called epistle of Barnabas to the reign of Domitian, in the first century. The phrase "eternal death," not occurring in the Scriptures, is here found in the following passage: "The way of darkness is crooked and full of cursing (or, wholly accursed.) For it is the way of eternal death, with punishment; in which they that walk meet those things that destroy their own souls" (c. 20.)

The whole expression, "eternal death, with punishment," which some might take as supporting the orthodox view, seems to be otherwise explained by the following expressions in the Homilies ascribed to Clement; "They wholly perish after punishment" (Hom. 3 c. 59.) "By the greatest punishment they shall be utterly extinguished" (Hom. 7 c. 7. See also Hom. 16 c. 10.)

In the same chapter of the epistle it is said; "He that chooses the other part shall be destroyed, together with his works. For this cause there shall be both a resurrection and a retribution." Again: "They that put their trust in him shall live for ever" (eis ton aiona, c. 8.) "Who is there that would live for ever (eis ton aiona,) let him hear the voice of thy Son" (c. 9.)

The phrase eis ton aiona is rendered in the Latin in aeternum and in perpetuum, by Cotelerius. It was undoubtedly used by the early Christians to denote an eternal duration, and we shall therefore accept the common rendering, "for ever."

One epistle of Clement to the Corinthians was publicly used in many of the churches. Mosheim and Neander think it interpolated in some passages; yet Bunsen regards it as of great importance, "historically, constitutionally, and doctrinally." The author, speaking of the "condemnation to come," asks, "What world shall receive any of those who run away from Him?" (c 28.) Again: "Wherefore we being the portion of the Holy One, let us do all those things that pertain unto holiness" (c. 30.) "How blessed and wonderful, beloved, are the gifts of God! life in immortality! brightness in righteousness! truth in full assurance! faith in confidence! temperance in holiness!" (c. 35) "By him would God have us taste the knowledge of immortality" (36.)

Of the eight epistles ascribed to Ignatius, three are deemed genuine. The following expressions fairly indicate his views: "Be vigilant as God's athlete. The meed is incorruptibility, and life eternal" (Polycarp, c. 2.) "Those that corrupt families by adultery shall not inherit the kingdom of God" (Ephesians, c. 16.) "For this cause the Lord suffered the ointment to be poured upon his head, that he might breathe immortality into his church" (Ib. c. 17.) "I seek the bread of God, which is the body of Christ; and his blood, which is love, incorruptible and perpetual life" (Romans, c. 7.)

The views of Polycarp appear in the following passages of his epistle to the Philippians: "To whom [Christ] all things are made subject, both that are in heaven, and that are in the earth; whom every living creature shall worship; who shall come to be the judge of the quick and dead; whose blood God shall require of them that believe not in him. But he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also raise up us in like manner, if we do his will and walk according to his commandments, and love those things which he loved" (c. 2.) "Whom if we please in this present world (aion,) we shall also be made partakers of that which is to come; according as he has promised, us, that he will raise us from the dead; and that if we shall walk worthy of him, we shall also [illegible] [illegible] if we believe." And neither fornicators, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, shall inherit the kingdom of God; nor they who do such things as are unbecoming" (c. 5.) The Lord "grant you a lot and portion among his saints; and us with you, and to all that are under the heavens who shall believe in our Lord Jesus Christ, and in his Father who raised him from the dead" (c. 12.) This epistle was read in some of the churches as late as Jerome's time.

The "Shepherd" of Hermas has been already cited for the phrase "to live unto God." I will here add the following expressions: "They who are of this kind shall prevail against all impiety, and continue unto life eternal. Happy are they that do righteousness; they shall not perish forever" (Vision ii. 3.) "Fear God and thou shalt live; and whosoever shall fear him, and keep his commands, their life is with the Lord; [they shall live forever. Dressel;] but they who keep them not, there is no life in them" (Command vii.) "They that are subject unto evil desires shall die forever" (Command xii. 2.) "The trees which are green and righteous, shall possess the world to come. . . . . The wicked, like the trees which thou sawest dry, shall as such be found dry and without fruit in that other world. And like dry wood they shall be burned." (Similitude iv.) "They who have known the Lord, and have seen his wonderful works, if they shall live wickedly, shall be doubly punished, and shall die forever" (Similitude ix. 18.)

I might cite another document belonging to this age, a part of the so-called "Apostolical Constitutions," which Bunsen calls the "Church and the House Book," as further showing that there were as yet no traces or indications of Universalist faith. But I do not know that I need have cited a single word. I do not know that any Universalist expressions or writers are claimed before Clement of Alexandria, about A. D. 200, with one exception to be noticed presently. I find some traces of such views also in Athenagoras, who preceded Clement by a few years, and will grant him to the Universalists, though they have not claimed him.

Here, then, we come to a very critical question.

§ 3. Whence did Universalist views take their rise?

And I propose to show that not the Scriptures alone, but Platonic additions to Scriptural doctrine, were the occasion, first of Orthodoxy, and then of Universalism.

The orthodox view requires three conditions: a doctrine of indefeasible immortality; a doctrine of salvation conditioned within certain limits of time; and such fiery heat as shall fuse these together into the faith of men. They can never be first combined in calm deliberation, however coldly they may be received as a tradition.

The conditions I have named were brought together in Rome, about the year 138. The bloody hand of the imperial power was invoked to revenge the lust of a heathen husband upon a Christian wife. Her teacher in the faith of Christ is accused, and martyred. Two other persons, remonstrating against such flagrant wrong, are devoted to death.

The fierce fire of such persecution offered to combine the requisite doctrinal elements, and the materials were not wanting. Justin, surnamed "the Philosopher" and afterwards "Martyr," was a recent convert from Platonism to Christianity. Of a warm and generous nature, he was moved to address to the Emperor his first "Apology" or defence of the proscribed faith. That Apology I believe to be the oldest "orthodox" book. Justin brought with him both the name of Philosopher, and much Platonic faith. He claimed for many doctrines of philosophy and Christianity a common origin in an original revelation. The philosophers, he thought, had borrowed some things from the Hebrew prophets. And though he never speaks distinctly terms of the soul as immortal, there is very little in this book to indicate any opinion that the soul can die, but much to suggest the contrary.

On the other side, there is nothing in his book or in our history thus far, to indicate any opinion among the Christians of the final salvation of all. He regarded man as on probation during life, awaiting a judgment after the resurrection. "Plato," he says, "held that the wicked will stand before Minos and Rhadamanthus, to be punished by them. We hold the same event, but before Christ as judge; that they may be punished in their re-embodied souls, not a thousand years, as Plato said, but eternally. If any one thinks this incredible or impossible, the error is of little account so long as we are not convicted of any evil conduct" (c. 8.)

This is very thinly said, and, with a [illegible] of the paramount importance of [illegible] [illegible]. The [illegible] was a burden to Justin's own mind. Yet the opinion being once expressed, in an hour of darkness and in a book of philosophy to make it respectable, was able to hold its way in the church.

Justin, I said, does not put the soul's immortality into a formula. He uses one expression in this very book which might indicate an acquaintance with another view. "We have learned," he says, "that they only are made immortal who live piously and virtuously before God" (c. 21). Other passages will hardly allow this to be strictly taken. But as I have shown this to be the prevailing faith until his time, I may here add a very important fact confirmatory of my history.

One of the earliest questions in Christian philosophy was that respecting the nature of the soul. Is it naturally mortal, or immortal? All the Gentile philosophers who had at all asserted a future life,—excepting a few of the Stoic school,—and all the native pride of man, had said, "immortal." But the Christians said otherwise. And their almost uniform view on this question of nature is the most remarkable because it is given by those who differed most widely in the question of fact whether the soul would die. The following quotations will show their opinion.

Tatian, a disciple of Justin Martyr, says "The soul is not in its own nature immortal, O Greeks, but mortal. Yet it is able not to die. For it does die, and is dissolved with the body, if ignorant of the truth; but it rises again with the body at the end of the world, receiving death in immortality for its punishment.* Whereas the soul that receives the knowledge of God, though dissolved for a time, does not die." (Oratio and Graecos, c. 13.)

Theophilus of Antioch, who also belonged to the school of Justin, says: "Some one will ask, Was Adam by nature mortal? By no means. Immortal? Not thus, either. What then—nothing at all? I answer, neither mortal nor immortal; for if the Creator had made him from the first immortal, He would have made him a god. If mortal, then God would appear as the author of death. He made him, then, capable of becoming either; so that by keeping the command of God he might attain immortality as his reward, and become a god. But if he should turn to mortal things, and disobey God, he would be himself the author of his own death. For God made man free and with power of self-control." (Ad. Autolycum, 1. 2, c. 37.) He elsewhere calls man mesos, "intermediate." He seems to have held the orthodox view.

Lactantius, "the Christian Cicero," (about A. D. 300,) was doubtless orthodox. But he says: "There would be no difference between the just and the unjust, if every man that is born were made immortal. Immortality, therefore, is not a law of our own nature, but the wages and reward of virtue. . . . For this reason God seeks to be worshipped by man as Father, that he may attain virtue and wisdom, which alone impart immortality." (Instt. Div. l. 7, c. 5.)

* Prof. Hovey (p. 140) speaks of Tatian as teaching "the final extinction of the wicked." That the above expression gives his real view—of temporary extinction followed by eternal suffering—is believed by Morell, Ducæus, Oporinus, Tellier, Dodwell, Daniel, and Redepenning, cited by Otto in his edition. The notion of a temporary extinction was the heresy of the sect of Arabians.

For the Crisis.

Money.

Money is the Lord's. The silver and the gold are mine, saith the Lord. Be careful how you spend it. Don't waste God's wealth. Be diligent, prudent, faithful, economical and energetic, but don't get rich. Mercy! a rich man is too often like a poor beast, back-broken under bags of gold. What's the difference between a bag of gold and one of sand, if both break the back? What is the difference between poison and wealth, if both run you into disease and death? What is the difference between a big farm and a halter, if both kill you? More have been killed by wealth than by poison. They have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. O man of God, flee these things! Lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, and so lay hold on eternal life.

Be careful. The world is full of seduction. The love of money is the root of all evil. Let your conduct be without money-loving, and be content with such things as you have. Lay up treasures in heaven. Pile the glorious hoards there. No thief nor moth nor rust can find it. Then sing,

> "There is my house and portion fair,
> My treasure and my heart are there,
> And my abiding home."

H. L. H.

N. Y., June 8th, '59.

☞ If you would have a sweet and pleasant, [illegible] you must speak sweetly and pleasantly yourself. This [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] generally has the greatest idea of himself.

For the Crisis.

"The Better Land."

> The storm-clouds arising far, far o'er the sea,
> Denote our approach to the land of the free!
> Ere long we shall anchor in Eden's broad bay,
> Where reigns one eternal and unclouded day.
>
> Though sad are these tokens, we hail them with joy,
> For they speak of a land where nought will annoy;
> 'Tis the land of sweet rest, the home of the meek,
> Once promised to Abram, who for it did seek.
>
> No sickness is there, neither sorrow nor pain,
> Eternal the life its inhabitants gain,—
> Immortal their joys, and unending their bliss,
> O who would not sigh for an Eden like this?
>
> To talk of this land is our greatest delight,
> 'Tis our watchword by day, our vision by night;
> Possessing the earnest, we joy in the thought,
> Jesus hath for us this inheritance bought.
>
> Though troubles assail us, we'll press on our way,
> Endure to the end and continue to pray,
> That the kingdom may come when Jesus shall reign
> As King everlasting o'er earth's wide domain.

M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

"Let Us Pray."

> "And Satan trembles when he sees
> The weakest saint upon his knees."

PRAYER is defined—a petition, entreaty, supplication, earnest desire, etc. It is a pleasant sound in the ear of the weary man of God,—"Let us unite in prayer!"—words falling from the lips of a brother pilgrim.

Prayer is a duty that cannot be too strongly enforced. It is a privilege of which the christian is very apt to think too little. It is the natural spirit and life of piety. When Paul was converted, it was said of him, "Behold he prayeth."—Acts 9: 11. So it is with all who are "born of the Spirit;" for religion begun leads to prayer; and unless prayer is continued, religion soon becomes only a name.

Says the Rev. A. Joy, A. M., in his "Outlines of Christian Duty:" "Each person with whom we are frequently associated, contributes largely to our own formation of character; so it is with God, as an object of worship, and as a being with whom we associate frequently, in private and public communion. Our intercourse with him impresses his image on our minds, and moulds our characters into a likeness of his. It expands and corrects our views, sanctifies our feelings, holds us back from sin, and urges us to virtue."

It cannot be otherwise. Let a man have correct ideas of the Supreme Being, and often come into his presence by earnest supplication, and he will "grow in grace," 2 Pet. 3: 18, and in all things that can adorn the christian name. His character will be moulded into conformity with the Divine image, and he will fast ripen for the kingdom. And, as in the instance of Moses when he came down from the Mount, the brightness of his countenance will show with whom he has conversed. Exod. 34: 29–35; 2 Cor. 3: 7–18. Or, as it was with the early disciples, from his very appearance, men will "take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus," Acts 4: 13, and he will be an "epistle," "known and read of all men." 2 Cor. 3: 2.

Prayer is one of the plainest and most prominent sentiments of the Sacred Word. It is taught in the Old Testament, and re-enjoined in the New. Even those blessings which God has designed to give, he will give only in answer to prayer. Matt. 6: 8; Jas. 4: 2. And beyond this, he has never said unto us, "Seek ye my face in vain." Our Savior, the God Anointed, asked his Father favors by prayer; and if he prayed, should not we? And he "spake a parable unto this end, that men ought always to pray, and not faint."—Lk. 18: 1–14. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—Matt. 7: 7; Lk. 11: 9. "Let us, therefore, come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."—Heb. 4: 16.

But let us remember, that to be successful in prayer, it must be sincere, and offered in faith, Jas. 1: 5, 6, expecting to receive; and then, unless we "ask amiss," our requests will be granted.—Matt. 21: 22; John 14: 14; 15: 7, 16; Jas. 4: 3. Therefore the supplication must arise from a good heart; it must be for objects that God could consistently bless; 1 John 5: 14, 15; and it must be with corresponding conduct.—1 John 3: 22; Jas. 5: 16.

Says the Psalmist: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." So if we ask aright, and not "amiss," we may have occasion to exclaim with him; "Blessed be God, who hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me. But verily God hath heard: he hath attended to the voice of my supplication." "For thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive; plenteous in mercy unto all who call upon thee." Ps. 86: 5.

Therefore "let us pray," and "pray without ceasing."—1 Thess. 5: 17.

S. D. [illegible]

Portsmouth, N. H.

For the Crisis.

Contentment.

To be content one must be resigned to his lot, although it may not answer the ends of his ambition. We often set our mark so high that we feel it deeply when we are brought low by disappointment. Every man should have his plan of operations and endeavor to accomplish what he is able. But in our short-sightedness we are not apt to count the cost nor allow for contingences. So that our plans for the future, either for profit or for pleasure, are continually being overturned.

The things of this life are very unstable and so complicated is its machinery, a jar or break in one part of it, renders the other part useless, or disconcerts those who are dependent upon its workings for the accomplishment of their purposes. On account of sin and its consequences, it will not do for some men to be always prosperous; for then would they forget the future and dote too much on the present. For their best good, God lets them sometimes be disappointed, in order that they may learn wisdom, and lay up their treasures above, and not on the earth. For the day shall come when all these things shall be dissolved. He that sets his heart too much upon the pleasures and things of this world, is doomed to have his anticipations and his hopes frustrated. With him there is no refuge from the storm which desolates his pathway, and he goes wandering through the mazes of discontent. But he whose trust is in God, can stand the storm which may blast all his earthly hopes, as "in heaven he has a more enduring substance." He has just begun to live who has learnt not to be disappointed. It is the disappointed heart that is always grumbling. Nothing with him goes right, for his will has not yet been sanctified.

To be content, then, is to be sanctified, to be consecrated, and to be resigned to the will of God. If our wills work in unison with his, there will always be peace, happiness, contentment.

It has been well said that "humility is the mother of contentment;" but humility is the daughter of godliness, and "godliness with contentment is great gain." Pride, the opposite of humility, is ever breeding discontent; for not only is it not satisfied with its own exaltation, but is continually making others dissatisfied. Humility lets one see himself as he is, while pride puts him all out of proportion, so that he imagines he is what he is not, and when the truth is revealed to his consciousness, then comes his shame.

A contented heart is ready to take things as they are, and make the best of them. They may not be what he may desire, but he is thankful for a few favors. He feels himself unworthy of these, and consequently more happy than he who expects more than he ought. Contentment blesses God for what we have, and trusts him for what we need. Our supposed wants are multiform, but humility prevents our asking for any but what our Heavenly Father sees we need and is pleased to grant. So completely does it bring our carnal appetites into subjection, that we murmur not at little disappointments. Our all is committed to his keeping, to be disposed of according to his infinite wisdom. Obeying his revealed will, we are resigned to his providential will, and in all of the concerns of life we look to him for guidance. We seldom know what is for our best good. God knows. His Spirit and providence is a sure guide. If followed, they will lead to joys here and blessedness hereafter.

It is best to make all our plans in this life conditional, so if we fail we may have the courage to try again, in some other manner or in some other sphere. Let us bring our minds into subjection, and then we shall not be troubled about our outward condition. Make the best of the present and prepare for the future. If you are not content with present blessings, you will never be in a condition to enjoy those in the future. God has shown his abundant goodness to us now, and he who is so blind as not to see it, will fail to appreciate the gift of righteousness, and lose eternal life, if not soon cured of his blindness.

It is sin which breeds discontent; to it may be traced all our present ills. All things were made for our best good, but it is their perversion which [illegible] evil upon us. The fault is in ourselves, not in God, nor the things which he has made, for all things naturally are conducive to our comfort. Even those things which afflict us are found to be true blessings when we come to consider [illegible] [illegible] "Jesus Christ."

CHARLES H. P[illegible]

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, JULY 6, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 8.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

We see by this striking and literal accomplishment of these prophecies of Babylon's overthrow, how easy it is for God to accomplish his purposes, when the time therefor fully arrives. Utterly futile would have been all the attempts of man its overthrow the mighty city before God's time had fully come; even Cyrus, who had been called by name as the chosen agency for the accomplishment of this work, more than a century before he was born, vainly sought for two years to take the city; the kingdom was numbered by God; and not until that number was complete, could it pass into the hands of the Medo-Persian king and be "finished." Time, as well as events, is marked, and exactly fulfilled by that All-wise Being who sees the end from the beginning. To all events, there is "time" and "judgment;" and the execution of the "judgment" perfectly accords with the "time" appointed. Israel could not go out of Egypt until the full term of their predicted bondage was complete; and then, that "self-same night," they left their oppressors, and started for the land of Canaan. Seventy years had been designated for the period of Israel's captivity in Babylon; and not until the last day had come of that appointed time, could the yoke of the king of Babylon be broken from off the neck of the Jewish captive, who hung his harp silently and mournfully upon the willows, and wept as he remembered his beloved Zion.

And thus exact will be the accomplishment of these events which mark the overthrow of all earthly kingdoms, and governments, and the time when this work is to be performed: for not more accurately has God marked the events connected with ancient Babylon, nor more definitely appointed the time for her fall, than he has those events associated with the end of the world, and the time when it would be accomplished; and those who mark with interest the exact fulfillment of the jots and tittles of prophecy in relation to Babylon, which are in the past, ought to regard with still greater interest those predictions which are receiving their accomplishment in this present time, and those which are on the eve of being accomplished. We ought the more especially to regard them, for connected with these predictions are events of a most startling character, involving not the destiny of one kingdom, one city, one nation; but the destiny of all the kingdoms of earth—the overthrow of all the cities of the world, and the dashing in pieces of all the corrupt nations which inhabit the globe!

It will not be left for historians who follow after, to record with minute exactness the fulfillment of those predictions which are about to be accomplished. The "Omega" will come, and with that same all-powerful word with which as the "Alpha" he spake, and the world was created, will he again utter his voice, and "the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and it shall be removed like a cottage," and all who dwell upon the face of the whole earth shall, like Babylon of old, be ensnared and taken, and none of them shall escape. But, as it was when Cyrus was about to utterly destroy all who were found in the streets of the city, the command was given for those who desired to escape the impending destruction to remain in their dwellings, so will the King of kings, ere he engages in the mortal strife, issue the proclamation, "Come, my people, enter into thy chambers, and hide thee as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast!" And all who are thus "hid in the day of the Lord's anger," will obtain eternal life. But we have wandered far away from our subject in this personal application.

The predictions relative to the successful siege of Babylon were most remarkably fulfilled, but many ages were to pass away before all the utter desolations pronounced upon that city would be accomplished. Cyrus did not destroy its beauty, nor diminish its greatness; but, on the contrary, sought to perpetuate its excellency and magnificence.

After a time the Babylonian's rebelled against Darius the Mede, and bade defiance to the whole Persian empire. Fearing lest famine might compel them to submit, we are informed by historians that they formed the cruel purpose to put to death every woman in the city, except the mothers, and the best beloved in every family; these were reserved to bake their bread. All the rest were strangled. What says the prophet? "These two things shall come upon thee in one day, the loss of children and widowhood. They shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thy enchantments." So general was [illegible] says the historian, that [illegible] were afterward taken [illegible] had been slain.

[illegible]

War Clouds.

The war-clouds of Europe look more and more threatening. All Italy seems to be arousing to sustain the cause of the Allies, and oppose the Austrians, notwithstanding the blessings of the Pope to the contrary. Most hearty demonstrations in favor of the liberation of Italy have been given at Florence, Bologna, Ravenna, Acona, Naples, and even in Rome. The Pope is like a tory in the midst of a republican jubilee. The enthusiasm of the Italians is unbounded. They seem like prisoners loosed from long and oppressive bondage. The tide of liberty bids fair to deluge the Vatican itself and wash away the last vestige of the Pope's temporal power. No barriers he can raise, appear to have any effect towards checking the sweeping, fiery deluge. Rome may soon be as Sodom.

Affairs in Northern Europe appear more threatening. Prussia is prancing like a war horse just before an engagement, and is scarcely restrained from the onset, knowing as she does, that if she aids Austria, she may expect her neighbor Russia will unite with France. The German States are in a similar condition, and seem unwilling to be idle spectators, while their own territory is in danger, if continued success attends the French army associated with the Italians.

It is rumored in Paris that Buonaparte intends to return to France soon, and organize the "Army of the Rhine." This shows he has no expectation of a speedy close of the war. It is said he had an interview at Alessandria with Garibaldi, the great republican leader, who will make no compromise with Napoleon, but is determined Italy shall be free in the fullest sense. As the beasts of the forest tremble when the huge lion roars, so do the enemies of freedom dread the approach of Garibaldi. A close observer, writing from Paris, says:—"Louis Napoleon dreads like death the interference of Garibaldi. It is thought that this is one reason why he talks of returning to France, to organize the "Army of the Rhine," allowing Victor Emanuel and the Italian chief to arrange as they think best. We may expect new developments soon.

"Great Moment."

Charles Sumner is at Paris. After looking over the state of the nations and the war aspects, he says:—"This is a great moment in history—nothing like it since 1815." Observing politicians are satisfied that the present war will produce most important results, especially to the Roman Catholic power. It is pretty well understood that Napoleon intends, at least, to take away the civil power of the Pope.

It may not be uninteresting to our readers to know that the present Emperor of France was a member of the Carbonari, a secret society formed to liberate Italy and propagate the principles of liberty. They have been the prime movers in every effort made to overthrow despotism in Italy during the present century. In 1820 they numbered 642,000 members, and about four hundred lodges. It is said that Buonaparte and his brother joined the Carbonari in 1830. The present Pope was also a member. The members are called "Good Cousins." They were instrumental in expelling the first Napolean from the Italian Peninsula.

The following is the first oath taken:

"I, A. B., promise and swear upon the general statues of the order and upon this steel, the avenging instrument of the perjured, scrupulously to keep the secrets of Carbonarism; and neither to write, engrave nor paint, anything concerning it, without having obtained a written permission. I swear to help my good cousins in case of need, as much as in me lies, and not to attempt anything against the honor of their families. I consent and wish, if I perjure myself, that my body may be cut in pieces, then burnt, and my ashes scattered to the wind, in order that my name may be held up to the execration of the Good Cousins throughout the earth. So help me God."

It will be seen that the career of the present Buonaparte has not been in harmony with the republican principles of this society, for he has been sustaining the Pope and despotism; hence the Carbonari have endeavored to take his life. Orsini, who was beheaded in France in 1858 for an attempt to assassinate Napoleon, was one of the Carbonari, from one of the noblest families in Italy. In this act, he was only keeping his oath. It is said Buonaparte had a private interview with Orsini after his condemnation, before his execution, during which, he stated to Napoleon that he would certainly be assassinated for his perjured oaths to the Carbonari. It is also stated that he assured Orsini that he would at once commence the work of liberating Italy if they would spare him, and entreated the condemned conspirator to inform his brother in Italy of his resolution. This may account for the fact that no further attempts have been made upon his life. There is no hope for Napoleon only in keeping his oath to this secret society, and doing all he can to make Italy free. If he swerves from this purpose, death is his portion. While all wonder at his movements and success, thousands would glory in his death, should he betray Italy and leave her in the hands of the Pope. The Carbonari, and the masses in Italy, will stand by him till they have shed their last drop of blood, if he will only prove true to them, and sever the Pope forever from all connection with civil power, and liberate them from ecclesiastical thralldom, worse than Egyptian bondage. "Mene, mene, tekel" is emblazoned upon the very front of Papacy, in characters so plain, that all may see that her dying struggle is at hand, and the King of kings about to take the throne of empires, and rule in peace. "Come and reign."

Religious Aspect of the War.

As important as may be the political and financial aspects of the European war, the religious is still more interesting from the fact that the entire papal system, or power of the Pope, is involved. If the Italian States are freed from the Austrian and papal yoke of bondage, then where is the assumed temporal power of the Pope? Gone! ended forever! Since 1815 he has exercised civil power only over those states which are now determined to wear the galling yoke no longer; and when rebellion arises in his own family, and his homestead is taken away, what is there left?—Destruction and perdition. A writer on Catholic interests says:—

Catholic interests find obstacles in tory resistance, but they are elastic in their character, and can be made to yield under a proper degree of pressure. Not so the danger with which the Papal system is threatened at the present moment. This comes from the bosom of the church itself, and is daily assuming more formidable proportions.

This looks like beginning to hate the harlot. The time seems at hand for her to drink "her double" draught of "sorrow;" and for "the smoke of her burning" to darken the faithful sun that has so long illumined that religious cess-pool of "abominations," and slaughter house of the church of God. The Lord has borne long with her corruptions, while she has polluted with "her fornication" one of the fairest portions of the earth, situated beneath the far-famed, beautiful Italian skies, that have so often reverberated with the groans of God's tortured children, who are about to be raised to honor, glory, and immortality, and take "the kingdom under the whole heaven."

"Come and reign; come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And, O, it fills my heart with joy,
To know we're almost home."

Armageddon.

It will be recollected that we remarked, a few weeks since, that Dr. Samuel H Cox, Leroy, N. Y., is publishing a series of articles in the Amer. Presbyterian, showing that the present war would probably result in the battle of "ARMAGEDDON." Some extracts from his writings may be interesting to our readers. He says:—

"War is raging; and like a mighty whirlpool in mid ocean, it threatens, in the sweep of its extending circles, to ingorge all those apostate monarchies that have agreed and given their kingdoms to the Beast."

In speaking of the meaning of ARMAGEDDON, he says:

"Arma, harma, hor, is supposed to refer to an eminence or mountain; and joined with megiddo, as Hor-megiddo, to import an elevated or conspicuous place, as it were, a great mountain, made eminent by the sacrificial destruction there, of all the hosts combined, directly or indirectly, to oppose the gospel and uphold popery."

"I am sure its locale is occidental, not oriental; European, not Asian."

"'The Kings of the East' are historically Darius and Cyrus; prophetically and allegorically, they are all those collectively—they will be personally produced in their time, who act against Rome and take it; to the subversion of its popery, its tyranny, and its manifold abomination. Darius and Cyrus were from the East, in respect to literal Babylon which they captured; as from Media and Persia, which were situated, generally, to the East, from Chaldea and Babylon."

"Now, in respect to Armageddon, the historical name is used for a war in Europe, not in Palestine; because they are to resemble each other, the ancient illustrating the modern, that of history this of prophecy. On this idea of resemblance, real or imaginary, is founded all tropical language, metaphor, allegory, simile, apologue, and every other. Rome, in all its various growths, changes, and developments, much resembles that ancient metropolis; which had in its glory no peer since the flood; as since the destruction of Babylon, Rome has been its modern equivalent; unsurpassed, nay, unequalled, from the beginning till the present time, in its four great successive forms, as regal, consular, imperial, papal; more than twenty-six hundred years ir all."

"How then did Cyrus accomplish the capture of that great city and empire? Answer—by drying the bed of Euphrates; making their resource to become their ruin!"

"There is a great resemblance here to modern MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH, 17:5. What then is the Euphrates of this Babylon? that is, what the grand and special and trusted resource of Rome, which must fail her, before her capture and destruction? If we all knew, as some do, it would be most manifest, at once lucid and splendid. History shows as well as prophecy; both combine, and are mutually, and at once, supported and illustrated. Her great and trusted resource, her Euphrates, we surely know.

In chapter 17: 12—16, we see the river that nourishes Babylon the Great. It is [illegible] the European monarchies, the Holy Alliance, to support the religion of the devil, POPERY."

"The very powers of her confidence and support will become her accusers, her enemies, her vengeful destroyers. So it is written; 'And the ten horns which thou sawest on the Beast, these [illegible] shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire.' This is plain and must be soon fulfilled. Nor is there any ambiguity about it. No wonder Rome and Pusey dislike the book of Revelation, the greatest document of PROTESTANTISM that ever was written! See the next verse—'For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will;' a bad translation! To do his will is the last thing they can do or intend! 1 John 2: 17. I render it thus; 'for God hath given it to their hearts to execute his policy, and that a united policy, 13, even to give their kingdom to the Beast, until the written words of God shall be accomplished.' If we ask who is she—who is Rome? The next verse determines it to a demonstration—more INFALLIBLE than anything the sorceress of nations ever assumed to be, or think, or say:—'And the woman, which thou sawest, is that great city, which has dominion over the monarchs of the earth;' as I render it. 17: 12—18. Compare 13 and 17. God's holy providence, knowing their policy, says, 'Well, I have a policy too; since you only refuse and transgress my will, I will so order it, as to secure my ends of judgment by your agency of sin.'"

"Think of the identity, the blazing truth of prophecy! It would require the spectacles of a Jesuit to dim or pervert the evidence of who is meant by that great city, so dominant in the time of John, who wrote so graphically of Rome."

In speaking of the "time of the great battle," he says:—"In all the symmetries of prophetic time, this scene of ARMAGEDDON must be near. Whether the war now initiated in Europe, is THE WAR, or only that which is preliminary to it, the event will show. I would shun the temerity of one word presumptuous, or beyond evidence. God sees it all and reigns.

God's providence is in it all. He uses these small potatoes of royalty there, with cocked hats and proud stars, as completely as he used 'the stars in their courses,' when he overthrew the troops of Sisera. Happy, who knows God and trusts in Him! He reigns forever." . . . . .

"The sixth vial refers to the exhaustion of the resources of the papacy, previous to the invasion and destruction of its power. We pause not here to explain its symbolism. This vial is now running not only, but it is nearly ended, approaching its finish, before the seventh begins. This sixth vial is to conclude with that great catastrophe of the Mount of Destruction, the battle of Armageddon.

That battle is to be sprung suddenly on the nations. It is so intimated for our warning. Men will not generally expect it, when—suddenly, its advent occurs unheralded. Hence is it said, importing that not all will be surprised; some will be expecting it; 'Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.' . . . .

"The symmetry of prophetic announcement must require, that this terrific yet glorious war is near—cannot be far off. When therefore we see two imperial romanistic powers, and the papal HEAD himself, about to be complicated in an internecine war; this in the locality, the proper 'place,' it looks like the thing itself! that is, one of the initial skirmishings of the fatal battle. The scale of things, which the Author of Prophecy adopts for his own providence in this great affair, is itself also great. At least it is not ours. We are apt to give our little scale in that of his magnificence, and they are not commensurate. Ours is small and short-sighted. Still, there is reason for 'watching,' if there is hope for the 'blessing.' Papacy is at a discount. The bids for it, in the world's auction, are faint, few, fallacious; and destiny will soon 'knock it off,' to the joy of the universe. Satan is then the purchaser. It is all his own. If the signs of the times can be read at all, are they not portentious? Can Europe, and her Potentates, and her 'balance of power,' remain long where they are? I think not. More hereafter."

Catholics and the War.

The following extracts from "The Catholic" a Roman Catholic paper, published at Pittsburgh, show the feelings of the Romanists on the war. It refers to the opinion of Louis Veuillot, the Editor of the Univers, a leading Catholic paper in France, and says:—

"One of the best ways of judging of the real state of affairs in the present contest in Europe, is to consider the opinions of those whose position as leaders enables them to see, perhaps more clearly than others, the interests which the cause they have espoused has at stake. For this reason we attach more than usual importance to an article on the war by Louis Veuillot, one of the most influential leaders of French Catholic sentiment. Not indeed that we suppose the able editor of the Univers to have the interests of the Catholic cause so much under his control, as to be able to decide by his mere fiat the course all Catholics are to follow; but we believe him to be a man of more than ordinary sagacity, who, from his position, and from the fact of his possessing the confidence of the greater part of his co-religionists in France, is able to form a pretty accurate idea of the influence present complications may have on Catholic interests. Especially when we consider that he has been and is an upholder of the Second Empire, his disapproval of its present foreign policy must be the result of a deep conviction produced by very cogent reasons.

In answer to some of the Government papers that accused the Univers of want of patriotism, Louis Veuillot makes a public declaration of his principles in regard to the war. He declares that he is not in favor of the present contest.

'The Church,' he continues to say, 'prays God to preserve peace between Christian, and especially Catholic nations. Now this war breaks out between two great Catholic nations, it is laying waste a Catholic soil, and threatens to reach even the Vatican. He knows only two enemies of France, [illegible] sees [illegible] with one of the most terrible catastrophes it has ever undergone. She aspires to the Empire of the world, both at Constantinople and at Rome. The duty of France is to be the 'heart and the arm' of Latin civilization, the protecting shield of Rome, the hand that assists and raises up all Catholic nations, pushing them on to the conquest of the world, not to destroy it, but to spread the true liberty; and the true light which comes from the cross of Christ.

England and Russia keep the world shut to the Gospel. The ships of other nations cannot make their voyages without the permission of England. When England will no longer be the one who gives the permission, Russia will take her place. By their preponderance in the East, England and Russia reduce the States of Europe to the condition of menaced provinces. The hope that France would have diminished this preponderance and freed Europe, is destroyed by the present war."

The War.

The war storm still increases and becomes daily more complex in its nature. England, Russia, Prussia and the German States are preparing for the terrible conflict as fast as possible. We apprehend that all their efforts to remain neutral will not keep them from the awful whirlpool of bloody carnage, which they are now fast approaching. The coming scenes in the war drama, viewed prospectively, look frightful indeed; yet, when anticipated in its most thrilling and awful imagery, and compared with the terrors of the great day of the Lord, now about to burst upon us in all its grandeur, it is no more than a faint scuffle between two school boys compared to the battle of Borodino or Waterloo. The time is evidently at hand when all the wicked nations now preparing to slaughter their fellow beings, will be dashed "in pieces like a potter's vessel." Revolution seems coming in heaps. People stand aghast at the prospect, and are so distressed and perplexed, they know not what to do. A writer on the war says:—"The present condition of Europen affairs is that of the greatest perplexity and uncertainty. . . Politically, as well as commercially, this state of things is the most annoying and anxious that can well be conceived. The realities of a general war could hardly create more bewilderment than does this waiting upon events to which there exists no clue."

Another correspondent says:—"Embarrassments thicken absolutely so close on the Italian question, that nothing short of an Austerlitz or a Marengo will dissipate them."

Russian troops are concentrating towards the Danube and in Sebastopol. Kossuth has gone to the seat of war, to co-operate with Napoleon and his allies.

Another writer, when speaking of the sad financial state of most of the powers of Europe, says:—

"France is prosperous; at Paris is a strong and united administration; the Empress and her child concentrate in themselves the loyalty and enthusiasm of the people; the army at home is well provided, and the one in Italy merely exercising. In fact, the most powerful military nation of Europe is creating an advance guard and a great revolutionary army in Italy, which will soon be increased by recruits from Hungary and other places, and this revolutionary army will then make the grand tour of the Continent before all is over. Strictly speaking, the French army may not cross into Austria. Strictly speaking, France may not go beyond her pledged word to Europe. But again and again recurs the question, who can stay the storm of popular revolution? How beats the heart of Poland, as each wind bears on its wings the sound of arms in Italy? How the blood of Hungary flows hot and fast; how the women who were lashed in the market places by Austrian soldiery now turn their faces to husbands and brothers and hope for revenge. How the ten millions of christians in European Turkey who have worshiped God in hiding places, and erected the cross as the sacred emblem of their faith in the caves of mountains, now dream of temples in the open air and church spires gleaming in the sun. How modern Greece chants the songs of her ancient glory, and which, finding an echo in the Ionian Isles, swells the chorus of freedom which now comes up from the lips of thirty millions of people. Napoleon can no more stay this storm, than could Louis Philippe the destiny of the Buonaparte family."

The Brussels correspondent, in speaking of Prussia, says:—

"I regret to say the Austrian policy has at last triumphed over the prudent neutrality of Prussia. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times was right. We shall shortly see near 400,000 men on the banks of the Rhine, and a conflict which will convulse all Northern Europe. But I must still adhere to the opinion that it is not Prussia who is to blame. She goes into the war against her protest, against her judgment, and against her interest."

The world seems surrounded at present by a revolutionary spirit, which, like the atmosphere, is inhaled by all mankind. It appears in church as well as state. Division, discord, and war, seem to be the order of the day. Aye, Paul's "perilous times" have come, which were to characterize the "last days." "Blessed is he that watcheth."

The following describes the state of Utah:

"Great excitement exists in this city, and a collision is anticipated. The mormons have been drilling for weeks and have got bodies of armed men out in various directions through the country; the mountain heights are prepared with signal fires, to telegraph at any moment. The governor, yesterday, issued a proclamation for them to disperse, and in case they should not do it, the troops will [illegible] the only news in fact it is the all-absorbing topic."

Texas is also threatened with trouble from the Indians. They have caught some of the war spirit. Accounts state,—

"That the excitement on the northern frontier, about the anticipated conflict between the armed settlers, and the United States troops and the reserve Indians, was intense. Judge Bradford had declined holding court at Belknap and Jacksboro', in consequence of this state of affairs. The women and children of the settlers were fast leaving the country, whilst the settlers were congregating, arms in hand, with the determined purpose of driving the reserve Indians out of the state. The whole frontier, it is thought, will soon be in arms and united for this purpose."

From South America we hear echoes of war and revolution. A writer from Valparaiso says:—

"Unfortunate Chile is still convulsed with all the horrors of civil war. The spirit of opposition to the present government seems inextinguishable, and although death, exile and the dungeon have thinned the ranks of the opposition, there are indomitable spirits among them that are pressing onward, resolved to win either a hero's laurel or a felon's grave."

The following shows the state of the moral atmosphere and the condition of justice in our land:—

"The criminal who has money or friends stands very little chance of punishment, for he can stave off the execution of the law to an indefinite period, until, in the excitement of some new tale of horror, his case is forgotten, and he glides quietly out of the hands of justice into his old haunts and practices. To such a pass has this state of things come now that the administration of criminal law has become a mockery, and has ceased to be any longer a terror to evil doers."

The news from Turkey is indicative of revolution at hand.

A Constantinople letter asserts positively that a general insurrectionary movement is being organized throughout all the slave provinces in the Turkish Empire. It is supposed to be favored by foreign influence. The Turkish government is doing all in its power to prevent the danger.

A correspondent from St. Petersburg writes:—

"The warlike preparations announced in my last despatch have now actually commenced, and are being pushed forward with the utmost diligence. . . .

The reserves are called in, all officers who had received leave of absence have been ordered to return to their regiments, the generals of divisions and their assistants (the divisions of infantry and cavalry are no longer divided into brigades) have been summoned to their posts, and the greatest activity begins in all our military departments, especially in the commissariat.

No little sensation has been excited here by rumors of a secret alliance having been concluded between Austria and the Porte, in which the former engages to oppose any rising of the Christian population of Turkey, and to assist the Sultan to suppress it, if necessary, by force of arms. This would at once call Russia into the field, as she could never tolerate such an intervention, which would moreover be a direct violation of the treaty of Paris, according to which no action is to be taken in the affairs of the Ottoman."

Another writer says:—

"There is no doubt that all Germany will soon be in arms against France, the Germans being determined never to again fail, as they once did, in detail, but will all conquer to die with arms in their hands. The war will be a long one, and the most terrible this century has known, and will be general in Europe, ending in the Russians placing the cross on Greek churches of Constantinople.

To reinstate those crosses, to drive the Islamites out of Europe, has been the prayer of Christians throughout the world for many centuries, and in this, to offer up these prayers, we, the citizens of the United States, were taught by our parents, the English people. When those prayers were about to be granted by heaven; when the Russians, as the agents thus delegated, were to redeem this sacred trust, under Nicholas the great of Russia; when he was about to rescue the religion of his fathers and the churches of its origin in Constantinople from the pollution, the Christian nations, who have for ages prayed for its accomplishment, made a deadly war, slaughtering more than three hundred thousand Christians, and arrested the conquest of the Russian arms.

But it has been only like damming the waters of Niagara. The marshalled hosts are on their march, and the Russians will drive the Turks, with all their seraglios, out of Europe, and the cross will again rest on the churches of Constantinople where the crescent now is. All the money lent by England, and all the Christian blood shed, will not save the Turks; they with the Mormons, who alike degrade noble woman, must and will be driven beyond the limits of Christian rulers and civilization."

Careful observers say; "What a terrible condition of things the present war is bringing about. . . . Some of the great financial houses are sure to be involved in the general wreck. That of the Rothschild's appears to be one of these doomed establishments." The Rothschilds are said to "hold the purse strings of the world." It is thought the death of the King of Naples will cause a revolution in the kingdom of the two Sicilies.

The news from Persia shows that this eastern kingdom is waking up. A letter from Teheran says:—

"The complications of European politics have begun to attract particular attention on the part of the Emperor Nasr Eddin. The usual torpidity of the Persian government seems to have disappeared under present circumstances, and there is some rumor of an approaching difference between Persia and Turkey, for which the ostensible cause would be the delimitation of the frontiers. Considerable armaments are now in progress, and would certainly be much more extensive if the Shah was not apprehensive of offending England and Russia. [illegible] His Majesty has determined to pass the summer season at the camp of Sultanieh, which already contains 100,000 men under arms, and far superior to any other body of Asiatic troops. The infantry, especially, is well organised, and having been drilled by French officers, would make no contemptible figure in conflict with European troops. . . . French influence is in the ascendant at Teheran, while England is losing ground. The English are not liked here, and the French, if they set about it in earnest, might soon supplant English commerce in Persia. All French manufactures are eagerly sought after, and the French name is held in great respect by the people."

"Prepare war, wake up the mighty men."—Joel.

"The Iron Crown."

We apprehend that Napoleon III. will not rest satisfied till he wears the Iron Crown, which has become an object of much interest. It is now at Mantua. The following extract will give some idea of the importance of this crown.

"Now that Napoleon has gone far towards "fleshing his maiden sword," and that visions of the "Iron Crown of Italy" begin to dazzle the eyes of the denizens of the Second Empire, a petit mot on the subject of the Iron Crown itself may not be inappropriate. after all, the said famous crown is not an iron one; it is chiefly of gold, and set with very precious stones. Some time back it was deposited by the Austrians in one of the strongest citadels of Lombardy, from which Napoleon III. must win it if he is to wear it. According to tradition' within the interior there is a ring fabricated from one of the nails which served to nail the Savior to the cross, and hence its "iron" name.

In 774 Pope Adrian I placed the crown on the head of Charlemagne. In 1452 it was sent to Rome, and was used in the coronation of Frederick IV., and in 1530 in that of Charles V. at Bologna. In 1805 Napoleon I. put it on his own head, and as he did so, exclaimed, as, according to tradition Agilaph did twelve centuries before, "God hath given it me; woe to him that touches it!" Until lately this historical relic was placed at the summit of a large gilt cross in the Cathedral of Monza, near Milan, and was exhibited on certain days, with special service. It was placed in a case of rock crystal, and, in order to examine it closely, the authorisation of the military authorities of Milan was required; but the ecclesiastics of Monza had an imitation of it made for the inspection of the curious."

For the Crisis.

The Tract Fund Again.

A brother, who works week days and preaches Sundays, besides aiding others in the work of God, writes—"I guess you may mark me down for about twenty-five dollars for the Western Tract business. I will try and send it before a great while." He was as good as his word, and has sent the money since I wrote the above.

Yesterday morning, as I had received but few letters, and was rather discouraged, I lay in bed thinking that I would just get up and write a letter, counselling those that were stingy and covetous to keep their money, if they would, till they should get frightened and think the Lord was coming in a few days, and then they could throw it "every which way;" and I would go on and publish what tracts I could pay for myself, and scatter them as far as they would go, and then wait on God for further help and guidance. Well, in this mood I arose, and coming out found several letters that a brother had brought from the office. One was on this wise:

"Bro. Hastings: I see by the Crisis your noble purpose to send the good tidings into the far West. May God bless you and help you forward with your good work. Will you please accept this mite? It looks very small when compared with the amount you wish to make out. But I often think of what I once read, that in order to have the machine run, all the little wheels must work. So I feel I want to be one of the little wheels in this great machine. I would be glad to be a larger one if I could.

From a sister who hopes for immortality when Jesus comes."

There was no name attached, but there was a good dollar in it. Well, the Lord knows the name, and may he reward the giver! By the way, I think that "little wheel" is in running order, and if the other "wheels" all work as well, the machine will surely move.

Then there was another letter from Bro. H., with sad news in it. When I saw him a few weeks ago, there was a sunny smile on his face when he told me of his two babes, that had come to bless his household and his heart; but now he writes: "Since you was in N. Y., we lost our little ones, but we mourn not as those without hope; for they shall come again from the land of the enemy. . . .

P. S. My wife subscribes $5 towards raising $1000 for the tracts."

May God comfort the sorrowing ones, and make his gospel more precious than ever to their hearts.

Well, by this time I felt somewhat encouraged, and after breakfast I started for the post office. There I found a letter, with $1, from Bro. R. J., with an envelope to return an acknowledgment in; and then another letter, without date or signature, and only a R—— postmark to assist me in guessing the source of it. It ran thus:—

"Dear Bro. Hastings: Enclosed are $5 for the West, in response to your appeals as published in the Crisis. I shall not give you my name, lest by some [illegible] trumpet be sounded [illegible] I should like to know if you receive this. The Lord helping [illegible] saints—'the truth as it is in Jesus,' whose name be ever blessed! May the Lord strengthen you and help you to work on till the Master appears, which I believe will be very soon. Amen. So let it be. Yours for Bible truth. One who loves the coming and kingdom of Jesus."

Well, brother, you have done your part to keep your right hand from knowing what your left has done. I haven't the faintest idea who you are. There are several folks in that region who might do like this and not surprise me at all; but who does this the Lord knows, and he will measure it back again, good measure pressed down; shaken together and running over.

Along with this came another letter, from a relative and her husband, who myself and wife went some miles in a rain storm last spring to visit. She was not a christian, and he was a Universalist. We stayed at the tavern and had them come and see us, and we talked and prayed with them, and left them books and tracts to read. And now she writes a second time, to tell of peace and joy and salvation found through Christ—of a family altar in their new home, and a hope of glory everlasting in the world to come. The books had given them such insight into the Scriptures as they never had before. They want to hear and learn more, and wish the Crisis sent to them. So much for God's blessing upon a single evening's visit, and upon a few books and tracts.

By this time I felt quite encouraged, and turned my feet homewards. On my way I met Bro. J. Hemenway, and found he had brought me a letter from New Bedford, which is worth, I think, $50 to the tract enterprise besides the amount which it enclosed. You shall read it and judge for yourselves.

"NEW BEDFORD, June 25, '59.

"The church in Kempton street to our well beloved Bro. Hastings send greeting:—Your proposition in the Crisis of the 15th inst. has been read by us, prayed over, and responded to. It had no uncertain sound to us, but was an unmistakable call to duty, and earnestly and lovingly the brethren and sisters commenced doing. Bro. Hemenway, who was with us, took hold heartily and helped not a little in the good work. We enclose you the amount already received, with a pledge to make it fifty dollars in three weeks. There is among it the young apprentice's dollar, the 'widow's mite,' and the three cent piece of the 'least among us.'

Perhaps some of our young sisters will wear a ribbon less, but they count with new joy the number of pages of tracts their quarter will send to the West. And now, Bro. Hastings, don't you worry any more about the poor lambs, nor write to them through the Crisis 'not to do too much.' Let them give their cup of cold water to the brethren at the West; you know the blessed promises about giving are made just as surely to the poor as to the rich. Whosoever giveth a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple,—does n't that take them all? Some of the lambs in New Bedford have got into that pasture by faith, and they do feed and grow wonderfully thereby. Bless the living God! they that trust in him shall never be confounded.

I had almost forgotten that bundle of tracts you spoke of; please write and let us know how much it will cost to send them. It was my husband's place, as clerk, to write you, but as he was very busy to-day, he delegated me, and this must account for so many more words than the business required; but you know that women have a great propensity to talk it out. Our love and sympathy to Sr. Hastings."

"I accept the delegate, and though the clerk's letters are always welcome, yet I am quite glad he was very busy," and so our good sister has "talked it out." Don't be alarmed when you find you have "spoken in meeting," where there are from ten to twenty thousand hearers, for your letter came like a spring of cold water to one soul, and it may to some others.

This encouraged me more. Do you know that after I wrote out that plan for the Crisis, and gave it to Bro. Grant, I took it back again when he had got it all ready for the printer, and kept it another week, because I feared that it was too great an effort to undertake to raise $1000 without some exciting topic to start men up with. Well, after praying over it, I handed it in; and now, after being discouraged and doubting awhile, my faith begins to grow somewhat, and I really think it quite likely that we will scatter from one to two million pages of tracts this season.

God bless the New Bedford church! I mean to come and see you when the Lord will, and see how some of that tract seed grows which you have been sowing there for the past few years. The $23 contained in the letter and the $27 more pledged within three weeks, show that you still have a mind to work. May God bless the "young apprentices," and give to the "widows" who have cast their "mites" into his treasury, an abundant sustenance in the hour of their need. I shall look, when I visit New Bedford, for those young sisters who "wear a ribbon less." I shall expect to see on their countenances a better ornament than all the trinkets that worldlings, hypocrites, Hottentots and heathens wear, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price; and that grace and intelligence, or, as the Scripture expresses it, that "wisdom" that "maketh the face to shine." They may miss the attentions of some perfumed sapheads who measure character by the amount of "ribbon" worn, but they will grow in favor with the good and true in earth and heaven. And, by the way, there is nothing that so takes off the superfluous rubbish of tinsel from christians as putting them into the harness, and showing them how to use their money for something better than "peacock's feathers" and other fooleries of that sort.

As to the "lambs," God bless them; I did not intend to exclude them, but I know more of them than you do; and when a poor cripple writes, "I wish I had two or three hundred dollars, not for myself, but for you," and when others work themselves sick to earn money to give away, I feel that is well to caution them a little not to do too much. Be not righteous overmuch; why shouldest thou destroy thyself? But I am willing to have them give their portion, and put their "cup of cold water" to the Western brethren's lips. God bless them all.

As to those tracts I wrote about, I will make the following proposal: All churches or persons who order tracts, and send cash in advance, can have about sixteen thousand pages for $10, if sent by express. If sent by mail, post paid, they will be about 12,000 pages for $10, and in that proportion. So let all who wish send in orders for them, with cash accompanying. Free for the poor, as usual. I intend to cut the prices of tracts down just about one half. Should have done it before if I could have seen my way clear, and could have got pay for what I sold. As it was, the few that were sold and paid for, had to pay for others from which I received no returns.

But what a long letter! Hold on a little; here is another one that has just come in, from a preacher away West of the Mississippi river. Let us hear him and close.

"DEAR BRO. H.,—I was glad to read that piece from you about our wants here in the West. I have been praying for this a long time. What books I can get out do as much for the cause of truth as I can. It is what we need; a great many would read if it did not cost any thing, and by it get their eyes opened. Now, Bro., I tell you what I want. If that plan goes into operation, take in that debt of books I owe you, and I will make of them a library, or add them to the small one that I have now in operation, and see that they are kept moving. They can be used like Sabbath school books to a good deal of profit, and will do more than I can in spreading light. Some books have got some persons interested that would n't come to hear me preach. O how I would like to see you. Come out here if you can. Next, I want you to remember, Bro. P.———, of Iowa, whether mine is paid or not. He is poor, and suffering for the comforts of life—goes on foot fifteen miles to preach, gets 'a God bless you' from a few, and curses from the rest. Do send him tracts—he needs them very much; and also Bro. C., of Iowa. Truth is gaining ground here. Pray for us. Farewell."

I will remember them, if the Lord will. Please keep sending in your cries for help, and pray, oh, pray! This work must prosper by prayer. Brethren, shall we have that THOUSAND DOLLARS? Come, 50 cents each from the subscribers of the Crisis would raise it. Ten cents each from those who read it would raise it. We have got $50 from Bro. Grant, $50 from H. L. H., $50 pledged from New Bedford, $25 from Bro. J., $6 to-day from Portsmouth and Greenland, N. H., and about $30 or $40 more pledged or paid. Who hands in the rest? Send cash or pledges to the Crisis office, or to me. Bro. C. F. Hudson offers a few hundred tracts. Let us keep the ball rolling. Your Bro. in Christ Jesus,

H. L. HASTINGS.

Address Providence, R. I.

Correspondence.

From M. P. Lamprey.

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps it would interest some of the readers of the Crisis to relate to them, through your most excellent paper, some of my experience for nearly a year past. As I have told you before, I professed religion when but fifteen years of age. In June 1st, 1858, we consigned to earth a loved sister. She was a few months more than twenty-three years of age when we laid her away. She was our youngest, our darling. During her sickness, which was six months and three days, she talked much of heaven. She would sometimes ask me if I thought heaven was a local place, and if so, where situated. I tried to explain to her what John saw when on the Isle of Patmos. She would say, Come to me soon! She died in the triumphs of faith. On a starry night, the 31st of May, when the leaves and flowers were bursting forth in all their loveliness, she fell asleep; but I then, at that time, thought her soul was wafted, by a convoy of angels, ten thousand leagues beyond the sun into infinite space, an inconceivable distance, up to the throne of God. About thirty minutes before she expired, she asked a sister present to sing. During the singing she lay quiet; her countenance was angelic; when the singing ceased, said she, "I see angels! Farewell, mother, I am going—good bye, Eliza,—tell Mary good bye; good bye all," (meaning those in her room;) "come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" and fell asleep. The first day of June, at 5 P. M., we buried her in the cemetery at Concord, N. H., under the boughs of a large spreading tree—a spot selected by herself. She selected the minister to attend her funeral; he was a white-haired man, of the Methodist denomination, who had lived to see seventy winters. The distance being very short, we walked to the cemetery. At the entrance of the gate, in front of the coffin, the aged minister uncovered his head, (his white locks streaming in the wind,) and began to read from an open book,—"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." As we proceeded up the avenue to the open grave, that was yawning to receive its lovely occupant, the beauties of the saints' resurrection came to my mind in a different light from what it ever had appeared to me before. On our arrival at the grave, after the coffin was lowered into it, the choir sang the hymn—

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb."

As I have already said, after we entered the cemetery, the impression came to my mind that the christian's hope was entirely founded in the resurrection; that the last enemy which is to be destroyed is death, (after Christ shall come to reign with his saints on this earth.) The good minister, during the services at the house, in speaking of her peaceful death said, she had triumphed over death and the grave, and that her happy soul was in heaven. I, for the first time in my life, felt the conviction that it might not be so. As I stood by the grave of that dear sister, my heart bled with anguish; the impression came—is the soul, the ennobling part, in heaven, ranging the fields of endless bliss, the companions of angels, allowed to travel through all immensity? or is it in the coffin, there to sleep till Gabriel shall stand with one foot upon the sea and the other upon the land, and swear by Him that liveth forever and ever, that time shall be no more? And when the last loud trump shall sound, and earth's slumbering millions shall burst the bars of death and come forth from their graves, will the body of this dear sister come forth from this grave, and the soul be wafted back, attended by a convoy of angels, to be reunited with its once lovely tenement, never to be separated through all eternity? I tried in vain not to indulge, for one moment, in such a belief as this, and consequently said nothing about it to any one; but at last I thought so much about it, that I began to search the Bible to see if I could there find any thing that would substantiate such a theory. I found two or three places that I thought did a little; but I firmly made up my mind that I would not believe such a doctrine, and therefore would think no more about it.

One night in January I dreamed of standing beside the grave of that dear sister. I knew in my dream that none but God saw me. I began to soliloquize; Would that I knew whether all that made her so lovely in life is in that grave, or a part in heaven. I heard a voice above my head say, "she is all in the grave, soul and body." I looked upward and saw an angel; it was he that spoke to me thus. I then awoke from my sleep. I told this to my friends, and that I could not, nor did not mean to believe in the unconscious state of the dead; and certainly I did not, in any case whatever, believe in dreams.

I read the Bible, I think, with a stronger desire than ever for the truth; I several times made it a subject of prayer, and in so doing I was greatly blest, for I was converted clearly to the truth as soon as I was willing to believe it. My mind has been very clear upon this point for about two months.

From Eld. W. S. C.

BRO. GRANT:—Even in the old "Valley," the ground is not entirely barren. At Hartford, where Bro. E. Burnham is now preaching, a new interest is awakened, and several have been baptized. Bro. Turner baptized six at Scittico, and the church is in a flourishing state. I baptized several at Southington recently. At other points in that part of Connecticut are living, faithful souls. At Springfield, the brethren who worship on Maine street have taken a new hall, and there is a firmness in their adhesion to the truth, which promises good and lasting results. It is said that those who worship on the Hill have good meetings and are flourishing. An impetus is felt, and a stand being taken not entirely dependent on the "war news," or other extraneous exciting topics. Certainly, some little prosperity is apparent.

Work should end with Life.

We remember to have seen somewhere an account of an interview between an aged disciple and her pastor, in which this subject was forcibly illustrated. She had for some time been, through infirmity, unable to attend the public ministrations of the Gospel, or be in any way, as was thought, actively useful. In the course of conversation he made the observation that her work was done. She replied, "It is not done so long as my Master leaves me here." "He leaves his children here to glorify him in laboring for him." And how can you labor? She then modestly related the fact that for a long time she had been in the habit of selecting some unconverted one among her friends, and making him or her the special object of daily prayer; and in no case had the Lord refused her request. She could count many whom the Lord had given her in answer to her prayer. When the names of some of them were given, they were among those whom that pastor thought had been converted through his own instrumentality. These were jewels which would be set in the crown which the Lord would give to her. In this, both the aged christians and the pastors in the church may learn a profitable lesson. The former may learn their responsibility. They have a work to do, in the performance of which they are a blessing to the church. If they have strengthened in faith as they have increased in years, they have power with God, and will prevail wherever they have his promise to plead. Let all such realize that they are left here because it is more needful for the church.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

By the arrival of the Steamer Arabia, we have news from Liverpool to the 18th inst

The war news is generally of an unimportant character, no new battles having been reported.

The Austrians were retreating from the Oglio, and the Allies were advancing in force.

The French troops were being concentrated by Napoleon for another decisive attack upon the Austrian army, and a great battle, it was anticipated, would take place within a week.

A naval demonstration was expected to take place soon in the Adriatic Sea.

Lord Palmerston has formed a strong Cabinet, including Lord John Russel, Gladstone, Elgin, Cobden, Gibson, and Lord Granville.

A dispatch from Vienna, dated 16th, says General Count Schlick has taken command of the second army, instead of Gyulai; and that the French had established a depot at Antivari, on the Albanian coast, and disembarked large quantities of gold coin there.

The last accounts from Napoleon's head-quarters say that he was concentrating his forces, in order to attack the Austrians with an overwhelming force.

It was believed in Paris that a decisive battle would be fought in the course of a week.

The following bulletins have been received via Turin:

TURIN, June 15. The Austrians are retreating from the Oglio, and the allied armies continue to advance. The Austrian corps d'armee which had left Ancona for Pissaro has been directed towards the lower Po, to be joined to the troops in the provinces of Venice. It is at present uncertain whether Ancona has been entirely evacuated by the Austrians.

Modena and Brescella are free.

Numerous municipalities of the Romagna have pronounced for the national cause.

TURIN, June 16. The allied army passed the S r o on the 13th, marching towards the river Oglio. The advanced guard is at Coccaglio.

The head-quarters of the King of Sardinia are at Pallazzuolo.

Garibaldi's corps is represented as becoming daily more formidable, and was threatening the Southern Tyrol, where the people were getting extremely impatient of Austrian rule.

It is reported via Vienna, that preparations were making at Mantua for attacking the allies.

The French fleet in the Adriatic received powerful reinforcements, and it was expected that a landing would shortly be attempted between Venice and Trieste. The first detachment of siege flotilla had left Toulon for the Adriatic. It is asserted that the French were about to occupy Ancona.

The Nord says "A second series of operations by the Allies will be simultaneously commenced by sea and land. The allied troops are all to be put in movement to invest the Austrian fortresses.

Prince Napoleon, with his force, will proceed without delay towards Lessapo, to support the right wing of the French army.

A Polish legion is said to be forming in Italy, and a Hungarian corps at Genoa.

It is reported that Generals under Pelissier are forthwith to repair to their respective stations, and it was considered not improbable that the army now called the army of the East will soon be denominated the army of the Rhine.

The Emperor it is said has demanded 100,000 more men for Italy to besiege Austrian fortresses.

The French army of observation on the Rhine frontiers numbers 71,000.

AUSTRIA.

Commercial letters from Vienna describe the financial condition of Austria as one of complete bankruptcy.

GERMANY.

A dispatch from Darmstadt says that, at the opening of the Chambers there, the Presidents of both branches of the Legislature declared in favor of war against Louis Napoleon.

PRUSSIA.

A letter from St. Petersburg says if Prussia allows herself to be goaded into a menacing step, Russia will concentrate troops on the Gallician frontiers, and send a detachment of her fleet to Prussian Baltic ports.

TURKEY.

It is said the 12th of June was the day appointed for the rising in European Turkey.

The political ferment in Servia was increasing.

GREECE.

Demonstrations in honor of the French victories have taken place in Greece.

LATEST.

Kossuth left London for Paris, with French passports, on Monday he will arrive at Genoa, where a becoming reception awaits him. He will have an audience of Napoleon, but no grounds exist for the report in circulation as to his plans.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

NEW YORK, July 3d. Steamship Vanderbilt, from Southampton, evening of Wednesday, 22d ult., arrived at this port at five o'clock this morning.

THE WAR.

TURIN, June 21. (Official bulletin, published to-day.) The Sardinian army preserves its position before Brescia. The French army occupy Brescia and its environs, in line with the Sardinians. Fano, Urbino, Fossombrone, Sesi and Ancona have pronounced for the national cause.

TURIN, June 21. Garibaldi marched yesterday from Salo towards Desenzano, but meeting the enemy in considerable force, withdrew.

BERNE, June 21. Garibaldi has at present pushed his outposts as far as Balladore, in the direction of Bordio, which is occupied by 400 Austrians.

VERONA, June 21, via Vienna. His Imperial Austrian Majesty yesterday transferred his head-quarters to Villa Franca.

MARSEILLES, June 21. Kossuth embarked here this morning for Genoa.

Letters from Rome to the 18th, announce that 2000 Papal troops have been sent to Perugia to restore order.

A collision had taken place at Cernia between a detachment of Papal troops and the inhabitants.

TURIN, June 18th. The Emperor has entered Brescia, with the King, who had gone to meet him. Popular enthusiasm accompanied the march of the allied troops, who all through Lombardy received one continual ovation.

The districts on the right of the Tiber, and also Litto de Castello have pronounced in favor of the national cause.

PARIS, June 18. The Patrie of this evening publishes the King of Sardinia's speech to the commissioners from Bologna. His Majesty refused the dictatorship offered him, and will disapprove every act subversive of, or contrary to equity, and prejudicial to the cause of national independence.

MANTUA, June 18. The declaration has been published that the town is in a state of siege, and the provisioning of the place has been ordered.

King Victor Emanuel has officially declared that he will not consent to the annexation of any part of the Roman States to Sardinia.

"M. Kossuth will be employed at once in action on the Hungarian regiments, in the Austrian service, and, if possible, produce a revolt in Hungary itself. At the same time, we receive a proclamation from Gen. Klapka, published at the French head-quarters. The meaning of these proceedings is not doubtful. The Austrian empire is to be attacked beyond the limits of Italy. The war is to be carried into the other hereditary dominions of Francis Joseph; not indeed by a French army, at least for the present, but by a revolutionary propaganda, supported by the whole strength of the French, and perhaps the Russian Court. The consequence may be of the very greatest importance. In the present state of Germany on the one side, and the Danubian populations on the other, a second revolutionary outbreak in Hungary may light up a war from the Baltic to the Black Sea. If Kossuth and Klapka be seriously combining to kindle the flame of the remote province of Austria, the Germans may have that casus belli which the more hot-headed among them desire. Should Napoleon persist in the scheme which the proclamation of Klapka and Kossuth's departure from England indicate, it will be a sign that he is ready to wade into the deepest waters of European commotion."

TURIN, June 17th.—The official bulletin published to-day, announces from Tuscany that Prince Napoleon has commenced the movement of his troops. Ten thousand Tuscan troops, with eight hundred horses, are ready to start with him.

ROME, June 14.—It is asserted that the French are about to occupy Ancona. The first Swiss regiment has left for Perugia.

The Russian Ambassador has given a banquet in honor of the French Commander-in-Chief, General Goyon.

DOMESTIC.

Terrible Accident on the Michigan Southern Railroad.

Thirty-three Bodies taken from the Ruins, and fifty or sixty wounded.

CINCINNATI, June 28. The accident on the Michigan Southern Railroad, last night, occurred near South Bend, Indiana. The stream where it took place is naturally a small rivulet, but was much swollen by heavy rains the previous afternoon and evening, and the flood of wood probably choked the culvert, converting the embankment into a dam, and the great weight of water, with the concussion of the crossing train, caused the sad calamity. There were about 150 passengers on the train, 33 persons were taken from the ruins dead, and 50 to 60 others were wounded.

FATHER DAYMAN.—Rev. Father Dayman, who has come under the ban of Bishop Hughes, has opened an oratory in Lexington avenue, New York, and is preaching to crowded houses of recusant Catholics and sympathizing Protestants. He takes the position that the Bishop and prelates must be obeyed, but within the limits of conscience, reserving the right of private judgment, just as the child should obey the parent, but not to the extent of disobeying God. This is essentially Protestantism.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

Notice.

There will be a series of meetings held at the Hall in Blackstone, Mass., commencing Wednesday eve., July 13th, to continue evenings, through the week and over the following Sabbath. J. HEMENWAY.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. PARRY.

July 2d. 1859.

Notice.

There will be a Grove Meeting in Chichester, at Bean Hill, about six miles from Concord, next Sunday, July 10th.

There will be a meeting at Pittsfield, Sunday, July 17th, at the Town House.

JOHN G. HOOK.

TIME OF THE WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING CHANGED TO AUGUST 29.—This change will accommodate two other campmeetings and not discommode us as much as it will accommodate either of them. To be good neighbors is the way to have good neighbors. Our Methodist brethren, that hold their annual campmeeting in the same place, very much wish to commence their meeting the 22d of August, on account of their other arrangements. After consulting Bro. Ladd and others, I think it best to commence our meeting August 29th. HIRAM MUNGER,

For the Committee.

Notice to Western Brethren.

Those Brethren in Iowa, Wis., and Minn., who have solicited my labors, are informed that I cannot comply with their wishes before fall—then I hope to be at liberty. Those who still desire my services can see me at our Conference in Iowa in the fall, and arrange with me. The notice of the time and place of Conference will soon be given.

W. SHELDON.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

Notice.

The Advent Society in Lawrence, Mass., have hired the house formerly occupied by the Christian Baptists on Common St., where they will hold their meetings for the future. I would say to our preaching brethren, come in the name of the Lord, and help us. In behalf of the church,

R. F. CRAM.

THE PROPHETIC CHART.—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John engraved on stone. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. Price 10 cts., postage included. Address BARTHOLOMEW BURKE, Philadelphia, Pa.

Notice.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd would say to churches [illegible] his labors, that he will visit them, [illegible] the Lord willing. [illegible] Newark, N. J.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday,......July 10th

Providence permitting, I will preach in Poultney, Vt., Lord's days July 17th and 24th, and during the intervening week, where Brn. may appoint.

MILES GRANT.

Bro. Couch appoints to preach in Portsmouth, N. H., July 3d. Bro. J. S. White July 10th and 17th.

Bro. P. H. Lawrence appoints to preach in Melbourn, C. East, at 10 o'clock, July 17th.

At 3 o'clock, of the same day, at the Lawrence School House, Melbourn Ridge.

Bro. George Champlin will preach in the Grove, near Bro. Hector Smith's, in Wolcott, Ct., the second Sabbath in July.

HENRY L. BRADLEY.

C. H. Perkins appoints to preach at

Lynn Dye House ......July 17th

South Reading ......July 24th

Eld. William Shepherd appoints to preach at

Newfield, Ct., ...Sunday, July 10th

Providence permitting, I will preach at Vernon, Vt., where Bro. Allen may appoint, ...July 10th

E. D. C. WHEELER.

P. S.—Will Bro. Allen meet me at the Vernon Depot on Saturday morning, 9th, first train down from Chester.

Providence permitting, I will preach in

Worcester, ...July 10th

H. PRATT.

Bro. B. P. Manning appoints to preach in

Warner, Robie's Corner, (school house) July 10th

Danbury, where Bro. C. Ford may appoint, July 17th

Bro. D. R. & Sr. M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at

Orrington, Me., ...July 17th

I will hold a meeting in Southampton, L. I., at the Indian settlement, July 10th to the 12th.

Peace Dale and vicinity, R. I., from Thursday 14th to Tuesday following, where Bro. John Dixon directs. The week following, where a door opens to do good.—Letters, after July 8th, direct to Peacedale, R. I., care of John Dixon.

HIRAM MUNGER.

I will preach as follows:—

Lawrence, Mass., ...Sunday, July 10th

Vernon, Vt., ...Sunday, July 17th

Northfield, Mass. ......July 20th

as Bro. Gage may arrange.

Goshen, Mass., ...Sunday, July 24th

Springfield, Mass., ...July 27th

as Bro. S. F. Otis may arrange.

Palmer, Mass., (eve.) ......July 28th

Worcester, Mass., (eve.) ......July 29th

Holden, Mass., ...Sunday, July 31st

Auburn, N. H., ...Sunday, Aug. 7th

I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me.

S. W. BISHOP.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in

Holden, Me., (Conf. Sat.) ......July 10th

Orrington, Me., (Advent Chapel) ......July 17th

Surrey, Me., (school house) ......July 24th

Carmel, Me., (meeting house) ......Aug. 7th

Eld J. G. Smith appoints to preach in

Milton Mills, N. H. ......July 3d

Manchester, N. H. ......July 10th

Warner, ...July 17th

APPOINTMENTS FOR CHESHIRE ST., CT.

Daniel A. Jones ......July 10th

GEORGE MORGAN, for the Brethren.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

C. B. Walker—All right.

A. N. White—paid to No. 109.

T. E. Teeple—All right—paid to 221.

S. D. Munn's P. O. address is Pawlings, N. Y.

Cash Receipts.

W B Taylor 220, $2.00, S J Parsons 224, $1.25.

J Currier 211, I W Haskins 211, J Taylor 211, L G Humphreville 211, E Cottle 211,—50 cts. each.

G S Manning 223, J T Dawley 223, J Spencer 223, W W Wheeler 223, S E Teeple 221, H Williams 220, D Q Kent 223, S F Hammond 223, Mrs. C Staples 224. W Tinkum 224, M B Lyons 224, L Hall 182, J T Howland 247, A Freeman 208, W Hand 218, D Hogarth 218, W Ongley, H C Webster 224, C Cottle 234, S Rogers 169, I A Lawton 224,—$1.00 each.

L H Wilson 225, Mrs. H Wilmot 186, R R Shaw 182, A Farren 224,—2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J D Rogers $2.00, N Orcott $1.51, Ruth Taylor $2.0, P B Morgan $13.85, M Chandler $6.00, W S Knight 20 cts, S J Parsons 75 cts, J Wilbur 27 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. [illegible] hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; [illegible] and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, [illegible] Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Bible [illegible] Price 5 cts. single; [illegible]

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought [illegible].

Life and Religious Experience of H. Munger, including [illegible] connected with [illegible]. Written by himself. This is a very [illegible], and will be read with interest by all. Price 30 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract [illegible] upon the Scriptures, and upon the [illegible] of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—8 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the reader. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genessee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a History of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 3c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, [illegible]; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS,

Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by [illegible].

† The Olive Leaves are three and four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. No. one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, [illegible] Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, [illegible] by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that [illegible] and sin are to end in the [illegible] destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment [illegible] and arranged. By J. Blain. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms: or, the Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price [illegible] per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and [illegible] of our agent in Portland, Me., [illegible] Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts [illegible] J. E. W[illegible] [illegible] Children's [illegible] Great Controversy.

Original Contributions.

My Bible.

[illegible]
To light us to thy golden gates,
O New Jerusalem!

My Bible, nature's God revealed,
This [illegible] battle-field,
The armory where are weapons found
To fell the foe and win the ground;
Witness of love before unknown,
And mercy-herald from the throne—
The great white throne of God.

My Bible, map of life unrolled,
The Shepherd's call unto the fold,
The balm for every wounded breast,
That tells us of a holy rest,
Life's rule, and passion's high control,
The comfort of the dying soul,
The knowledge of love!

My Bible, Sinai's broken law,
The visions that the prophets saw,
The sinner's warning from above,
The promise of abiding love;
O Father, open thou our eyes,
That we may see with glad surprise
The wonders of thy law!

FANNIE PARRY.

For the Crisis.

Words of Christ.

Our Lord Jesus Christ on one occasion said, as is recorded in Luke 9: 26, "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Substantially the same is said in Mark 8: 38.

What are some of the words of Jesus? In John 14: 2, 3, are these words, addressed to the disciples just before the crucifixion—"I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself:" and in verse 28,—"Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you." How well this corresponds with the words of the "two men in white apparel," who were present when Jesus ascended to heaven!—Acts 1: 11. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." What a perfect harmony is there, between the words of Jesus and the words of the two men in white apparel! He said he would go, and they saw him go up; he said he would come again; the two men in white apparel said he would "so come in like manner as ye have seen him go."

In harmony with this are other words of Jesus about his coming again, which, to all who love Jesus, ought to be very precious. Matt. 25: 31.—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory," etc.; and we might quote a great many more such words of Jesus about the coming again; and we might also quote from the writings of prophets and apostles, in perfect harmony with them. In Rev. 1: 7.—"Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him," etc.; and Jesus' own words to John, Rev. 22: 12: "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me." It does seem to me that whosoever is ashamed of these words of Jesus, of such an one he may well be ashamed when he comes. Any person would be ashamed of a professed friend in circumstances analogous to this.

As we ought not to be ashamed of the words of Jesus, so we ought not to be ashamed of the words of Peter, Acts 3: 20, 21; "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets," etc.; so all things of which the prophets have spoken, as being restored, will be, and no others. What have the prophets said should be restored? Isa. 65: 17.—"For behold I create new heaven and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind;" or, as the margin reads, "upon the heart." Thus the restored earth will be so glorious that the former, (this present earth) will have no place in our hearts. This looks like Paradise restored; and Isa. 66: 22 looks like the restoration being permanent." —"For as the new heavens, and the new earth which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." The earth, then, is one of the things which will be restored; and also the seed of Abraham, to live forever on the restored earth. This is clearly intimated in the last quotation from Isa. 66: 22, but more fully brought out in Ps. 37: 9-11.—"For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall (future tense) "INHERIT THE EARTH." Ver. 10: "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. Ver. 11. But the meek shall (future tense) "INHERIT THE EARTH," and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." [illegible] (future tense) "INHERIT THE EARTH." How much alike are the words of David and the words of Jesus! And in the same Psalm (37) the promise is so explicit that it would seem there could be no mistake that the land and the righteous seed are to be restored. Read verses 22, 29, 34.—"For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." Ver. 29; "The righteous shall inherit the LAND, and DWELL THEREIN FOREVER." Vers. 34: "Wait on the LORD and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the LAND: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Prov. 2: 21, 22 is very much like the above. "For the upright shall dwell in the land and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Malachi 4: 1, says, in reference to the wicked, "it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

All this looks very much like carrying out the promise which was made to Abram in Gen. 13: 14, 15; "And the LORD said to Abram, after Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward and westward: for all the LAND which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." If his seed are to be confined to Palestine, as some say, the land would be very much crowded with people, for in the next verse he says, "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." What were the dimensions of the land which the Lord here promised to Abram? Paul tells us in Rom. 4: 13, that he was "THE HEIR OF THE WORLD." Who was the seed of Abraham? Gal. 3: 16; "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." And in Rom. 8: 17, there is something said about "joint heirs with Christ;" and in Gal. 3: 29, Paul tells us who these joint heirs are. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye ABRAHAM'S SEED and heirs according to THE PROMISE," viz., the promise made to Abraham. Can we find any inheritance promised but LAND? I think not—that is the promise. Well, we see that the children of the promise who are counted for the seed are those who have the same faith that Abraham had, and are not exclusively the literal descendants of Abraham—the Jews. There will be a remnant of these; but the great multitude, whom no man can number, will be from out of every kindred, and people, and tribe, under heaven.

Has Abraham ever come into possession of the promised inheritance? No. Acts 7: 5.—"And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on."

Did Christ, who is Abraham's seed and heir, ever come into possession of it? No. 2 Cor. 8: 9,—"Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor;" he was poorer than Abraham. Abraham was rich in cattle, etc., and he purchased a burial place; but Christ says of himself—"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He had not a burial place, for Joseph of Arimathea begged his body to bury in his own new tomb.

Have any of the "joint heirs" come in possession of the promised inheritance? No; for Paul in the 11th chapter of the Hebrews, speaking of a long line of worthies from before Abraham down to Christ, says, ver. 13,—"These all died in faith, not having received the promises; but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Ver. 39; "And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise."

I do not think that any of this great cloud of witnesses were ashamed of their hope, or of the words of Jesus; for we have their testimony on record in the Old Testament Scriptures, as Paul tells us in Heb. 12: 1,—"We are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." He does not say that they are spectators, but WITNESSES. Now a witness in a court of justice, or any where else, is one who testifies, or witnesses to any thing; and Paul says these are witnesses; and in the 11th chapter he gives us the names of a great many of them, and says time would fail to tell them all. Turn to the record in the Old Testament, and you will find the testimony of these witnesses, whose honorable names he has recorded. And yet men say that they are spectators, who are now looking down on us to see how we run the race. If Paul had intended to have it understood as spectators, I think it would have read thus,—"Seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of" SPECTATORS; but as I do not wish to add to, or take from, the word, I think it is best to let it read as it now is—WITNESSES. Prov. 30: 6; "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee and thou be found a liar."

Jesus having come the first time, and having gone away, is history now and every body assents to [illegible] there is no cross in that; history is popular; but there are many [illegible] popular—there is a cross in it; hence such do not love all the words of Jesus; just as it was when Noah preached to the inhabitants of "the world that then was," and told them, that a flood would come and destroy the wicked. It was unpopular then, and there was a cross in it; but to preach now about the flood having destroyed the wicked race away back there in the history of this world, is not unpopular. And so it always has been; present prophetic truth has been and ever will be unpopular in its day and time.

A part of Jesus' words are in Luke 9: 23; "And he said unto them, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself and TAKE UP HIS CROSS daily and follow me." And this we are required to do, even at the peril of the loss of this present life, as we well see in verse 24; "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." The cross, then, is in the confession of Christ in the present prophetic truth, as well as that which has become history. The present prophetic truth, which is now about due, most manifestly is embraced in those prophecies which relate to his second coming. Events in the present condition of the world and of the nations harmonize with the prophecies of Christ's speedy second coming; and to stand up for this is the present unpopular truth, and constitutes the cross; and I would say, therefore, with the apostle Paul, Gal. 6: 14,—"God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world."

Probably in no period of this world's history has a belief and confession of present truth been so calculated to kill a man to worldly plans and schemes as in this our day, for never before could we so confidently as now put our finger on the declaration of Jesus; "Behold, I come quickly," and say as did Peter on the day of Pentecost, "this is that which was spoken of by the prophet." The last prophetic events seem to be fulfilling, and Rev. 17th chapter is rapidly becoming history. Of what use then to form plans for this life, when all the streams of prophecy seem to be pouring into one in these last days of "the time of the end?"

From the foregoing considerations, it would seem that God's original plan of having a perfect earth and a perfect race of men to live on it, will ultimately be carried out and consummated, notwithstanding the terrible effects of sin upon the race. He is preparing, and all along has been preparing, a "seed to serve him." A mighty host, now sleeping in the dust of the earth, will awake when the last trumpet sounds; and thus will wisdom, goodness and mercy triumph over the powers of darkness. Can we suppose that the original plan of God in the creation will be frustrated by the triumph of evil? To suppose this, will be to concede that, after all, the Devil will have the victory, and God's original plan and purpose in regard to the earth be defeated, especially if he (Satan) is, as some say, to have the largest part of the race, in a place of eternal torment. But, thanks be to God, evil is not to finally triumph. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head;" Christ will be "manifested to destroy the works of the devil." Dan. 7: 27; "And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom, UNDER THE WHOLE HEAVEN, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

Let us not be ashamed of Jesus and his words, but let our hearts respond—"Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

W. S. O.

Hartford, June 20th, 1859.

For the Crisis.

The Pattern Preacher.—Acts 2.

HIS MODEL SERMON'S SPECIAL SANCTION.

The apostle Peter was the special minister of the circumcision, to whom "the keys" were committed. He opened the door of faith to both Jew and Gentile. His first discourse at the Pentecost, therefore, may be regarded as the Model Sermon; and he, under Christ, as the Pattern Preacher.

The occasion that called out his audience was worthy of the special mission given him from heaven. His apostolic commission, and this occasion, the Spirit's advent, which attested the acceptance of Christ's work within the veil, demanded that this sermon should be the model of sermons—acceptable with God.

The notes of this sermon were noted by Inspiration. They are authoritative—"authorized to be read in all the churches." This sermon is the embodiment of the whole Gospel; and by consequence it is, for each and all of these reasons, the Model Sermon.

I. In its outline and application; for it begins with that day of the Spirit's advent in power. It opens the Gospel's full proclamation. It begins the gathering of a people to the name of our ascended Lord, and which is there first called his "church;" and thence it glances at the Gospel's power to save, and its course quite on to "the great and notable day of the Lord."

II. It is the Gospel in all its most distinctive features—its most marked and salient points—the "Alpha and Omega" [illegible] in his fulfillment of the promise by his personal presence—in "signs and wonders, and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his will." His resurrection is demonstrated by the word of God, and by the facts they saw and heard, which crowned his ascension with acceptance at the right hand of God. Then the whole series of Gospel wonders is crowned and consummated by his foes becoming "his footstool;" and he established on the throne of David—"both Lord and Christ"—in the Melchizedek kingdom. Those points fill the outline. Surely this is the Model Sermon—this the Pattern Preacher.

III. This discourse comes to us with authority. It has more than mere apostolic sanction. It was the great commission of Christ—"Go ye . . preach the Gospel"—in its incipient accomplishment. It was "the Gospel preached with the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven." Nay, it was Peter, the prince of apostles, with the whole apostolic commission (save Paul) "in full bench." No sermon can come to us with, or be confirmed by, higher sanctions.

IV. This divinely sanctioned sermon is commended to us further by the consideration that it was attested by "the three that bear witness in earth—"the Spirit, the water and the blood"—agreeing "in one."

The Spirit was seen, heard and felt—convincing thousands "of sin, righteousness and judgment;" and constraining them to cry, "Men, brethren, what shall we do!"

The water witnessed also, in the three-thousand-fold baptism of believers, who were buried in the likeness of Christ's death, and raised up in hope of "the resurrection of life."

The blood bore witness also, as it was embodied and expressed in the Lord's Supper then observed. They "broke bread from house to house," to commemorate the broken body of Christ; and, "the cup is the New Testament in my blood," saith Jesus. Thus these "three witnesses" of life immortal, by Jesus and the resurrection, agree in "one testimony;" and demonstrate that this sermon is the model for all who would partake of Peter's crown in glory, "when the chief Shepherd shall appear." 1 Pet. 5: 1-4.

V. The great Apostle of the Gentiles, Paul, speaking by the same spirit, preached precisely after this model. Acts. 13. It embraces the same outline—the same filling up of the outline, by the grand features of the Gospel, from the commencement to the consummation.

Conclusion. How meagre, how lean and lifeless are our popular sermons. Preach! Preach after this God-honored pattern. Reader, prepare for the great and terrible day of the Lord. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you." Amen.

J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

[The following lines were composed by our friend F. S. Woodford, on the night following the death of his wife, and were read at the funeral services by the Rev. Geo. W. Woodruff.]

Lines.

Night throws funeral shadows o'er my doom,
And wildering sorrow wraps my soul in gloom;
My loved companion sleeps in silent death,
To God has just resigned her fleeting breath;
Around my desolation reigns supreme,
No earthly hope to thwart its lurid gleam;
The morrow's sun may gild with tintings bright
Each scene! yet all to me is wrapped in night;
O! who, if I should pine with sickness now,
Will wipe the damps from off my burning brow?
Who watch for my return with tender care,
And meet me with a wife's devotion there?
The sunny vale of life is wrapped in gloom,
And all that made life joyous waits the tomb.

Who now will all my wants anticipate,
And as a wife share every changing fate?
Who like a wife my lonely hours beguile,
Devotedly 'mid fortune's frown or smile?
O! who can soothe the sorrows of my fever'd brow,
And with a wife's devotion smooth my pillow now?
Once happy home, what shadows round thee flit,
How can I to the grave's demands submit?
For refuge from the storm, whose arm can save,
Whose hand sustain me from its swelling wave?
Death holds enshrouded in his marble grasp
That once loved form, still lovely to the last;
My Savior passed the portals of the tomb,
His arm alone can guide me through the gloom;
I bow submissive to his will to-day,
His own soft hand can wipe my tears away.

Selections.

Preachings upon Popular Proverbs.

BY TIMOTHY TITCOMB.

"A full vessel must be carried carefully."

"He is so full of himself that he is quite empty."

"If you had had fewer friends and more enemies, you had been a better man."

"That is often lost in an hour which costs a life time."

An observing man is never without sources of amusement, and it is certain that among these sources the unconscious devices resorted to for the creation and preservation of character in the eye of the world deserve a prominent place. We meet in every town men who feel that they have filled up the measure of their character, and have nothing further to do in life but to bear that character, like a full vessel, to their graves, without spilling a drop. They walk the streets as if they were bearing it upon their heads. They bow to their acquaintances with the consciousness of their precious burden constantly uppermost. They refrain from all complication with the stirring questions of the times through fear of a fatal jostle. They speak guardedly, as if a word might jar their precious vase from the point of equilibrium. There is nothing so important to them as what they are pleased to consider their character; consequently that is always to be consulted before any course of action can be determined upon. All questions of morality and reform, all matters of public or political interest, all personal associations, are considered primarily with reference to this character. If they prove to be consistent with it, and seem calculated to reveal something more of its glory, they are entered upon, or adopted; otherwise, they are discarded.

When a man arrives at a point where the preservation of his character becomes the prime object of his life, he may be considered a harmless man, but one upon whom no further dependence can be placed in carrying on the work of the world. As a member of society, he becomes strictly ornamental. We point to him as one of the ripe fruits of our civilization. We bring him out on great occasions, and show him. We make him president of conventions and benevolent associations. We introduce strangers to him that they may be interested. We chronicle his arrival at the hotels. We burn incense before him, because we know it will please him, and because we know that he rather expects it. Small children regard him in respectful silence as he passes. He becomes one of our institutions, like a City Hall or an old Church. We always know where to find him, as we do a well-established town-line. But one thing we never do: we never go to him in an emergency that demands risk and self-sacrifice, because we know that those things are not in his line. His character is the first thing, and that is to be taken care of. When we want anything of this kind done, we go to men who have no character, or, having one, are not uncomfortably conscious of it.

Good and harmless as these people usually are, sources as they are of amusement to those who understand the secret springs of their life, fine as they are when regarded as specimens, they are, nevertheless, the victims of a mistake. Personal character with them has come to be the grand object of life—personal character as a thing of popular repute, when it should always be a resultant of true action, instituted for unselfish purposes. The meanest and the most illegitimate of all human pursuits is the direct pursuit of a reputation. It is supremely selfish and contemptible; and there is no man who really deserves a good reputation who does not make its acquisition subordinate, as an aim in all his actions. A man whose action with relation to the questions that come before him is regulated by its pre-conceived effect upon his character with the public, is entirely untrustworthy, and will be trusted by the public no further than his interest is seen to coincide with the wishes of the public.

Character is a thing that will take care of itself; and all character that does not take care of itself is either very weak, or utterly fictitious. A man who does as nearly right as possible, according to the dictates of his judgment and his conscience, will achieve a character without giving a thought to it, so that all attention bestowed upon the direct acquisition of character before the public is so much attention wasted and so much time thrown away. By their works are we to know men; and we have no other standard by which to measure them. We tolerate a harmless, selfish man, but we do not trust him with our interests. The most of those whom we find supremely devoted to the preservation of their character won their character honestly enough, originally. They struck out boldly at the beginning of life, did nobly, succeeded, won the praise of the people, and then, like men grown rich, became suddenly conservative and timid. Finding themselves in possession of a character, and realizing something of the preciousness of the possession, they immediately began to nurse it, and arrange all their action with relation to it. Then they ceased to grow and retired essentially from business.

Much better would it have been for all of this class had they had fewer friends and more enemies. In fact, there is a fault in the reputation of every man who has no enemies, for no man can be a positive power in the world, moving in right lines through evils and abuses and wrongs, without treading upon the toes of somebody. As this world is constituted, no man can be without enemies unless he be without power, or unless he adapt himself to the evils and the evil men encountered in his course. Consequently no man has a reputation which is really significant and valuable that is not won in about equal measure from the blessings of one class and the curses of another. The praises of the good are no better testimonials of a sound and valuable character than the maledictions of the bad. In fact, reputation and character are widely different things, though they are so closely coupled in the minds of those whom we are discussing that they see no difference between them. Character lives in a man; reputation outside of him. A man may have a good character and no reputation, or he may have a good reputation and no character; but with self-worshipers they are nearly identical.

Of all the bondage in the world I know of none more senseless and useless than bondage to one's character or reputation. The "fogyism" and "hunkerism" of politics, and the rigid conservatism of religious opinion grow mainly out of this bondage. Consistency is clung to with almost an insane tenacity. It is more important in this bondage that a course of action should be consistent with a man's past life than with truth and justice. A man's past is elevated as the highest standard of his present and his future. He pledges himself against progress by making his present character and his past course the law of his life. He clings to the institutions, the opinions, the policy and the sentiments in which he has cast his life; and when these are gone, or are superseded, he clings to their names, and so "walks in vain show." If a party dies, it does not die to him; because, if he were to admit the fact, or the idea, of its death, he would doubt his own infallibility. If an institution falls, he will not acknowledge it, for it will make a hole in a reputation which he considers compacted and complete. No man who progresses can be consistent with himself. Maturity cannot be consistent with immaturity. All the consistency God requires of any man, or approves in any man, is consistency with the best light of the present. Let the dead bury its dead. It is only God himself who has even the right to be consistent with His past life.

The worthy young men who read these words are dreaming of the attainment of a character which shall give them not only reputation—not only praise—but weight in the world. If this be your prime object, young man, you are very likely to take the wrong course and make wreck of yourself. Let me tell you that if you do right, your character will take care of itself, no less than your reputation. Serve God and your generation well, leave the consideration of your character and yourself behind, seek to be consistent with the highest life you have, be not afraid to change your opinions or your course on anything if you think you are wrong, and God and your generation will take care of you. As soon as it is seen that you are unselfish, and that you are free to act rightly and justly with relation to whatever comes before you, a place in the world will be made for you, and work will be given you to do. Do not be disheartened if you make enemies, for if you are really a good power in the world you will be sure to make them. I do not say that a man who has enemies is necessarily a good man, but I do say that no man can be a good power in the world without making them.

There are a hundred things that I could mention, more valuable than reputation. Self respect is one of these; a conscience void of offence is another; the reformation and the progress of those around you are others; and God's approval is another. Maintain your self-respect; keep a spotless conscience; and do good to all around you with supreme reference to Him in whom you live, and your character will grow healthfully, without a thought given to it. The moment the preservation of your character and reputation becomes the great object of your life,—the moment that you begin to arrange your life with reference to a character already achieved—that moment you will cease to grow, and pass to your place among the harmless fossils that occupy the ornamental niches of society.

The influence of enemies upon a really sound character is always healthful. A certain degree of recognition and praise does any man good; but the usual effect of a great deal of it is debilitating. It spoils the child, and weakens the preacher, and enervates the orator. It injures the character of almost every man. Praise is very sweet, but the soul cannot thrive upon a diet of sugar any more than the body. A man who receives a great deal of praise, and drinks it in with genuine appetite, soon comes to regard it with an unhealthy greed. He wants it from everybody, wants it all the time, labors to get it, and is disappointed and uneasy if he does not get it. It is well for every man, therefore, to have enemies, to hear what they say about him, and to experience the weight of their opposition. Enemies drive the soul home to its motives, rouse its finest energies, compact its character, render it watchful of the issues of its life, keep it strained up to its work, and help to eliminate from it selfish considerations. There hardly ever lived a reformer who might not have been strangled and silenced at the outset of his career by praise. Thank God for the enmity that developed into giants the reformers of our own and of past times. May He in mercy forbid that any of the young and noble hearts now yearning for the good work of the world be spoiled by too much praise and too few enemies!

A character once worthily won is to be preserved in precisely the same way that it is won. A character is easily tarnished, and a good name easily lost; but neither is to be preserved by making it the supreme object of attention. Here it becomes necessary to keep a broad distinction between reputation and character, for one may be destroyed by slander, while the other can never be harmed save by its possessor. The malice of others may tarnish a good name—may load it with suspicions—may associate it with gross scandal—may blacken it even beyond the reach of total recovery, but the character can receive no injury save by the voluntary act and choice of its owner. A man in order to retain his reputation may be required, not unfrequently, to compromise his character; and in order to keep his character pure may be obliged to compromise his reputation. Character is as much more valuable than reputation as it is more valuable than its own name.

Reputation is in no man's keeping. You and I cannot determine what other men shall think of us and say about us. We can only determine what they ought to think of us and say about us; and we can only do this by acting squarely up to our convictions of duty, without the slightest reference to its effect upon ourselves. There are two ways in which men lose their character and their reputation with it. The selfish means instituted for the direct purpose of preserving character and reputation are damaging to any man. How many statesmen and politicians have "fixed themselves up" with a character which every one sees is intended for a market, and how few of all the number ever arrive at the goal of their ambition! Many of them become the laughing stock of the country; and when the great conventions meet, their names are passed by, and new ones elevated, of those who have been employed in minding their business, and letting their character and reputation take care of themselves. One great reason why so few of the truly great men of the nation have failed to be placed in the presidential office is that they spoiled their reputation in the selfish desire to preserve it for the purpose of winning office.

Another way of losing character and reputation is by yielding to some sudden temptation to sin, or by the secret entertainment of a vice that with certainty undermines both. A single deed of shame, ah! how it blackens beyond all cleansing the character that has been builded in the struggles and toils of half a century! There is no wealth under the sun so precious as a good name worthily won, and there is no calamity so great as such a name shamefully lost. Far be it from me to depreciate the value of character, or to deprecate pride in its maintenance. While it should be the natural, unsought consequent of a life controlled by the purest and noblest motives, it doubtless may be entertained as a choice possession, always subordinate as a motive of action to Christian principle and duty.—Springfield Republican.

No Time for Devotion.

If you had an earthly friend upon whom you depended for all your living, who watched over your interests both when you waked and when you slept, and had never withdrawn his care and kindness from you, could you not find at least one hour in twenty-four to go into his presence and enjoy intercourse and communion with him? Nay, if you knew such was his will, would you not feel yourself to be exceedingly ungrateful and base not thus to demonstrate your respect for and confidence in him? Reader, you have such a friend—only he is infinitely higher and better than the best earthly friend you ever knew or can know; he is your heavenly Father, and your God. Can you not find one hour in every day to cultivate communion with him? If not—ask yourself—where is my heart set?—on the world, or on God?

Reading for Youth.

A Word to Youth.

"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 18: 3.

No wise or good, how just soe'er they seem,
Can saved be, unless the Lord redeem;
No blood can flow from veins of man or beast,
Sin's stains to cleanse, that can blot out the least.
'Tis Christ alone, by whom we live,
Who can the vilest sins forgive.

The best, the worst, most stubborn or profane,
May hope in various ways this heaven to gain;
But never one shall reach that heavenly land,
Until a penitent, child-like he stand.
'Tis then the Lord his pardon gives,
And joy the purest in him lives.

H. MOSS.

The Boy who Conquered.

Some few years ago, a lad who was left without father or mother, of good natural abilities, went to New York, alone and friendless, to get a situation in a store as errand-boy, or otherwise, till he could command a higher position; but this boy had got into bad company, and had got in the habit of calling for his "bitters" occasionally, because he thought it looked manly. He smoked cheap cigars also.

He had a pretty good education, and on looking over the papers, he noticed that a merchant in Pearl-street wanted a lad of his age, and he called there, and made his business known.

"Walk into the office, my lad," said the merchant. "I'll attend to you soon."

When he had waited on his customer, he took a seat near the lad, and he espied a cigar in his hat. This was enough. "My boy," said he, "I want a smart, honest, faithful lad; but I see that you smoke cigars, and in my experience of many years, I have ever found cigar-smoking in lads to be connected with various other evil habits, and if I am not mistaken, your breath is an evidence that you are not an exception. You can leave; you will not suit me."

John—for this was his name—held down his head, and left the store; and as he walked along the street a stranger and friendless, the counsel of his poor mother came forcibly to his mind, who, upon her death-bed, called him to her side, and placing her emaciated hand upon his head, said, "Johnny, my dear boy, I'm going to leave you. You well know what disgrace and misery your father brought on us before his death, and I want you to promise me before I die that you will never taste one drop of the accursed poison that killed your father. Promise me this and be a good boy, Johnny, and I shall die in peace."

The scalding tears trickled down Johnny's cheeks, and he promised ever to remember the dying words of his mother, and never to drink any spirituous liquors; but he soon forgot his promise, and when he received the rebuke from the merchant he remembered what his mother said, and what he had promised her, and he cried aloud, and people gazed at him as he passed along, and boys railed at him. He went to his lodgings, and throwing himself upon the bed, gave vent to his feelings in sobs that were heard all over the house.

But John had moral courage. He had energy and determination, and ere an hour had passed he made up his mind never to taste another drop of liquor, nor smoke another cigar as long as he lived. He went straight back to the merchant. Said he, "Sir, you very properly sent me away this morning for habits that I have been guilty of; but, sir, I have neither father nor mother, and though I have occasionally done what I ought not to do, and have not followed the good advice of my poor mother on her death-bed, nor done as I promised her I would do, yet I have now made a solemn vow never to drink another drop of liquor, nor smoke another cigar; and if you, sir, will only try me, it is all I ask."

The merchant was struck with the decision and energy of the boy, and at once employed him. At the expiration of five years, this lad was a partner in the business, and now worth ten thousand dollars. He has faithfully kept his pledge, to which he owes his elevation.

Boys, think of this circumstance, as you enter upon the duties of life, and remember upon what points of character your destiny for good or for evil depends.—Northern Farmer.

☞ A boy was once asked what meekness was. He thought a moment and said, "Meekness gives smooth answers to rough questions."

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address, so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all Business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to [illegible] GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage [illegible] the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 201. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1859. | VOL. IX. NO. 20[illegible]

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER IV.—(Concluded.)

These expressions of three different writers, and the last remark cited from Justin, are obviously inconsistent with their doctrine of immortal misery. And I have sometimes raised the question in my own mind whether their orthodox expressions are not corruptions or interpolations of the text. Indeed Cotelerius, the editor of the Apostolic Fathers including the Clementine Homilies, remarks on those passages that plainly teach the immortality of the righteous only, that they disagree with other passages asserting the eternal suffering of the wicked, so that "the Pseudo-Clement must have written inconsistently, or must have been here interpolated." I find but one passage plainly asserting immortal woe; hence I should suspect the interpolation to be not "here" but there. But waving this question of genuineness to the profounder critics, I proceed with my citations.

Augustine, the great light of orthodoxy, applies the same view to man's bodily nature; "Before man's sin the body might be called mortal in one respect and immortal in another; that is, mortal because it was capable of dying; immortal because it was able not to die." (De Genesi ad literam, l. 6, c. 25.) His view of the soul's immortality is Platonic enough, and his arguments for it are worthy of the Schoolmen and of Samuel Drew.

And Justin Martyr himself, in his later work, the Dialogue with the Jew Trypho, says: "I neither regard Plato nor Pythagoras, nor any of their way of thinking. . . . The soul either has life in itself, or it receives it from something else. . . . But the soul partakes of life, because God wills it to live; and just so too it will no longer partake of life, whenever He does not desire it to live. For it cannot live of itself, as God does. But as the personal man does not always exist, and body and soul are not ever conjoined; but, whenever this harmony must be dissolved, the soul leaves the body and the man is no more; so likewise whenever it is necessary that the soul should no longer be, the vital spirit leaves it, and the soul is no more, but itself returns again thither whence it was taken." (c. 4.) He never spoke of the soul as absolutely immortal, and in one or two expressions of this Dialogue he distinctly withholds such an adjective.*

The settled opinion of Athanasius, the "Father of Orthodoxy," on the main question, I think cannot be proven. On the question of man's nature, he says: "God desired man to continue in incorruption. But man, neglecting and departing from the knowledge of God, and devising and regarding that which was evil, incurred the threatened condemnation of death. . . . By transgression they reverted to their native condition; so that, as from non-existence they began to be, they must now in due time suffer the loss and destruction of their being. . . For man is by nature mortal, seeing he was created from non-being. Yet, as made in the likeness of the true Being, to be preserved by the knowledge of him, he might have escaped the force of corruption and remained immortal." (De, Inbarnotione Verbi, c. 4.)

In the fifth century Nemesius, a Neoplatonist, became a Christian and bishop of Emesa. He is a Restorationist. But he says: "Since the soul is not yet known in its essence, it is not suitable to determine respecting its energy. The Hebrews say that originally man was made evidently neither mortal, nor immortal; but on the confines of either nature; so that if he should yield to the bodily affections, he would share also the changes of the body; but if he should prefer the nobler affections of the soul, he should be deemed worthy of immortality." (De Natura Hominis c. 1.)

I would call special attention to this passage, both as testimony of Hebrew doctrine needing special explanation in the New Testament if it was not to be strictly taken, and also as coming from a Restorationist.

Nicholas of Methone, of the twelfth century, is regarded by Neander as the most learned theologian of his age. He says: "It is not every soul that neither perishes nor dies, but only the rational, truly spiritual and divine soul, which is made perfect through virtue by participating in the grace of God." (See Hagenbach, History of Doc., § 174.) I do not know his opinion on the main question.

Deferring the opinions of Irenæus and of Arnobius for a moment, I come back to Athenagoras, the first of the Post-apostolic Fathers who does not recognize the intermediate nature of man. We know little of his history; but we are told he was a catechist at Alexandria, before Clement. In the strength of his expressions, though not in their frequency, he makes very free of immortality, and he presses his argument for the resurrection as completing the being of man whose soul is immortal. The body, he says, was made originally immortal, yet continuing by the sole will of the Creator. But man has an unchangeable continuance in respect to the soul. (De Resur. Mort. c. 16.) I cannot give all my reasons for calling him a Restorationist. Some of his expressions might be taken as orthodox. Professor Hovey claims him as such. But he cites no expression strong enough, I think, to overrule the general tenor of his doctrine of man, and especially his argument that as man is an end in and to himself, no reason can ever occur why he should cease to be. (c. 12.) No orthodox view of the economy of eternal woe is at all admissable by the side of this statement. It is all that any Universalist can ask, unqualified as it is left. Hence I conclude that if Athenagoras was not consciously a Restorationist, he at least laid broad the foundations for the restorationism of the Alexandrian School.

I have spoken of a claim made by Universalists that there was restorationism before the time of Clement. This is done by Dr. Ballou in the Expositor, May 1834, p. 189, where he cites a passage in the second book of the Sibylline Oracles, of which, however, he makes little account. Dr. B. relies upon the date which had been usually assigned to this work, namely, the middle of the second century. But the critical labors of Friedlieb, who has edited the work, give the following results: Of the twelve books of these Oracles, the oldest was written about the year 160 before Christ; the latest towards the year 300 of the Christian era. The second is assigned to the beginning of the third century. Alexandre, another editor, agrees with Friedlieb in the main. My information is derived from a very able article on the subject in the Methodist Quarterly, 1855, pp. 510, 512..

The restorationism of Clement is not very explicit, though indubitable. He does not call the soul immortal, perhaps because this was a Gnostic style of speech, of which the Christians were somewhat shy. In one instance he speaks of the soul as saved, by present grief, from "eternal death;" but he uses the word "eternal" much as Maurice takes it,—as referring not to duration, but to kind; death in sin and ignorance. He held all punishment to be chastening and reformatory, and speaks of a certain "discreet fire," or ignis sapiens, in a style suggesting the notion of purgatory, which was now taking its rise.

I need not tell my Universalist friends that Origen, "the Adamantine," was one of themselves. And I freely concede he was as adamantine for his virtues as for the power of his learning. I only ask that some regard should be had to all his opinions bearing on the question in hand. Neander speaks of him as attaching great importance to the natural immortality of the soul, as related to God. He is well known also to have held its pre-existence. He made much of the doctrine of free will, supposing that not only the lost, including Satan, might be saved, but that the saved might be lost [illegible] worlds [illegible] eternal vicissitude. A passage cited by Tholuck on Rom. v. 18 confirms the common belief that he regarded the doctrine of universal salvation as an arcanum, not to be generally published. And a passage in what may be called his Confession of Faith is remarkable for two reasons; it is the first in which the nature and destiny of the soul are told in extra-scriptural language, and it is hypothetically orthodox. He says: "Now that the soul hath its own substance and life, it shall receive according to its merits when it departs from this world; to possess eternal life and blessedness, if its deeds have secured this inheritance, or to be given over to eternal fire and punishments, if the guilt of its sins shall bring it to this doom." (De Principiis, Praef. apud Rufinum.)

Of his allegorical method of interpretation I shall say nothing. He thought and spoke very much as I might have done, holding in one hand the doctrine of an indefeasible immortality, and in the other a Bible very infallibly true, and as of very elastic interpretation.

Origen lived about A. D. 225. His Universalism, with all its modifications, was obviously a late and incomplete development of the doctrine if true. I think the history shows what I proposed,—that it was due more to Platonic philosophy than to exegesis; or to the doctrine of the soul's immortality superadded to the Scriptures.

I need not trace its history further. Some of my orthodox friends may need to know that more than half the fathers of the Eastern church were Restorationists; Gieseler tells us that "the belief in the unalienable power of amendment in all intelligent beings, and in the limited duration of future punishment, was so general even in the West, and among the opponents of Origen, that it seemed entirely independent of his system, to which, doubtless, its origin must be traced." I need only show, in conclusion, that besides the orthodox opposition, two strong protests were made from the position I hold; one during the process of the change, and the other at a later date.

Irenæus, bishop of Lyons, was a disciple of Polycarp, who had personally known the beloved disciple, John. He suffered martyrdom in A. D 202. His principle work is a refutation of existing heresies, principally the Gnostic; and with Gnostic views the soul's strict immortality is associated in his book. Of his general merits of character the restorationist Eusebius shall be our witness. Irenæus says: The scripture "saith of the salvation of man, 'He asked of thee life, and thou gavest him length of days for ever and ever;' the Father of all making a grant of continuance for ever and ever to those who are saved. For life is not of ourselves, nor of our own nature, but a gift of God's favor. And therefore he who preserves the grant of life and renders thanks to him who bestows it, shall receive length of days for ever and ever. But he who rejects it and proves unthankful to his Maker for creating him, and will not know him who bestows it, deprives himself of the gift of duration to all eternity. And therefore the Lord speaks thus to such ungrateful persons: 'If you have not been faithful in that which is least, who will commit much unto you?' Signifying that they who are unthankful to him for this short temporal life, which is His gift, shall justly fail to receive from Him length of days for ever and ever. . . . Souls therefore receive their life and their perpetual duration as a donative from God, continuing in being from non-existence because God wills them to exist and to subsist. For the will of God should have rule and lordship in all things, all else should yield and be subservient thereto. And of the creation and duration of the soul let so much be said." (Adv. Hær. l. 2, c. 34, §§ 3, 4.)*

The second protestant was Arnobius, A. D. 303. He had been a rhetorician of Sicca, in Numidia, and so bitterly opposed to the Christian faith that the sincerity of his conversion was at first doubted. He therefore prepared his book which ended the doubt. Neander says: "His work does not show the novice, who was a catechumen, but a man already mature in his convictions, if he was not orthodox according to the views of the church. The same historian speaks of the "free, independent manner in which he seems to have come to Christianity, through the reading of the New Testament, especially the Gospels."

Arnobius argues very fully the intermediate nature of man. His rhetoric is strong, but he shows a warm heart. He says: "Souls were found not far from the yawning jaws of death, yet such that they might become loved by the gift and beneficence of the Sovereign Ruler, if they but endeavor and strive to know Him. For the knowledge of Him is, as it were, the leaven of life, preservative against dissolution." (Adv. Gentes, l. 2, c. 32) Wherefore we should not be [illegible] with vain hopes, by that which a new class of men, elated with an extravagant opinion of themselves, tell us; that souls are immortal, next in rank of dignity to the supreme God, derived from him as Creator and Father, divine, wise, inspired with knowledge, and free from stain of gross matter." (l. 2, cc. 14, 15.) "This we do hold and know; on this one clear and manifest truth do we take our stand,—that all the gifts of God are for the benefit and happiness of all; most full of delight, love, joy, and gladness; yielding pleasures incorruptible and ever-during; freely offered to the wishes and earnest efforts of all; and to be excluded from them is destruction and death." (l. 2. c. 55.)

* Professor Hovey, in his "State of the Impenitent Dead," quoting a passage from Justin's Exhortation to the Greeks," says: "Mr. Hudson refers to the above in proof, it would seem, of the following statement: 'In the same treatise he names as truths held in common by the philosophers and the christians, the doctrines of the divine origin of the world and creation of man, of the soul's immortality, and of judgment after this life.'" (p. 137.) Again he remarks: "'In the system of Athenagoras,'" says Mr. Hudson, "'the immortality of the soul is certainly of nature.'" (p. 139.)

I am much surprised that my learned friend should cite me thus, as if these were either concessions, or indications of the christian doctrine of the age; making no allusion to my many quotations showing that the single expression of Justin about immortality did not represent the common sentiment, nor the maturer opinion of Justin himself; and giving his reader no intimation that I regard Athenagoras as leading off a dissent from the common opinion, and preparing the way for the Restorationism of the Alexandrian school.

* Prof Hovey (p. 141) raises a doubt whether Irenæus really held the opinion for which this passage is offered, and cites two authorities. I have not in my book ignored this doubt. But I have found the same doubt respecting Arnobius by one of his editors, which is as plausible as if he had said that daylight is green. I have found one editor of Irenæus remarking that such a passage favors "the error of Arnobius." Cotelerius also encountering the same "error" in the Clementines, says it is best explained by the passages in Justin, Irenæus and Arnobius. And I have met a very intelligent member of the Catholic clergy who remarked that Irenæus had been criticised for the view.

Prof. H. closes his "survey" with the following italicised statement: "The records of the primitive church, prior to A. D., afford no evidence that a belief in the endless existence of the soul was brought over from pagan philosophy into the creed of the church." In his "survey" he ignores the entire history of opinion respecting man's intermediate nature, which Athenagoras alone did not hold. He ignores the suspicions of Justin's orthodoxy. He regards Tatian, whom nobody wants, as the first and only annihilationist; though I must think his orthodox expression, even without note or comment, stronger than that of Athenagoras, which he quotes. And he says nothing of the third century, in which was ripened the seed sown in the second.

Here I am tempted to add a word from Hagenbach, who, after stating the opinions of the soul's intermediate nature in the second century, says: "On the contrary, Tertullian and Origen, whose views differed on other subjects, agreed in this one point, that they, in accordance with their peculiar notions concerning the nature of the soul, looked upon immortality as essential to it." (Hist. of Doctrines, § 58.) Tertullian was the great defender of the orthodox view, as Origen was distinguished for the restorationist view.

For the Crisis.

I Would Not Live Alway.

O let me die in manhood's prime,
Ere age has broke life's golden chime;
I would not travel life's dark, lonely road,
When age has bent me with its weary load;
When all my usefulness on earth is past,
And lurid clouds my sky with gloom o'ercast;
O, let me sleep ere life's bright halcyon dreams
Are all o'erwhelm'd by age's dark rolling streams.
O, I would welcome to my fond embrace
Death, ere I walk the earth with tottering pace;
Yes, I would kneel with joy at death's wild shrine,
Ere age distort each pulsing breath of mine;
With joy the king of terrors would I meet,
Nor from his cold, unfeeling frown retreat;
I would not live to see old age
With changeless sorrow dim life's page.
Why plead for life, when its [illegible] bloom has fled?
When friends and hopes are numbered with the dead?
And when I sleep in death, O make my grave
Beneath some palm, where breaks the ocean wave
In some fair clime, where flowers perennial bloom,
Sheltered for aye from winter's wildering gloom.

E. S. W.

West Winsted, May 20, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 9.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

It was after Darius had for twenty months unsuccessfully besieged the city, that a single Persian deserted from the army and joined the Babylonians. He was one of the chief nobles of Persia. He presented himself at one of the gates of the city in a most deplorable condition; his nose and ears cut off, and his body covered with blood from his wounds and severe lacerations. He represented to the Babylonians that it was in consequence of the advice he had given to Darius to raise the siege, as the taking of the city was impossible, that he had received this sore punishment, and that he now burned for revenge against the cruel tyrant, and had come to them to benefit them, and avenge himself on the Persians.

This story of Zophirus was so evidently true, from the marks which he bore upon his body, that his request was very readily granted, even to have the command of troops, with which to fight against his enemy. On the tenth day after his entrance into the city he sallied forth, and, by an unexpected attack, destroyed a thousand of the Persian army. Seven days after, he in like manner slew two thousand. This greatly animated the Babylonians, and they exalted him to a higher post of honor and command. Again he manifested great exploit by killing, on one spot, four thousand of the enemy. This so inspired the Babylonians with confidence in his military skill, and so filled them with admiration of his courage, that they not only appointed him to the chief command of the city, but also assigned him the exalted and most responsible office in Babylon, viz., guardian of the walls. This was just what he wanted; and there being a [illegible] understanding between him and Darius, the latter approached the walls, when Zophirus, who had the keeping of the gates, opened them to Darius, and thus Babylon was the second time ensnared and taken. The whole plot was devised by Zophirus, who suffered his body to be thus mutilated, in order to deceive the Babylonians, and betray their city into the hands of the Persians. For this glorious achievement he received the greatest gifts, and was appointed governor of Babylon.

The next monarch who conquered Babylon was Alexander the Great. It was surrendered into his hands by a Persian general, and he entered it, says one historian, "as if they were marching to battle." The Lord had said, "none shall return in vain." Every besieger of Babylon was successful from the time of its first subjugation by Cyrus. It was successively taken by Antigonus, by Demetrius, by Antiochus the Great, and by the Parthians.

After the Babylonians rebelled against Darius, the walls were reduced in height, and all the gates were destroyed. Says the prophet, "I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up . . . . I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon." I have somewhere read (whether it be tradition or not I cannot say,) that Bel, the great idol of the Babylonians, was broken by a soldier; when, lo! a vast quantity of gold, silver, and precious stones, rolled forth upon the floor. Thus Bel was made to vomit up what he had swallowed down. Whether this be true, or false, it is certain that the costly gifts offered to this great idol became a spoil to the conqueror.—"Xerxes, after his retreat from Greece, rifled the temples of Babylon, and the golden images alone were estimated at £20,000,000, beside treasures of vast amount."

Thus was judgment executed upon the graven images according to the word of the Lord. The glory of the golden city began to wane, and her beauty to depart. "Humerus, a Parthian governor, who lived one hundred and thirty years before Christ, burned the forum, and some of the temples, and destroyed the fairest portions of the city." Says the prophet, "They shall remove, they shall depart." Humerus sent away many of the inhabitants into Media. In speaking of those who should destroy Babylon, the Lord said that they should "come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the Lord, ... to destroy the whole land." Many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of thee."

The historian furnishes us with the names of nations and kings who have been engaged in the work of subjugation. "The Persians, the Macedonians, the Parthians, the Romans, and the Turks, are the chief of the many nations who spoiled Babylon, and made desolate the land of the Chaldees. Cyrus and Darius, kings of Persia, Alexander the Great; Seleucas, king of Assyria; Demetrius, and Antiochus the Great, Trajan, Severus, Julian and Heraclius, emperors of Rome, the victorious Omar, the successor of Mahomet," etc., etc. W.

For the Crisis.

Sunday Thoughts.

Individual responsibility to God is frequently a subject of remark in the Scriptures of divine truth, although thousands perhaps do not feel that responsibility as deeply as they ought. The Bible represents a man as standing or falling for himself. He believes the gospel for himself, he repents and obeys for himself, and lives for God, and there is no provision made by which man can employ a substitute and thereby screen himself. Ministers may preach the gospel, and beseech sinners to be reconciled to God, but still the gospel is only the power of God unto salvation to those that believe.

Great, indeed, are the responsibilities devolving upon those who preach the gospel and labor for man's salvation; but with all their toil and labor they can only discharge their own duties, accomplish their own work, and bear their own responsibilities, and will do exceedingly well if they escape the fearful danger of being cast away. But where shall we look for those whose ears are saluted with the joyful sound of the gospel week after week, month after month, and year after year, and yet, indiscreetly and carelessly reject all its blessings? In the language of Paul we may ask, "how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" And we may canvass the volume of inspired truth from Genesis to Revelation, with all the eagerness and avidity of a dying man who is just beginning to feel his responsibility to God, and the answer comes home, either to our joy or sorrow, not only from the thousands of examples where every transgression received a just recompense of reward, [illegible] who spake as never man spake, saying, "he that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber;" and such can never enter the kingdom of God.

There is, therefore, no escape, no other way but the broad one that leads to destruction, no other salvation if the present one is neglected, no other Savior to rescue man from the grave; only one kingdom, the subject matter of the gospel, in which man can be saved, and his original allegiance restored. How important, therefore, that both saint and sinner should guard against that monster evil—the forgetfulness of our responsibility to God. It is one of the greatest evils of the age, and if there is anything that will prove to us the destruction of thousands who profess religion, it will be this one evil; for wherever it is permitted to exist, even for a moment, there is at once an amazing, in fact, an overwhelming increase of selfishness and worldly mindedness, unlike the spirit of true piety, and sincere devotion begins to wane, and will sooner or later become extinguished.

O that we may ever keep in mind our responsibility to God, and not eat, drink, sleep and sport our lives away, and thereby fail to fulfill the great and noble purpose for which God gave us an existence.

Geo. Moyer.

Chemung, Ill.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

Trust in Christ.

Jesus! Thy presence with me
Brightens my way,—
Trustingly I lean on thee,
Thou art my stay.
When my heart is aching,
And with grief is breaking,
Thou not me forsaking,
Doth grief allay.

Tossed on the foaming ocean,
In thee I trust,
Else 'mid the wild commotion,
Perish I must.
I seek the land of rest,
Where weary ones are blest,
O grant me this request,
There let me dwell.

Where the crystal river
Peacefully glides,
Flowers bloom forever,
And joy abides.
Where are no tears of grief
Poured forth to give relief,
That only can be brief
Where woe betides.

No foe with hellish art
Doth there prevail,
Satan with fiery dart
Cannot assail.
For he is foiled at last,
The conflict overpast,
And anchor safely cast
Within the veil.

M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

On Coming to Christ.

In the volume of our Father's love, the great and glorious charter of Immortality, there is no truth more plainly revealed than the ability and willingness of Jesus Christ his Son to save every sinner that will come unto him. What a spectacle, demanding the admiration of men and angels, was that when "Jesus stood and cried, if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink!"

But what, dear reader, is this coming? What is this important act, on which depends eternal life in the kingdom of God, the neglect of which consigns to everlasting death? Who can estimate the vast importance of answering this question aright? How has a deceived heart, yielding to the lies of the adversary, turned many aside from the truth on this momentous point, who are going down to perdition with a lie in their right hand! "Teach (us) oh Lord, the way of thy statutes."

Leaving every human theory, let us humbly seek, at the feet of Jesus, the truth he has taught us on this most interesting question. What is it to come to Christ as God requires, in order to be saved?

When the Savior freely invited sinners to come to him, did he ever tell them that they had nothing to do? Did he say this to the young man, who came to him desirous of inheriting eternal life?—Matt. 19: 16–22. Did he tell him that he must come to him, or believe in him, just as he was? Did "the faithful Witness" of the truth of the eternal God, ever tell impenitent sinners to come to him just as they are? Why, reader, this very thing was the ruin of the young man. He came to Christ just as he was, loving his "great possessions" more than God. How plain is the Savior's teaching on this great subject. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 16: 24; Heb. 11: 6. He solemnly assures us, that unless we do so, we cannot be his disciples.—Luke 14: 26. This self-denial is "repentance towards God." The animal man gratifies his carnal mind, which "is enmity against God." Repentance is a change of mind or disposition. A change from the [illegible] of sin to the love of holiness; from the love of the world to the love of God. While Jesus invited all to come unto him for life, he plainly told them that except they repented they should perish." Luke 13: 3. Never, for a single moment, does God yield his righteous claim to the supreme love of his intelligent creatures. "Do we make void the law through faith? (asks the apostle) God forbid: yea, we establish the law."—Rom. 3: 31.

There is no more virtue or religion in impenitent sinners coming to Christ for salvation from eternal death, than there was in the impenitent Jews coming to him for the loaves and fishes. It is mere selfishness. In vain do we "seek to be justified by Christ" while "we ourselves are found sinners." "Christ (is not) the minister of sin." He came to save us from our sins, not in them. Gal. 2: 17.

It may be said that Jesus told the young man to "keep the commandments," and yet, that "by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified" before God.—Rom. 3: 20. True, but Jesus Christ did not request the young man to "keep the commandments" to cancel his past sins, or in order to justification. The young man, with all his morality towards his fellow man, had robbed God of his heart, and placed it on his earthly "possessions." Christ required him to sell these, as proof of true repentance. Repentance is a work of propriety, not of merit. It is indeed written, that "He that confesseth and forsaketh his sin, shall find mercy;" but this is not all that is written. "Without shedding of blood, is no remission."—Heb. 9: 22. Repentance is simply present duty; it cancels no past sin, either according to the laws of God or man. We are "justified freely by his (God's) grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus."—Rom. 3: 24. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness (justification) to every one that believeth."—Rom. 10: 4.

It is a moral impossibility for an impenitent sinner to come to Christ, in any true and available sense, just as he is. "Turn ye, turn ye." "Thus saith the Lord God; repent and turn yourselves from your idols." —Ezek. 14: 6. Like Simon we may believe in the name of Jesus Christ; be baptized, and join a christian church; while our "heart is not right in the sight of God," and we have no "part nor lot in this matter."—Acts 8: 13–21. Alas! are there not many in our churches, who, like Demas, love "this present world" more than God? What awful disappointments the last solemn judgments will disclose! Members of christian churches hearing the dreadful mandate, "Depart," in answer to their cry, "Lord, Lord, open unto us."—"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new. And all (the) things are of God," to whom be the glory of salvation forever.

Dear reader, let us now "judge ourselves," that we may not at last "be condemned with the world,"—1 Cor. 11: 31, 32.

Henry Grew.

For the Crisis.

Saved from going to Heaven.

What a thought! Who, that thinks religiously, dare attempt to save a child from going to heaven? But if the theory commonly taught be true, then the effort above named is being made by multitudes every day. Here is one instance publicly confessed, which is going the rounds in the papers. It is worthy of more contemplation than it probably receives. Here it is:

"At Indianapolis, a few days since, a little girl 'wanted to go to heaven,' and in order to accomplish her desire, she procured a vial containing laudanum, of which she drank. She was, however, found before the narcotic draught had caused the child's death. The little creature was, with some difficulty, restored to her consciousness and the embrace of her loving parents." The question will arise in my mind, [illegible] think it should in others, who was [illegible] ble for teaching that child a notion, which legitimately tended to lead her to the rash act she committed? Surely there was a cause.

I. C. W[illegible].

Sins Exposed.—A certain king, who had been conquered by another, was made to kneel before him. He begged that it might be done in private; a tent was erected for the purpose, but, the moment the conquered king bowed on his knees, the tent was removed, and he was exposed to the gaze of the whole army. We may now conceal our deeds of iniquity, [illegible] a moment, we little suspect, they will be exposed to the universe, and we stand confounded.—Ex.

☞ All men who do anything, must endure a depreciation of their labors. It is the [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Persecution.

Persecution is doing injury to a man, negatively or positively, by withholding good or inflicting evil,—who differs from us in religious matters, and because he does so. Now this treatment is wrong as a penalty, and as a means of his reformation. Is the man responsible to us? What right have we to take the judgment seat, and deal out retribution? Conscience is a domain on which no human foot may tread. We are no more responsible to one another for our faith, than for the size of our stature or the color of our eyes.

Suffering inflicted only hardens the patient against conviction. Beat him and you produce heat as in iron; but it is not the warmth of love, rather the glow of burning indignation at your cruelty. By curses threats and pains you can no more put heresy out of a man than by Morison's pills, or Spanish fly blisters. When men chop off the head of a martyr, they do not decapitate his arguments. Truth, if he has it, is immortal; drown it you cannot, neither will it yield up its vitality to the flames.

The persecutor in the inquisition, or the parlor, is insane; we cannot approach him by reason, for his worst passions are raging like a volcano. Ice, ice! is needed to cool his brain. The nature that can persecute is essentially low, or, like Calvin's when he approved the burning of Servetus, hideously distorted. Adieu, O persecutor! thy road is that way, mine is this. In God's name, adieu!

How often the beautiful and the brave have fallen by the hand of cruelty!—Rome is drunk with the blood of the saints; its relentless agents have been often so ferocious that the name of man was degraded when applied to them. Talk of devils! They beat all the devils that ever spread a wing, or stirred the torturing hell.

Love alone unlocks the human heart. When the Samaritans did not on one occasion receive Jesus, James and John addressed him thus,—no doubt expecting to have their ardor commended:—"Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias did?" How divine was the reply! "But he turned and rebuked them, and said, ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives; but to save them." Even love and winning persuasiveness may all be resisted: but we need try no other means to attract men to truth and righteousness. My brother, have faith in love.

Persecution has a direct tendency to hypocrisy. But what is a confession without conviction? What is kneeling without homage? You cannot bend the mind; as well attempt to evaporate Niagara, or hush its thunder. Let all judge for themselves; encourage every man to be sincere; we must in the end answer for ourselves alone.

Assert your liberty of thinking for yourself; advise every man to do the same. In this solemn business say, stand aside, O friend, O father, O husband, O church, and let me hear God! Trust no one; trust to yourself, and reason, and nature and the inspired oracles. You may flee to pious persons; but piety is no guarantee of sense. The pious man's heart may be large, and his reason weak. He may be clever in making mistakes; quick in coming to false conclusions. When fanning mills for winnowing grain were first introduced, pious people agreed that "winds were raised by God alone, and it was irreligious in man to raise the wind for himself, and by efforts of his own." But as the irreverent mills moved round, the chaff was not only separated from the wheat, but superstition was blown out of many nervous souls.

Be thankful for every suggestion, and every counsel. But let no one exercise dominion over your reason, or faith, or conscience; and never dream of tyrannizing over others, be they relatives or strangers. Be glad when you see others living out their convictions, though they may be different from yours; give them credit for the same sincerity that you claim for yourself. Take care lest while you bewail their errors and delusions, it may turn out in the end that you were the person needing the "fanning mill!"

Wm. Glen Moncrieff.

For the Crisis.

Books and Tracts.—Extracts.

"Canada, June 5th.

The books came safe to hand, and were received with joy. I never can be thankful enough to you and Bro. Grant. They were great helps to me. I am entirely alone in my special work, and have no access to books or other aids, and therefore they were peculiarly valuable. 'Fables of Infidelity' is a rich work. I have just finished it to-day. I like your little 'Songs (Pilgrim Harp) much. I am doing what I can, amid trials and wearisome labors, to preach 'the Word' in different places around me, and the good Lord blesses too, but O for more of the Spirit of my Master! It is a solemn thing to know [illegible] step of the [illegible]. How we need to be 'filled with the Spirit.' How glad I should be to have you come to C—— if it was right."

Don't know as I can come at present, [illegible] can send you some tracts to scatter [illegible] the Lord provides a way. Grace be with you. Amen. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Fourth.

Another anniversary of a nation's declaration to the world, of the inalienable rights of humanity, and appeal to the God of Justice against the tyranny of oppression, has passed.

We have heard the high praises of Liberty, and the acknowledgement that the inestimable boon was graciously granted by the Almighty Arbiter of the destinies of all the nations of the earth. With these praises our hearts have mingled. But alas! what discordant notes have interrupted the melody of our jubilee songs. The southern breeze has wafted to our ears the wail of millions, deprived, by our own injustice, of the very liberty we have celebrated! Their cry has entered into the ears of Jehovah of Sabbaoth. "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them" that oppress us?

We have heard a voice from heaven, saying, "Is not this the (celebration) which I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?—Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee: the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward." Isa. 58: 6–8.

This mandate of righteousness and love, in perfect harmony with our own avowal to the world of the inalienable rights of the entire human brotherhood, we have rejected for more than fourscore long years, and turned a deaf ear to the sufferings and woes of the wretched victims of our oppression. Thus have we practically given the lie to the very principles on which we rested our vindication in taking up the sword to destroy thousands of our fellow men.

And yet we disobey; abusing the long-suffering of a merciful God, who is holding back the merited thunderbolts of his righteous wrath. We know too that his justice will not always sleep. He is even now giving the nation's blood to drink, which have shed the blood of his saints. Shall he not be avenged on such a nation as this? Let his peculiar goodness—his distinguishing goodness to the nation, aggravating our base ingratitude, answer this serious question. Surely our condemnation slumbereth not. The day of retribution hasteneth. Let those who sigh and cry for the abominations of the land, earnestly pray that God will grant a guilty nation repentance to the PRACTICE of the truth acknowledged.

Henry Grew.

Phila., July 5th, 1859.

For the Crisis.

A Suggestion.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to suggest to those brethren and sisters who receive the Crisis, and do not intend to preserve it for future reference, that something may be done towards furnishing reading matter for the West, and consummating the plan of Bro. Hastings and others, by sending the Crisis by mail to some of the preachers West, or to those who are engaged in this enterprise in this section. It contains much that would, no doubt, be read with profit by those interested in the cause we love; and, if it has been published months, or years, would be new and interesting to those who receive it.

I wish to relate one incident in my own experience relative to this subject. In 1835, I went with some machinery into the interior of Pa., in the region of the Alleghany mountains. I took with me a box of papers and tracts, and while walking out one morning early, I left one upon the door step of a log house, and passed along. A few days after, in passing the house, I called in for a drink of water; and, having a paper in my hand, the woman of the house said it looked just like the one she found upon the door step one morning. She said she was much pleased with it, and read it over and over again, and then sent it up the river three hundred miles to a friend of hers. This is the history of one old Sunday School Journal, that had lain in a lady's closet in Worcester for years. She remarked, on giving them to me, that she considered such kind of papers too sacred to be destroyed; and when I see them used for wrapping paper, I conclude those who use them thus, have not the cause they advocate very much at heart. The World's Crisis ought to have a hundred thousand subscribers and a million readers.

D. N. Smith.

☞ "Who struck Billy Patterson?" has long been a question. But there is'nt much question as to who got struck by Robert Patterson. If any body doubts whether "Scepticism, Atheism, and Pantheism" have been "struck," and pretty severely too, let them read his "Fables of Infidelity and Facts of Faith." For sale at this office, and by H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. Sent by mail for 75 cts. $6 per dozen.

H. L. H.

☞ Misfortunes are moral bitters, which frequently restore a healthy tone of the mind which has been cloyed and sickened by the sweets of prosperity.

☞ Insults are like counterfeit money; we can't help their being offered, but we should not take them.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 13, 1859.

☞ Will the Bro. who sent $2.00 for an English Bible, with instruction to use the surplus as we should think best, send us his address, and we will forward the book.

"Breath of Life."

There are four words in the Heb. O. T. which are rendered breath in the common English Bible; to wit, nephesh, ruakh, n'shahmah and nishmah.

There is but one word in the N. T. rendered breath—pnoee. The word occurs but twice, as in the following passages:—"And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty (pnoee) wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting." Acts 2: 2. "He giveth to all life, and (pnoee) breath, and all things." Acts 17: 25. Pnoee is from pneo, "to breathe; to blow." Pneuma, the word rendered spirit and wind in the N. T., is from the same root.

Nephesh occurs seven hundred and fifty-two times, and is rendered breath once. The passage is in Job 41: 21, in the description of the Leviathan.—"His (nephesh) breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth."

Ruakh, the word corresponding with pneuma in the N. T., occurs four hundred times, and is rendered breath twenty-eight times. All these examples have been examined in former articles, and need no further remarks.

N'shahmah is found twenty-four times, and is rendered breath, breatheth and breathed, seventeen times. The root of this noun signifies, "to breathe," "to breathe strongly," or "breathe out."—[Parkhurst and Gesenius.] Like ruakh, n'shahmah represents "the breath of life" in our nostrils, but we find no intimation that it is an intelligent agent or being, which lived, as such, before man was formed of the dust of the ground, or after he has returned to dust again. From its use in the Bible, it appears evident that it denotes the life-sustaining principle in the atmosphere, without which, as Job says, "All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust."—Job 34: 15.

The word is first used in the account of the creation of man, in Gen. 2: 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the (n'shahmah) breath of life, and man became a living soul." Observe the location of this breath—in "his nostrils," which, without doubt, were in wisdom made, in connection with the lungs, to receive and emit the n'shahmah or breath of life. Hence we read in Isa. 2: 22,—"Cease ye from man, whose (n'shahmah) breath is in his nostrils." If, as some of our opponents claim, this represents the "real man," it appears that he lives in the nostrils of him whom the Lord calls man. And, by the way, we can not find that the Creator ever called any thing else man, but a being whom he made "of the dust of the ground," with a tangible body having flesh and bones; and we have yet to learn from the Bible, or any other reliable source of information, that man can, or ever will have a conscious existence without this material organism.

When the n'shahmah or breath ceases to enter the nostrils and inflate the lungs, death immediately follows. Hence, in declaring the death of the widow's son, in whose family Elijah was entertained for a season, it is said, "His sickness was so sore, that there was no (n'shahmah) breath left in him." 1 Kin. 17: 17. The child was not gone, but when his breath left him he died. The life, or breath of life, was restored in answer to the prayer of Elijah, and he "took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber [not out of heaven, hades or sheol,] into the house, and delivered him unto his mother; and Elijah said, see, thy son liveth." What does all this mean, if the son did not die?

In Gen. 7: 22, we learn that all the living beings that died at the time of the flood, including men, had this same breath of life.—"And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whom nostrils was the (n'shahmah) breath of life." Gen. 7: 21–22. In the Hebrew, both n'shahmah and ruakh occur in verse 22, but only the former is translated. Both are placed in the marginal reading of the English Bible.

In this account of the flood, it is made very plain that both men and animals have the same breath of life in their nostrils, and when removed, death immediately succeeds. This is in perfect harmony with the words of the wise man, when he says of men and beasts:—"As the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath." Eccl. 3: 19. Shall we not positively deny Scripture, if we assert that the antediluvian men and animals were alive during the flood? The Bible declares that "Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." Gen. 7: 23. If people will still hold that dead men and animals are alive after reading such plain Scripture, it would seem that they had more confidence in heathen mythology than the word of the Lord; in fables than sober facts and sound philosophy. We have but little hope of benefitting that class, and pray that none of our readers may so far depart from the faith and hope of the gospel, as to embrace such a demoniacal doctrine. The truth is so plain and simple on this point, that we need not adduce further examples to show that the n'shahmah, or the breath of life, is common to man and beast, and essential to sustain their lives. It surrounds the entire earth, and is inhaled by every living thing upon the planet. It is a material substance made to sustain material beings. When the new earth is possessed by the righteous, we may expect a pure atmosphere, free from all the poisonous miasmata that are now so often inhaled to the destruction of life and health. Let the time speedily come.

We will now give all the passages where the word n'shahmah occurs. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died." Gen. 7: 22. "Thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth." Deut. 20: 16. "He left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed." Josh. 10: 40. "There was not any left to breathe." Josh. 11: 11. "Neither left they any to breathe." Josh. 11: 14. "The blast of the breath (ruakh) of his nostrils." 2 Sam. 22: 16. "He left not to Jeroboam any that breathed." 1 Kin. 15: 29. "His sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him." 1 Kin. 17: 17. "By the blast of God they perish." Job 4: 9. "To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?" Job 26: 4. "While my breath is in me." Job 27: 3. "The inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Job 32: 8. "The breath of the Almighty hath given me life." Job 33: 4. "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit (ruakh) and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." Job. 34: 14–15.* "By the breath of God frost is given." Job 37: 10. "At the blast of the breath of thy nostrils." Ps. 18: 15. "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord." Ps. 150: 6. "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." Prov. 20: 27. "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils." Isa. 2: 22. "The breath of the Lord . . . doth kindle it." Isa. 30: 33. "Thus saith God the Lord, he that created the heavens and stretched them out, he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit (ruakh) to them that walk therein." Isa. 42: 5. "I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit (ruakh) should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." Isa. 57: 16.† "There remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me." Dan. 10: 17.

The fourth word rendered breath—nishmah—occurs but once. When the prophet Daniel was addressing Belshazzar, at his impious feast, he says:—"The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified." Dan. 5: 23. Nishmah is a Chaldee word, from the same root as the Hebrew word n'shahmah, and represents the same thing.

We find no intimation that any thing but the breath of life was added to man after his creation, and this breath was not another man put into the first; but a portion of the same atmosphere that was previously given to all the other created beings.

* The Septuagint reads:—"For were it his pleasure to confine, and keep to himself, the (ruakh) wind, all flesh would expire together and every mortal would return to earth, of which they were formed."

† We see no reason for rendering n'shahmah, souls in this passage, or spirit in Job 26: 4 and Prov. 20: 27.

The Storm Increases.

When we look out upon the political horizon of this world, the signs indicate a terrible struggle among the nations—a tornado. No morning star appears for the wicked rulers of earth, but darkness more profound. We see no prospect of peace or better times till the King of kings comes. Another great battle has been fought on the banks of the river Mincio, in Lombardy, about midway between the Ticino, where the great battle of Magenta was fought, and the Adriatic sea. Napoleon's telegram to the Empress says:—"Great battle, great victory. Whole Austrian army formed line of battle, extending five leagues in length. We have taken all the enemy's positions, cannon, etc. Battle lasted from four in the morning till eight in the evening."

This battle must have been a bloody scene, but we shall not be able to give particulars till the arrival of the next steamer. This battle has been anticipated with great interest, on account of the two vast armies to be engaged, and the important results that must follow. The Austrians were determined that Napoleon should not cross the Mincio, and the French are equally resolved to succeed and take Mantua, a strongly fortified city, on the left bank of the river, where the [illegible] is said to be deposited for safe keeping.

A Berlin official says:—"The Italian conflict is assuming ever increasing dimensions. England and Russia are arming on the greatest scale."

The trouble is increasing in the Pontifical States. In Perugia, one of the states of the church, an insurrection has broken out, in favor of Victor Emmanuel and Napoleon, and the Pope sent some Swiss troops to quell the rising of the people, when a bloody conflict ensued, and was in progress at the close of the latest intelligence. This looks still more like hating the harlot, preparatory for her destruction. The account says:—

"The bloody conflict at Perugia between the Pope's Swiss Guards and the people, is considered a deplorable event, and tends to increase the difficulty of preserving the temporary dominion of the Pope. The Romans claim the benefit of Emperor Napoleon's Milan proclamation, that the French army shall not interfere with the manifestation of their legitimate wishes. Unless the Swiss shall be be supported by French troops, nothing is more likely than that they will be driven out of Perugia by an overwhelming national force."

"The Swiss trampled down and killed every woman and defenceless person. The next day the outrages, arrests and firing on the people recommenced. The town is in a state of siege."

It is said great resistance was made. Perugia, the capital of the delegation, is a walled city containing about 18,000 inhabitants. It has upwards of a hundred churches, besides a large cathedral and a library of rare manuscripts.

We think the strife will not end in Perugia, but increase till all Italy rises in open rebellion to the Papal power, rending it in pieces, and trampling it in ruins.

Feeling in Tuscany.

The Grand Duchy of Tuscany is an important division of Italy, bounded north by the Duchies of Parma and Modena and the Papal States; east and south by the Papal States; west by the Mediterranean sea, containing about 8,586 square miles. The government is an absolute monarchy; religion, Roman Catholic. Florence is its capital. The Florence correspondent of the Providence Journal writes, June 4th, and says:—

"Tuscany is full of French soldiers. For ten days past they have been landing at Leghorn, and up to the present time the number has reached nearly 30,000. About half of these have come to Florence and others have gone to Pistola, a town about eighteen miles distant from here. Several batteries of artillery have arrived. Some of the guns are the new pieces which are said to be so terribly destructive. The troops arrived at the rate of one or two thousand a day. They march from Leghorn instead of taking the railway, and when they reach here are pretty well covered with dust and worn with fatigue. The distance is little less than sixty miles, and two days are necessary for the transit. The thousands of the population are waiting for them in the streets, and the poor fellows are nearly overwhelmed with garlands and vivas and all sorts of caresses. The ladies pelt them with flowers, and with their handkerchiefs and hands wave and beat them a welcome. The soldiers are encamped just outside the town, on the meadows of the Cascine. With the shelter of their tents and the groves of the fine park, they are nearly as comfortable as they would be if they were lodged in the city. They and the Tuscan soldiers and citizens fraternize admirably. They may be seen going about arm in arm; those of one nation making the most amusing efforts to be understood in the language of the other.

Three days ago Prince Napoleon arrived in Florence. He had remained so long at Leghorn after his landing that the people here had sufficient time given them to make up their minds what sort of a reception it was becoming in them to offer him. It was sufficiently enthusiastic. We have not witnessed during our residence here a spectacle so brilliant and animated. From the railway station to the palace where the Prince is lodged, is a distance of more than two miles. The whole population filled the streets, windows, and balconies, and door terraces, and the air rung with shouts, Viva l'Imperatore! viva l'allianza Francese! viva il Principe Napoleone! viva! la guerra! viva l'independenza d'Italia were the cries which rose on every side. The ladies from their balconies poured down a perfect shower of wreaths and flowers, until the carriage in which the Prince rode—hired from a public stable—was converted into a bower of verdure and bloom. Out of this mass four Frenchmen were stretching their heads, the most conspicuous being the very Bonaparte visage of him who was the object of so much honor.

The escort extended nearly half a mile. It was led by three or four hundred men, bearing the flags of France and Italy mingled in very friendly confusion. Thousands of Italian and French banners were flying from windows and house tops in every part of the city. A flower garden in full May bloom could not be gayer with vivid hues than were the streets with tapestries and waving flags. Several companies of Tuscan cavalry and infantry formed a part of the escort. Long lines of French soldiery were stationed in some of the streets and squares. In the evening the Prince went to one of the theatres. On his appearance in the box, the long continued shouts seemed to threaten to bring down the walls of the house. After the play was over, the people escorted him with torches to his lodgings. Here he exhibited himself to them upon a balcony, and with a few words thanked them for the warm manner in which he had been received—which he accepted as a testimony of their friendship for the Emperor—and urging them to continue in every manner united, declared to them that the independence of Italy was a thing sure to be accomplished. Judging by what has recently been witnessed, one must be satisfied that the Tuscans are making up their minds that a Bonaparte, and this Bonaparte, is to be their next sovereign.

Volunteers continue to pour into Florence on their way to the seat of war. Five, six and seven hundred a day are the total numbers now. Many of them are fine-looking fellows, full of health and pluck, and give assurance of being able to do something for the country, to be hereafter spoken of with praise. There are 900 now lodged in the old convent of San Spirito, waiting for their equipment. They will form a regiment of 1200, which will in a few days be filled up, and then they will be ready to set off. It is said that the Tuscan army will be raised to a permanent force of 30,000 men. When operations are to be commenced against the enemy, from this side, cannot be very distinctly ascertained. The chiefs seem to keep their own counsel until just before they are ready to strike."

For the Crisis.

Report of the Maine Conference.

The Maine Annual Conference of Adventists assembled according to appointment, at Lincolnville Centre, Thursday, P.M., at 2 o'clock, June 23d. The meeting was commenced by singing an appropriate hymn, after which prayer was offered by Elder A. Ross, of Lowell, Mass. It was thought best to devote the afternoon to prayer and conference. Several spoke upon the object which had brought us together, and the power and excellence of the blessed hope of the coming of the Lord. Our first interview was interesting and profitable. We were glad to see and associate with the few pilgrims from various places, who for years have been resisting the opposing elements and surmounting the difficulties of these perilous times, pursuing the narrow way to the kingdom of God. But we regretted that no more could be with us. Heavy storms of rain for several days previous, had, doubtless prevented a goodly number who intended to come. Something detained several ministers who purposed to be present.

Evening. Elder R. R. York preached a very instructive discourse from John 8:31, 32.

Friday, 24th, 9 o'clock A.M., met in conference. The chairman, brother N. Smith, being in a feeble state of health, was not able to be present, and Elder T. Smith was chosen to fill the vacancy. A committee of three, to prepare business for the conference, was recommended, and it was decided that they should be appointed by the chair. I. Wright, S. K. Partridge, and I. C. Wellcome were chosen. The time was then occupied in social conference till 10 1-2 o'clock, when Elder A. Ross, who was providentially with us, preached a valuable sermon from Luke 18:18, which was listened to with much interest and we trust also with profit. A 6 1-2 o'clock, Elder L. L. Howard gave a short and good discourse from Rom. 2:6, 7, and others followed with remarks.

Saturday, 25th. At 8 o'clock A. M., the committee met, in company with all the preachers, for consultation in regard to the propriety of drafting a plan to raise funds and send out unembarrassed, one or more evangelists "to labor in word and doctrine," in the many new fields now open to us. A plan was suggested to meet the object desired, but it was seen that most of the brethren feared system, yet wished to obtain the same results by "common consent" efforts, without vote or system. At 9 o'clock the conference was called to order, and prayer was offered by Elder R. R. York. The report of the committee was then called for, when the following was presented:

Bro. Chairman:—The committee chosen by this conference, after consulting the ministering brethren generally, and finding such a want of concert of action between them and us; conclude to refrain from reporting any business to be acted upon by this conference, and beg leave to be discharged. This was accepted and the committee discharged, and a request made by Bro. York that, when we adjourn, we do so to meet again in an extra session in September next, to see if we could not unite in a plan to effect what we fail to do here. The remainder of the forenoon was spent in reporting the condition of the churches in various parts of the state.

REPORTS.

Elder L. L. Howard, Poland, said: I have not been able to preach the last year as much as formerly. I visited Berlin Falls. The brethren are prosperous; there is a good company of about 60, who are determined to walk in the truth, and who I trust will stand until the end. Poland. I labor here but little. There are some circumstances which have transpired to dishearten some. Yet others are living and mean to gain the kingdom. At Mayberry Hill, I have labored some. There is a good company of faithful brethren. I have been at Livermore and at Hartford; found them prospering and laboring faithfully in the midst of the strongest enemies. At Casco, I have labored some. About twenty-five were converted last winter. Some had been very degraded. There is an open door in Albany, for the word, and also in many other western towns in Maine. In Portland there are a few tried and faithful brethren. Experience has taught them much, and they stand firm. Several were converted last winter, and have been baptized. I think the cause is in a better state there, than for the last five years. They need your sympathies and help. They have preaching part of the time.

Elder R. R. York, Yarmouth: My time is improved [illegible] principally [illegible] I have been confined at store-keeping. One and a half years ago, we established meetings. I have worked and preached. Something has been accomplished. Some fifteen or twenty have been converted since our last annual conference. I have baptized ten. Others will go forward soon. My heart is in the work, and I hope to gain the kingdom. I am glad in God, I am with this company.

Elder J. Partridge, Poland. Last year, until June, I labored in Raymond, where some twelve have been baptized. In Glouscester, some few are faithful, and are intending to hold fast until the end. I have done laboring there. I now labor a portion of the time in Richmond. The last time I was there, they had out a larger congregation than I had ever seen there before, and there is some prospect of good being done. New doors are constantly opening, but we are not able to go and do what we would.

Bro. Hyde, of Biddeford, said:—The state of the cause is very low in B. We have a prayer-meeting, but no place for preaching meetings. We act as sappers and miners, preparing the way for others. There have been some things among us detrimental to the cause. Sometimes we go to Portland to meeting, and sometimes preachers come among us. We want the preachers to visit us, and we will try to help them on their way.

Elder T. J. Dudley, Augusta, There are a few in this place who believe in Christ and look for his appearing. The last two months, I have not been able to preach much. I am doing what I can. The other societies are having some prosperity. I have labored some at Sydney. Some twelve have been converted. We have some opposition, and are without a suitable place to hold meetings. I baptized there recently, and am to baptize more soon. A new place is opened at Sydney Corner for meetings. At East Augusta I have held meetings and the Lord is blessing. Some have been converted. I am sorry we could not have hit upon some plan to unitedly labor more efficiently in this cause.

Elder I. C. Wellcome said:—I have been obliged to spend the most of the last year to earn my bread, and have preached but little to what I could wish; yet I have preached nearly every Sunday, and many times more. I have preached at the Reed Meeting-house one quarter of the time until last April, when I released myself from there, after preaching nearly five years. There are a few good, faithful christians, who have endured the trials and opposition all the way since '43. Some have been converted amongst them, and are holding on their way. I have preached occasionally with the brethren at Brunswick. They are doing well. Several were converted and reclaimed last year. In February I organized the church, and their prospects are good. At B. Village, a new interest has started under the labors of Bro. E. Burnham, who preached in the Baptist house four weeks. It was a great meeting. Some fifty or sixty were converted, or reclaimed. Some are marked with the gospel hope. I have preached some at Belgrade and Rome where the truth was planted by the labors of Bro. Seavey. There is a growing interest and good societies are springing up. Bro. Seavey's labors have been much blessed in several towns. He has lately had a revival in Mt. Vernon Village and vicinity. I have preached some in Whitefield. There are a few in that place who still look for the Lord, and are striving to live ready to meet him. I have preached some with Brn. Haggett and Hanscomb, in Livermore and Hartford. In South Livermore, there is a devoted church laboring for Christ, and looking for his return. They took the Bible course. As soon as the truth was received and converts multiplied, they organized the church at once on the New Testament plan, and there they stand against all the opposing elements, still prospering, while every effort has been made to destroy them. We had a good meeting there in the winter. We also preached at East Livermore several days, where a new interest is awakened and a good prospect of a society of faithful ones. At Hartford, I preached several times. There is a growing society. They have lately organised a church of some seventeen members. I have lately been in those places, and find them doing well. They go among other churches and work with all the liberty they can get. I have spent one Sabbath at Palermo, Branch Mills, and preached. There is a good work going on among them, under the labors of a Christian preacher. Many gladly received the word on our blessed hope. I have preached at Richmond Corner, one fourth of the time since April—have a good hearing. By request, I went to South Waterford, in June, and preached in the Universalist house. The Lord seems to have opened an effectual door there for the word, if it will now be occupied. A good number of the community desire me to come among them frequently and statedly. The door is opening in many places where we are unable to go, and urgent requests for the word to be preached concerning the coming and kingdom of Christ. I have been at Augusta and preached to a little church lately collected under the labors of Bro. [illegible]. They have recently been divided and distracted by [illegible] and their public [illegible]

Bro. J. Dudley, East Augusta, said:—There is a better interest at Sand Hill, Augusta, than two months ago—a better prospect of good. I have labored some in West Gardiner, where there is an interest to know whether these things are so. Their is some opposition. At East Augusta, I have labored some. There are all classes. An interest commenced and has increased constantly, so that they now hold there meetings when there is no preacher. I have been at Ouf's Corner, Waldoboro' There is an open door for the word. Found one Adventist.

Elder S. K. Partridge, said:—I live in North Whitefield—am confined mostly to my vicinity. Preach in East Pittston one fourth of the time, have large congregations and a good hearing. I preach in Jefferson one fourth. A good reformation is going on now under the labors of a Christian preacher. We labor in perfect union. Six were baptised there last Sunday. A new door is open at the Head of the Pond. I have preached there some. At the place where I live, there are a few living ones. We have organized a church. I preach some at Church Hill, Augusta, some at South Hope, where there is a devoted company and good union.

Bro. J. Carr, South Albion, said—I suppose two are worth reporting. There are only myself and wife, who are full believers, in my place. I am talking and laboring as I can, and intend to go on to the end. I attend meetings some at Branch Mills. There is a great reformation there. Some sympathize with our views.

Bro. Harrison Hemenway said:—I don't come here to represent any church. I belong to no organized church, but meet with the brethren at South Hope. We try to serve the Lord and be ready for the kingdom.

Bro. Stone, Camden, said:—I am out of health, and not able to go among the brethren much. Brethren and sisters in Camden frequently call on me. They seem to be holding on to the word, and doing as well as ever, some of them at least. We seldom have any preaching.

Dr. H. B. Eaton, Rockport, said:—I did not come here to report, but will say, many there have the theory of the truth in them, some can eat milk, when they can eat nothing else. We are in a whirl of the end. Men are thinking, and must be made to feel the truth.

Bro. Edgecomb, of Belmont, said:—There is no church in our place, other than as Paul spoke of a church in one's house. A few are interested in looking for the Lord. Some fifteen or twenty. I could not say there is union and harmony as I could wish, to worship God truly.

Bro. Cousens, Prospect, said:—I am a stranger in Israel, have not much to report. We have a small church, three members united by faith, hope and love. When myself and wife are absent we are not afraid of division, only one being left. We hope to go through to the end. Some can't serve because there are so many wicked around them,—a scolding wife, bad children, bad sailors, &c. But we can serve God under all these circumstances, only have the mind to obey God.

Elder A. Ross, here made some interesting references to his former labors in Maine and his recent work in Massachusetts. I have been engaged in preaching some fifteen years, and formed many happy associations in Maine. I trust, I thankfully received whatever was given to sustain me. But only one year, 1854, did I receive a supply. Every other year, I was obliged to devote a part of the time, with these hands, to supply my necessities. I finally sold my team and traveled on foot. The way opened, and I took it to be the leadings of Providence, for me to go Mass., where I have since labored. I am glad to meet these brethren again.

Elder T. Smith, Brewer. In Brewer and Holden are some twenty or thirty living, active members. I think the most consistent and active of any I know of in the vicinity of the Penobscot. They were formerly opposed to order, but have since seen its necessity, and organized a church of some ten or twelve members. In Old Town, there are a few professed Adventists, but they make no efforts. There are two or three living brethren in Bradley. In Orrington a few brethren are striving to live. In Bangor, there are a few brethren who hold meetings every Sunday, and have occasional preaching. In Hermon a few still live and have some meetings. In Carmel, also, some are still pursuing and looking for the Lord. In North Searsport they have meetings twice a week, and the truth is spreading. I have also preached at Round Pond. There are some faithful and devoted brethren and sisters, who mean to gain the kingdom of God.

Adjourned to meet Sunday morning at 8 1-2 o'clock.

P.M. 2 1-2 o'clock, assembled and listened to a very lucid and able discourse from Dan. 8:14, by Elder L. L. Howard. It is worth publishing. Evening, 7 1-2 o'clock, preaching by Elder I. C. Wellcome, from Matt. 18:11. The subject was an important one and listened to with much attention. We wish it could have been more ably presented.

Sunday, 26th, A.M. 8 1-2 o'clock, conference was called to order by the chairman, and prayer offered by Elder L. L. Howard, after which reports of the Quarterly Conferences were given. Elder I. C. Wellcome gave a brief account of the recommendation, at the last year's session, of the annual conference, to divide the territory of Maine into several parts, and to hold quarterly conferences in each part, in pursuance of which, they had so done. We organized our first Quarterly Conference in the Western Central part of Maine, at Belgrade, in September last, and had an excellent meeting. There was a large attendance, and a deep impression made on the community, by the great and glorious truth of the coming kingdom of God. Our second session was held in Livermore, at the time of the great storm in January, and but few were present from abroad. But the Lord was with us and blessed his people. One was converted. We did not think best to hold one in April, but intend to have one next autumn.

Elder J. Partridge said:—We could not easily find a place to hold our Quarter Conference in Western Maine. We, however, had one in September, in Raymond, which resulted in good. Ministers were present, who were able to preach the word and bring our views out clearly before the people. God blessed the word. We now have two places where they wish it to be held.

Elder S. K. Partridge said:—We had our first Quarterly conference at South Hope in September. It was a good meeting indeed. God blessed our efforts. Our second was held at Round Pond, in January. It was an heavenly time—not so many preaching brethren as we wished. It was down in one corner on the sea-board. We design to hold another soon somewhere.

ADJOURNMENT.

Elder L. L. Howard moved that this conference adjourn to meet in September next, at the call of the secretary, pledging himself and Elder R. R. York to obtain a suitable place to convene. Seconded by I. Wright. The motion being put, Elder I. C. Welcome objected to such an adjournment to call an extra session of the conference, unless there was a possibility of some plan of operation being adopted, for concert of action, to promote the great work of promulgating the gospel of the kingdom. He would gladly aid conferences, campmeetings and general gatherings for such a work, but did not wish to embarrass the brethren to call an extra session of the State Conference, merely to meet and propose to do something by common consent, without some rule or system of action; but with a prospect of this, he would go for it. The prospect seemed to assume the form that a plan would be sought for and agreed on. The adjournment was made to meet in September next, at the call of the Secretary, after correspondence with Elders Howard and York.

The meeting then assumed the character of a love-feast, and the time was spent from 9 to 10 1-2 o'clock in speaking. It was a good season, and many warm testimonies for Christ and his truth were received. But it was evident that many of the once living children were far away from Christ, and had no good hope. Some were revived and strengthened, and others troubled about their backslidings, while others were fed by the way.

At 10 1-2 o'clock, Elder R. R. York preached a good sermon from Matt. 24:14, on the gospel of the kingdom, which was to be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations, and the end to follow.

P.M. Elder A. Ross preached a sermon from Luke 21:24, on Gentile times, and the kingdom of God. It was the most able discourse I ever heard on that subject. The congregations were very large and attentive, and we can but hope that the great Head of the church used it for the good of the people.

At 5 o'clock, Elder A. Ross preached again from Col. 2:15. This also was forcible and good, proving a blessing to those who heard. During the conference, Bro. Smiley, of Augusta, was baptized by Bro. T. Smith. Two meetings were also held at Youngtown, two miles distant. The spirit and good will of all who attended seemed to be one for the advancement of the truth, and the salvation of sinners; although some are yet fearful of forms and regulations. This discourages some. But let us be of good courage. The brethren and friends at Lincolnville treated us with great kindness and hospitality, and we pray that God may reward them with an abundant blessing.

One important item to our poor preachers connected with the meeting was overlooked. The expenses of their attending the meeting must have been nearly $40 out of their scanty pockets, and the congregations of the last day might have cheerfully contributed half that sum, had they had a hat to put in. We will not blame any of them for this. But it is the fruit of "common consent" principle. We will do better next time, brethren.

THOMAS SMITH, Chairman.
I. C. WELLCOME, Sec.

Lincolnville, Me., June 27, 1859.

☞ Slander is a reptile, whose venom is a thousand times more dangerous to society than the most poisonous serpent of an Asiatic jungle.

☞ Money, as a passion, should be treated like kettles: when they boil over, they should be taken off.

Correspondence.

From Bro. and Sr. D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

BRO. GRANT:—The prayer meeting at the Crisis office on Monday evening, June 27th, was one of interest to us. We met with quite a number that we had seen before. How rejoicing to any one who has been absent a long time, on returning to their old friends, to find them still interested in prayer and conference meetings. In what better way could an hour and a half possibly be spent by the church, once or twice a week, than to meet and pray one for another—singing songs of praise to God, and speaking of his love, power and goodness, long suffering and tender mercy, toward us? It is our humble opinion that every church that numbers three or four, ought to meet once a week in prayer meeting for their own good. It is possible that too many churches, who are surrounded with plenty of preaching, lightly esteem the privilege of prayer meeting, and by so doing, bring leanness upon their own souls.

This fact ought to be remembered by all our brethren visiting Boston, that a prayer meeting is held every Monday and Thursday evening at the Crisis office.

Sunday, July 3d, at Lincolnville. Here we found a crowded house full of old friends and brethren from different places. We enjoyed a good season with them. Our meeting on the 10th is to be at the same place. We learn that the conference held here by Bro. T. Smith, Welcome, Howard, and others, left a good impression on the minds of many. We visit a week more among our friends and brethren here, then leave for the Penobscot river, to attend an appointment on the 17th.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Camden, July 6th, '59.

From Eld. J. Blain.

BRO. GRANT:—I have spent a month in R. I., and been much cheered and encouraged, but have only time to inform friends that I expect to be in Boston again this week, and brethren wishing me to visit them can write me, for a month to come, at the Crisis office. JACOB BLAIN.

Fair Haven, Mass., July 4, '59.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Richmond, N. B., March 28th, 1859, of consumption, SUSANNAH S. RAYMOND, youngest daughter of Samuel and Magdalene Raymond, aged twenty-two years, nine months and thirteen days.

She professed religion in 1854, and was baptized in the spring of 1855, by Eld. A. Ross.

While struggling with the grim monster, she spoke words of warning to the unconverted portion of the family, requesting them to refrain from weeping for her, but to prepare to meet her, while to the rest she spoke words of consolation, saying the separation would not be long—soon the trumpet would sound and the dead be raised, and she would meet them.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

Also, in Woodstock, N. B., May 31st, 1859, of scarlet fever, ANNE E. RAYMOND, third daughter of George L. and Lydia Raymond, aged four years and two months.

"A rose has fallen, and withered lies
Beneath the cold, cold ground,
But it will rise and bloom again
When the last trump shall sound.

MARY J. RAYMOND.

My beloved husband, LAMBERT A. FELTON, of Marlboro, Mass., fell asleep in Jesus, June 10th, 1859, aged thirty-seven years, three months and two days.

His disease was consumption. He was a great sufferer much of the time for the past two years; yet he bore all without a murmur, and with such patience as is rarely witnessed. He often spoke of death with great composure, saying he should sleep in Jesus, and, on seeing me weep, he said, "don't weep, we shall meet again in the morning of the resurrection."

He gave directions concerning his funeral, and requested Eld. O. R. Fassett to preach a discourse on the resurrection, which he did, to a full house in the Methodist Episcopal church in this place.

He was a firm believer in the unconscious state of the dead, and the immediate coming of Christ. He wished these words inscribed on his gravestone "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

The following lines were sung around his grave.

Dearest husband, thou hast left us
Here in this dark world to mourn,
Yet one joy we still have left us,
Though thou never wilt return:
In the resurrection morning
We again thy face shall see;
Then our sorrow will be ended,
When we meet again with thee.

Now our hearts are filled with anguish,
Now we miss thy gentle voice,
But when Jesus shall awake thee,
That will make our hearts rejoice.
Now in Jesus thou art sleeping,
All thy sufferings now are o'er;
Angels now their watch are keeping
Till we meet to part no more.

Farewell, then, my dearest husband,
Till the last loud trump shall sound;
Then with joy we shall behold thee,
Though thou sleepest in the ground.
Farewell! though we're sad and lonely,
And our hearts with grief must swell;
But in Jesus thou art sleeping,
Farewell, husband, now farewell!

H. E. FELTON.

Died, in Chichester, June 20th, ANNIE S., daughter of Peter and Sarah V. Seavey, aged eight months. Also HIRAM, son of Peter Seavey, died April 26th, of consumption, aged 21 years and 7 months.

Bro. Hiram experienced the good religion of Jesus Christ, some months previous to his falling asleep. He was baptized by the writer of this notice when it was necessary to go through the ice to find the liquid tomb. It seemed to the many spectators who beheld the solemn scene, that it would be hardly possible for him to endure the ordinance, he was so feeble; but in waiting on the Lord, his strength was renewed according to the promise. He came out of the cold, icy grave rejoicing in God his Savior, with the assurance that he would be redeemed in a little while from death and the tomb, where he expected to rest in hope. While our afflicted Bro. and his family have been called to part with the eldest and youngest of their family, they sorrow not as others that have no hope.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The War in Europe.—The great Battle Fought.—Victory claimed by the Allies!

By the Steamer Vigo we have news from the seat of war to the 24th ult.

Russia was about to mobilize four corps d'armee.

A treaty is reported as having been concluded between Russia and Turkey. Russian influence was becoming strongly felt in Constantinople.

Prussia was about to move an army to the Rhine.

The Emperor of Austria had removed his head quarters to Valleido. It was believed that he had 280,000 troops on the Mincio.

The entire French force had passed the Montechiaro, and pushed a reconnaissance as far as Goito.

The Piedmontese had advanced towards Peschiera.

Napoleon had joined the camp.

It was believed that the basis proposed by Prussia for peace would not be acceptable to France, thereby involving Prussia in the war.

It is reported that Russia will unite with the "States" against the raising of a Hungarian Legion, and that Prussia threatens to assist in suppressing any insurrection in Hungary.

Prince Napoleon was on the borders of Modena.

Parliamentary proceedings are suspended until the Ministers of the new government are re-elected.

It is rumored that the new ministry will curtail naval expenditures.

Russia is reported to have concluded a treaty with Turkey, which strikes a blow at French and Austrian influence.

THE POSITION OF PRUSSIA.

BERLIN, Thursday. Prussia has demanded permission to march thirty-one thousand troops through Hanover to the Rhine between the first and fifth of July.

After remarking that the part which Prussia has to play just now is very complex, owing to her European and Germanic interests crossing each other at several points, the Daily News shows the meaning of the advance of Prussian troops to the Rhine. The Prussian government has announced its intention to interfere diplomatically for the restoration of peace, but it has not yet thought it time to propose a basis for pacification to France.

The advance of a Prussian army to the Rhine after a grave disagreement with France, such as the rejection of an offer of mediation, would have a seriousness which would be incontestible; but that is not the question. Much remains to be done before a case for the employment of Prussian troops can arise. Prussia arms in order that when the time for mediation comes she may interfere with effect.

THE WAR.

The following telegrams contain all that is known in regard to the great battle on the 24th of June.

NAPOLEON TO THE EMPRESS.

CARRIANA, June 25. It is impossible as yet to obtain the details of the battle of yesterday. The enemy withdrew last night. I have passed the night in the room occupied in the morning by the Emperor of Austria.

Gen. Niel has been appointed a Marshal of France.

June 26—11.30, A. M. The Austrians who had crossed the Mincio for the purpose of attacking us with their whole body, have been obliged to abandon their positions, and withdrew to the left bank of the river. They had blown up the bridge of Goito.

The loss of the enemy is very considerable, but ours is much less.

We have taken 30 cannon, more than 7000 prisoners, and 3 flags.

Gen. Niel and his corps d'armee have covered themselves with glory, as well as the whole army.

The Sardinian army inflicted great loss on the enemy, after having contended with great fury against superior forces.

It was inferred from the telegrams that the French army suffered so severely, that two days after the battle it was still unable to resume the offensive.

There were vague rumors of 10,000 to 12,000 French troops having been killed and wounded.

A message from Carriana announces that Napoleon on the day of the battle, was constantly in the hottest of the fire. Gen. Larrey, who accompanied him, had his horse killed under him.

The Moniteur says the battle will take the name of the Battle of Solferino.

The official Austrian Correspondence of the 27th of June, contains the following: The Emperor of Austria will soon return to Vienna on account of important business. The command-in-chief of the army, which is preparing for battle, is given to Gen. Hess.

Prince Napoleon arrived at Parma on the 25th, and was enthusiastically received.

Forty thousand men were embarking in Algeria for the Adriatic, and at Paris news was expected of the occupation of Venice by the French.

A dispatch from Berne says, that 3000 Piedmontese, with 700 volunteers had arrived at Tirano, and advanced towards Bormio, at the foot of the Stelvio Pass.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says it was expected that another battle would be fought before the siege operations would come on.

Patriotic demonstrations by the working classes in Paris were universal.

Large reinforcements for the French army were constantly quitting France for Italy.

A dispatch from Vienna says that the attack of the French on Venice and Taglimento, about forty-five miles northeast of Venice, was expected to take place on the 28th of June.

The Austrian reserves, numbering 175,000, were on their way to Italy. They are considered the flower of the Austrian army. Not a man of them has served less than eight years.

The Austrians have sunk five small vessels, a large frigate and three steamers in the port of Malmocco, to prevent the passage of the French squadron.

LATEST.

PARIS, Tuesday. Generals Auger, Forlez, Dieu and L'Admirault, were wounded slightly at Solferino. There will be a Te Deum next Sunday in all the churches of France, in celebration of the victory. The Empress and all the great bodies of State attend the Te Deum at Notre Dame.

TURIN, Tuesday. An official bulletin today contains some details of the battle of the 24th. The Piedmontese were principally engaged at San Martino—performed prodigies of valor, and took formidable positions, but could not hold them, owing to a fearful tempest. The Piedmontese drove the Austrians from San Martino, retaining five of their cannon. Serious loss is admitted.

An English fleet of 20 sail, is said to be cruising off Venice.

The Gazette de France says that preparations are making to get together within two months a force of 450,000 men.

Great naval preparations are said to be going on at Cherbourg.

PARIS, Wednesday. The Moniteur of this morning contains the following:

CARRIANA, June 28. Our troops have passed the Mincio without hesitation, the enemy having withdrawn.

PAPAL STATES.

A dispatch from Rome announces that Ferrara, Ravenna, Forli, Ancona and other towns have been replaced under the authority of the Pope, by intervention of the Pontifical troops.

The officers who commanded the Swiss troops in the affair at Perugia, it is said, are to be promoted.

AUSTRIA.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times asserts that for the last ten years matters have been so terribly mismanaged in Austria, that it will be almost miraculous if the empire escapes dissolution.

STILL LATER.

By the arrival of the Steamers City of Baltimore and Adelaide we have London and Liverpool dates to the 30th ult.

There is nothing of importance from the seat of war.

France was preparing to move an army on the Rhine.

The Zouaves are said to be much cut up, and the 1st Chasseurs of Algeria terribly treated. Four Generals were wounded and one killed. Fourteen thousand beds have been commanded at Milan for the wounded.

DOMESTIC.

YELLOW FEVER IN RIO JANEIRO.—The yellow fever is worse in Rio Janeiro than it has ever been known. People are dying by the thousand; its devastations among the shipping are unparalleled. One English brig has buried five captains. The sixth was down and not expected to survive.

AWFUL STORM ON THE COAST OF BRAZIL.—A letter from Pernambuco of April 30th says, a most fearful storm swept the southern coast of Brazil on the 13th inst. It is represented to have been terrible in the extreme. The whole coast from Bahia southward, is lined with wrecks. The damage is enormous, and the loss of life is frightful. A Brazilian frigate went down with over 400 souls on board—only 40 were saved.

☞ Late letters from Ireland state that revivals of religion are now in progress in the North of Ireland, remarkably resembling in their main features, the great work of grace in this country. Two eloquent Irish Presbyterian preachers, Rev. Drs. Cooke and Edgar, are coming to this country to secure aid for the missions among the Roman Catholics of Ireland. Late letters from France also mention the commencement of extended revivals in various parts of that country.

ARREST OF BIBLE DISTRIBUTERS IN SPAIN.—The Correspondancia Autocrafa of the 14th announces a fact which will probably create some sensation in England. Two agents of the English Protestant Bible Society have been arrested at Chichana, and lodged in prison. A Number of Bibles in their possession have been seized.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

The Lord willing, a Grove Meeting will be held in Auburn, July 24th, near the residence of Mr. Norris L. Robie. Bro John G. Hook will be present to preach the word. The grove is about three miles from Willson's Crossing, between Derry and Londonderry depot, and about two miles from Bro. A. H. Welsh, on the stage road between Manchester, N. H., and Haverhill, Mass.

N. L. ROBIE.

The Lord willing, Bro Bishop will hold a Grove Meeting at the same place, the first Sunday in August. N. L. ROBIE.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. HEALY,
Committee, R. STARKS,
E. M'CULLOCK.

☞ Providence permitting, there will be a grove meeting in Southbridge, Sunday, July 17, near the brick shool house, in the District of Bro. Almond Streeter. H. PRATT.

Notice.

A meeting is expected to commence at North Searsport, Maine, on Saturday the sixth day of August next, at ten o'clock, A. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Eld. John Billings is expected to attend.

W. NICHOLS.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. PARRY.

July 2d, 1859.

TIME OF THE WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING CHANGED TO AUGUST 29.—This change will accommodate two other campmeetings and not discommode us as much as it will accommodate either of them. To be good neighbors is the way to have good neighbors. Our Methodist brethren, that hold their annual campmeeting in the same place, very much wish to commence their meeting the 22d of August, on account of their other arrangements. After consulting Bro. Ladd and others, I think it best to commence our meeting August 29th.

HIRAM MUNGER,
For the Committee.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

"THE PROPHETIC CHART."—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John engraved on stone. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. Folded 10 cts., postage [illegible]. Address [illegible], Philadelphia, Pa.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday,..... July 17th

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2nd, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best.

MILES GRANT.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 22d, Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 6th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual. M. G.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—

Bristol, Ct........................ July 17th
Wallingford........................ July 24th
Cheshire........................... July 31st
Fairhaven.......................... Aug 7th
Southington........................ Aug. 14th
Cheshire........................... Aug. 21st

S. S. BREWER.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at North Herman, Me., July 31st.

Providence permitting, I will preach in Poultney, Vt., Lord's days July 17th and 24th, and during the intervening week, where Brn. may appoint.

MILES GRANT.

Bro. P. H. Lawrence appoints to preach in Melbourn, C. East, at 10 o'clock, July 17th.

At 3 o'clock, of the same day, at the Lawrence School House, Melbourn Ridge.

C. H. Perkins appoints to preach at
Lynn Dye House.................... July 17th
South Reading..................... July 24th

Bro. B. P. Manning appoints to preach in Danbury, where Bro. C. Ford may appoint, July 17th

Bro. D. R. & Sr. M.S. Mansfield appoint to preach at Orrington, Me.................... July 17th

I will preach as follows:—
Vernon, Vt.,...................... Sunday, July 17th
Northfield, Mass.................. July 20th
as Bro. Gage may arrange.
Goshen, Mass...................... Sunday, July 24th
Springfield, Mass................. July 27th
as Bro. S. F. Otis may arrange.
Palmer, Mass., (eve.)............. July 29th
Worcester, Mass., (eve.).......... July 20th
Holden, Mass...................... Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H...................... Sunday, Aug. 7th

I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me.

S. W. BISHOP.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Orrington, Me., (Advent Chapel)... July 17th
Surrey, Me., (school house)....... July 24th
Carmel, Me., (meeting house)...... Aug. 7th

Eld. J. G. Smith appoints to preach in
Warner,........................... July 17th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

D. Coggswell—All right—pays to 246.

My post office address is East Boston, Mass.

JOHN S. WHITE.

Cash Receipts.

N Allen 234, $2.48, J Young 234, $1.33, D Newton 202, 75 cts.

D Campbell, 212, A Lee 211, H Curtis 211, Mrs. T Smith 212, T Ormsby 212, M S Small 212—50 cts. each.

J Romery 225, E Leonard 242, C Goodwin 224, J Q Moulton, Em. Taft 225, Ralph Smith 226, J O Sweet 208, P H Lawrence 218, Al. Gleason 226, J Hall 220, L Dudley 208, J M Dodge 234, G W Whiting 234, J W Everson 226, J Nold 234—$1 00 each.

E O Banks 251, B Gardiner 240, B Hopkins 234, B Sampson 208, N C Thurston 208, R Willard 244, N L Willard 251, W Fernold 210, A Lucas 252, E Brown 252, S P Whitney 252, Mrs. E Graves 208—$2 00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—G W Lougee 63 cts, E P Robinson 25 cts., M F Knowlton $1 09, L E Chase 18 cts., C W Sperry $1.09, A Gleason 24 cts, M A Small 42 cts, J G Smith $1 18, D Newton 25 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more, books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts. [illegible] per dozen. [illegible]

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. [illegible] $1.50.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single, [illegible]

Words of Warning. 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that We are [illegible] as low, or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular [illegible] connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very [illegible] work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $6.00 per hundred,—8 cts. single. Postage 2 cents.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genneseo, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Sheppard.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $6.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 16 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts., cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 18mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts., $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth, by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State, by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Leaflet. 4—Key of Truth, 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS,
Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 128 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three [illegible] that can be separated for distribution. [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another; two, This One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, Wondrous Love; five, Abundant Grace; [illegible] by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof [illegible] and sin are to end [illegible] by the [illegible] destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment [illegible] and arranged. By J. Blain. Price [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, [illegible] as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, [illegible] Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Wells, [illegible] Cruden's Condensed Concordance. [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"Light Ahead!"

[illegible] pil, praise to Jesus,
Darkness cannot always reign;
Light is sown for all the righteous,
For the upright joy remains.

Cold neglect may chill life's fountain,
Causing bitter tears to flow;
Waves of sorrow, care and trouble,
Leave their furrows on the brow.

Ways unknown thy feet may travel—
Paths of darkness so obscure,
That with reason's light to guide thee,
Ye can find no open door.

Providence may frown upon thee,
Health may fail and fears oppress;
Lonely, weary, sad, desponding,
Vainly ye may sigh for rest.

But amid the gloom and darkness
Ye have yet a work to do!
Sit not idle, still press onward,
In faith and hope thy way pursue.

Turn thine eye from earth to heaven,
Brood not over present woes:
Prayer will open heaven's portals,
Prayer will bring thee sweet repose.

Light ahead will soon be given,
To repay thy anxious toil:
Light ahead! yes, trust in heaven,
Trust and labor, weary soul.

Look to Christ, the light of mortals,
He will give thee words of cheer:
Ask of him the Spirit's guidance,
Till in glory ye appear.

M. J. M.

For the Crisis.

Familiar Advice to a Christian Friend.

MARRIAGE.—(BY REQUEST.)

* * * Marriage is honorable in all. It is man's natural and happiest condition. It is about the only relic of Paradise which we have left to us here. It is used to illustrate the most precious relations, such as that between God and his ancient people, and between Christ and his church. Marriage scenes have consequently ever been regarded as occasions of joy; and hence the full fruition of blessing reserved for the weary and tearful bride of Christ, is represented as being introduced by the marriage supper of the Lamb, when all separations and absences shall be concluded—when the heavenly Bridegroom shall come again, and they that are ready shall go in to the marriage, and the door be shut.

But what is marriage, which is so honorable and so delightful? Is it the mere pronouncing, in the presence of witnesses, the vows of affection and faithfulness to each other? Is it the mere dwelling in one habitation, the bearing of one name, the enjoyment of mutual rights and privileges? Is it a mere mercenary union, prompted by ambition, covetousness, or lust? Is it a silken tie, that shortly becomes an iron fetter,—a wedlock for a month, and then a padlock for a lifetime? Nay, if it were any or all of these, God had never ordained it, nor used it as the symbol of the holy, the illustration of the pure.

There is a class of persons now quite numerous, who speak much of "affinities," "passional attraction," "sympathy," etc., and who denounce the marriage institution as in opposition to their instincts and impulses. Now this is but an illustration of the old truth that fallen human nature can see wrongs, but cannot make them right. These persons are usually those who, from intercourse with familiar spirits, have given to their "sympathies" and "affinities" an unnatural delicacy and susceptibility, and hence they are inclined to be led by them.

But, after all, affinities may be only momentary. Grasping a bubble always breaks it. And mere magnetic "affinities" are but a bubble. And when these tender sympathies are outraged or satiated by animal gratification, then there comes in a loathing that sometimes is tenfold stronger than the former love. Hence a large portion of these "affinity" matches will ultimately result in misery and torment, as much more intense than ordinary matrimonial infelicity as this affection and sympathy is more sensitive and susceptible than are healthy affections.

The same remarks apply to what are usually termed "love matches," and which are proverbial for soon growing cold. They are frequently simply matches of blind animal affinities. The parties confound love with desire. They are essentially different. Desire may be gratified, satiated and turned to loathing by the possession of the desired object. When the repulsion will be proportioned to the intensity of the previous attraction, they will hate more than they loved. But love is only fed by the possession of its object. It is not satiated like desire, and it suffereth, if need be, long, and yet is kind.

True marriage, then, though it includes all proper "passional attractions," must rest upon a broader basis, and rise to a loftier height than is known to the mere votaries of "affinity." I may imagine myself to feel a perfect "affinity" for any one who could cast over me a magnetic [illegible] any foolish girl who has been [illegible] by the strong will and serpent-[illegible] of a [illegible] villain will [illegible] "attractions" until the bubble breaks in shame and misery at last. Can two walk together except they be agreed. This is the great question that, when properly applied and answered, will regulate all matrimonial affairs. * * * * *

In contemplating marriage, my friend, you need to elevate yourself by God's grace above the spheres of interest, of base motive, and of transitory impulse. You need to look at the matter from a point where self will be silent, and right and duty will be paramount. Do not understand me that self is not to be regarded, or that affection is to be rudely cast aside. You are to get so far above self that you can view self properly, and estimate its importance, its value, and its necessities calmly and truly, and by weighing every passion, desire and disposition, you are faithfully and deliberately to decide as to what is best and what is right. You are also, in your survey and choice of a partner, to view him from the same point of observation. Unblinded by the hallucinations of sympathy and magnetic attraction, you are first to consider, "Is it right, is it prudent, is it safe for me to love this person?" You are to answer all these questions carefully before you venture to unbar the heart's deep recesses, or enkindle the fires of affection within its inner shrine.

Starting thus in the calm light of reason, you are to inquire, "What am I? What are my tastes, my desires, my ambitions, my aspirations? What do I need, what do I want? What do I desire to be? What will be my best course to attain my ends? What will be right?" Again, "What is he? Do I know him? His character, disposition, tastes, inclinations and pursuits? Is he sincere? Is his character transparent? Shall I learn all his excellencies before marriage, and his faults afterwards? Is he trying to put the best side out? Is he as anxious, yea, more anxious to be good and right and true, than he is to have me think him so? Has he higher thoughts than those of interest and inclination? Is duty above all? Can I respect him? His acts, his head, his heart? The wife must reverence her husband? Can I reverence him? Is there any thing about his character which inspires respect? The husband is the head of the family, and of the wife. Can he be my head? Can I yield my judgment to his? Is his superior to my own? Is he a person to whom I can safely confide the direction of my course in life? Will he love me when pain and feebleness and infirmity come upon me? Will he bear with my faults that I know I have? Would he worry me if he knew them all as I know them? Is he deceived in me? Does he think more of me than my more intimate friends do? Does he think more of me now than he will by and by, when he sees my faults, knows my habits, and is acquainted with my failings? Would my union with him be for his good, for mine, for ours? Will it be right?

These questions should be calmly and reasonably answered. Evasion is useless. Deception is worse than useless, as it can only be temporary. Blindness will not avail. These questions must be answered in the calmness of self-examination and deliberation, else, if forgotten now, they may come up again for an answer when the eyes are dimmed with bitter tears of sorrow, and the heart is filled with useless regrets and self-reproaches. If in this spirit you seek to know the way of duty, you will feel the need of divine direction.

Marriage is a momentous matter. It involves the destinies of ourselves and of others. It bears upon the events of time and of eternity. Our likeness to Christ, our mental, moral and physical development, are all to a greater or less extent involved. Hence we should look well to it.

With a few, celibacy is a matter of choice. To such, if right motives rule the mind, and right affections sway the heart, it may be, indeed, a state of "single blessedness." There are fields of usefulness open. There are abundant opportunities for doing good. And such persons need never lack for friends among the true and good. There is also a kind of independence connected with this state, which, when joined with unobtrusive good nature, is pleasant to its possessor and to others. But yet to most, this is not the happiest, and would not be the most useful life. The unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, i. e., she may if she will. The married has often cares and trials, and pains and sorrows, which are unknown to others. Still there is one thing that compensates for them all. That is love. Love, deep, steady, strong, pure, unchanging.

"Some one to love," is the desire of most hearts. Some tower of strength around which the heart's affections may entwine themselves, never to be removed; but there to send forth their green leaves and fair flowers, amid all the storms and sunshine of life; ever clinging about the one object, whether in the stateliness of its strength, or in the prostration of its decay, being planted once for all, and covering the wreck and desolateness of the ruined structure with the same fair foliage that adorned its pristine strength. And when there gushes up in the heart this deep well-spring of affection; when there rises in the soul this unutterable yearning [illegible] and holy sympathy; when the heart longs to have its love requited, and can only rest when its longings are gratified,—then, when providence opens the door, and duty points the way, I am not one who would forbid to marry. Nevertheless, I should then counsel prudence, else heedless haste may defeat the object, and the heart's love be turned to wormwood; and so the indiscretion of an hour become the mistake of a lifetime, and the haste of youth fill up maturer years with vain regrets.

With these general considerations, let me for awhile direct your thoughts to the special problem of married life—"Can two walk together except they be agreed?"

When married, you chose a companion to travel with you to your journey's end. And though poor company may be sometimes better than none, yet bad company is certainly worse. Your lives are thenceforth to run in one channel. Will they run smoothly? Can they mingle? Can you grow to each other, and that without turning aside from rectitude and holiness? The question is not whether you can enjoy yourselves together for an evening's chat? For who cannot? Nor is it whether, by putting the best qualities out and the others inside, you can seem agreeable to each other? For this is easy till the mask falls off, and the real character is developed, as it most certainly will be. Nor is the question whether you are miserable when separated; for nothing is more common than for those who are miserable when separated to be wretched when united, because some persons will be miserable any way in a little while. Nor is the question whether you can so correct some of your faults that you can live together, maintaining the proprieties and decencies of life, and abstaining from open and foolish outbreaks; for many do this to whom wedlock is still only padlock. But the question is, whether your two courses are so similar, your tastes so much alike, your purposes so nearly allied and matured, that they can be readily accommodated to each other, and made to harmonize for future life. I say matured, for the choice of eighteen is often the plaything of twenty-five, and the plaything of twenty-five sinks into contempt at thirty. Our minds should progress, and if we start even, both must progress, or one will be left behind. So there should be a sort of maturity of desire and taste, that we may know what we want.

* * * Let me call your attention to some few points on which I think it exceedingly essential that christians when marrying should consider. I will call them points of union, because persons united in these will rarely differ essentially in other things.

1. They should both be christians; not professors merely, but children of God. You start to travel life's journey with a husband. Your are purposing to gain eternal glory, no matter what else you lose. You have promised to love some one else more than father, mother, husband or friend. Your mightiest energies are to be devoted to laying hold on eternal life. You cannot, then, well travel the journey with one whose feet are on the downward road to death. Suppose him to be moral, kind, and indulgent. The most you can say then is, he will not hinder me. Aye, but you need help. Some one to bear your burdens—some one to wipe your tears—some one to point you from the shades of adversity to the hills of hope, and from the valley of sighs to the mountain of singing. You need this—can you marry a man who will not be to you a helper in the heavenly way? Besides they who do not help often hinder unconsciously. He that gathereth not with us scattereth abroad. There is the example telling all the time in the wrong direction. Then you are to reverence your husband; can you do it if he does not reverence God? He is to be your head; but can you submit to his headship if he refuses that of Christ? Could you feel free in such a state? Would there not be a constant diffidence and reserve about those deeper secrets of the heart, which of all others concern our spiritual progress most, and should be especially matters of free and sympathetic mutual conversation. Besides, can you live in a prayerless home—in a prayerless family? Would it be right to do so? An unconverted husband would not erect a family altar; would he be willing for you to do it? Would you dare to do it? Would you not feel it a cross too great to be borne?

There is, however, another thought: "I may convert him." This is an old plea. When put in by a suitor, I think it an evidence of hypocrisy. When urged by the affection that pleads within, I can only regard it as a pleasing hallucination of love. I may convert him—true, but I may not, and he may lead me astray. This is the case, I think, at least in eight instances in ten. The fact is, it is right for a man to serve God. This duty comes before marriage or any thing else. God has always frowned upon those of his people who have turned aside to marry strangers. I could relate instances of this kind that would chill your heart. I know of no instance recorded in all the Bible where a godly person marrying an ungodly one ever led them to the right path. There are multitudes of cases where an ungodly partner has seduced the godly one away into secret or open rebellion against God. If you can [illegible] usually better on shore than in the water; be careful then how you plunge in.

The thought of marriage contracted between heirs of life and death is to me sad in the extreme. Together they walk, and yet not together. One is a stranger here, the other a dweller in earth. One is bound for the city of God, the other for the lake of fire. One is a child of God the other a child of Satan. What fellowship can there be between the two? their hearts are disunited, their hopes and aims are divergent, their destinies are as far asunder as heaven and hell. Two persons united while in sin, one afterwards brought to Christ seem different; the band must not then be broken—it is sacred; henceforth the believer must bear the cross and seek to save the other, though often in bondage, and through much tribulation, must still struggle on towards the promised rest. This is a trying scene; but to see persons deliberately join themselves to those who are bound to destruction, tie their boats to a sinking ship, and so henceforth wear out their lives in ineffectual regrets and useless endeavors—this is sad in the extreme. And this is the usual result of such unions; hence the injunction of Paul to marry "Only in the LORD,"—would that it were seasonably heeded and obeyed by christians.

The close of such a course as I have alluded to is separation. Two shall be in one bed, the one shall be taken the other left. Unequal yokings are not forever; at the judgment seat some must take the right hand and some the left. Must we part? Must I bid my friends an eternal adieu? Let it be now and not then, let no bond grow strong about me now if it must be rudely sundered in that day. Nay, let the separation be here rather than there. Let my friends be friends for eternity. True it is that they that shall attain the world to come and the resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage. Sexual relations and earthly attachments shall cease, but shall the sympathies and loves that have been begotten in the heart by the Holy Ghost then expire? Shall those who have not only been husbands and wives—being thus "one flesh," but who also have been joined to the Lord as brothers and sisters in "one spirit," ever forget their mutual toils, conflicts and blessings? Shall they not look back over their path which was as a shining light, shining more and more until the perfect day, and bless the God that gave them to be each other's companions in tribulation, and to walk hand in hand along the brightening way? Would such an association and such a retrospect be so far preferable to the one afforded by an opposite course as to furnish an abundant reward for all the sorrows and trials that might result from a strict adherence to the words of the apostle—"Only in the Lord?"

I need not allude to the minor trials incident to this unequal yoking—the going to meeting and the staying at home—the different classes of company and friends, both of whom are sometimes disquieted; and a thousand other little vexations that attend a dissimilarity of purpose in this respect. Enough has been said, I think, to show that the husband of a christian should be a christian himself.

2. The husband and wife should both steadfastly determine to do right. There should be no uncertainty, or trickery in either. First of all they should be honest with each other,—they should have full confidence in each other's integrity and uprightness. Marriage is regarded by many as a sharp bargain, in which that one is the most fortunate who gets the best end of it. This is very absurd. And yet it is exceedingly common. There is many a young foolish girl who would marry if they could, to-day, the most intelligent and learned man that they could find. The only result would be mutual infelicity. Minds should be matched. So another with the manners of clowns, and the tastes of boors and loafers would be glad to obtain the hand and heart of the most refined, and intellectual lady in the land. But such an union could only bring about disgust and misery. And this would soon be mutual, and both would bitterly rue the rash and fatal act. All deception in these matters is grievous sin against ourselves and others. However another may be deceived by us, the whole will eventually recoil upon our own heads. Honesty, then, a fair looking of all difficulties and faults in the face, a weighing of all the questions involved in the whole case, is an absolute duty, from which we cannot at all excuse ourselves. Honesty with each other will beget honesty towards all; honesty in business, in friendship, and in everything. Then, and only then, can a husband and a wife respect each other as they should. They should have good grounds for firm faith in each other's honest integrity of purpose, and this will often excuse many a seeming fault in those we love.

3. The husband and wife should have similar views of the great ends of life. What is this? With one it is money,—with another fame; with another fashion; with another luxury; with another ease and selfish enjoyment; with another all these things combined. Could you join your hand with one who lived for such purposes as these? A profession of religion is no security against the existence of these motives. Indeed, in some cases that profession is merely a veil to hide them. Many a profession of religion has been made, the sole object of which, as evidenced by the individuals subsequent course, was to secure the heart, hand and fortune of some young christian who was ignorant of these wiles of the devil. Life has a wondrous object.

"Life is real,—Life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal."

Nay, the end of life is life eternal. This is but the straight and narrow gateway—that, the lofty and glorious temple.

You have started to run the race for eternal life. This is more to you than all the world beside. This more than anything else is the object of your life. To receive the gift of God, to obtain the grace of Christ, to have eternal fellowship with the father of spirits, and to have him command upon you "the blessing, even life forever more." Now if you ever have a companion of your heart and soul, it must be one whose views are in all these things like your own. Often have you traveled with a stranger sitting by your side, and though on the same seat you had different destinations, objects and hopes, and you were strangers still. So many a wife and husband are strangers, and perhaps always will be. They have some common interests, but the deep, hallowed and glorious joys and hopes of eternal life are to one the idlest of baubles, and to the other more precious than all the treasures of the Orient. To walk together we must be agreed and press steadily to the one great and glorious goal.

4. The husband and wife should have such established principles, and such reasons for them that, however they may differ, they may have a disposition to respect each other's judgment, and especially is this true in matters of religion. There may be honest differences of opinion, and then persons may agree to differ till they can see alike. But if their differences be those of partizan prejudice or sectarian bigotry, or shallow-pated scepticism, then discords will be perpetual and unendurable. There should be from the first a full, frank and honest understanding regarding these things, and thus endless bickerings and strifes may be avoided. For if the differences are serious and radical, it is far better to remain asunder than to be forever tugging at the opposite ends of a galling chain.

5. Worldly prudence in pecuniary matters is not to be forgotten in such an alliance as this. It may be I am prejudiced in regard to this subject, but my own enjoyments in the paths of lowliness, sometimes verging close upon the margin of poverty, have convinced me that no one who loves and serves God need be unhappy for want of riches. Nevertheless, we must live, and the order of divine appointment is to work and then to eat. You are to calculate with reference to this arrangement. Love is very pleasant,—food and raiment are quite as needful to complete the sum of happiness. * * * *

One thing more in this connection. Can you, and can he live within your income, however small? Or is it a rule with one or both to spend all you can get? If you must have luxury, fine raiment, and gay style whether you have money or not,—you will soon have neither cash nor credit. And if he is of this disposition you will have constant trouble. If you can both economize and plan, and be dilligent, then there is food and raiment for you, no doubt.

Besides, there is also the opposite extreme of penury. Few husbands are happy whose wives grudge them the food they eat, and few wives are happy whose husbands grudge them the clothes they wear, the pence they spend or the charities they bestow. You feel for the poor. You wish to relieve the destitute. You desire to exemplify that pure religion and undefiled before God and the father, which is to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep yourself unspotted from the world. Now, to do this will be the joy of your life, and God's blessing will be upon you while you do it. But with an unsympathizing and niggardly husband, you will be perpetually in trouble and vexation on this score. You must restrict your sympathies and your efforts, and live only for him. Be sure your marriage will materially cripple your usefulness and restrict your ability to do good; or else strengthened by the supporting arm of a generous and noble husband, emboldened by his confidence and his love, you will go forth mighty in divine strength to do good in a wider sphere, and serve God in a fuller sense than ever before. You will have new trials and cares, but with them will come new joys and blessings. Over your path shall shine the radiant light of love, and for you shall beam at last the glories of an unsetting sun. * * *

The time is short. It remaineth that those that rejoice should be as though they rejoiced not, and those that weep as though they wept not, and those that marry as though they married not, for the fashion of this world passeth away. There is a higher end before our minds. Earthly attachments are temporal; that is eternal. If we keep the eternal full in view the temporal will be in its proper place. If the eternal is forgotten, the temporal is all wrong.

I commend you, then, to God. In all your ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct your steps. I pray God that whatever your lot may be, it may be full of [illegible] [illegible] your path shall shine more and more until the perfect day.

And so, when all the toils and tears of earth are done, may you and I, with all those that we have taken near our hearts and made to dwell in the sanctuaries of our affections, be brought at last to dwell in an unbroken circle among the pure and the holy in the better land.

Your brother in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

New York, Dec. '58.

Selections.

[Translated from the Greek, for the Register, by N. S. F.]

Morning Hymn.

Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace,
Good will among men!

We praise Thee,
We sing hymns to Thee,
We bless Thee,
We glorify Thee,
We worship Thee,
By the Great High Priest,—
Thee the very God,
The unbegotten One,
The alone Unapproachable,—
For Thy great glory!

O Lord, heavenly King,
God, Father Almighty,
O Lord God,
The Father of Christ,—
Of the Lamb without spot,
That taketh away the sin of the world,—
Receive our prayer,
[Thou] who sittest upon the cherubim,
For thou alone art holy!

Thou art the only Lord,
O Jesus, the Christ of the God
Of every creature that is born—
[The Christ] of our King!
Through whom unto thee be glory,
Honor and reverence!

Evening Hymn.

We praise Thee,
We sing hymns to Thee,
We bless Thee
For Thy great glory,
O Lord King,
The Father of Christ,—
Of the Lamb without spot,
That taketh away the sin of the world!

Praise becometh Thee,
The hymn becometh Thee,
Glory becometh Thee,
O God and Father,
By the Son,
In the all-holy Spirit,
For ever and ever! Amen.

I Can't.

Now that is a mighty small word, yet it is bigger than a mountain, in the way of a great many folks. Why don't you do something? O, I can't! Why not! I can't. Now, you poor mortal, the great giant of a "Can't" isn't much after all. He looks now, higher than Haman's gallows, and bigger than ten Goliaths, but then, come to face him with a little sling and a smooth stone, called "I will," and he drops headlong on the ground. And as you come up where he is, he grows small until he isn't bigger than Tom Thumb.

O, you poor faint-hearted soul, just kick that miserable little, sneaking, contemptible "can't out of doors. Then keep that good fellow "I can" in his place, and another little fellow called "TRY" to help him, and you'll get along finely. Come hustle him out of doors. He's a moth and a curse, worse than a drone bee. A good for nothing lazy little vagabond. He makes you feel like a sneak, mope like a dunce, and act like a fool. "I can't," "I can't," out with you, you whining, canting little reptile, and make room for your betters. Come in "TRY," "WILL," make yourselves at home and help this poor soul along.

H. L. H.—Christian Messenger.

Simplicity of Dress.

Female loveliness never appears to so good advantage as when set off with simplicity of dress. No artist ever decks his angels with towering feathers and gaudy jewelry; and our dear human angels, if they would make good their title to that name, should carefully avoid ornaments which properly belong to Indian squaws and African princes. These tinselries may serve to give effect on the stage or upon a ball room floor; but in daily life there is no substitute for the charm of simplicity. A vulgar taste is not to be disguised with gold or diamonds. The absence of a true taste and refinement of delicacy, cannot be compensated for by the possession of the most princely fortune. Mind measures gold, but gold cannot measure mind. Through dress the mind may be read, as through the delicate tissue the lettered page. A modest woman will dress modestly; a really refined and intellectual woman will bear the marks of careful selection and faultless taste.—Exchange.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Consumption.

As all admit that consumption is a general disease involving the whole body, it would seem that every element was needed, and that to get a full supply of every element in a natural way, in a safe way, and in due proportion, the best plan is to get up a good appetite and a good digestion; then eat, and drink, and breathe the best of every thing, meat, bread, water, air. That this has proved happily efficient in multitudes of cases, there is various proof, strong as of any fact in nature, but the folly of man is such, that in nine cases out of ten, he will "take" any thing else, every thing else, how horrible soever it may be, sooner than meat, and bread, and water, and air.

The ignorance or the perversity of the human mind is such, that in consumptive diseases, the intelligent physician has to ransack all nature to find arguments to induce his patient to expose himself sufficiently to out door [illegible] of ten, there is such an insane dread of "taking cold," that the patient hugs the stove, and—death at the same time, or hurries off to a southern climate, where the atmosphere is loaded with dampness, and the more deadly miasm, the emanations from rotting leaves and wood which cover every inch of soil, instead of going where the air is too cold for decay or for holding moisture, hence must be the purest, and most nutritious in all nature.

There must be something in consumptive disease which infatuates the mind with error, or warps it by delusions. It would seem that any man at a small remove from idiocy, might know that pure air was the best for breathing, in all forms of sickness; and yet within two or three years, a large number of newspaper editors lent themselves to the advocacy of "medicated inhalation" for the cure of consumption, and other diseases of the lungs and throat; the convincing argument on the part of the Herald, Tribune, and Times, being advertisements at the rate of two or three hundred dollars a piece. Against printing a mere advertisement, we say nothing; but we do reprobate the recklessness and the folly of any editor who lends himself to be the tool of design or ignorance. Even so staid and respectable a paper as the Commercial Advertiser, lent itself to the propagation of the delusion, by certificates and otherwise, of the wonderful efficacy of medicated inhalation in diseases of the throat and lungs; the result was, to send their confiding readers, in crowds, to breathe impure air, at the rate of twenty-five dollars a month for the privilege. Day after day, and week after week, the city was flooded with advertisements in the penny press, five columns long, in laudations of the treatment, until "every body went there for every thing;" and finally, as we personally know, some men were set to breathing medicated air for diarrhœa and dysentery. And what is the history of to-day? The Boanerges of inhalation has long since left the city. The very name of "medicated inhalation" had become such a stench in the nostrils of the people, that for sometime previous to his departure, the silver sign had been removed from the door, and the occasional advertisement of five lines long, instead of five columns, never mentioned the once cabalistic words.

Let it be remembered, in conclusion, that "consumption," in the usual acceptation of the term, is a destruction of the substance of the lungs, and in proportion as they are destroyed, is less air consumed, hence the great need, that what air is breathed, should be the purest possible, just as if a man has less food given him than the system needs, the most certain plan of protracting life, is for him to arrange that the food which he does consume, should be of the most nutritious kind that can be had.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Ways of Shortening Life.

Wearing of thin shoes and cotton stockings on damp nights, and in cool, rainy weather.

Sleeping on feather beds in seven-by-nine rooms, without ventilation at the top of the windows, and especially with two or more persons in the same unventilated bedroom.

Surfeiting on hot and very stimulating dinners. Eating in a hurry, without half masticating your food, and eating heartily before going to bed every night, when the mind and body are exhausted by the toils of the day and the evening.

Marrying in haste, and getting an uncongenial companion, and living the remainder of life in mental dissatisfaction. Cultivating jealousy and domestic broils, and being always in a mental ferment.

Allowing the love of gain to absorb our minds, so as to leave no time to attend to our health. Following an unhealthy occupation because money can be made by it.

Contriving to keep in a continual hurry about something or nothing. Giving way to fits of anger.

Being irregular in all your habits of eating and sleeping; going to bed at midnight, and getting up at noon. Eating too much and too many kinds of food, and that which is too highly seasoned.

THE EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.—The Dublin Medical Press asserts that the pupils of the Polytechnic School in Paris, have recently furnished some curious statistics bearing on tobacco. Dividing the young gentlemen of that college into two groups—the smokers and non-smokers—it shows that the smokers have proved themselves in the various competitive examinations far inferior to the others. Not only in the examinations on entering the school are the smokers in a lower rank, but in the various ordeals that they have to pass through in the year, the average rank of the smokers had constantly fallen, and not inconsiderably, while the men who did not smoke enjoyed a cerebral atmosphere of the clearest kind.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..............1.00
For a single copy 3 months..................50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months.22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis is [illegible], quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 202. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 1859. | VOL. IX. NO. 21.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER V.

Does the doctrine of the immortality of a class accord with a just philosophy, and with the sentiments of humanity?

The present and concluding chapter of my prolonged argument must be somewhat miscellaneous. I must touch briefly the supposed metaphysical proofs of man's immortality; a theological argument, or the doctrine of salvation; the supposed reformatory design of all punishment; and the questions, What is benevolent to man? and, What is worthy of God?

§ 1. The ontological proof of a future life.

The metaphysical argument for the soul's immortality is the lineal descendant of the Grecian philosophy, particularly the Platonic; though it is older than Grecian thought, as appears from Cicero's statements, and from some of the Hindoo books. It is found most at length and in the most scholastic form in the early Christian literature, in Augustine. In modern times it is considerably broken down under the subtleties which the Schoolmen have heaped upon it, and generally abandoned as unsatisfactory. Yet there is a very frequent presumption that the Scriptures teach or imply it, and that therefore we do well to prop it up, for the benefits of sceptics, by the supports of pure reason.

The commonest rational argument is based on the immaterial nature of the soul. It is uncompounded,—not made up of parts and so can not fall to pieces. Or it is a spiritual substance, suffering no change or decay from physical causes and agencies. And, in obscure agreement with the latter view, it is often remarked that moral causes can not change or affect the substance or being of the soul.

I grant the immaterial nature of the soul. For I do not make the mind out of the brain, however dependent it may be, in the present economy, on cerebral action; rather, I regard the brain, and all organism, as produced by vital forces. And all life, animal and vegetable as well as spiritual, seems a higher sort of life than the mechanical or chemical properties of atoms, or even the so-called imponderable agents,—heat, light, and the electric, magnetic, and galvanic currents. When we have passed these limits, we find ourselves in a world of myriad forms of life, some of which trench very close upon the human, so that the higher examples of brute life compete with the lower examples of human life, and even bear away the palm. For dignity of nature perhaps Bucephalus was as worthy of a city for a monument, and as worthy of immortality, as a good many men have been. The rational distinction between the human soul and the brute soul is not very well settled yet; and the fact reflects no great credit on our sagacity, or boasted superiority. And in the question of moral capacity, some dogs seem to have as tender a conscience as some men ever had.

I say these things, not to jostle the human race into rank with the brutes,—for I am as proud as any one of my humanity, though sometimes very much ashamed of it;—but to raise the question whether differences of character may not be even more important than differences of race, in this question of the immortality of souls, whereof the Scriptures say naught. Many good men—Duns Scotus, Ramsay, Dean, Wesley, Clarke, Tennyson, Theodore Parker, Agassiz—have held or allowed the immortality of brutes. And Bishop Butler and Isaac Taylor have remarked that the metaphysical arguments for our immortality are about as good for the immortal life of our four footed and our footless neighbors. There is something in them besides atomic pieces of matter. And that something else, it seems to me, may be vital, spiritual substance; a great deal more manifold in its kind than atoms are, of which we have found about seventy sorts,—gold, silver, copper, nickel, and so on down. There is a common notion that all spiritual substance is homogeneous; whence it is inferred that God and, we are made of the same stuff. So the Platonists believed, with inevitable consistency, that the soul is immortal because eternal and divine. I reject the conclusion because I deny the premise; and I reject the premise also because I deny the conclusion. And if we once admit that spiritual substance is heterogeneous, we may, perhaps we must, allow that no kind of created spirit is absolutely imperishable, and the greater frailty of one kind may denote at least a measure of frailty in another kind. In God we live, and move, and have our being,—not in ourselves. And whether we shall live in him and with him eternally, may depend on our observance of the precept, "Be strong; quit you like men."

If I am asked how the soul, as a spiritual substance, can perish from being, I will reply by asking how it comes into being. Or rather—not to debate the question whether it is created or propagated—does the soul grow? and if so, how? Is the substance of the infant soul as entire and complete as that of the matured and full grown intellect, master of a hundred arts and sciences? Is the quantity of being the same in the one case as in the other? I do not ask if the one weighs as many ounces or measures as many inches; but is there, for substance and amount, as much soul in the one case as in the other? If so, then are all souls equal in quantity of being? and if thus equal, whence the manifest and striking differences in their original and native power and capacity? If the brain and the material organism make all these differences, then do disembodied souls retain any of these differences, or any differences of constitutional habit or quality, intellectual or moral? If two souls in very different bodies should make an exchange, would they at once exchange characters? and if not, why? Again, if there is acquired power or habit of the soul, is that a development of what was in the soul at the outset, or is it something superadded to its nature or being?

I ask these questions for information. I can not answer them myself. And until they are answered, I think we should not hold, with any dogmatism, that idea of the soul which makes it a pure entelechy, a logical entity or substance, imperishable as truth itself, and which must be precisely similar in all individuals. But if there are real differences in human souls, and real processes of growth, however unlike the growths of matter, then all argument for its proper immortality is at an end. Aside from revelation, we might suppose that the soul has a certain and fixed period of growth, maturity, and decay; and period much longer, possibly, than the 3000 years of the cedar, yet strictly a period, beyond which it could not live. And with the Revelation, I find nothing to oppose this view, viz: that even without a natural and necessary period of life, the soul may suffer in its very being by all that wars against its well-being. The disregarded laws of its life may become the laws of its death. If it may thrive, it may languish, if it may wax stronger, it may grow weaker; if it may become more, it may become less. If the true, the beautiful, and the good, are for "the soul's health," the false, the gross, and the evil, may give it ill health. If purity may adorn it, vice may contaminate it. If virtue and love may give it power, sin may give it disease. Sin is the transgression of law; and if the "wages of sin is death," that death may be something more than a metaphor, and the disease which causes it may be mortal disease—a sin unto death. I have already remarked that death "in trespasses and sins" probably signifies a sentence of death yet future. And I find nothing in the proper nature of the soul to rescue it from the analogies which make disease the system of decay and the pathway of death.

Here I meet the objection that moral causes do not directly produce physical effects. But I am not so sure of this. The indirect physical effects of moral causes are legion. The world is full of the produce of mind. We can not glance amiss to see what thought has done. But by what intermediate stages has all the work of the human race grown out of its mind? It has not been done by magic, as if we had the lamp of Aladdin. Nor has it been done by Liebnitz's rule of pre-established harmony, which grew out of the notion that spiritual forces could not be harnessed to work in matter. Pyramids, temples, cities, steam ships, and rail-roads have not sprung into existence because men have dreamed or wished them, nor merely because men thought them out. They are all the product of thought applied; and applied with many zealous passions of the human soul, and with much labor of brain and muscle, with sweat and toil. At every inch of surface the spiritual force has touched and shaped the material effect.

And has the spiritual force itself been unaffected, unchanged? Many a human body has been killed by a blow of joy or grief struck through the human soul. The pang was first felt within. The outward death came of the inward agony. There are, indeed, trials by which "though the outward man perish, yet the inner man is renewed day by day." But this is because the soul is wrought into harmony with a higher nature, or is made more completely a "partaker of the divine nature;" or is regenerated of an "incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever." And by the same reason, if worse and baser passions sway the soul, they may bring it down toward a real death. The decay of the faculties by vicious habits of thoughts, the deterioration and mental and moral disease so often observed—who shall say, in the assumption of an unrevealed immortal nature, that these are not incipient stages of dissolution in which, unarrested, the soul itself may become extinct?

The argument may be more plainly stated in its stronger form. The material produce of mind is the effect of an unlike cause. This is the marvel and the inscrutable mystery. But mind is like itself, and though the soul's substance is not itself thought, feeling and purpose, yet it is far more like them than matter is. The soul's substance is the physical medium, as it were, by which thought, feeling, and purpose, have reached the outer world. The material produce is both unlike, and at second hand. So much the more may these spiritual agencies work changes in the being of spirit, its kindred substance, close at hand as substance to its attribute.

Another form of the metaphysical or psychological argument should be glanced at. I often hear persons say that they are conscious of immortality. Well, they have a higher power of consciousness than I have; yet I will confess no inferiority to them. To be conscious of immortality is to be conscious of being alive to-morrow, and a billion years hence, and every moment between. My friends do not mean that. They simply mean that they are conscious of a longing and aspiration after immortality; and so am I. And this proves—indirectly, as we presume that God is too good to tantalize and trifle with us—that we were made for immortality. But then the argument comes to the same footing with other longings and aspirations, which are valid according as they are noble and good. It is strictly a moral argument; and its value is settled, I believe, by St. Paul, thus: "To those who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life."

For the Crisis.

Material and Immaterial.

These terms are directly opposite to each other. The word material has two important definitions.

1st. That which is composed of substance, or which is substance.

2d. That which is of some importance. Besides these, there is a theological definition with which we have nothing to do in coming at the meaning of the word. The theological definition of words depends on a person's religious belief. Hence, the word hell, with the Catholic is one thing, with the Universalist another, and with the orthodox still another. We may chase after this definition of words and never know when we have found it.

Immaterial is opposed to material. It is the very opposite in meaning. When used to distinguish one thing from another its meaning is, that which is of no importance. As when we say that such a circumstance, or such a thing is immaterial, we mean, that it might as well be out of the way, as in the way, out of being as in being. When used in its first and literal sense, as by way of contrast, the meaning of it is—nothing. Or, thus: Material, that which has substance, or that which is of some importance. Immaterial, that which has no substance, or that which is of no consequence. Hence a material thing is that which has substance, or that is of some moment. An immaterial thing is that which has no substance, or it is a thing of no importance. If you say that a thing cannot exist without substance, we say, very well; then what is called an immaterial thing is nothing; for it is the opposite of something.

It therefore follows, that an immaterial man is a man of no substance; or, taking the second definition, he is a man of no importance. A material man is a man of substance, or he is a man of some importance, compared with the other things. Hence a material man, literally speaking, is somebody, and an immaterial man is nobody. Or, in short, material is something; immaterial is nothing.

The revelation concerning man is, that God made him of substance, made him a material man. So he was made, so he lived, so he died, so will he be raised from the dead, and if found worthy to obtain that world, so will he live forever.

Whatever may be said of the different parts of man when analyzed, it is to be remembered, that these parts are either material or immaterial; and if the former, they are something; but if the latter, they are nothing. Or, they are important to the existence of the man, if material. But if immaterial, they are of no importance, consequently, man can be as well off without them as with them. We may as well talk of an immaterial Savior, immaterial resurrection, and kingdom, including the water of life, tree of life, the new city, and Christ's reign on the throne of David, as to talk of an immaterial man. The idea of an immaterial man is in perfect keeping with the idea of a spiritual resurrection, spiritual kingdom, and spiritual everything else. How do we know that these things are material? Because they are so revealed. For the same reason, do we know that man is material.

I am not saying that man is not composed of parts, but that the parts which enter into the composition of man are material. They are essential to his manhood. An immaterial man is not a subject of revelation. To prove the existence of man, we must appeal to his materiality; and so of the existence of any thing else. When our Savior appeared to his disciples, and they thought they saw a spirit, to prove to them that it was he whom they saw, he directed them to see his flesh and bones. He proved his presence by his material existence. He has not required us to believe in him as a Savior and the seed of David, outside of his materiality. We are to discern, "the Lord's body" in his being. So of man; he was made material, and outside of this we have no proof of his existence. We see man in the past a material being, so do we see him in the present, and through all the revelation of his future, we see him the same. Why then talk of the immaterial? Let us look at man as he was, is, and is to be, in redemption—Somebody.

J. S. W.

For the Crisis.

Pagan and Papal Rome Contrasted.

BY ELDER S. S. BREWER.

In the first epistle of Paul to the church at Thessalonica, he had instructed the church to look forward to the coming of Jesus as the consummation of their hope.

In the second epistle, he very manifestly exhorts the church to an unlimited confidence in the doctrine he had before taught, and predicts the rise of a wicked one—THE MAN OF SIN, concerning whom it is written, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God." This man of sin was to be made manifest by the taking out of the way a power then in the way, called "the mystery of iniquity." At the time the apostle wrote, Rome was the ruling government on earth. Her religious belief consisted in a plurality of gods or invisible beings, superior to man and having an agency in the government of the world. And so rigid was their faith in these principles, they would give their own and take the lives of others.

Their entire system was mysterious and iniquitous. The Pagan Roman government unsheathed the sword of political vengeance, and tortured, tormented, burnt, drowned, and fed to wild beasts, millions of the early disciples, in order, on one hand, to perpetuate their religion, and on the other, destroy the religion of Jesus and his apostles. But this "mystery of iniquity" was to be taken out of the way, and THEN shall that wicked be revealed. When? Hear the apostle: "And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time." 2 Thess. 2: 6. His time had been specified. See Dan. 7: 25; 12: 11. It will be necessary to read the apostle's language in the 7th and 8th verses of the 2d chapter, before referring to the successor of Pagan Rome, in the manifestation of the Roman Pontiffs. "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

Permit me, dear reader, to introduce an extract from Marsh's Eccl. Hist., pp. 193–4.

"In the beginning of the fourth century, she (the church) passed through a furnace seven times heated. For eight years a persecution raged, which spared neither age nor sex, in any part of the Roman world; which was unparalleled for its tortures and horrors; and which, to all human appearance, would root christianity from the earth."

Again, the same historian remarks: "The persecution began at the feast of the Terminalia, in Nicomedia, A. D. 302, by pulling down all the churches of the christians; burning their sacred books and writings, taking from them their civil rights and privileges, and rendering them incapable of any civil promotion. Soon after, a fire broke out in the royal palace. The christians were accused as the incendiaries, and numbers were put to torture. Some tumults also arose in Armenia and Syria, which were by the heathen priests charged upon them. The clergy were cast into prison and given up to the most insupportable punishments, the rulers hoping that if the pastors renounced christianity, the people would follow them. Vast numbers of learned and excellent men fell a prey to this stratagem. In the year 304, a new edict was published, in which the magistrates throughout the Roman empire were directed to compel all christians, without distinction of rank or sex, to renounce christianity and sacrifice to the gods, and were authorized to employ the most cruel torments in their work. The church was now reduced to the last extremity; for the magistrates were like so many hungry tigers, let loose upon defenceless lambs. In France less ferocity was exhibited than in other places. . . .

A recital of their sufferings may appear to many almost incredible, but it is delivered to us by faithful eye witnesses, and confirmed by Pagan historians. It should make us grateful to God for the blessings we enjoy.

Some were thrown to wild beasts, inclosed in vast amphitheatres, for the entertainment of the people on great festal days, and instantly torn to pieces and devoured. Others, with their wives and children, were burned to death in their houses. Some were beaten with clubs, rods, thongs of leather, and ropes. Nails were driven into their sides, bellies, legs and cheeks. Some were suspended by one hand from a portico, suffering the most severe distention of all their joints. Others were bound to pillars, face to face, their feet being raised above the ground. They were hung about wooden engines, having every limb of their bodies distended by certain machines. Plates of heated brass were applied to their bodies. They were seated in red hot iron chairs. They were slain by the axe and the sword. They were suspended by their feet, with their head downward, over a slow fire. Sharp reeds were thrust under the nails into the fingers. Melted lead was poured on their backs, and into their bowels. Tongues were cut out."

Every conceivable method of punishment was inflicted on the poor disciples, by those merciless Pagan Roman tyrants. But "the mystery of iniquity" was taken out of the way, by the breaking up and dismembering of the Roman empire; and that power, spoken of in Luke 2: 1, that could issue his decree taxing all the world, was compelled to submit to the Greek Emperor Zeno, A. D. 476, when a gradual change came over the political and religious world, in order to make manifest the words where it is written, "and then shall that wicked be revealed,—in plain terms, the Roman Pontiff; or, as Paul denominates him, "the son of PERDITION." What language could possibly be employed to better convey an idea of the height, depth, length and breadth of the iniquity of the Popes of Rome, than the above? It is just such as inspiration alone saw fit to employ,—"That man of Sin."

I will now quote from the notes of the Rev. A. Barnes.

"A very few references to the characters of the Popes will furnish an illustration of this point. Pope Vigilius waded to the pontifical throne through the blood of his predecessor. Pope Joan, (a female in disguise) the Roman Catholic writers tell us, was elected and confirmed Pope, as John VIII. Platina says, that 'she became with child by some of those that were round about her; that she miscarried, and died on her way from the Lateran to the Temple.' Pope Marcellinus sacrificed to idols. Concerning Pope Honorious, the council of Constantinople decreed, 'We have caused Honorious, the late Pope of old Rome, to be accursed; for that in all things he followed the mind of Sergius the heretic, and confirmed his wicked doctrines.' The council of Basil thus condemned Pope Eugenius. 'We condemn and depose Pope Eugenius, a despiser of the holy canons; a disturber of the peace and unity of the church of God; a notorious offender of the whole church universal; a Simonist; a perjurer; a man incorrigible; a schismatic; a man fallen from the faith, and a willful heretic.' Pope John II. was publicly charged at Rome with incest. Pope John XIII. usurped the pontificate, spent his time in hunting, in laciviousness, and monstrous forms of vice. He fled from the trial to which he was summoned, and was stabbed, being taken in the act of adultery. Pope Sixtus IV. licensed brothels at Rome. Pope Alexander VI. was, as a Roman historian says, 'one of the greatest and most horrible monsters in nature that could scandalize the holy chair. His beastly morals, his immense ambition, his insatiable avarice, his detestable cruelty, his furious lusts, and monstrous incest with his daughter Lucretia, are at large described by Guicciardini, Ciaconius, and other authentic Papal historians.' Of the popes, Platina, a Roman Catholic, says, 'The chair of St. Peter was usurped, rather than possessed, by monsters of wickedness, ambition and bribery. They left no wickedness unpractised.'"

Were these monsters of wickedness not entitled, in the most emphatic sense, to the inspired appellation—"That man of Sin?"

Again, he was to exalt himself. Hear the same author on this point.

"No one can reasonably doubt that all that is here affirmed may be found in the claims of the Pope of Rome. The assumptions of the Papacy have related to the following things:

"First—To authority above all the inferior orders of priesthood, above all pastors, bishops and primates. Second. Authority above all kings and emperors, deposing some and advancing others, obliging them to prostrate themselves before him, to kiss his toe, to hold his stirrup, to wait barefooted at his gate, treading even upon the neck and kicking off the imperial crown with his foot.

Newton says, "Thus Alexander III. trod upon Alexander I. Gregory VII. made Henry IV. wait barefoot at his gate. Thus Celestine kicked off the imperial crown of Henry VI. Thus the right was claimed, and asserted, of laying nations under interdict, of deposing kings and of absolving their subjects from their oaths of allegiance. And thus the Pope claimed the right over all unknown lands that might be discovered by Columbus, and apportioned the New World as he pleased. In all these things claiming prerogatives which can apply only to God."

Again, it is written concerning The man of Sin—"Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." "And exalteth himself above all that is called God." In matters pertaining to the conscience, the Pope has claimed infallibility, and has forbidden what God has commanded, and the Pope has granted what God has forbidden, even indulgence for sin. When the Almighty has thundered his malediction against it, in this he has most emphatically exalted himself, above the God of the Bible, has he not?

Again, he shall sit "in the temple of God." The Roman Pontiff sat in the temple at Rome and claimed to be the legitimate successor of St. Peter, and viceregent of God on earth. His devotees have most clearly fulfilled the truth written—"And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." Millions have embraced the delusion and believed what inspiration declares to be a lie.

Again, it is written concerning him, "SHEWING HIMSELF THAT HE IS GOD." I have before me a work written by Dr. L. Giustiniani, D.D., formerly a Roman priest, now minister of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. In his work, "PAPAL ROME AS IT IS," pages 180, 181, he says: "Will Roman Catholics deny, that the Pope styles himself 'God on earth?' Let them go to Rome, and they will read on the gate of the city: 'Paulus III. Pontifex Opt. maximus, in terris Deus.' (Paul III., High Priest, the best, the greatest, and GOD ON EARTH.)" He translates an ordination letter, thus: "Given in Rome from our palace, the first of February 1817, the XIV jurisdiction of the most holy Father in Christ, AND LORD OUR GOD, the Pope Leo XII., through the Divine Providence, the VI. year of his reign," &c.

Pope Martin V. wrote in the dispatches with which he furnished his ambassador to Constantinople,—"The most holy and most happy, who is the arbiter of heaven and the Lord of earth, the successor of St. Peter, the anointed of the Lord, the master of the universe, the father of kings, the light of the world." Is this not giving God a competitor, to call the Pope, "The anointed of the Lord, the father of kings and the light of the world!"

Thus, dear reader, the man of sin has shown himself to be a God, and received in a most heaven-daring and ostentatious manner, appellations that belong to God alone. And the Almighty has permitted them, because they received not the love of truth, that they might be saved. They now remain under the fearful condemnation of the 12th verse, where it is written, "That they all might be damned who believed not the truht, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." I cannot for my own humble self, conceive how a prophecy can be fulfilled in a more positive, clear, and literal sense than the above. I must exclaim as one of old, this is that which was spoken by the Apostle Paul.

These powers, Pagan and Papal Rome, as predecessor and successor, are, in my humble opinion, set forth by the prophet Daniel 11:31,—"And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Leaving out the inserted word sacrifice, and then we have a daily (abomination) to be taken away, until then the [illegible] to be set up; or as the margin reads: (the abomination that astonisheth). Thus Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, hath written. And John, the beloved, beheld "the woman, drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," seated on a scarlet colored beast." And is it not written, he wondered with great admiration?"

Thompson renders it thus: "And when I saw her, I expressed my astonishment with great amaze, and the angel said to me, why art thou amazed?" Murdock, Syriac Trans. "And I saw the woman was intoxicated with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus. And when I saw her, I wondered with great amazement." Wakefield—thus: "I wondered at this sight with great astonishment. And the angel said unto me; why art thou astonished?" Thus, you perceive, this harlot was a matter of great astonishment. The angel beholding the amazement of John, exclaims, "Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carrieth her." Sufficient has already been presented on this beastly power, in my previous articles. But permit me to suggest a few thoughts on the 8th verse. "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming;" or as Penn renders it, "Whom the Lord shall destroy with the breath of his mouth and extinguish with the brightness of his presence."

I will endeavor to present my ideas in a simple manner. Did the Pagan Roman government bear rule and authority in the apostolic age?—Yes. Was that to be taken out of the way?—Yes. Was there a power to succeed, and bear rule and authority?—Yes. Was there time specified when he should be revealed?—Yes. What is said concerning this power? It is noted in the Scriptures of truth, that he, the horn power, as I understand the subject, will cause the saints to "fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days . . . even to the time of the end, because it is yet for a time appointed." Where is this power clearly specified? In Dan. 7. How long was he to cause them to be put to death? See 25th verse. How long was this power to continue? 21st verse. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them, UNTIL THE ANCIENT OF DAYS CAME." This, it seems to me, is conclusive that the ROMAN power is to continue until the declaration of the apostle is fulfilled—whom he "shall destroy with the brightness of his coming," and ignores the possibility of any other power ever bearing rule over the church of God to any extent.

Much might be written here concerning the manner the man of sin, or, in other words, the horn, is to prevail against the saints; as by Jesuitical intrigues, by burning the Scriptures, by destroying all Protestant influence, through his blasphemous claim to infallibility. Turn to the persecution of King Bomba, influenced by the Pope of Rome against the Madiai; also against Portuguese exiles. Yea, witness the efforts of the horn power through Archbishop Hughes, in the city and state of New York, to exclude the holy Scriptures from the public schools. Yea, further, strenuous efforts have been put forth to accomplish the same in the land of the Puritans, even in the city of Boston.

It is admitted on all sides, that the iron in the metalic image did symbolize Rome. And this being admitted, what follows? Hark! "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." "They shall not cleave one to another." Now I ask, can language be more definite? The iron is to exist until the God of heaven sets up the Everlasting Kingdom. Thus it is now plain to my mind, that the [illegible] of Revelation 17, is the last, the eighth form of Rome, and he goeth to perdition. Never will Rome, called the "old serpent" in the twelfth chapter, change its [illegible] of government to destroy and deceive. But he, the Roman Pontiff, the man of sin, goeth to perdition; whom the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming. Thus it will be. "Even him, whose coming is after the workings of Satan, with all power and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." [illegible] institution: "It has no head to think, no heart to feel, its prayers are curses, its God is a demon, its communion is death, its decalogue is written in the blood of saints. If it pauses in its infernal flight, for one moment, it is on some kindred rock to whet its vulture fangs, and replume its wings for more sanguary conflict."

I have considered it a duty as a watchman amid the perils of the last days, while some are crying "peace, peace, a good time coming, a golden era about to dawn,," and others are looking for certain powers to appear on the stage of prophecy, to fill up the mould; to show that they are manifestly in the past. Furthermore, tidings from the old world show that the last act of the drama on the Roman earth is rushing on to a final consummation. The ten petty kings, that have been of one mind and by agreement have given their power and strength to the beast—the red beast—that has carried the woman, by an associate power with the imperial governments, for 1260 days, are now manifesting the most deadly hatred, and there is now an approaching and manifest destiny in the elements, that will consummate the behest of Almighty God as it is written,—"And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

Truly the clouds are beginning to break. Light is dawning. The harbinger of approaching day begins to assume the most tangible evidence, that God is about to give unto Babylon, the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. Hold yourselves in readiness, dear saints, the God of our fathers is about to take to himself his great power and reign. The prophetic page shines with transcendent splendor, it gathers beauty, strength, and glory; its brilliant rays dispel the mists of darkness that folds a sleepy church, and an unsuspecting world, in the sombre mantle of darkness. O, praise the Lord, it is written, "But ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Amen.

Thy brother, S. S. Brewer.

Fairhaven, Mass.

Correspondence.

Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minn., June 16, 1859.

Bro. Grant:—I am yet in the Master's vineyard, and still love the precious cause of Divine truth. Have just returned from a three days' meeting in Utica, Winona Co., Minn., whither I went by the request of Eld. C. L. Page. Though the meeting was held in a busy season of the year, the people felt disposed to listen in candor to the unpopular word of the Lord, and we hope that lasting good was done. A deep interest is felt by some intelligent men. The meeting was also attended by nearly or quite all of the brethren in the county, who are scattered through several townships. We organized a body of believers, composed of the scattered laity and two preachers, viz., Eld. W. Sweet of Utica, and Eld. C. L. Page of St. Charles. These are men of ability. May God make them a blessing to the cause in Minn. I freely scattered my publications among the people, and promised to visit them again in the fall. Our Brn. are poor, but would feel glad to receive a call from any defender of truth who may be passing through the town. W. Sheldon.

June 16th, 1859.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. B. Spaulding writes from Mt. Desert, Me., and says:—"I never felt better in my life. My appetite, health, and spirits are all good. I feel the praying spirit, the exhorting and laboring spirit, rests upon me. I am visiting families, as I used to, with encouraging success. God does give me access to minds wherever I go. I visit every house as they come along, talk with every individual I can get access to, old and young, but especially with the young. I spend much time with children, teaching them to be obedient to parents, to be kind to each other, to remember their Creator, etc. etc.

The mother listens, glad to hear her children taught obedience, even by a stranger; her heart grows soft while I am talking with them, then I turn to her, asking questions; thus,—do you love God and the blessed Jesus? do you serve him? Angels love him, and you ought to; he has done more for you than for the angels. I often see the tears flow while I exhort her to love Jesus and serve him, to train her children in the way they should go, to set good examples, and give good instruction. Then I propose to pray, and she calls her children around her, and I address them thus:—Now I am going to pray, and when we pray, we are talking with God, that great Being who made the sun, moon and stars. He is a great God; we can't see him, but he can see us; yes, and he will hear us pray, and he will hear a child pray as quick as a minister, and when we pray, we ought to be very still and quiet. The little children will cling to mother, as though they were afraid of that great Being I was about to pray to. Their eyes are strained open with amazement and wonder at the strange thing taking place. I then kneel and pray, using very simple language. While praying, I have had them come from behind and stand before me, to see who I was talking with, for they noticed I was talking with some one they could not see. O, it fills my whole soul with animation; yes, I enjoy the work. I own I love it. I had rather be a servant of God and his church and my fellow men, than to be a king on a throne.

O that more of the brethren, who feel the fire of God burning in their souls, would take their lives in their hand, and go forth, leaning upon God, without money, only a staff in hand, and a Bible in their pocket, and something would be accomplished. They would be sustained, and their labor would not be in vain. I find more here than I can possibly do.

A great interest is waking up in this region; what will be the result I do not know. I lecture on all the leading points of doctrine connected with the advent of Christ. The ideas are new here; they have not been held forth in this island to much extent, and they see it is Bible truth. They can't object to it, and yet they wonder why they have not seen things in this light before. O it is astonishing, sure enough, that the church has been so long in the dark in these blessed doctrines; such as the coming of Jesus to set up a literal kingdom, the literal resurrection of the body, the sleep of the dead, and destruction of the wicked.

I have scattered tracts on these subjects, and wish I had more. If any desire to do any thing to advance the cause, let them collect a bundle of such tracts as will enlighten the people, and direct them to Benjamin Spaulding, care of Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and they will be forwarded."

Bro. S. F. Mathews, St. John's, N. B., writes:—"I am thankful for the food, strength and encouragement I have received in this lonely region by reading the Crisis. Blessed be the name of the Lord for his goodness and mercy. We have had the privilege of meeting with a company calling themselves christians, or disciples. They are a very pious and devoted people, loving one another. They have preaching morning and evening on Sunday, and they partake of the Lord's Supper every Sunday afternoon. Their worship is very solemn and impressive. They rejoice in the Lord's soon coming, and the resurrection of the dead. It is encouraging to see them building one another up in the most holy faith of the gospel. Bro. Hews, the pastor, is a very devoted christian, and a profound thinker. He is now reading your discussion with Bro. Litch. He is a lover of truth as it is in Jesus. This is a church in which Bro. Lenfest preached once, some years ago. I wish he, or some other Bro., would come this way with the word of life. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field.

Brethren and sisters, let us prove faithful to our high calling. Let us show to the world our hope by our walk and conversation. And may all be able to say, we have a sweet peace of mind (which only comes by doing our duty,) and may we ever keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

Bro. Y. Higgins, Viroqua, Wis., writes:—"Much labor is needed in this part of the gospel field. Many are anxious to hear the truth. New doors are constantly opening, and calls for help are coming almost daily. Thus, while many are investigating the matter, searching the Scriptures, like the Bereans, to see if these things are so, others are despising and wondering, endeavoring to bring into disrepute the doctrines of the Bible."

The Viroqua Expositor, a weekly secular paper in this place, will publish articles on the "blessed hope." Brn. Storrs and Grew have improved the opportunity, and we hope others will avail themselves of the privilege. In this way the truth may be sent where we can not go ourselves. Let us spare no effort to spread the light and truth.

Bro. Joseph Gregory, New Preston, writes:—"I am sorry that I have not done more for God and his cause. It is high time to awake out of sleep and to let our light shine before men. The Lord is at hand.

I have received the Crisis from its commencement, and it has been a faithful messenger to me, for which I praise God. Oh, how thankful I am that we can communicate with each other through its columns. May God give it wings to fly east, west, north and south."

Sr. E. Garland, Chester Factories, Mass., writes:—"The cause of God and the interests of his people lie near my heart. I am aware that we are in a very critical point of time. It appears to me the church is taking her last steps, and if she misses here, the kingdom is lost forever. Brn. and Srs., our wills must be brought into entire subjection to the will of God, and we must serve him because we love his service."

☞ No whitewashing can purify an act essentially bad, the effluvia arising from it vitiates the atmosphere, and no little art is requisite to cleanse those guilty of it.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 20, 1859.

War News.—We would say to our readers that we intend to spare no pains to keep them well posted in the news from the seat of war. The London Times, Boston and New York papers are carefully examined for the latest and most reliable information relative to the movements of the belligerent powers of the world.

Rome.

As evidences increase foreboding the destruction of Rome, the "most celebrated city of the world, either ancient or modern," we presume that a few words of description may be read with interest.

Rome is said to have been founded 753 B. C. It is situated on the Tiber, seventeen miles from its mouth. Its early history is very obscure. It was peopled by robbers at first. In the Douay (Catholic) Bible, it is said in a note on Armageddon, Rev. 16: 16, that it signifies, "Hill of robbers." When the prophet Daniel says, "The robbers (marg. children of robbers,) of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision," we think he refers to the Romans. The historian says,—"Rome became filled with desperadoes and fugitives of all descriptions." As a natural consequence, they were feared and shunned by other nations, who were unwilling to give their daughters in marriage to such wicked men. These robbers then laid a plan to rob the fair daughters from the families in the surrounding towns. They proclaimed a great feast in honor of the god Neptune. Crowds came and filled Rome. Before they had proceeded far with their ceremonies, at a given signal, the young men rushed among the crowd and seized the most beautiful girls and carried them to their homes for wives.

The history of this city is one of blood and unparalleled cruelty. The city at one time contained over four million inhabitants. It has now five hundred and six streets, two hundred and seventy-five lanes, one hundred and forty-eight squares, and one hundred and fifty fountains. The climate is delightful and the sky beautiful. They have but little frost or snow. Rome has been renowned for men distinguished in the fine arts, classical learning, poetry and oratory. It has three hundred and sixty-four churches, most of which are noted for their architecture and splendid decorations. The Cathedral of St. Peter is not only the largest and most beautiful church that has ever been built on the earth, but is said to be "the noblest work of architecture ever produced by man." The height from the pavement to the cross is four hundred and fifty-eight feet. The floor covers an area of five acres. The cost is estimated from sixty to eighty million dollars. It is considered the "Mother church" of the "Eternal city."

The Vatican, or Pope's residence, is the largest and most splendid palace in Europe, or the world. It is situated on a hill of the same name, in the N. W. part of the city of Rome, connected at one point with the magnificent Cathedral of St. Peter. It was commenced about the time of Constantine, in the fourth century, and was occupied for the coronation of Charlemagne in the eighth century. The Popes began to reside in it in 1377, and from that time they vied with each other in embellishing it. It covers an immense space, the length being 1151 feet, and the breadth 767, containing 4,422 apartments. One of its halls, the Capella Sistini, or Sistine Chapel, is 150 feet long, and 50 feet broad, covered with frescoes by Michael Angelo, one of which is the Last Judgment, sixty by thirty feet. It has a picture gallery containing some of the most valuable paintings in the world. The museum contains the noblest treasures of art in the world, and the library some of the most valuable books and manuscripts.

Besides the Vatican, the Pope has a splendid summer palace, but we think the splendors of this vain world will dazzle his eyes but a short time longer. Stern realities begin to stare him in the face. The judgment is at hand, and he must give an account of his stewardship. The blood of martyrs crieth, and their day of glory is about to dawn. Let us "stand up for Jesus."

The Battle of Solferino.

The battle of Solferino, fought June 24th, was terrible. It is said there were 300,000 engaged in the bloody conflict. In some places, for considerable space, the ground was said to be hid from view by the heaps of the dead. Napoleon commanded in person, and was often in the hottest part of the battle. His troops, and the world, have great confidence in him as a general. Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, also commanded in person. The Austrians fought bravely but were obliged to recross the Mincio during a most terrific thunder storm.

It is said both parties act as if the war was but just begun. The Austrian reserves, numbering 175,000, the flower of the imperial army, each of whom has served eight years, are on the way to the battle-field. A writer on the war says:—"A 'battle summer', such as the world has not seen for forty years, is evidently before us, wherein human lives will be but as grass beneath the mower's scythe." The battle of Solferino is called "the great battle" of the century; but darker clouds seem to be still rising. The Nord, a Russian paper, speaks of the war as "a terrible game, without precedent in the military history of modern times." In the last battle, the Zouaves were terribly cut up. A correspondent from the field of blood says:—"At 1 o'clock I saw two cart loads of wounded men of this regiment, as they came off the field on their way to the Hospital at Castiglione, and they told me that at that moment not a single commissioned officer of their regiment was on the field."

The Austrians are now on the left bank of the Mincio, having been driven about two hundred miles since the war operations commenced in Sardinia. They are at the strong fortress of Mantua, situated on an island in the Mincio. Here they will probably make a stand and the siege operations of the French and the Allies will commence in earnest. Prince Napoleon is marching an army from Italy to attack the Austrians in their rear. This is probably the reason why they recrossed the Mincio to fight the French at Solferino. They evidently feared that the Emperor Napoleon would wait for the arrival of the Prince with his army, before he attempted to cross the Mincio, when they would have a double attack from the French, and run a greater risk than to do as they have done.

Mantua is one of four noted fortresses at the corners or a quadrangular section of Lombardy, from twenty to twenty-five miles on a side. Peschiera is at the N. W. corner, Mantua at the S. W., Verona the N. E. and Legnago at the S. E. corner. The first two are on the Mincio, and the last two on the Adige. When the Austrians are driven from these points, they will probably make no further resistance in Lombardy.

Kossuth, at last advices, had advanced as far as Turin, a place a little west of where the Austrians first commenced their operations in Sardinia, and which they evidently intended to capture, where he is raising a Hungarian legion to assist in driving the Austrians from Italy, and eventually from Hungary. It is expected that his comrades in Hungary will soon rise in open rebellion to the Austrian government and throw off their cruel yoke of bondage. Should this take place, the Austrians would be in the midst of enemies. Perhaps Russia will then interfere with Hungary. Prussia is preparing for the contest and will probably soon be marching her vast armies to the battle field.

The war is becoming more and more complex. The Pope and his friends are in much perplexity as to the results of the sanguinary contest. "The thunders of the Vatican" cease to terrify the priest ridden Italians, who are ready at the first opportunity to annihilate the power of the Pope, revenge their long injured rights and expel forever from the earth a covetous, oppressive, and lecherous priesthood, who have extorted and squandered their hard earned treasures in riotous living and beastly gratification of all their baser passions, and mingled their Te Deums with the groans of the tortured saints. She who is "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus" is about to reap her "reward"—"death and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire."

For the Crisis.

Hades.

"A dark, obscure place—the receptacle of the dead—the place of the dead generally."—Groves' Greek and English Dictionary.

"According to the notion of the Jews, sheol or hades was a vast receptacle, where the souls of the dead existed in a separate state until the resurrection of their bodies. . . . It is a doctrine received by a large portion of the nomical christian church; and it forms the foundation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory; for which there would be no ground but for this interpretation of hades. The question, therefore, rests entirely upon the interpretation of this word."

As the Septuagint gives this as the meaning of the word sheol, "the real question therefore is, what is the meaning which sheol bears in the Old Testament and hades in the New? A careful examination of the passages in which these words occur, will probably lead to the conclusion, that they afford no real sanction to the notion of an intermediate place of the kind indicated, but are used by the inspired writers to denote the grave—the resting place of the bodies both of the righteous and the wicked."—Kittoe's Cyclopedia.

He then says, there are instances in which it means more than the grave; as, Job 11: 8; Ps. 139: 8; Amos 5: 3; also Ps. 9: 17; Prov. 23: 9. He remarks, "The only case in which such passages could by any possibility be supposed to mean the grave, would be if the grave—that is, extinction—were the final doom of the unrighteous."

It has been said that sheol and hades do not mean the literal grave. The foregoing does not correspond with such an idea.

H. Pratt.

☞ Idleness is the mother of many wanton children.

Our Tract Column.

Tracts for the West Again.

June 30th. After finishing that long letter last night, I went to bed and slept so sound that a heavy thunder-storm didn't awake me; when the cool breezes of morning came floating in upon me, I awoke and started for the post office to deposit my letters. I found there a letter from Indiana, which is too good to be buried alive. I can only give a few paragraphs, omitting such as refer to circumstances of trial which are past and gone.

. . . "How precious it is thus to trace God's wonderful plan of training those whom he hath chosen to be heirs of salvation. First humiliation and then exaltation; first trial, and then triumph; first tears, then shouts; first sighs, then songs; first earth, then heaven. O, dear brother and sister, how happy I am that this is so; first the race, then the reward—a crown of life,—eternal life and glory in the kingdom of God, upon the earth. A hope like this may well endure trials. But, dear friends, let me exhort you not to be too much troubled about the opinions of your fellow men, whether those of a brother in high standing or of low, or those of the worldlings. Recollect that Paul was just as good a man when they called him "a murderer whom vengeance permitted not to live," as when they said that "the gods are come down to us, in the likeness of men," as he spake to them all the words of this life. He was the same man all the time. Sometimes such things are requisite to bring out character—if not that of the child of God, it may be to develop some other characters. . . . You will please accept the enclosed six dollars, which is your due from books distributed by us, left in our care by Dr. ——. I gave him $2 for you some time since, but he is in poor health and may have used it. I kept no account of the tracts I gave away, which I hope you will pardon. If I had it to do again, I would do it more accurately. But it was so tempting, as the good seed, to scatter it with open hand, that I did not spare. O, it did seem to me so providential that they were here. Two or three I sent to Ohio, and the blessed return is that thirteen precious souls have received the truth, and been baptized,—acknowledged to be entirely from reading those books, thus being induced to search the Scriptures. Please write soon.

In love, W."

So much for that letter from one whose face I never saw in the flesh. The $6 came safe, and was acceptable. Here, Harriet, take half of it and buy some loaves and fishes, etc., and I think I'll put the other half into bread to "cast upon the waters." I don't know who had those tracts of me, but I think they must be a lot that I sent to a brother, in '55, '56, and which I had not received but about a third of the pay for, leaving more than $50 due, and from which I had heard nothing for three years, save that the good brother, who was honest and punctual usually, had met with a severe accident, and with heavy losses, and so was poor and an invalid. Well, I did not worry much about the books and tracts, and as for taking a sick man "by the throat," and telling him to "pay me that thou owest," of course I couldn't; and besides, I think I told him when I sent the books that he might give part away and pay for the rest when he had sold them. A recent letter tells me that I shall probably receive something by and by, if the Lord prosper them. But now, while I have been waiting, the tracts have been working, and away in Ohio, far from where I sent them, they have led souls to Christ. To him be all the glory.

Sister W., your money was quite acceptable, but that great, long, rich letter, ending with this "good news from a far country," was worth more than the $6, I assure you. The books and tracts are paid for if I never get another cent for them. If "two or three" of them have done so much good, eternity alone can tell what the rest may effect. I pray God to water and give the increase. May God bless that little unknown flock in Ohio, and keep them from the power of the devil and the fury of "grievous wolves."

Brethren, I feel more and more inclined to scatter "the good seed" "with open hand." Yesterday brother B. was telling of a lot of books that he gave to the newsboys on the cars, for which, when sold, they were to pay a man in the city. He got no pay for the books, but he supposes he has heard from them. One of them wandered, ragged and dirty, into Southern Indiana, found its way into a preacher's house, converted him over, and several other ministers and brethren; and as one of the least of many results, the man who got that book has since had more than $50 worth of books and tracts, most of which he has scattered in all the region around him.

Brethren, the work to be done is great. The laborers are few. Money cannot create men. We must pray to the Lord of the harvest to send them forth. But tracts, such as contain the essence of human thought and the messages of divine truth, can be made for money and sent for money, and every cent contributed will send at least 16 pages of them on their way, if a large amount are paid for in advance. Who will help raise the $1000, that we wish for to push this matter? Let us hear from you speedily. H. L. H.

Tracts.—Extracts.

The greater part of the tracts are circulated, and I occasionally receive encouraging letters from persons to whom I have sent them, and in some instances accompanied with orders and money. One letter with $2 came from a lad of ten or twelve years of age, who wanted the worth for his own distribution. "I am happy in the privilege of doing something for Him who gave his life to purchase life for me. I am bound to circulate tracts while time lasts—and am glad to get hold of some which have the truth. I long since concluded that money spent for tracts of the American Tract Society had better go through some other channel—and it seems to me yours, especially the little ones of 4 pages, are adapted to the real wants of the people. May the Lord bless them and you abundantly as instruments in his hands of enlisting subjects for his kingdom which seems to be nigh at hand."

The writer of the above has occasion to write many letters, and he tucks the little four page tracts in and sends them out. Some send back for more of the same sort. So the work goes on. Who will go and do likewise? H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

"Ye are the Light of the World."

Brethren and Sisters:—We claim to belong to that class that are said to be "the light of the world." Let us prove it by our works. We are commanded to let our light shine. How shall we let it shine? By living out the truth we have received. By preaching the word, and by using our means to send the truth to those that have not seen the light. Let faith and works go together. Do you pray that God would save men from death? Then let your actions show that you are in earnest. Do you pray that men may receive the truth? Then let your prayer reach, at least, as far as your pocket, and have strength of faith enough to pull out some of those dimes and dollars, to send the truth to men that are destitute. Have you read the call in the Crisis for means to send tracts to the West, and other places? Come now, let the Lord answer your prayers by using a little of that money that you can spare, if you are in earnest; and if you cannot, then take back your petition, and tell the Lord you did not mean that he should call upon you to let your light shine. "But I am poor, and cannot give." Well, then, the Lord does not call upon you to give; he only requires of you according to your ability. The cry of poverty is a common one. The man with a large farm, well stocked, when he is worldly, cries out I am poor, I cannot do anything. But he can find from five to ten dollars a year for tobacco, fifty dollars for his family to spend for trinkets and gew-gaws, to keep up with fashion, ten dollars or more for pleasure, but one dollar to send the gospel to men—"Oh no! I am poor, and have hard work to make both ends meet; I cannot do any thing to send tracts to the poor; I calculate to give something to sustain preaching at our meeting." Yes, that is a very comfortable, selfish kind of religion. That plea of poverty may answer the conscience now, but when called to an account of your stewardship at the court of heaven, will both ends meet then? You may find that you are much in debt to the Lord. He required you to deny self, but you refused to do much only to make provision for self.

Let us see what we can do towards publishing tracts. We want one thousand dollars. How shall it be raised? If each subscriber of the Crisis would give fifty cents, we should have it at once; but some of them are not able. Well, suppose some put in a dollar, or five, ten, fifty, that will make up the sum. Then again, let each church take the matter in hand, take up collections monthly, call for penny contributions, set all the "little wheels" in motion, and the sum may be raised and the people would hardly feel it, unless it would be when some poor soul had been converted to God, and in giving their experience, should say their attention was first called up by a penny tract; then the people might feel good; yes, feel as though they were not blanks in the church of God. Think of it, Bro., one penny may save a soul.

"I don't believe," says one, "that tracts do much good." Let me say to such, your unbelief is founded upon ignorance, and that is the foundation of all unbelief of the truth. The doctrine of immortality through Christ, that is now stirring up christian community in this country, started from a little tract that fell into the hands of one of the servants of God. Luther made quite a stir in Europe by writing out a little gospel and posting it up in a conspicuous place. The little boiling spring at the foot of the mountain looks small, but it helps to swell the mighty roar of the Niagara. So the little tracts will help make up the innumerable company of the redeemed that will sing redemption's song in the day when Jesus shall gather his jewels.

Brethren and Sisters, put the wheels in motion, send in your dimes and dollars to the Crisis office, or to Bro. Hastings; let us keep up with Satan; he has the press at work sending out his filthy trash to poison the mind; let us counteract his influence, by sending out the gospel of Christ. One church has already pledged fifty dollars for this object. Let others follow and make up the sum. J. Hemenway.

[Thank you for this, Bro. Hemenway. It is time to do something.—Ed.]

☞ Our prayers and God's mercy are like two buckets in a well; while the one ascends the other descends.

For the Crisis.

Louis Napoleon.

THE PRESTIGE AND GENIUS OF REVULSION!

Wonderful, impenetrable, contradictory man! Strange, conflicting, revolutionary government! Born of change, and living by the impulsive will, the unrevealed sagacity of a bold usurper; with the blind attachment of a people loving a glorious, imperial slavery, dazzled by the brilliant victories of conquest, submissive under the gilded chains of an illegitimate despotism, which their own passive, political material has invited,—it must have a mission of retribution; it must follow its destiny of blood, and roll back on itself the tide of suicidal ruin, which seals its perdition. Upspringing from the abyss of oblivion to the alarm of the nations, it consolidates its forces, forms its alliances, perfects its relations and rushes with haste to the battle grounds of its youth, when guided by another leader, and for a similar purpose, against precisely the same power—despotic Austria.

It is now the general consent that Napoleon aims at the liberation of Italy, with whatever may offer, as work suitable to his army and the purposes of his ambition. His oath in the secret society of the Carbonari, requires him to labor for the republican liberty of Italy. It will now lead him on, in connection with Victor Emmanuel and the Italian leaders, to free that people from the Austrian and Papal yoke. The penalty is the fear, and the true secret of the attempts upon his life.

Let us look at the mysterious man, in whom contending elements have seemingly so long warred, but who has himself been ever true to his primary and absorbing ambition. His whole life has been a series of contradictions. When the empire fell, he was left, at the age of seven years, a wanderer with his mother. They sought a home in Switzerland; there he was raised and first obtained citizenship, in a republican country. After his first insurrectionary attempt, which was in favor of the Italians, and too diminutive to mention, he returned to Switzerland. After his attempt at Bologne he came to New York, where he was a fast young man. After his ineffectual and puerile efforts at Strasbourg, he was imprisoned, perpetually, in the fortress of Ham; the government of Louis Phillippe not judging him worthy of the honor of the guillotine, from the insignificance of the man, or the act; but most likely from the unpopularity of beheading a man bearing (whether honestly or not,) the name of Bonaparte. The tiger only showed his teeth then. The time came in which to seize upon the prey. After six years' imprisonment, he escaped to England, where he was a constable when Queen Victoria feared an insurrection of the Chartists. In 1848, the day of his long expectation arrived. He is called to the presidency of the republic of France. But the French are no people for a republic. He knew it, the world knew it, they must have monarchy or anarchy. Even a constitutional monarchy did not fit them, they must have imperialism, bordering on absolutstic domination. With audacity, unequalled by Cæsar—unparalled, except in Napoleon I.—he strides from the threshold to the summit of power, and guides the politics of a people whose very name imports revolution, disruption and terror; swearing to support republican institutions, imprecating curses on himself if he shall ever fail to defend democratic republicanism. Under the most solemn oaths and obligations to work against imperial power, one of his first important acts, as a comment on his oaths, is the occupying of Rome by a French army, and the consequent annihilation of the young Roman Republic. Garibaldi and Massini were leaders, who flung to the breeze their new national banner inscribed "Italia," (the people)—he is with them now. Impetuously Garibaldi throws his valiant Italians into Lombardy to liberate his country, most effectually serving the cause of the allied Emperors.

Napoleon has always regarded the French people as waiting for him. He has studied long and well the principles of government adopted by his uncle, who, after all the enconiums passed upon him, was a fearless, unscrupulous usurper, whose passport to the throne was only the sword, whose policy was tyrannical or liberal as he chose, whose fate was as marked as his success. He has studied well his uncle's doctrine of destiny, it is the doctrine of arbitrary power in the will and success of the conqueror. He has written well his "Napoleonic Ideas;" and written vastly more—ascended the throne of France by the decision of his own will, when the time which he had long bode was come—that was the time of the coup d'etat.

What has been done? France, mad with republicanism, has settled down under the yoke of Imperial despotism. England and France, ancient enemies, have been united. Russia, the natural ally of England in Europe, alienated. Italy, now freed from Austrian domination, is likely to throw off the papal yoke and enjoy a liberal government. The Austrian House, a usurpation like his own, and the most like him of any in Europe, humbled. All Germany is excited and ready to plunge madly in war against the approaching conqueror. A German gentleman, a friend of mine, at

New Britain, of extensive travels, and well versed in the politics and resources of Central Europe, assures me that Germany alone can bring an army of nearly half a million into the field, in six months. Prussia is mobilizing her entire army, and already negotiating with the German powers for the passage of troops to the battle plains of Lombardy, where the Imperial hordes continue the ensanguined strife. Russia is threatening to move an army of 300,000 soldiers into the Prussian territory, and thus support Napoleon. Hungary is hailing this war as the sunrise of deliverance. England, with naval armaments heretofore unequalled in the history of the world, is looking on, wondering whether she may not, when Russia and France shall have divided the possession of Turkey, lose the control of the Mediterranean and the Levant, with her now important and improved passage to the East Indies; and whether she must now second the decision of Prussia! All this comes from the decision of a man to free a depressed and outraged people, and resist the encroachments of a brother despot! Underlying the whole, we discover his own raging, engulphing ambition!

As the man is, so is his government. Louis Napoleon has been called imbecile; then, a dark man, man of destiny—not a statesman—then an inscentably wise dictator. Now the coronet of conquest blazes on his brow, and glory surrounds his path, all men wonder, and multitudes admire. This man's power, with the whole dynasty, looks very much like the great Apocalyptic monster, that "was and is not, and yet is." The world wonders (save those who view it in the light of prophecy,) that such a man should have gained power, and that government thus gained should hold a position to shake nations in pieces—overwhelm thrones in ruin. It is the Napoleonic genius. It is the French, freed from Bourbon restraint, a nation warring its way to glory! It has never been dead—only slumbered. With its parvenu king, Europe can never be at peace. All Europe must fly to arms when this lion shakes his mane. It is in the prophecy. God's overruling, providential hand guides the undulations of the earthquake. "He is of the seven." He sits by Europe's consent. He moves all the continent trembles.

It is now suggested that he will separate the civil and ecclesiastical power in Italy, leaving the Pope only his spiritual position. Says one, "he has the audacity to do it if he will; and should he do it, he would receive the thanks of Christendom!" Better look for a war upon Protestantism at his hands. A Prussian writer at Berlin holds that the localizing of the war is impossible. It must assume "European proportions."

Is the continued neutrality of England and Prussia possible? It might be folly in us to attempt to speak definitely as to the course events will take; especially as to the time which may be consumed in effecting the gigantic work before the "ten kings, with the Beast." Prophecy has its certainties and its uncertainties! Its certainties are facts. The great fact—history of nations beforehand. It is uncertain to us in its dates and time, together with the precise classification of the events! A peaceable kingdom is foretold for the world, which will be, in due time, installed. Thus far the prophecy of John seems to show the beginning of a fulfillment. This may be the inception of that war which shall not end till the angry nations are subdued by "the breath of his lips."

We hate dogmatism, in even the interpretation of prophecy; but each day brings us facts suggestive of the true position and the great final work. The Pope may not run away yet, but we see it stated that he has requested permission to reside at Ferrara, under Austrian protection. The French replied, that they should not consider His Holiness safe under Austrian protection; they would give him a passport to France or to Algeria if he chose. Even this characterizes the campaign. It Napoleonizes the French effort. The Pope's blessing Austrian arms, and invoking special prayers, can not be considered, even by Pius IX., as any very good security. The head British ministry will, it appears, decide in favor of neutrality, much to the grief of Prince Albert, whose influence is with the Tories. Napoleon declares he will not have a Prussia on the south of France. By which, we think he means that Upper Italy shall not receive a constitutional government. Prussia is governed by a constitutional monarchy, with a national Protestant church. Thus, already, we discover that the liberation of the Italians is, with him, the punishment of Austria. What can Italy hope from him in the end? Absolutely nothing. Can Protestantism hope at his hands? Nay. France is the embodiment of the atheistical will power, which acknowledges no authority of God in the rule of nations. Its war-god shrine rises at every point of its success.

A few months may compel a condition that cannot admit of alternative. The great Beast power, with some tones of dragonic voice, "is" alive, and is at work. The red torch of war lights up the towering sky of vengeance; empires tremble over the upheaving volcano; "the judgment" of the "great city," written in wrath, flames on the tablet of doom. God "controverts" the "thrones of iniquity" which "frame mischief by a law." W. S. C.

Book Notices.

The New Music Book.—In answer to the many inquiries concerning the new music and hymn book, we would say, it is being urged onward as fast as possible. An effort will be made to have it ready for the Wilbraham campmeeting, but the committee can not make a very strong promise. They will do their best. The work has been in the printer's hands for some weeks. The book will contain about three hundred pages, three hundred tunes and six hundred hymns, so compact as to be easily carried in the pocket. It will be a valuable book—just what is needed. Choice tunes or hymns might still be added, if forwarded immediately.

☞ A New Tract will be published on Saturday of this week, by Jewett & Co., entitled, The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; Does it imply future eternal misery? By C. F. Hudson. Designed to show, 1st, That the passage in Luke 16: 19–31 is strictly a Parable; 2dly, Its Applications; 3dly, Its real and supposed Implications.

The various applications that have been made of it are given, especially that to the Jews and the Gentiles. But the burden of the argument is respecting what the parable implies. If there were no future state whatever, there would be no material out of which to create the parable. And now how much does it involve, in the question of a future state?

First, it does not of course describe and prove the active life of the disembodied soul. This premise in the orthodox argument is untenable. But, secondly, allowing the premise, the orthodox conclusion would not follow from it. The common argument fails in every link. They who are not refuted upon the first may be upon the second, or even the third, and so be led to re-examine their whole doctrine.

In 24 pages. Price, 3 cents single. $2.00 per hundred. For sale at this office.

Debt and Grace.—The Presbyterian Quarterly (Philadelphia) for July says:

"This book is learned and able. Mr. H. has carefully studied the literature of the controversy. The arguments are quiet, clear, and in general candid. It is, by far, the ablest book we have ever read on the subject.

"Of course, it does not convince us that the orthodox view is erroneous, but we can not believe the truth will suffer by fair and candid discussion. This theory has the immense advantage of maintaining the divinity of the Savior, the depravity of man, and the atonement. It differs from the received one only on the material point of the continued existence of the wicked. The book is worthy of a careful study and of a candid answer. The fact that, with all the natural feelings and sympathies of men in its favor, Universalism, in any form, makes so slow progress, is a very powerful argument against it. And we are compelled to say, though with deep sadness, that the plain sense of Scripture seems to leave no hope that a finally impenitent man can escape eternal conscious suffering. We can not at all explain how this terrible truth consists with God's infinite benevolence; we can only say that it appears to be taught, and that, if true, the All-Wise and All-Good has reasons of infinite validity for what He does. We bow in humble submission to a truth which passes understanding, and to the will of a Being who cannot err and who is infinitely more kind and good than we are."

Fables of Infidelity and Facts of Faith.—We have carefully examined this book, and unhesitatingly pronounce it a valuable work. . . . We are not aware of having noticed anything new in the material of the book, but we found what was far better—a condensation of a great variety of facts bearing against Infidelity and Pantheism, and conclusively establishing the leading truths assailed. Indeed, the arrangement and condensation of facts, constitute the great excellencies of the book, and must have cost the author a great amount of labor.—United Presbyterian (Pittsburgh.)

For sale at the Crisis office and by H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. Price 75 cts., postage paid. $6.00 per dozen.

The Great Controversy between God and Man. By H. L. Hastings.—"This book contains a history of God's dealings with individuals and nations, and shows how obstinately the natural heart has opposed the Sovereign Ruler of the world. The results of this rebellion against him are strangely described. The way of reconciliation between God and man is portrayed in a most touching and impressive form. Christ is pointed out as the way, the truth, the life, and the only medium of reconciliation between the parties at issue. The statements and discussions abound with truth and interest."—Christian Chronicle, Philadelphia.

For sale here and by H. L. H.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER FROM ELD. H. GREW.

"I am reading 'Fables of Infidelity' with much interest. They are ably written. It is delightful to a spiritual mind to have the cavils against God's word so triumphantly refuted. The harmony of the two Testaments is well set forth, clearly showing that the God of Abraham and of Moses is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that the same attributes of mercy and righteous vengeance have been revealed in his dealings with men in all dispensations.

'Should all the forms which men devise,
Assault our faith with treach'rous arts,
We'll call them vanities and lies,
And bind the Bible to our hearts.'"

Price, post paid, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

Obituary Notices.

DEATH OF ELDER CHARLES W. PERKINS.

Elder Charles W. Perkins, son of Philbrick Perkins, died at the residence of his father in Meredith, N.H., on Saturday night, June 4th, 1859, at the age of forty years and twenty-eight days

He has been declining for several years, during which he bore his sufferings with the patience and courage of a submissive christian, sometimes cherishing the hope that his health was improving, and at all times cheerfully submitting himself to the will of God.

Bro. Perkins first made a profession of religion at the age of twenty-one, and joined the Free Will Baptist Church. Within a few years he embraced the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ, and sacrificed worldly pleasures and gain, and a large circle of friends for the truth's sake, which he never afterwards regretted.

During the first ten years of his profession he labored as an exhorter, and traveled with different preachers as he had opportunity. At the age of thirty-one he gave himself to the ministry and commenced preaching the gospel, freely, wherever a door opened; and most heartily and faithfully did he labor in his calling till disease had wasted his flesh and his strength, and then, privately, he ceased not to warn and instruct till his voice was silenced by the cruel enemy, death.

His parents had selected him to be a support and comfort to them in their old age and make joyful and pleasant the last days of this life, but when they saw that God had called him to preach His truth, they yielded to His will and bid their son God speed in sounding the gospel trump. And day and night did he travel with his message, through heat and cold, through storms and sunshine, through trials and privations, poor, and sometimes suffering for the comforts of life, despised, forsaken, and cast out by many, though loved, esteemed, and received by few, until now, at length, the parents who had once thought to have Charles smooth their passage to the tomb, are brought to stand around his death bed, and with the bereaved companion and their other children, select the spot for a new burying place near their house, in which Charles was the first to be buried, and where they by his side soon expect to be laid.

His mind was clear to the last, and his confidence in God unchanged. He did not have an accumulation of business to attend to, nor confessions or promises to make, that if he could live he would do so and so, as is too often the case, for he had discharged his duties day by day as time had passed; and now, when all emaciated and worn out with disease, and utterly unable to do anything, or scarcely even to speak, he had nothing to do but quietly and peaceably to fall asleep in Christ without a murmur.

I was with him the last week of his life, witnessed the death bed scene, and preached his funeral sermon to a large and attentive gathering of relatives, friends and neighbors, All felt that a worthy man had died. In that visit, I realized the force of this text—"It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting."

Let us imitate the good examples, the godly life, and faithfulness of Bro. Charles, and finally, when our dead brother, with all that sleep in Jesus shall awake, be able to mingle our voices with that happy throng in joyful praise to Him that shall sit upon the throne in the kingdom of bright glory for ever and ever. J. Cummings.

Providence, July 12, 1859.

Died, in New York city, on the 15th and 19th of June, twins, infant son and daughter of Joseph T. and Jane A. M. Howland, aged 17 and 21 days.

"So fade the joys of earth away,
By time's rude blasts removed;
But in Eternity's bright day
We'll welcome those we've loved. H.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

PER STEAMSHIP INDIANA.

The following telegram show the course of events:

Verona, 20th. The Austrians have abandoned the line of the Mincio, and fallen back on Verona.

Vienna, 3d. The Piedmontese have surrounded Peschiera.

A French division has been sent to the South to join the corps of Prince Napoleon.

Private dispatches from the French headquarters, dated 3d, say—This morning, at 7 o'clock, the Emperor quitted Volta, in order to cross the Mincio and establish his headquarters at Vallegio. We are only four leagues from Peschiera, the siege of which was begun two days ago by the Sardinians. Cannons roar night and day in that direction. The Austrian advanced post is but a short distance from Villa Franca, which is occupied by the corps of Marshal Niel.

It is much doubted that the Austrian army will venture to accept battle in the condition of demoralization and stupor into which they have fallen since our victory at Solferino.

Vallegio, 4th. (Official.) The French army, increased by Prince Napoleon's corps, will operate against Verona, whilst the part of the Sardinians begins with the siege of Peschiera.

The Emperor, having sent back all wounded officers without exchange, and having requested an exchange of prisoners, an Austrian has arrived with the announcement that the Emperor of Austria will also send back without exchange the wounded prisoners of the Allies, and that his Majesty is equally anxious for the exchange of others.

There are great complaints of scarcity of provisions in the villages occupied by the Allies.

ATTITUDE OF GERMANY.

At Frankfort, 2d inst., in the Federal Diet, the proposals of Prussia to place a corps of Observation on the Upper Rhine was almost unanimously agreed to The Representatives of several governments were without instructions. On the 4th there was an extraordinary sitting of the Diet, when Prussia presented new and farther proposals respecting the establishment, extension, and command in chief of said corps of observation. Immediately after the sitting M. de Usedom left for Berlin.

A dispatch had been issued by the French government to representatives at foreign courts making known the opinion of the French government as to the policy and attitude of Germany. The dispatch fully endorses the circular sent by the Russian Cabinet to its agents in Germany, declaring the opinion of Russia that the Confederation had not only no grounds for interference in the present war, but Germany by mixing in the conflict, would depart from her treaties—and this opinion the French dispatch declares to be true and just.

The new Prussian military measures have not inspired the French government with uneasiness, as France cannot disagree with the views stated by Prussia for taking such steps. The dispatch concludes by stating that without being yet officially acquainted with the views of the English government, France is authorized to draw, from the circumstance of their coming into power, most favorable conclusions for Italy.

Prussia, it is said, has given tranquilizing assurances to the French government.

A Berlin correspondent of the Times says—The Prussian proposals were in the hands of Russia and England. The writer says that, by the end of the week, the Prussian army will be in full march. Two corps d'armee will be stationed on the Silesian frontier, in case of an unexpected attack on the part of Russia; on the lower and middle Rhine 140,000 Prussians will be stationed. When those preparations are completed, Prussia will probably make her proposals to France, and these will unquestionably be refused.

The same correspondent gives an outline of the propositions, which include the erection of Venice into a separate kingdom, with the Archduke Maximilian as king.

The Times correspondent says of the Prince of Prussia that although the Prince of Prussia has never given proof of strategic ability, he is nevertheless impressed with the idea so prevalent among crowned heads of being a great captain, and his utmost ambition is to command as Generalissimo the army of the Germanic Confederation

PAPAL STATES.

Enquiries into the late disturbances at Perugia have been ordered

An official condemnation, by the French government, of an article which appeared in the Paris Siecle, affirms that respect for Papacy forms part of the programme which the Emperor is carrying out in Italy. The responsibility of the conflict at Perugia is cast upon those who compelled the Pontifical government to make use of armed force for legitimate defence.

An official contradiction has been published of the reported liberation of criminals at Rome.

A circular publication of the temporal power of the Pope and address by his Holiness to the Cardinals in the Legations, have been issued, both expressing confidence in the Emperor of the French.

KOSSUTH IN ITALY.

Kossuth having arrived on the 22d of June at Geneva, proceeded next day to Turin. At every station on the road, crowds of Italians assembled to cheer him. After two long interviews with Cavour at Turin, Kossuth, in company with a confidential friend of the Sardinian Minister, set out for Parma, the headquarters of Prince Napoleon. The same scenes of enthusiasm were witnessed.—At Piacenza his carriage was drawn by the people. At Parma he had an interview with Prince Napoleon. On the 28th, Kossuth set out for the headquarters of the Emperor Napoleon, provided with letters from Cavour and Prince Napoleon to the Emperor.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Griffiths inquired whether the British Consul at Rio had exercised his authority to prevent a certain contract for the sale of slaves in Brazil by the British Mining Company from being carried into effect. Lord John Russell said the Company had been informed that they would be liable to penalty if slaves were sold.

Lord Paget said it was intended during the present session to bring in a bill to carry out the recommendations of the Commissioners for manning the Navy.

On the 5th, in the Lords, Lord Stratford de Redcliffe gave notice of a resolution approving the neutral attitude assumed by government, relying on the continuance of that policy, at the same time adopting measures for the completion of the national defences.

Lord Lyndhurst strongly advocated vigorous measures of defence, both on sea and land.—He thought that a regular militia force of 100,000 men ought to be maintained, and an equal force of disembodied trained militia. He regarded the assertion that France had no wish to invade England as undeserving of consideration. England ought to live in perfect independence of French forbearance, relying only on the vigor of the people.

FRANCE.

It is again currently reported in well-informed quarters, that the Emperor intends to return to Paris by the middle of July.

It is stated that naval preparations were never more actively carried on than at present, both at Toulon and at Brest.

Another division of the army at Lyons, is under orders for Italy

The vintage is expected to be superior in quality, but not abundant.

The harvest in Algeria is completed. The crops were good

Flour was dull and nominal in Paris. Wheat had declined 50c. on the week.

The Corps d'armee of Pelissier, was to be completed and established in the cantonments by 13th of July. It consists of 160,000 Infantry, 12,000 cavalry, 400 cannons.

RUSSIA.

Schamyl has recently captured the stronghold of Vidino, of the Russian garrison, of which only ten men escaped. Several hundred killed and wounded, about 40 of whom were officers. It is added that Schamyl had ordered the decapitation of his own son—who, it will be remembered, after a detention of several years in Russia, where he became an officer in the army, was not long ago sent back to his father. He was suspected of complicity with the enemy on this occasion.

Four Russian Corps d' armee are already placed on a war footing. All officers on limited leave have been ordered to join their regiments.

A levy of recruits is shortly expected.

STILL LATER.

London, July 6 The Paris correspondent of the London Times says—The Minister of War and Marshal Pellissier have had another conference for the purpose of concerting measures for the complete organization of the army of the East. An Eighth Division, in course of organization at Lyons, is to reinforce the army of Italy.

A telegram from Trieste, dated 7th, says—that legal proceedings have been taken against a secret political society at Messina, and several arrests have been made.

Advices have also been received from Ancona to the 30th of June. Gen. Caitermatten had taken command of the town, and declared it in a state of siege. A general disarming of the citizens had been ordered.

An address of the Sardinian Admiral to the people of Messina had been issued.

Trieste, Tuesday. An Austrian Prize Court has been established at Varna, the appeal from which is to be the Court at Trieste.

Gen. Clara Gallas, commander of a corps d' armee, has arrived here from Verona.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says, letters from the headquarters of Prince Napoleon state that another battle is expected on the banks of the Adige, and the Austrians are believed to have 200,000 men in line. Fresh battalions are organizing at Paris.

Kossuth has issued a proclamation, calling the Hungarian nation to arms to struggle for liberty, and announces that he would soon be among them.

Berne, July 6. News has been received from Bormio that a corps of 3000 to 5000 Tyrolese Chasseurs had been threatening the Val Telline, but the several columns of Garibaldi and Cialdini's corps had repulsed them from Bormio, and driven them as far as the first Canton of the Stelvio Pass. The Austrians suffered severely. Garibaldi's loss was ten severely wounded, and Cialdini's three killed and four wounded.

The Hungarians.

The following is the material portion of General Klapka's proclamation to the Hungarian soldiers in the Austrian ranks:

"The hour of vengeance has struck. Already the storm gathers over the fraudulent house of Austria. Its friends abandon it. The Czar of Russia himself now arms in a different sense from ten years ago, and will break its pride.

"Already the Italians, our brethren in misfortune, brandish arms to conquer independence. And you, Magyar warriors, how could you remain in the enemy's ranks? How could you fight against those who have risen to shake off the yoke of servitude?

"O, it cannot be that you are the mercenaries of the oppressors! Hasten hither, O warriors—hither, where the holy cause of your country summons you!

"You cannot have forgotten how many times the Austrians were put to flight by your bayonets. You cannot have forgotten the glorious days of Isaszeg, Pisti, Snolnok, Nagy-Sarlo, and Komorn. Nor will you have forgotten that Hungary has been free and great.

"Behold the time arrived to reacquire that which has been lost, and to revenge the sanguinary banquets of Pesth and Arad, which raised throughout the world a cry of horror.

"Now we are no longer alone and abandoned. The heroic King of Piedmont stands at the head of the Italian army, and by his side is the powerful Emperor of the French. The flags of the two nations combine: France and Italy—that is the signal of attack. They already reckon upon us, they expect us; how should we be the last to take part in a war on the result of which our liberation depends?

"Unite yourselves, courageously and with confidence, to the French and Italian armies; for none but the vile can doubt of a successful result—none but a traitor fight under the banner of Austria.

"Hasten then to the Hungarian standard, which we have raised for you. At the same time war will also break out in Hungary, the Emperor of the French and the King of Piedmont have recognized the holiness of our cause, we possess their sympathy, the Italian soldiers will join us, and so do you join yourselves to them.

"Let us form in Italy an Hungarian army, with which, after fighting on Italian ground, we may return to our own country to take part, we also, in the war of independence and honor of the Magyar nation."

Hungarian Revolution.—The New York Herald has information, by private letters received from Genoa, that an insurrectionary movement in respect to Hungary, under leadership of Kiss, has been organized in Wallachia, and that a corps was, at last accounts, marching towards the Austrian frontier, and was about to enter Transylvania by one of the mountain passes by which the Russians entered in 1849. If this revolution should assume any formidable proportions, it will greatly increase the extent of the political imbroglio in Europe.

☞ Rev. Dr. Stearns of Newark, N. J., writes from Sweden:

"I am assured there is not a parish in Sweden where the religious awakening is not taking place, and persons of every grade and position in life are coming under its influence. Instances of sudden conversions, sudden and remarkable as some of those in the New Testament, have been related to me, and attended with circumstances of which we have no experience in our country; and there is a freshness and simplicity in the new religious life here, which contrasts strangely with the old fixed and conventional forms in which we are accustomed to see it. It charms and wins upon your affections like the smile of an infant."

The Florence correspondent of the Providence Journal remarks:

"There has recently arrived here a Swiss Protestant clergyman, who is preaching religious liberty to the Italians in their own language. This privilege is one of the first fruits which the admirable Tuscan revolution Would it not be worth while for some of our American Protestant missionary Societies to take steps for the establishment of a chapel here? Without taking into account the probability of converting some Italians—and many are in a good state of preparation for something more reasonable than the established religion of the country—the number of Americans permanently resident here ought to be sufficient to form a congregation."

Notices, &c.

Just published, the Cottage Testament, by W. Patton, D. D., with Notes, Polyglott References, and Marginal Readings, also Maps, Tables, etc., Geographical descriptions of all the principal places in the New Testament alphabetically arranged. Complete in one volume, morocco, flexible binding. Price 75 cents. Sent by mail free, on receiving price. Address J. Babcock, Natick Post Office, R. I.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. Healy,
Committee, R. Starks,
E. M'Cullock.

Notice.

A meeting is expected to commence at North Searsport, Maine, on Saturday the sixth day of August next, at ten o'clock, A.M. and continue over the Sabbath. Eld. John Billings is expected to attend.

W. Nichols.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. Mathewson.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. Parry.

July 2d, 1859.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. Preble.

The Prophetic Chart.—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John engraved on stone. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. Price 10 cts, postage included. Address Bartholomew Bosser, Philadelphia, Pa.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday, ... July 24th

Providence permitting, I will hold meetings as follows:—
Appanaug Plains, R. I., July 23d and Sunday 24th
River Point, or vicinity .... July 25th and 26th
Arnold's Bridge, Wednesday evening, ... July 27th
Providence, (where Bro. Hastings appoints,) Thursday evening .... July 28th
Newfield, Ct., Sunday .... July 31st
Winsted, Tuesday .... Aug. 2nd
Pleasant Valley, Wednesday .... Aug. 3d
Bakerville, (if Bro. Mathewson appoints) .. Aug. 4th
Collinsville, Friday .... Aug. 5th
North Canton, Sunday .... Aug. 7th
HIRAM MUNGER.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Exeter, N. H., on Lord's day, July 24th, as brethren may appoint.
JACOB BLAIN.

I propose to preach, the Lord willing, at
Scitico (chapel) .... Aug. 7th
New Britain, Ct., Thursday evening ...... Aug. 11th
Bristol, Ct., Sunday .... Aug. 14th
Collinsville, Ct., Sunday .... July 31st
If these proposals conflict with previous arrangements, please notify immediately. Address H. F. Carpenter, Worcester, Mass.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2nd, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best.
MILES GRANT.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 23d, Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 4th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual. M. G.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Wallingford .... July 24th
Cheshire .... July 31st
Fairhaven .... Aug. 7th
Southington .... Aug. 14th
Cheshire .... Aug. 21st
S. S. BREWER.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at North Herman, Me., July 31st.

C. H. Perkins appoints to preach at
South Reading .... July 24th

I will preach as follows:—
Goshen, Mass., ... Sunday, July 24th
Springfield, Mass., ... July 27th
as Bro. S. F. Otis may arrange.
Palmer, Mass., (eve.) .... July 28th
Worcester, Mass., (eve.) .... July 29th
Holden, Mass., ... Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H., ... Sunday, Aug. 7th
I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me. S. W. BISHOP.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Surrey, Me., (school house) .... July 24th
Carmel, Me., (meeting house) .... Aug. 7th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

G. L. Teeple—From $2.50 to $3.50.

J. P. Babcock—All right.

Eld. Y. Higgins—$3.17.

Will Bro. Benj Spaulding please send us his present address.

C. G. Baker—See cash receipts No. 196.

Cash Receipts.

W H Shackford 211, 40 cts, L T Moses 226 99 cts, J Hale 213 51 cts, And. Johnson 211 50 cts.

J Calder 226, S Gault 182, J Gregory 325, G H White 226, P Alling 195, A Bellows 199, W A Fenn 226, B Corliss 226, M A Clement 218, M Hobart 221, Abm. Johnson 223, E Griffin 234, N W Riley 213, A C Chandler 226, J O Bocker 219, I Richards 226, J Graham 196, A Dodgson 222, W A Morse 222, Mrs. A Davis 226, C F Horn 226,—$1.00 each.

O Lewis 252, J N Babb 250, M Whitaker 226, W McCulloch 236,—$2.00 each.

S S Rogers 212, R E Ladd 212,—$3.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J Calder 3 cents, Mrs. M M French 51 cts, W L Stroud 21 cts, H E Felton 31 cts, J P Babcock $12.91, Eld. F Barr $1.00, Eld. W Pratt $1.00, M S Chambers $2.00.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid, hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1–4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single, 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.50 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co, Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts.; postage 9 cts. 1–4 off per dozen. Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.50.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; [illegible]

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought [illegible]

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price [illegible]—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological [illegible] of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Gennesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $6.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 5 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 322, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three and four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. No. one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, Wondrous Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings; or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 5 cts.—post. 1c.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. [illegible], Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Walte, [illegible] Harp, by Elder Himes; [illegible] Children; [illegible] Great Controversy.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Early Hopes.

Hopes of my youthful days, where have ye sped?
And thoughts, gone down, where sleep my buried [illegible]
The very [illegible] e'er to my bosom press'd,
Sleep side by side in yon lone vale of rest.
But O! I would not wake them from their slumbers then,
Again life's pains and toils and sorrows here to share;
For soon, ah! soon will close this fitful dream of tears,
And I shall sleep beside the loved of early years.
And when with trembling steps I near the tomb,
Faith only lights me onward through its gloom,
To its asylum'd fortress, strong and high,
Where the poor wounded heart secure can fly.

E. S. W.

West Winsted, June, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 4.

BY ORRIN F. ALLEN.

THE FIRST FRATRICIDE.

We turn from scenes of Paradise,
To see a brother die,
By bloody hands of violence,
With none to succor nigh.

Fearful, indeed, was the tragedy with which the drama of human frailty opened, after the expulsion of man from Paradise. The first pair had no sooner become accustomed to their changed condition, and began to be surrounded by the sweets of domestic life, and the happy voices of offspring, than an event transpired which must have embittered all their remaining joys. The enactment of this tragedy was the more glaring, because it was one of the very first resultants of that trangression, which has filled our world with woe. And it happened, too, on the very confines of that Paradise which so late had been the happy abode of our fallen parents. So true it is, that but a pace may separate us from guilt, and that the perpetration of one wrong act may often lead us into the path of deepest crimes.

Our first parents, on account of sin, had lost their original exalted position in the scale of being. The earth also, partaking of the curse which had fallen on man, began early to exhibit signs of permature decay. So that, thus early mankind were doomed to gain a livlihood by constant toil, either as tillers of the soil or as tenders of the flocks which fed upon the broad pastures of the unsurveyed hills and valleys. To Cain, the first born of Adam and Eve, was allotted the former of the above employments, and to Abel, his brother, the latter. Although the account of these two brothers is very brief, yet their respective characters are presented to us in a very strong light. In Cain, we readily discover a harsh, unfeeling spirit. He was selfish and devoid of those pure and noble feelings which should characterize a brother. Abel was the very opposite of all this. He was all gentleness; and from his heart there welled up a pure affection for all around him, and a holy reverence for his Creator. It may seem strange that there should be such a difference, thus early, between two brothers; but perhaps it was permitted to be so, that we might see by strong contrasts, the unseemly effects of sin.

It appears from Divine record, that Cain, desiring to seem righteous before God, brought an offering from the fruits of the ground. But upon his altar, reared by the hand of insincerity, there descended no fire from heaven, as a token of God's acceptance and favor. His offering was not presented with that heart willingness which is so acceptable to Heaven; therefore he was rejected, for God never accepted any but free will offerings. But when the gentle Abel presented his slain lamb for sacrifice, the heaven-descending fire soon told his confiding heart that he was in favor with God.

The envious Cain saw all this and was angry. He complained to God of this seeming partiality, but not heeding the answer which was made to him,—"If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door,"—he sought the first opportunity to rid himself of his brother. Such an opportunity soon presented itself, and the righteous Abel fell a martyr to truth and holy religion. His innocent heart little suspected the plot which was laid against him, till he read in the last menacing act of Cain that his life was sought after. His tender tones and beseeching looks had no effect to turn aside the uplifted club of his cruel brother. His heart had ceased to pulsate, when the blow fell upon his devoted head, for the whole force of his brother's unholy ingratitude fell upon him at once and crushed out the life from his prostrate form. Thus fell the first victim to cruel envy, that monster which has filled many a home with woe, and blighted many a joyous hope.

Forth from the perpetration of this horrid act went the cruel Cain, an exile from home, and the curse of offended Heaven resting upon him. His must have been an [illegible] life of troubled visions, whenever the scene of his brother's murder came up before him, for which no penance of his could ever atone, or drive from him.

But ah! how must have bled the tender heart of Eve, when first she saw the bloody [illegible] of her dear son, slain by the hand of her first born! How must her heart have [illegible] with contending emotions, [illegible] all the feelings of the mother were with in her bosom! [illegible] must have been her sorrow for the rashness of the one, and anguish for the sad death of the other. And the noble Adam, too, how he bowed his lofty head in sorrow, when he vainly endeavored to counsel the sinking heart of Eve. Then they both together wept anew over that transgression which had been the cause of all this woe. Death to them was new, and violence before unknown, so that this stroke was doubly severe to them. Sad were the rites performed at this first funeral which darkened the calender of earth's history. Rude was the bier, ruder still the sepulchre, and few were the mourners there at the burial of Abel. Yet fonder hearts never followed the dead than those who followed the martyred one to his last resting place. Long they lingered there after the green turf had been placed upon the breast of the sleeper. And, methinks, in after years, the sons and daughters of Adam often gathered there, when the sweet stars looked gently down from heaven, and listened with tearful attention to their father's recital of the fearful end of their brother.

Thus opened and closed the scene that filled the first grave with its victim. Ah! dare we attempt to think of the like crimes that have since filled the world with mourning? No, no, the great book alone can disclose them at the last day, and also how fearful will be its developments, as the crimes of the ages are unfolded before the assembled universe.

For the Crisis.

Salvation of Infants.

"Suffer little children to come unto me,
And forbid them not,
For of such is the kingdom of heaven."—CHRIST

Certain persons of our day are disposed to contend that infants will not be saved in the kingdom of our Lord; but as there are some passages of scripture that seem to prove to the contrary, I feel somewhat desirous to have those "certain persons" become acquainted with them; and, as it looks honest, and really is honest to examine both affirmative and negative, I would advise them so to do on this question.

First, Isaiah, in speaking of the coming kingdom of the Messiah, says: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."—Isa. 65:20.

"The child shall die an hundred years old," he says. What is meant by that? Is it not that the child being resurrected from the dead, or translated at Christ's second advent, and "clothed upon with immortality," becomes as mature and vigorous in mind, as if it had died an hundred years old?

The prophet also says of those in the kingdom, that they are the "blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them." (chap. 65:23.) So then, there will be children in the kingdom; and as we have no evidence that births will then occur, the question then arises, how does it happen that "offspring" have a place there? Can we account for it in any other light than that they will be redeemed from this world—the "land of the enemy?" And Isaiah says in the 20th verse, "There shall be no more thence an infant of days," which shows conclusively, I think, that no births will occur there. Then, to make Isaiah consistent with himself, we must conclude that the "offspring" spoken of, are the "redeemed from among men," from this world; "For of such is the kingdom of God," or "heaven," says the Savior. (Matt. 19:14; Mark 10:14; Luke 18:16.)

Christ said, (Matt. 18:3,) that unless we "become as little children," in humbleness, etc., we cannot attain to that world. Now, we may try as hard as we please to become like little children, in the respects which Christ had reference to, and we cannot become more innocent and confiding than they; so then, if little children are more innocent, pure, confiding, and pleasing to our Savior, than adults, why should they be left out of the kingdom, while we, sinful mortals, in whose mouths God might, perhaps, find "guile," be allowed to enter that "world of delight?" Christ first came as the "Lamb of God" to take away the sin of the world, but where there is no sin, as in the infant, there is none to take away. Why did Christ declare we should become as little children, unless they are looked upon by him as worthy examples; and also, worthy of an inheritance in the promised land? It proves that they are his favorites. And, said he, "whoso shall receive one such little child, in my name, receiveth me." (Matt. 18:5.) Now, if we do not receive the little ones in Jesus' name, by the same word, we do not receive Christ himself. Take heed, therefore, you who cast off little children as not inheritors of the kingdom, for you cast off Jesus Christ by so doing.

In the Apocalypse we find described several classes of persons that "were redeemed" from the enemy. See Rev. 6: 9–11; 7: 2–9; 7: 9–17; 14: 1–5, etc. Judging from these characters, how manifest is the fact, that those who have arrived at the years of accountability, cannot enter into the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world."

[illegible] On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?

The great company described in Rev. 14: 1–5, is of a different character from all the others. Take notice.

"A Lamb stood on the Mount Zion,
And with him
An hundred and forty-four thousand,
Having his Father's name
Written in their foreheads. . . .
Which were redeemed from the earth.
These are they which were not defiled with women;
For they are virgins.
These are they who follow the Lamb
Whithersoever he goeth.
These were redeemed from among men,
Being the FIRST FRUITS unto God
And to the Lamb.
And in their mouth was found NO GUILE:
For they are WITHOUT FAULT
Before the throne of God."

What great company is this? A company that never sinned, which were without sin! "For they are virgins"—signifying purity, innocency—and "in their mouth was found no guile:" "for they are without fault—before the throne of God." What class of humanity will bear that description? Can you think of any other than "little children?" What other class could be the "FIRST FRUITS unto God and to the Lamb?" The gross thousand does not signify precisely the number, but probably a perfect, or full number, a perfect company, a multitude, without regard to a precise number; for, of course, if "little children" are saved—being without sin, there will be more than 144,000 "redeemed from the land of the enemy." This description will not apply to idiots, insane persons, nor deaf, dumb, or blind persons, for they would not be "first fruits;" and they undoubtedly are included in the "great multitude which no man could number."

Again. We read that Herod, being mad, and desirous of taking the life of the young Prince upon whose shoulders it was prophesied the government should be, and because he could not find the young "Lion of the tribe of Judah," caused all the children of two years old and under, that were in "Bethlehem and all the coasts thereof" to be slain, (Matt. 2: 16,) thinking that possibly he might thus slay the object of his jealousy—Prince Immanual. And so we read in Matt. 2: 17, 18, "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying—

In Rama was there a voice heard,
Lamentation and weeping,
And great mourning,
Rachel weeping for her children,
And would not be comforted
Because they are not."

Matthew refers to "Jeremy the prophet," (Gr. Jeremy, Heb. Jeremiah,) and by turning to Jer. 31: 15, we find the passage Matthew quotes; and by reading on through the 16th and 17th verses, we find God gives Rachel a glorious hope, etc.,

"Thus saith the Lord:
Refrain thy voice from weeping,
And thine eyes from tears:
FOR THY WORK SHALL BE REWARDED,
Saith the Lord;
AND THEY SHALL COME AGAIN
FROM the LAND OF THE ENEMY!
And there is hope in thine end,
Saith the Lord,
That thy children SHALL COME AGAIN
TO THEIR OWN BORDER!"

Unless God is a promise-breaker, those children which Herod slew will come again from the land of the enemy to their own borders. And if they shall rise to life and immortality in the resurrection morn, why not all other "little children,"—all, at least, "two years old and under?" Now, why should they be saved, just because Herod slew them, and all other children be lost? Were they any better than good children now-a-days? If not, then God would show partiality in saving them, and casting off all others. We read that we must "seek for glory, honor, immortality," etc., and must "work out our own salvation," in order to obtain life eternal, as those who doubt the salvation of infants contend, and as children do not do it, they think they must be lost. What chance had those that Herod slew of working out their own salvation? None. Then why are they to be saved and none others? "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek," says Paul, (Rom. 10: 12); so, because of their being the children of Jews, there is no gain to them over the Gentile children. Therefore, ALL "little children" will be saved, or lost—one or the other.

But I have shown proof enough to convince any one who believes the Bible, that salvation extends to little children as a natural consequence, for they are without sin; and Christ says, "of such is the kingdom of heaven;" therefore we should not make such assertions as would seem to show that we doubt the word of God. "THUS SAITH THE LORD: Thy children shall come again to their own border." Is there a passage in God's holy Bible that says, Thus saith the Lord: Thy children shall not come again to their own border? When I find in the Bible a "Thus saith the Lord," to that effect, then I shall begin to distrust the authenticity of that book. But, Humanum est errare, and may this effort, with God's blessing, give the light for which it was intended.

S. D. BERRY.

Portsmouth, N. H.

☞ The vanity of the world appears in this, that a little cross will embitter great comforts. One dead fly is enough to convert a whole box of the world's most fragrant ointment into a stench. There are so many ingredients required to make up worldly felicity,—as riches, health, honor, friends, good name, and the like,—that if any of these be wanting, the whole composition is spoiled. You may as soon grasp a bundle of dreams, or take up an armful of your shadow, as fill the boundless desire of your soul with earthly enjoyments.—Bishop Hopkins.

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 10.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

The decline of Babylon was gradual. "Sit on the dust, there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans." Babylon, after ceasing to be the seat of government, was for a long time a tributary city.

The prophet, scanning with prophetic eye the distant future, beholds the efforts put forth to restore the fallen city to its former glory and excellency, and thus exclaimed: "Take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed." Alexander the Great sought to restore Babylon, and make it the metropolis of a universal empire. He employed ten thousand men in repairing the embankments of the Euphrates, and the temple of Belus. But the fiat had gone forth from the Almighty—"His device was against Babylon to destroy it."

"Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness; a land wherein no man dwelleth." "Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant." "Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, . . . and owls shall dwell there." "It shall never be inhabited."

Alexander would have healed Babylon, but God had forbidden—"she was not healed." The death of Alexander when in the prime and strength of manhood, terminated the work. After the commencement of the christian era, Babylon was but partially inhabited and the neighboring city of Seleucia drew off a great part of the inhabitants, while many of them removed into Media." The wild beasts of the desert," with "the wild beasts of the islands," afterward occupied that illustrious city. In the fourth century, the walls formed an enclosure for wild beasts, and the place where gorgeous palaces reared their stately forms became a hunting ground where Persian monarch's enjoyed the hilarity of the chase.

Read the following predictions uttered by Isaiah the prophet, more than a hundred years before the birth of the first conqueror of Babylon, and then in connection, the account given of its ruinous condition, by an eye-witness,—"And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God over throw Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces."—Isaiah 13:19–22. "I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water."—14:23. Compare with the graphic description given by Sir Robert Ker Porter in his book of travels:—

"The name and remnant are cut off from Babylon. There the Arab pitches not his tent; there the shepherds make not their folds; but wild beasts of the desert lie there, and there houses are full of doleful creatures, etc. It is a possession for the bittern, and the dwelling place for dragons—a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert—a burnt mountain—empty—wholly desolate—pools of water—heaps—and utterly destroyed—a land where no man dwelleth—every one that goeth by it is astonished." "The superstitious dread of evil spirits, and the natural terror at the wild beasts which dwell among the ruins of Babylon, restrain the Arabs from pitching his tent, or shepherds from making their fold there. The princely palaces and habitations of Babylon, utterly destroyed, are now nothing but unshapely heaps of brick and rubbish; along the sides and on the summits of which, instead of the stately chambers which once they formed, are now caverns where porcupines creep, and owls and bats nestle; where 'lions' find a den, and 'jackals, hyænas, and other noxious animals, an unmolested retreat,' from which 'issues a loathsome smell' and the entrances to which are strewed with bones of sheep and goats. Though utterly destroyed, 'their houses are full of doleful creatures, and owls dwell there, and satyrs dance there. The wild beasts lie there and cry in their desolate houses. On the one side of the Euphrates, the canals being dry, and the crumbled bricks on an elevated surface, exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, these sun-burnt ruins cover an 'arid plain,' and Babylon is a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert. On the other, the embankments of the river, and with them the vestiges of ruins over a large space, have been swept away; the plain is in general 'marshy, and in many places inaccessible, especially after the annual overflowing of the Euphrates: 'no son of man doth pass thereby: the sea, or river is come upon Babylon, she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.' At that season also, 'large deposits of the waters are left stagnant between the ruins,' again verifying the threat denounced against it,—'I will make thee a possession for the bittern and pools of water.'"

Thus all the particulars specified, are literally fulfilled. "The sea, (the river Euphrates is evidently here meant) is come upon Babylon," yet is "her land dry, and a wilderness," with "pools of water."

"I will make thee a burnt mountain."—Jer. 51:25. "There are on the ruins of Birs Nimrod, or temple of Belus, which was standing after the beginning of the Christian era, large fragments of brick work, that have been 'completely molten,' and that ring like glass, which must not only have been subjected to a heat 'equal to that of the strongest furnace,' but which, being vitrified all around, 'bear evident proof' as Mr. Buckinham remarks, 'Of the operation having continued on them as well after they were broken down as before,' and bear as evident proof that the ruin resembles, to use in justice the words of Major Keppel, what the Scripture prophesied it should become, a burnt mountain. It is still worthy from its mere immensity, of being a relic of Babylon the great, for though a mass of ruins it is still two hundred and thirty-five feet high."

"The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken." These were so broad, that six chariots could be driven on them abreast. They were numbered among the seven wonders of the world. They existed for more than a thousand years after the uttering of that prophecy. But now it cannot be determined with certainty, that any vestige of them remains.

Thus particular is God in fulfilling every jot and tittle of prophecy. Vanity is written on every earthly object. The glory of earthly kingdoms passes away, but there is to be established an imperishable kingdom, the glory of which will never fade away.

W.

Selections.

The Eliot School Trouble.

We pity these deluded ones, who think their priestly rules
Can ever drive the Bible out from the New England schools,
Where, when the Pilgrims founded them, they first with pious care,
Made altars at the throne of grace and placed the Bible there.

We're children of the Puritans, and love our Father's name;
And love the Holy Book with which they over ocean came,
Would have its holy precepts taught here on the soil they trod,
Nor once the blessing cease to flow, by our forsaking God.

These strangers we have welcomed here from dark oppression's land,
Have made them freemen, and to-day 'mong ours their children stand;
To them we've opened wide our schools, but Rome, of dark renown,
Shall never drive our Bible out, nor tear our altar down.

M. D. E.
—Boston Recorder.

My Wife is the Cause of it.

It is not more than forty years ago that Mr. L. called at the house of Dr. B. one very cold morning, on his way to H——t. "Sir," said the doctor, "the weather is very frosty—will you not take something to drink before you start?"

In that day liquor was deemed indispensable to warmth for winter. When commencing a journey, and at every stopping-place along the road, the traveler always used intoxicating drinks to keep him warm.

"No," said Mr. L., "I never touch anything of the kind, and I will tell you the reason—my wife is the cause of it. I had been in the habit of meeting some of my neighbors every evening for the purpose of playing cards. We assembled at each other's shop, and liquors were introduced after a while. We met not so much for drinking, though I used to return home late in the evening more or less intoxicated. My wife always met me at the door affectionately, and when I chided her for sitting up so late for me, she kindly replied:

"I prefer doing so, for I cannot sleep when you are out."

This always troubled me. I wished in my heart she would begin to scold me, for then I could have retorted, and relieved my conscience. But she always met me with the same gentle and loving spirit.

Things passed on thus for some time, when I at once resolved that I would by remaining late and returning much intoxicated, provoke her so much as to cause her to lecture me, when I meant to answer her with severity, and thus, by creating another issue between us, unburden my bosom of its present trouble.

I returned in such a plight about four o'clock in the morning. She met me at the door with her usual tenderness, and said—

"Come in, husband, I have just been making a warm fire for you, because I knew you would be cold. Take off your boots and warm your feet, and here is a cup of hot coffee."

"Doctor, that was too much. I could endure it no longer, and I resolved from that moment that I would never touch another drop as long as I lived, and I never will."

He never did. He lived and died practicing total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, in a village where intemperance has raged as much as any other in the State.

"Will it Pay?"

"Be honest, and frugal, and kind-hearted too;
And do to your neighbor as you'd have him do;
No matter what 'Shylocks' or 'Sharpers' may say,
Be OBNOXIOUS AND JUST;—it will certainly pay."

Illustrative of Human Nature.

In a little story, "The Boy and the Bricks," which we find in the papers, there is so good an illustration of human nature, that we must copy it:

A boy hearing his father say, "'Tis a poor rule that won't work both ways," said: "If father applied this rule in his work, I will test it in my play."

So, setting up a row of bricks, three or four inches apart, he tipped over the first, which, striking the second, caused it to fall upon the third, and so on throughout the whole row, until the bricks all lay prostrate.

"Well," said the boy, "each brick has knocked down the neighbor which stood next to itself; yet I only tipped one. Now, I will raise one, and try if it will raise its neighbors. I will see if this rule works both ways."

He looked in vain to see them rise.

"Here, father," said the boy, "it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. They knock each other down, but are not disposed to help each other up."

"My son," said the father, "bricks and mankind are alike—made of clay, active in knocking each other down, but not disposed to help each other up. When men fall they love company; but when they rise, they prefer to stand alone, like yonder brick, and see others prostrate and below them."

Sound Advice to Young Men.

Keep good company, or none. If your hands can not be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets if you have any. When you speak to a person look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else. Your character can not be essentially injured except by your own acts. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that no one will believe him. Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors. Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper. Small and steady gains give competency, with tranquillity of mind. Never play at any game of chance. Avoid temptation, through fear you may not be able to withstand it. Earn money before you spend it. Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out of it. Never borrow if you possibly can avoid it. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent if you would be happy. Save when you are young, that you may spend when you are old. Read over the above maxims at least once a week.

Don't be too Hasty.

1. Because you will be likely to treat quite lightly two very good friends of yours, Reason and Conscience, who will not have a chance to speak.

2. Because you will have to travel over the same ground in company with one sober second thought, who will be more likely to have with him a whip of scorpions than a bunch of flowers.

3. Because the words or actions involved in it are more likely than otherwise to be misunderstood, and therefore, to be severely judged.

4. Because this is one way to please and give great advantage to a great enemy of yours, one powerful enough to be called "the Prince of the World," and who has caught more people than can be counted in this very trap.

5. Because in so doing you are likely to be a fellow-traveler in such company as follows: "He that is hasty with his feet sinneth." "He that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly." "Seest thou a man hasty in words? there is more hope of a fool than of him." "The thoughts of every one that is hasty tend only to want."

6. Because such a fire may be kindled that it cannot be put out even by all the water a whole engine company can throw, with Second Thought for their captain.—Adv. Herald.

Speak a Good Word, or say Nothing at all.

There is a species of slander abroad in the world,
Against a good neighbor, Oh! frequently hurled;
Not always with malice, with envy, or spite,
Yet fatal to friendship, good feelings and right.
Remember—and fail not your trust to fulfill—
Your brother, though absent, your brother is still;
Whatever you be, or whate'er may befall,
Oh! speak a good word, or say nothing at all.

—Aaron Smith.

☞ Yes—trust. What is the preparation for lying down? It is to lie down. What is the preparation for getting up? It is to get up. There is no preparation for trusting God, but to trust God. All you have to do is to lay your head upon his bosom—to rely upon his providence.—Beecher.

☞ He who does most, has the least time to talk about what he does.

Reading for Youth.

Obedience.

Obedience is the first duty for a child to learn.

You all know that obedience means doing as you are told to do. Why should a child be bound to obey, and not to follow, as we all like to, the dictates of his own will? Why, my boy, the case is plain enough. Ignorance must always yield to wisdom. The child comes into the world knowing nothing of its ways and wiles; his parents and teachers have been over the road, on which, if he lives, he must travel; they know every crook and turn, and if the child would have a safe and easy journey he must heed well their counsels and commands. Ah! but John thinks he knows as well how to take care of himself as his father or mother. Perhaps not; let us see.

"Don't get on the sleighs, John; you will get hurt."

These were his mothers's last words, as he stood ready for an afternoon excursion. "No, I shan't; I can hold on," was his answer, as he scampered down the yard.

At the first corner he met a horse-sled. On he jumped; it was a most capital place for a ride, thought he. The next corner was on a hill side. Round went the sled with a fine slew, and poor Johnny's foot caught between the runner and a post, and was most piteously mashed.

They picked him up and caried him home, for wise boy that he was, so well able to hold on, he could not walk or hardly speak. He could disobey his mother, but, when he had, in doing it, smashed his ankle, he was very glad to have her tell him how to cure it, nay, she must herself apply the bandages.

Always obey the commands of those who have the care of you; I have never seen any harm from obedience, but much from disobedience.

And how must you obey? Promptly, cheerfully, implicitly. Don't stop to ask "Why?" or say, "I don't want to."

"Come out of that field, boys," says Mr. Dodge. Over the fence goes William.

"Yes, sir," says John, quite leisurely. And so he did go out, but the black bull assisted him with his horns.

How I dislike a sullen, pouting obedience; that shaking of the shoulders and hooking of the head! You can't trust such a child five minutes out of your sight. I would not be such a slave as he is for the mines of Peru. Fear is all that leads him to obey. Cowardly soul! He has not courage enough to say he won't, much less to obey in a manly, cheerful manner.

Obey implicitly; don't climb over the fence, when your father tells you not to go out of the gate for the afternoon. Do all that is meant, as well as all that is said.—Gazette.

A Childlike Spirit.

Father, I know that all my life
Is portioned out for me:
The changes that will surely come,
I do not fear to see:
I ask thee for a present mind
Intent on pleasing thee.

I ask thee for a thoughtful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad with joyful smiles,
And wipe the weeping eyes—
A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
That seeks for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know;
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where I go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate,
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate.
A work of lowly love to do
For Him on whom I wait.

I ask thee for the daily strength,
To none that ask denied—
A mind to blend with outward life
While keeping at thy side;
Content to fill a little space,
If thou be glorified.

And if some things I do not ask
Among my blessings be,
I'd have my spirit filled the more
With grateful love to thee;
More careful—not to serve thee much—
But please thee perfectly.

—The Child's Paper.

How to Overcome Evil.

Johnny Wilson sat on the stairway, crying as though his young heart would break. I took him on my lap, and told him to tell me why he was crying.

"Billy Johnson was just above me in the spelling class, and because I turned him down he got angry. At noon I was flying my new kite on the plain; he came up, asking me to let him fly it. Thinking it would make us good friends, I let him, but on purpose he let it get into a tree, and tore it. I'll be revenged,—yes, I'll be revenged!"

"Do good for evil," said I.

"I will try," came sweetly from Johnny's lips.

That evening, as Johnny was engaged in a "famous" game of ball, Billy came up, and wished to play, but could not, as he was odd.

"Here, Billy, you can have my place," said Johnny.

Billy looked at Johnny a moment in silence, and then said, "Johnny, I tore your kite; I am sorry; mine is behind that tree; it is yours; and after this, we shall be good friends."

That night, as Johnny knelt, and said, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us," he felt he had forgiven one who had trespassed against him.—Ex.

Morning Praise.

The morning bright,
With rosy light,
Has waked me from my sleep.
Father, I own
Thy love alone
Thy little one doth keep.

All through the day
I humbly pray,
Be thou my guard and guide;
My sins forgive,
And let me live,
Blest Jesus, by thy side.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months...........1.00
For a single copy 3 months...........60
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months..22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Early Hopes.

[illegible] hopes, where have ye sped?
And thought [illegible] down, where sleep my buried [illegible]
[illegible] to my bosom press'd,
Sleep side by side in you lone vale of rest.

But O! I would not wake them from their slumbers
[illegible] pains and toils and sorrows here to [illegible]
[illegible] will close this fitful dream of [illegible]
[illegible] beside the loved of early years.
[illegible] with trembling steps I near the tomb,
[illegible] only lights me onward through its gloom,
To its asylum'd fortress, strong and high,
Where the poor wounded heart secure can fly.

E. S. W.

West Winsted, June, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 4.

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

THE FIRST FRATRICIDE.

We turn from scenes of Paradise,
To see a brother die,
By bloody hands of violence,
With none to succor nigh.

Fearful, indeed, was the tragedy with which the drama of human frailty opened, after the expulsion of man from Paradise. The first pair had no sooner become accustomed to their changed condition, and began to be surrounded by the sweets of domestic life, and the happy voices of offspring, than an event transpired which must have embittered all their remaining joys. The enactment of this tragedy was the more glaring, because it was one of the very first resultants of that trangression, which has filled our world with woe. And it happened, too, on the very confines of that Paradise which so late had been the happy abode of our fallen parents. So true it is, that but a pace may separate us from guilt, and that the perpetration of one wrong act may often lead us into the path of deepest crimes.

Our first parents, on account of sin, had lost their original exalted position in the scale of being. The earth also, partaking of the curse which had fallen on man, began early to exhibit signs of permature decay. So that, thus early mankind were doomed to gain a livlihood by constant toil, either as tillers of the soil or as tenders of the flocks which fed upon the broad pastures of the unsurveyed hills and valleys. To Cain, the first born of Adam and Eve, was allotted the former of the above employments, and to Abel, his brother, the latter. Although the account of these two brothers is very brief, yet their respective characters are presented to us in a very strong light. In Cain, we readily discover a harsh, unfeeling spirit. He was selfish and devoid of those pure and noble feelings which should characterize a brother. Abel was the very opposite of all this. He was all gentleness; and from his heart there welled up a pure affection for all around him, and a holy reverence for his Creator. It may seem strange that there should be such a difference, thus early, between two brothers; but perhaps it was permitted to be so, that we might see by strong contrasts, the unseemly effects of sin.

It appears from Divine record, that Cain, desiring to seem righteous before God, brought an offering from the fruits of the ground. But upon his altar, reared by the hand of insincerity, there descended no fire from heaven, as a token of God's acceptance and favor. His offering was not presented with that heart willingness which is so acceptable to Heaven; therefore he was rejected, for God never accepted any but free will offerings. But when the gentle Abel presented his slain lamb for sacrifice, the heaven-descending fire soon told his confiding heart that he was in favor with God.

The envious Cain saw all this and was angry. He complained to God of this seeming partiality, but not heeding the answer which was made to him,—"If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door,"—he sought the first opportunity to rid himself of his brother. Such an opportunity soon presented itself, and the righteous Abel fell a martyr to truth and holy religion. His innocent heart little suspected the plot which was laid against him, till he read in the last menacing act of Cain that his life was sought after. His tender tones and beseeching looks had no effect to turn aside the uplifted club of his cruel brother. His heart had ceased to pulsate, when the blow fell upon his devoted head, for the whole force of his brother's unholy ingratitude fell upon him at once and crushed out the life from his prostrate form. Thus fell the first victim to cruel envy, that monster which has filled many a home with woe, and blighted many a joyous hope.

Forth from the perpetration of this horrid act went the cruel Cain, an exile from home, and the curse of offended Heaven resting upon him. His must have been an [illegible] life of troubled visions, whenever the scene of his brother's murder came up before him, for which no penance of his could ever atone, or drive from him.

[illegible] how must have bled the tender heart of Eve, when first she saw the bloody [illegible] of her dear son, slain by the hand of [illegible] brother! How must her heart have [illegible] with all the feelings of the mother arose within her bosom [illegible] must have been her sorrow for the rashness of the one, and anguish for the sad death of the other. And the noble Adam, too, how he bowed his lofty head in sorrow, when he vainly endeavored to counsel the sinking heart of Eve. Then they both together wept anew over that transgression which had been the cause of all this woe. Death to them was new, and violence before unknown, so that this stroke was doubly severe to them. Sad were the rites performed at this first funeral which darkened the calender of earth's history. Rude was the bier, ruder still the sepulchre, and few were the mourners there at the burial of Abel. Yet fonder hearts never followed the dead than those who followed the martyred one to his last resting place. Long they lingered there after the green turf had been placed upon the breast of the sleeper. And, methinks, in after years, the sons and daughters of Adam often gathered there, when the sweet stars looked gently down from heaven, and listened with tearful attention to their father's recital of the fearful end of their brother.

Thus opened and closed the scene that filled the first grave with its victim. Ah! dare we attempt to think of the like crimes that have since filled the world with mourning? No, no, the great book alone can disclose them at the last day, and also how fearful will be its developments, as the crimes of the ages are unfolded before the assembled universe.

For the Crisis.

Salvation of Infants.

"Suffer little children to come unto me,
And forbid them not,
For of such is the kingdom of heaven."—CHRIST.

Certain persons of our day are disposed to contend that infants will not be saved in the kingdom of our Lord; but as there are some passages of scripture that seem to prove to the contrary, I feel somewhat desirous to have those "certain persons" become acquainted with them; and, as it looks honest, and really is honest to examine both affirmative and negative, I would advise them so to do on this question.

First, Isaiah, in speaking of the coming kingdom of the Messiah, says: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."—Isa. 65:20.

"The child shall die an hundred years old," he says. What is meant by that? Is it not that the child being resurrected from the dead, or translated at Christ's second advent, and "clothed upon with immortality," becomes as mature and vigorous in mind, as if it had died an hundred years old?

The prophet also says of those in the kingdom, that they are the "blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them." (chap. 65:23.) So then, there will be children in the kingdom; and as we have no evidence that births will then occur, the question then arises, how does it happen that "offspring" have a place there? Can we account for it in any other light than that they will be redeemed from this world—the "land of the enemy?" And Isaiah says in the 20th verse, "There shall be no more thence an infant of days," which shows conclusively, I think, that no births will occur there. Then, to make Isaiah consistent with himself, we must conclude that the "offspring" spoken of, are the "redeemed from among men," from this world; "For of such is the kingdom of God," or "heaven," says the Savior. (Matt. 19:14; Mark 10:14; Luke 18:16.)

Christ said, (Matt. 18:3,) that unless we "become as little children," in humbleness, etc., we cannot attain to that world. Now, we may try as hard as we please to become like little children, in the respects which Christ had reference to, and we cannot become more innocent and confiding than they; so then, if little children are more innocent, pure, confiding, and pleasing to our Savior, than adults, why should they be left out of the kingdom, while we, sinful mortals, in whose mouths God might, perhaps, find "guile," be allowed to enter that "world of delight?" Christ first came as the "Lamb of God" to take away the sin of the world; but where there is no sin, as in the infant, there is none to take away. Why did Christ declare we should become as little children, unless they are looked upon by him as worthy examples; and also, worthy of an inheritance in the promised land? It proves that they are his favorites. And, said he, "whoso shall receive one such little child, in my name, receiveth me." (Matt. 18:5.) Now, if we do not receive the little ones in Jesus' name, by the same word, we do not receive Christ himself. Take heed, therefore, you who cast off little children as not inheritors of the kingdom, for you cast off Jesus Christ by so doing.

In the Apocalypse we find described several classes of persons that "were redeemed" from the enemy. See Rev. 6: 9–11; 7: 2–9; 7: 9–17; 14: 1–5, etc. Judging from these characters, how manifest is the fact, that those who have arrived at the years of accountability, cannot enter into the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world,"

"On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

The great company described in Rev. 14: 1–5, is of a different character from all the others. Take notice.

"A Lamb stood on the Mount Zion,
And with him
An hundred and forty-four thousand,
Having his Father's name
Written in their foreheads, . . .
Which were redeemed from the earth.
These are they which were not defiled with women;
For they are virgins.
These are they who follow the Lamb
Whithersoever he goeth.
These were redeemed from among men,
Being the FIRST FRUITS unto God
And to the Lamb.
And in their mouth was found NO GUILE:
For they are WITHOUT FAULT
Before the throne of God."

What great company is this? A company that never sinned, which were without sin! "For they are virgins"—signifying purity, innocency—and "in their mouth was found no guile:" "for they are without fault—before the throne of God." What class of humanity will bear that description? Can you think of any other than "little children?" What other class could be the "FIRST FRUITS unto God and to the Lamb?" The gross thousand does not signify precisely the number, but probably a perfect, or full number, a perfect company, a multitude, without regard to a precise number; for, of course, if "little children" are saved—being without sin, there will be more than 144,000 "redeemed from the land of the enemy." This description will not apply to idiots, insane persons, nor deaf, dumb, or blind persons, for they would not be "first fruits;" and they undoubtedly are included in the "great multitude which no man could number."

Again. We read that Herod, being mad, and desirous of taking the life of the young Prince upon whose shoulders it was prophesied the government should be, and because he could not find the young "Lion of the tribe of Judah," caused all the children of two years old and under, that were in "Bethlehem and all the coasts thereof" to be slain, (Matt. 2: 16,) thinking that possibly he might thus slay the object of his jealousy—Prince Immanual. And so we read in Matt. 2: 17, 18, "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying—

In Rama was there a voice heard,
Lamentation and weeping,
And great mourning,
Rachel weeping for her children,
And would not be comforted
Because they are not."

Matthew refers to "Jeremy the prophet," (Gr. Jeremy, Heb. Jeremiah,) and by turning to Jer. 31: 15, we find the passage Matthew quotes; and by reading on through the 16th and 17th verses, we find God gives Rachel a glorious hope, etc.,

"Thus saith the Lord:
Refrain thy voice from weeping,
And thine eyes from tears:
FOR THY WORK SHALL BE REWARDED,
Saith the Lord;
AND THEY SHALL COME AGAIN
FROM the LAND OF THE ENEMY!
And there is hope in thine end,
Saith the Lord,
That thy children SHALL COME AGAIN
TO THEIR OWN BORDER!"

Unless God is a promise-breaker, those children which Herod slew will come again from the land of the enemy to their own borders. And if they shall rise to life and immortality in the resurrection morn, why not all other "little children,"—all, at least, "two years old and under?" Now, why should they be saved, just because Herod slew them, and all other children be lost? Were they any better than good children now-a-days? If not, then God would show partiality in saving them, and casting off all others. We read that we must "seek for glory, honor, immortality," etc., and must "work out our own salvation," in order to obtain life eternal, as those who doubt the salvation of infants contend, and as children do not do it, they think they must be lost. What chance had those that Herod slew of working out their own salvation? None. Then why are they to be saved and none others? "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek," says Paul, (Rom. 10: 12); so, because of their being the children of Jews, there is no gain to them over the Gentile children. Therefore, ALL "little children" will be saved, or lost—one or the other.

But I have shown proof enough to convince any one who believes the Bible, that salvation extends to little children as a natural consequence, for they are without sin; and Christ says, "of such is the kingdom of heaven;" therefore we should not make such assertions as would seem to show that we doubt the word of God. "THUS SAITH THE LORD: Thy children shall come again to their own border." Is there a passage in God's holy Bible that says, Thus saith the Lord: Thy children shall not come again to their own border? When I find in the Bible a "Thus saith the Lord," to that effect, then I shall begin to distrust the authenticity of that book. But, Humanum est errare, and may this effort, with God's blessing, give the light for which it was intended. S. D. BERRY.

Portsmouth, N. H.

☞ The vanity of the world appears in this, that a little cross will embitter great comforts. One dead fly is enough to convert a whole box of the world's most fragrant ointment into a stench. There are so many ingredients required to make up worldly felicity,—as riches, health, honor, friends, good name, and the like,—that if any of these be wanting, the whole composition is spoiled. You may as soon grasp a bundle of dreams, or take up an armful of your shadow, as fill the boundless desire of your soul with earthly enjoyments.—Bishop Hopkins.

☞ [illegible] doubles dangers [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 10.

BABYLON AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

The decline of Babylon was gradual. "Sit on the dust, there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans." Babylon, after ceasing to be the seat of government, was for a long time a tributary city.

The prophet, scanning with prophetic eye the distant future, beholds the efforts put forth to restore the fallen city to its former glory and excellency, and thus exclaimed: "Take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed." Alexander the Great sought to restore Babylon, and make it the metropolis of a universal empire. He employed ten thousand men in repairing the embankments of the Euphrates, and the temple of Belus. But the fiat had gone forth from the Almighty—"His device was against Babylon to destroy it."

"Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness; a land wherein no man dwelleth." "Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant." "Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, . . . and owls shall dwell there." "It shall never be inhabited."

Alexander would have healed Babylon but God had forbidden—"she was not healed." The death of Alexander when in the prime and strength of manhood, terminated the work. After the commencement of the christian era, Babylon was but partially inhabited and the neighboring city of Seleucia drew off a great part of the inhabitants, while many of them removed into Media. "The wild beasts of the desert," with "the wild beasts of the islands," afterward occupied that illustrious city. In the fourth century, the walls formed an enclosure for wild beasts, and the place where gorgeous palaces reared their stately forms became a hunting ground where Persian monarch's enjoyed the hilarity of the chase.

Read the following predictions uttered by Isaiah the prophet, more than a hundred years before the birth of the first conqueror of Babylon, and then in connection, the account given of its ruinous condition, by an eye-witness,—"And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God over threw Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces."—Isaiah 13:19–22. "I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water."—14:23. Compare with the graphic description given by Sir Robert Ker Porter in his book of travels:—

"The name and remnant are cut off from Babylon. There the Arab pitches not his tent; there the shepherds make not their folds; but wild beasts of the desert lie there, and there houses are full of doleful creatures, etc. It is a possession for the bittern, and the dwelling place for dragons—a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert—a burnt mountain—empty—wholly desolate—pools of water—heaps—and utterly destroyed—a land where no man dwelleth—every one that goeth by it is astonished." "The superstitious dread of evil spirits, and the natural terror at the wild beasts which dwell among the ruins of Babylon, restrain the Arabs from pitching his tent, or shepherds from making their fold there. The princely palaces and habitations of Babylon, utterly destroyed, are now nothing but unshapely heaps of brick and rubbish; along the sides and on the summits of which, instead of the stately chambers which once they formed, are now caverns where porcupines creep, and owls and bats nestle; where 'lions' find a den, and 'jackals, hyænas, and other noxious animals, an unmolested retreat,' from which 'issues a loathsome smell' and the entrances to which are strewed with bones of sheep and goats. Though utterly destroyed, 'their houses are full of doleful creatures, and owls dwell there, and satyrs dance there. The wild beasts lie there and cry in their desolate houses. On the one side of the Euphrates, the canals being dry, and the crumbled bricks on an elevated surface, exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, these sun-burnt ruins cover an 'arid plain,' and Babylon is a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert. On the other, the embankments of the river, and with them the vestiges of ruins over a large space, have been swept away; the plain is in general 'marshy, and in many places inaccessible, especially after the annual overflowing of the Euphrates: 'no son of man doth pass thereby: the sea, or river is come upon Babylon, she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.' At that season also, 'large deposits of the waters are left stagnant between the ruins,' again verifying the threat denounced against it,—'I will make thee a possession for the bittern and pools of water.'"

Thus all the particulars specified, are literally fulfilled. "The sea, (the river Euphrates is evidently here meant) is come upon Babylon," yet is "her land dry, and a wilderness," with "pools of water."

"I will make thee a burnt mountain."—Jer. 51:25. "There are on the ruins of Birs Nimrod, or temple of Belus, which was standing after the beginning of the Christian era, large fragments of brick work, that have been 'completely molten,' and that ring like glass, which must not only have been subjected to a heat 'equal to that of the strongest furnace,' but which, being vitrified all around, 'bear evident proof' as Mr. Buckinham remarks, 'Of the operation having continued on them as well after they were broken down as before,' and bear as evident proof that the ruin resembles, to use in justice the words of Major Keppel, what the Scripture prophesied it should become, a burnt mountain. It is still worthy from its mere immensity, of being a relic of Babylon the great, for though a mass of ruins it is still two hundred and thirty-five feet high."

"The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken." These were so broad, that six chariots could be driven on them abreast. They were numbered among the seven wonders of the world. They existed for more than a thousand years after the uttering of that prophecy. But now it cannot be determined with certainty, that any vestige of them remains.

Thus particular is God in fulfilling every jot and tittle of prophecy. Vanity is written on every earthly object. The glory of earthly kingdoms passes away, but there is to be established an imperishable kingdom, the glory of which will never fade away.

W.

Selections.

The Eliot School Trouble.

We pity these deluded ones, who think their priestly rules
Can ever drive the Bible out from the New England schools,
Where, when the Pilgrims founded them, they first with pious care,
Made altars at the throne of grace and placed the Bible there.

We're children of the Puritans, and love our Father's name;
And love the Holy Book with which they over ocean came;
Would have its holy precepts taught here on the soil they trod;
Nor once the blessing cease to flow, by our forsaking God.

These strangers we have welcomed here from dark oppression's land,
Have made them freemen, and to-day 'mong ours their children stand;
To them we've opened wide our schools; but Rome, of dark renown,
Shall never drive our Bible out, nor tear our altar down.

M. D. E.

—Boston Recorder.

My Wife is the Cause of it.

It is not more than forty years ago that Mr. L. called at the house of Dr. B. one very cold morning, on his way to H——t. "Sir," said the doctor, "the weather is very frosty—will you not take something to drink before you start?"

In that day liquor was deemed indispensable to warmth for winter. When commencing a journey, and at every stopping-place along the road, the traveler always used intoxicating drinks to keep him warm.

"No," said Mr. L., "I never touch anything of the kind, and I will tell you the reason—my wife is the cause of it. I had been in the habit of meeting some of my neighbors every evening for the purpose of playing cards. We assembled at each other's shop, and liquors were introduced after a while. We met not so much for drinking, though I used to return home late in the evening more or less intoxicated. My wife always met me at the door affectionately, and when I chided her for sitting up so late for me, she kindly replied:

"I prefer doing so, for I cannot sleep when you are out."

This always troubled me. I wished in my heart she would begin to scold me, for then I could have retorted, and relieved my conscience. But she always met me with the same gentle and loving spirit.

Things passed on thus for some time, when I at once resolved that I would by remaining late and returning much intoxicated, provoke her so much as to cause her to lecture me, when I meant to answer her with severity, and thus, by creating another issue between us, unburden my bosom of its present trouble.

I returned in such a plight about four o'clock in the morning. She met me at the door with her usual tenderness, and said—

"Come in, husband, I have just been making a warm fire for you, because I knew you would be cold. Take off your boots and warm your feet, and here is a cup of hot coffee."

"Doctor, that was too much. I could endure it no longer, and I resolved from that moment that I would never touch another drop as long as I lived, and I never will."

He never did. He lived and died practicing total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, in a village where intemperance has raged as much as any other in the State.

"Will it Pay?"

"Be honest, and frugal, and kind-hearted too:
And do to your neighbor as you'd have him do;
No matter what 'Shylocks' or 'Sharpers' may say,
Be GENEROUS and JUST;—it will certainly pay."

Illustrative of Human Nature.

In a little story, "The Boy and the Bricks," which we find in the papers, there is so good an illustration of human nature, that we must copy it:

A boy hearing his father say, "'Tis a poor rule that won't work both ways," said: "If father applied this rule in his work, I will test it in my play."

So, setting up a row of bricks, three or four inches apart, he tipped over the first, which, striking the second, caused it to fall on the third, and so on throughout the whole row, until the bricks all lay prostrate.

"Well," said the boy, "each brick has knocked down the neighbor which stood next to itself; yet I only tipped one. Now, I will raise one, and try if it will raise its neighbors. I will see if this rule works both ways."

He looked in vain to see them rise.

"Here, father," said the boy, "it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. They knock each other down, but are not disposed to help each other up."

"My son," said the father, "bricks and mankind are alike—made of clay, active in knocking each other down, but not disposed to help each other up. When men fall they love company; but when they rise, they prefer to stand alone, like yonder brick, and see others prostrate and below them."

Sound Advice to Young Men.

Keep good company, or none. If your hands can not be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets if you have any. When you speak to a person look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else. Your character can not be essentially injured except by your own acts. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that no one will believe him. Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors. Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper. Small and steady gains give competency, with tranquillity of mind. Never play at any game of chance. Avoid temptation, through fear you may not be able to withstand it. Earn money before you spend it. Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out of it. Never borrow if you possibly can avoid it. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent if you would be happy. Save when you are young, that you may spend when you are old. Read over the above maxims at least once a week.

Don't be too Hasty.

1. Because you will be likely to treat quite lightly two very good friends of yours, Reason and Conscience, who will not have a chance to speak.

2. Because you will have to travel over the same ground in company with one sober second thought, who will be more likely to have with him a whip of scorpions than a bunch of flowers.

3. Because the words or actions involved in it are more likely than otherwise to be misunderstood, and therefore, to be severely judged.

4. Because this is one way to please and give great advantage to a great enemy of yours, one powerful enough to be called "the Prince of the World," and who has caught more people than can be counted in this very trap.

5. Because in so doing you are likely to be a fellow-traveler in such company as follows: "He that is hasty with his feet sinneth." "He that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly." "Seest thou a man hasty in words? there is more hope of a fool than of him." "The thoughts of every one that is hasty tend only to want."

6. Because such a fire may be kindled that it cannot be put out even by all the water a whole engine company can throw, with Second Thought for their captain.—Adv. Herald.

Speak a Good Word, or say Nothing at all.

There is a species of slander abroad in the world,
Against a good neighbor, O! frequently hurled;
Not always with malice, with envy, or spite,
Yet fatal to friendship, good feelings and right.
Remember—and fail not your trust to fulfill—
Your brother, though absent, your brother is still;
Whatever you be, or whate'er may befall,
O! speak a good word, or say nothing at all.

—Aaron Smith.

☞ Yes—trust. What is the preparation for lying down? It is to lie down. What is the preparation for getting up? It is to get up. There is no preparation for trusting God, but to trust God. All you have to do is to lay your head upon his bosom—to rely upon his providence.—Beecher.

☞ He who does most, has the least time to talk about what he does.

Reading for Youth.

Obedience.

Obedience is the first duty for a child to learn.

You all know that obedience means doing as you are told to do. Why should a child be bound to obey, and not to follow, as we all like to, the dictates of his own will? Why, my boy, the case is plain enough. Ignorance must always yield to wisdom. The child comes into the world knowing nothing of its ways and wiles; his parents and teachers have been over the road, on which, if he lives, he must travel; they know every crook and turn, and if the child would have a safe and easy journey he must heed well their counsels and commands. Ah! but John thinks he knows as well how to take care of himself as his father or mother. Perhaps not; let us see.

"Don't get on the sleighs, John; you will get hurt."

These were his mothers's last words, as he stood ready for an afternoon excursion. "No, I shan't; I can hold on," was his answer, as he scampered down the yard.

At the first corner he met a horse-sled. On he jumped; it was a most capital place for a ride, thought he. The next corner was on a hill side. Round went the sled with a fine slew, and poor Johnny's foot caught between the runner and a post, and was most piteously mashed.

They picked him up and caried him home, for wise boy that he was, so well able to hold on, he could not walk or hardly speak. He could disobey his mother, but, when he had, in doing it, crushed his ancle, he was very glad to have her tell him how to cure it, nay, she must herself apply the bandages.

Always obey the commands of those who have the care of you; I have never seen any harm from obedience, but much from disobedience.

And how must you obey? Promptly, cheerfully, implicitly. Don't stop to ask "Why?" or say, "I don't want to."

"Come out of that field, boys," says E. Dodge. Over the fence goes William.

"Yes, sir," says John, quite leisurely. And so he did go out, but the black bull assisted him with his horns.

How I dislike a sullen, pouting obedience; that shaking of the shoulders and hooking of the head! You can't trust such a child five minutes out of your sight. I would not be such a slave as he is for the mines of Peru. Fear is all that leads him to obey. Cowardly soul! He has not courage enough to say he won't, much less to obey in a manly, cheerful manner.

Obey implicitly; don't climb over the fence, when your father tells you not to go out of the gate for the afternoon. Do all that is meant, as well as all that is said.—Gazette.

A Childlike Spirit.

Father, I know that all my life
Is portioned out for me:
The changes that will surely come,
I do not fear to see:
I ask thee for a present mind
Intent on pleasing thee.

I ask thee for a thoughtful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad with joyful smiles,
And wipe the weeping eyes—
A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
That seeks for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know;
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where I go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate,
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate.
A work of lowly love to do
For Him on whom I wait.

I ask thee for the daily strength,
To none that ask denied—
A mind to blend with outward life
While keeping at thy side:
Content to fill a little space,
If thou be glorified.

And if some things I do not ask
Among my blessings be,
I'd have my spirit filled the more
With grateful love to thee;
More careful—not to serve thee much—
But please thee perfectly.

—The Child's Paper.

How to Overcome Evil.

Johnny Wilson sat on the stairway, crying as though his young heart would break. I took him on my lap, and told him to tell me why he was crying.

"Billy Johnson was just above me in the spelling class, and because I turned him down he got angry. At noon I was flying my new kite on the plain; he came up, asking me to let him fly it. Thinking it would make us good friends, I let him, but on purpose he let it get into a tree, and tore it. I'll be revenged,—yes, I'll be revenged!"

"Do good for evil," said I.

"I will try," came sweetly from Johnny's lips.

That evening, as Johnny was engaged in a "famous" game of ball, Billy came up, and wished to play, but could not, as he was odd.

"Here, Billy, you can have my place," said Johnny.

Billy looked at Johnny a moment in silence, and then said, "Johnny, I tore your kite; I am sorry; mine is behind that tree; it is yours; and after this, we shall be good friends."

That night, as Johnny knelt, and said, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us," he felt he had forgiven one who had trespassed against him.—Ex.

Morning Praise.

The morning bright,
With rosy light,
Has waked me from my sleep.
Father, I own
Thy love alone
Thy little one doth keep.

All through the day
I humbly pray,
Be thou my guard and guide;
My sins forgive,
And let me live,
Blest Jesus, by thy side.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months.............1.00
For a single copy 3 months.............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months.22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA [illegible] to prepay the postage on their papers, [illegible] in addition to the above [illegible] will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.35 a year. [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 203. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. [illegible]

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

§ 2. The Theology of Salvation.

In treating the question of universal salvation, we should inquire how the term salvation is used and applied in the Scriptures, and also what it implies. For it is an essential part of the doctrine of forgiveness, involving the question whether we are saved by justice or by grace.

The Greek word for salvation (soteria, soterion) and the corresponding verb (sozo) are used in the New Testament, with apparent reference to a final destiny, one hundred times. I may overcount a little; but I may safely say that if the word does not refer to man's final destiny in most of these instances, it does in none of them, and it assures the eternal life of no man. It is also worthy of remark that in the Syriac version it is rendered life, and the giving of life.

And of the hundred instances all except twelve apply the salvation to a class of men. Some of them do so very strongly. Thus Luke 13: 23, 24: "Are there few that be saved? . . . Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Phil. 1: 28: "An evidence to them of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God." 2 Tim. 2:10: "I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory."

Some of the instances not obviously partitive will be claimed by my opponent as implying a general salvation. Thus John 3:17: "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." (Compare 13:47.) But here the previous verses make faith the condition of salvation, even while they commend the divine love: "God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth," etc. And "the world" may easily signify all nations as compared with the Jews, who were claiming a monopoly of salvation. Thus, in another of the passages my opponent may claim, Acts 13:46, 47: "Seeing ye . . . judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee, to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation to the ends of the earth." The passage in John 3:17 seems to me no more to prove the salvation of every human individual than the expression in verse 26, "all come to him," shows that every Jew was baptized of John. When the Pharisees said of Christ, "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him" (ch. 11:48), and again, "Behold, the world is gone after him" (ch. 12:19), we do not suppose they meant every individual human being; yet in the last expression they use the same word which Christ used (kosmos, the world). Christ's promise might be as large, even larger than the Pharisees' complaint, and yet there be many unbelieving, and unsaved.

And when Christ says "the Son of man is come to save that which was lost" (Matt. 18:11; Luke 19:10), the context will show a comparison made between the self righteous Jews and those whom they hated and despised as having no inheritance with Abraham. Christ came to call not the righteous or self-righteous, but sinners, to repentance. The poor in spirit, and the meek and lowly, were the true Israel. The passage indicates the non-salvation of those who rested securely and proudly in carnal hopes, i. e. in their Jewish blood, as much as it indicates anything.

So much for the extent of salvation as revealed in the Scriptures. And now for the nature of it. Universalists have well and truly insisted that Christ came "to save his people from their sins;" that salvation from sinfulness is more important than salvation from punishment, for sin is worse than pain; and that the doctrine of salvation from punishment, aside from the other salvation, is very pernicious, though there is too much of it in the world.

Here I may suggest to my orthodox friends that the doctrine of endless and infinite pain as the result of sin naturally tends to the evil just named. The self-love of man is in advance of the moral sense. And when he is told that he is in danger of undying agony, we may say what we will about his deserving it, still he will care more for the danger than for the guilt. The "great salvation" he will think of as the deliverance from the infinite peril; the deliverance from sinful bondage will be comparatively a slight thing. And this will explain the crouching and cringing attitude of some professedly Christian minds before God, and the professed feeling of some—we trust unreal—that if annihilation were the end of sin, they would no longer fear God or serve him.

Here I also recognize the Universalist opinion of salvation from this and that sinful habit as a real doctrine of salvation, though not the whole doctrine nor the true doctrine. It seems to me a subordinate sense of the term; though I am very glad if any hate sin enough to prize such a salvation very highly, and I am sorry if any can not get any sense or meaning from the idea.

Yet a great question remains respecting the doctrine of salvation. Are we saved by grace, or by justice? Is there strictly any remission of the penalty of sin, or is there none?

I know that the doctrine of remitted penalty is liable to abuse; that corrupt human nature is willing enough to sin and then try to get rid of punishment—and that does not speak well or honorably for human nature. And I thank Universalists and Unitarians for insisting, very correctly, that certain bad consequences of sin are always inevitable; that it brings a bad and unhealthy condition of the soul, which no forgiveness or act of pardon can remedy at once; that the laws of our moral constitution, like all the laws of nature, are so wisely appointed that even Sovereign Grace still respects them; and so when we sin we must suffer.

But here we come at the gist of our question: If a bad condition of the soul, that is, sickness and disease, be the punishment of sin, how long must it last? what is its natural termination? and, may recovery be retarded by unforgiveness, or hastened and even secured by a work of pardon?

And here I think I find the common objection to Universalism well founded, viz: that in respect to penalty it has no doctrine of salvation. One can not be saved from what he was never exposed to; nor can one be saved from what he actually suffers. The Universalist, denying both the orthodox and the destructionist view of penalty, finds no salvation in that direction. And the only penalty in which he does believe is always suffered in full tale. Thus, between what is unjust and what is inevitable, there is no salvation.

This result is expressly admitted by Dr. T. S. Smith, in his "Illustrations of the Divine Government." He says: "The advocates for the corrective nature of punishment do not believe that all men will be saved, but that, sinners having been reclaimed by the discipline through which they will be made to pass, all men will ultimately be rendered pure and happy." Again: "It is true, that all who suffer future punishment endure the penalty of the law, and therefore, in a popular sense, can not be said to be forgiven." (Part II. c. 3.)

The obvious conclusion is that we are saved not by grace, but by justice, if we are saved at all. Dr. S. endeavors to turn the edge of this objection by saying that penalty itself is merciful and gracious, of which hereafter. But regarding penalty in the light of justice, which Dr. S. himself must in some sense allow, I can offer no better comment than in the words of Dr. Bushnell:

"In the school of modern Unitarianism, it is held that God can not deliver us of the just penalty of our sins at all; that we must bear it in the full and exact measure of justice, and that our only hope is to wear a passage through and get our deliverance, by the patient process of exhaustion. The argument is, that God is just, his character requires him to do justice; that he is immutable and cannot reverse his decreed penalties; and especially that we are all under the penalty of justice now, in so far as we transgress: the penalty being executed in us by a necessary law of nature, which as God can not change it without a [illegible] upon us, till [illegible] under the same [illegible] which grates in misery and bondage on our bad experience. There is no possibility of a sudden remission, apprehended by faith and sealed by a new spiritual birth. We must begin to grow better, by a regular course of culture and amendment, and we must go on till we run out the flow of penal consequence and get the laws of retribution on our side." This view "wholly displaces the gospel, as a message of good news from heaven; denying even the possibility of pardon or remission, in any sense that gives it an effective value. Nothing can be said of pardon, save that it signifies a forgiving feeling in God to the penitent. It is that feeling, nothing more." (Christ in Theology, pp. 271–273.)

And the denial of salvation from penalty vitiates the doctrine of salvation from sin itself. For punishment certainly does not save from the sin already committed. Even if we admit the notion of expiation or compensation,—so much pain paying for so much sin—that is not salvation, but a compounding of losses. And there still remains the bad effect of the sin in the mental and moral habitude. The Universalist theory is that penalty is designed as a tonic to correct this, and so save from future sin. But this view formally rejects the notion of "remission of sins that are past" (Rom. 3:25), and involves another serious difficulty. Punishment is no longer a thing of justice in any sense; it is not even just, but becomes a sheer experiment of discipline. Thus Dr. Smith says; "Punishment is not retrospective, but prospective. You are to be punished, not because you have yielded to an evil volition, but that you may yield to an evil volition no more." (Part I. § 2.) That is, one is to be punished at a venture for sins that may never be committed! The only escape from this absurdity is in another, viz: that guilt is ill deserving not intrinsically but only because penalty is annexed; or that the punishment constitutes the crime. This I have endeavored to deduce in treating the difficulties both of the orthodox and the Universalist views on this subject, in Chap. 10 §§ 5, 6, of my book.

We come round again to the question, Is the disease of sin in the soul healed by forgiveness? I think the affirmative answer avoids all the difficulties I have alluded to. But this supposes that the moral disease, unhealed, is mortal. For if a personal immortality remains, that implies a continuance of all the faculties of personal and responsible being, including free agency, and involving the power of self-recovery; and then forgiveness is not needed. But if the disease is threatening, or if "the wages of sin is death," then forgiveness as a healing grace and power is legitimate. There is then "remission of sins that are past," for their penalty is revoked and their power is broken is the same work of the soul's recovery. Justification—or pardon—and sanctification are not divorced, but become inseparable. Mercy and truth are met together. Grace—or gratuitous favor and amnesty—is no repeal of law, but its reenactment, in the returning strength and life of one who was sinking into the outlawry of death.

Here I may remark that all the Scriptural language which represents sin as disease and our Savior as a Physician, is specially pertinent to this view. The governmental system of the Roman Empire has, I think, made our theology too forensic, and the Schoolmen have made it too dialectic. Has it not yet to become, as it were, more therapeutic? And when we make it such, shall we not "hold fast the form of sound words" and of "sound doctrine" (hygiaian-ouses didaskalias, healthy instruction, 1 Tim. 1:10; 6:3; 2 Tim. 1:13; 4:3; Tit. 1:9, 13; 2:1, 2)?

§ 3. The Nature and Design of Punishment.

A doctrine of punishment has extensively prevailed which is much like this; that crime and sin are infringements of law, upon which the law or the majesty of the law-power, requires penal retribution, for which the severe name is vengeance. The law, it is commonly said, has been violated, "broken." And to "repair" this damage there is a demand for suffering, expiation, satisfaction.

The false element in this theory is indicated by the results to which it has been carried in views of the Atonement. The redemptive work of Christ has been regarded as a compensation, a payment of debt in the sinner's behalf, valid upon the sinner's acceptance of the substitute. That this idea does away with free grace on the part of God is confessed by one author who says: "Sure I am, that debt can never be forgiven which is paid." The difficulties of the theory are also betrayed by the connected question respecting the extent of the Atonement.

The Universalist theory of punishment as solely corrective and reformatory seems to [illegible] me an extreme reaction from the above view. It has been favored also by the modern reform in criminal codes and prison discipline, and by the discovery that a humane ministry of penalty may reform where rigorous and unmixed punishment only hardens. This view, however, may easily be carried to an extreme and false result. The transgressor of law may be regarded as simply unfortunate, and not as guilty; that which he needs may exclude all notion of what he deserves; he may be treated not as deserving any penalty, but as having special claims and rights, and as deserving to be reformed.

We need some view of the subject which shall avoid each extreme. And such a view I think is suggested by the Economy of Pain. To what purpose are the pangs and sighs and woes of which the world is so full? Are they all purely vindictive? Or are they all reformatory? Neither one nor the other. But they grow out of a natural system of penalty, very wise and merciful yet no less just, which is exemplified on a large scale in the nervous system. The design of the nerves of sensation, with their exquisite susceptibility of pain, is the protection of limb, life, and health. Take out the nerves from the body, and it might be maimed or destroyed without one's knowing it. They are the eyes and ears of the system, protecting it by their constant watch and their thousand alarms. Frost and cold are so fearful because they hurt so little,—benumbing and stealing away the senses and taking the life unwarned. These troublesome nerves with their magazine of pangs so like Pandora's box of all human ills, are the outposts and sharp sentinels that warn us of danger. They are all designed for our good. I thank God therefore for all the ministries of Pain. We could not live without them; and many would live longer and better if they had more of them.

At the bottom of Pandora's box in the fable, was Hope. But do we find hope at the end of all human pains? I find this—that many men push against the terrible dangers of which their kind nerves admonish them, and make a complete sacrifice of health, or limb, or life. And this is done not by holy martyrs only, dying under some lower law, that they may live up to a Higher Law, but by men of the lowest aims, rushing upon ruin in defiance of all law. Men do this sometimes for lucre. They do it oftener for lust; gratifying their queasy or their vicious appetites, purposely "living fast" and slipping rapidly and painfully down into their graves. They do it to glut their revenge; pursuing a foe to the ends of the earth, willing enough to die when he is dead.

In all these cases the punishing nerves demand and receive their dues. But what is the result? They were all designed to reform and save. In the general economy their pains were salutary and healing, but instead of that they have only killed. In short, they who disregard the lesson of penalty, perish under it, and with it. The pains are sharp and very torturing, because they were set to guard a precious treasure of life; and the beneficence which ordained their sharpness, holds out to the end, and lets them die out with life. They are, like the gospel itself, a sweet savor; of life unto life, or of death unto death, according as they are used or disused. But the beneficence goes no farther than death. When the life is thrown away, the slighted mercy is not bound to restore the rejected boon. Why should it?

An old writer has laid down the principle thus:

"Omnes poenae non reformantes sunt exterminantes."

All punishments exterminate when they do not reform. And our question now is,—Is this true of all kinds of penalty, or of the physical only?

I reply, the examples I have offered have all the force of the argument from analogy. And the argument is made very strong by the fact that we observe no contrary instances. So far as I know, in every department of nature, persistent action against the laws of being tends to deteriorate the nature and destroy the being itself. Real law can never be "broken;" it vindicates itself as immutable and sovereign, by breaking and crushing all that will oppose it.

But strong as the argument from analogy is, and much as it seems like a reason and nature of things, I doubt whether we are left to it alone. There are some things in the action of Conscience that suggest the same law as applying to man's moral nature. When its admonitions are disregarded it becomes blunted. If one will do what he knows is wrong, his feelings of misgiving gradually die out; the twinges of conscience subside into a dull, and dead, pain; regret and remorse after give way to hard-hearted indifference; the distinctions of right and wrong are confused and obliterated. The [illegible] talent disused wastes away. Capacity becomes incapacity. The whole doctrine of judicial blindness, which we discover in the Scriptures, may be a verification in the conscience of the rule: "He that hath, to him shall be given; and from him that hath not shall be taken that which he seemeth to have." *

But the conscience is, as it were, the nervous system of the soul. If it is not its vital faculty,—the very life of the moral and spiritual being,—it is at least the regulative faculty. When it is dead the feelings and will may get a little remaining control from obvious convenience or from conventional usage, or from the force of old habit; but there is nothing else to save one from ruin and death. And these mechanical forces cannot renew the spiritual life. That can come only from God; and by the supposition, the holiness, the purity, the self sacrificing love of God as exampled in Christ, have been declined. The economy of grace and truth which gave man a conscience is not bound to reinstate and renew it when man has dethroned and stifled it. That may be a sin unto death. And the natural penalty of the soul's death may be equally merciful and just.

Here, if I have named the true doctrine of natural punishment, I may suggest a view of artificial or special and enacted penalty, for consideration. Is it not anticipative,—a hastening of painful results of transgression, to bring them into clearer view? a make-weight to get the warning of nature felt and heard? When the reformation of the indiviual is hopeless, the punishment is justified as protecting the society, and its measure to be determined by the wise discretion of the society. The natural law of punishment still remains, as a divine law; the final execution of which may be the "vengeance" ascribed to God (Rom. 12:19).

* Dr. Bushnell gives among his "Sermons for the New Life" a discourse on these words which so far suggests the thought of annihilation that he considers the doctrine, and gives his reasons for thinking that conclusion can not be reached. It should be compared with some expressions in his Discourse on "Endless Life."

For the Crisis.

A Letter to a Medical Student.

DEAR FRIEND:—An affectionate solicitude for your spiritual and eternal well-being induces me, most earnestly, to entreat your attention to the solemn and kind warning of the Savior of sinners, addressed to us all, "Except ye repent ye shall—perish." When I hear of some young men of your profession yielding, by the grace of God, to the rightful claim of their Father in heaven, "My son, give me thine heart," I think of you, my dear friend, and lift my heart to God for your eternal salvation. Your solemn accountability to your Maker, Preserver, Lawgiver and Judge, you cannot reasonably question. "O that (you) were wise, and understood this, and would consider (your) latter end!" My friend knows that true wisdom requires us to look beyond the present. You do this, as it respects the present world. Why? Because you are concerned for your welfare beyond the present day and year. You make preparation for future mortal life. But what is your future mortal life compared with ETERNITY?

O, my dear sir, you and I, and "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Yet he "has so loved the world" as to give "his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life." O wondrous Love! Jesus Christ willingly laid down his life for us, for you, for me, to save us from condemnation and death, if we will only repent and believe in his precious name. And now, while I write to you, I pray my God that his own blessed Spirit may cause a Savior's dying love for you to melt your heart. He speaks to you from heaven. Will you turn away from him? Will you disregard his kind counsel, his appeal of love and mercy, "Why will you die?"

The spiritual disease of sin is upon you. There is no other Physician that can save you from its direful consequence of eternal death—"no other name under heaven by whom we must be saved." Come, then—come now to him, as a poor guilty sinner, before a holy God, whose law of perfect love and righteousness we all have broken; and he will in no wise cast you out. He will embrace you in the arms of his mercy and save you forever. With a penitent spirit, come to his cross for eternal life, and his precious blood which there flowed freely for you shall cleanse you from all sin. God forbid that you should go to the judgment to meet a rejected Savior in impenitence and unbelief.

What will the favor or patronage of dying men avail us, if we have not the favor of Almighty God? O, my dear sir, think of that solemn [illegible] of the Friend of sinners; "What will it profit a man [illegible] to gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" What profit to gain a rich mortal life, and lose eternal life, and the endless enjoyment of your almighty Father's love and glory? Again, I implore you, let a Savior's dying love draw you to his cross, his service, and to his eternal blessedness.

"Come now to this Physician,
His help he'll freely give;
He makes no hard condition,
'Tis only look and live."

Will you not meet me with a penitent heart at the mercy-seat? You have the prayers of your affectionate friend,

H. GREW.

For the Crisis.

The Voyage of Life.

When peaceful sleep the weary billows
On the ocean's tranquil breast,
And soft the ripples play around us
In the wind's and water's rest;
It needs no strength to bear us onward,
Needs no captain's guiding will;
Perchance our feeble bark, unshattered,
Safe may pass the waters still:

But when in fury rage the waters
On the ocean's heaving breast,
And winds and waves in foaming anger
Form the billows' snowy crest;
Then need we, truly, strength of timbers,
And a skillful guiding hand,
And tight'ning hold on faith, our anchor,
As we near the promised land.

Life's sea to all is dark and stormy,
Strown with wrecks, one watery grave,
To-day 'tis calm, to-morrow raging,
Who shall cross its restless wave?
Oh, may the bark be strong that bears us
O'er the ocean's raging tide,
And Jesus, thou our great Commander,
Land us safely at Thy side!

That through affliction's billows passing,
And temptation's breakers o'er,
We'll raise at last our triumph banner
On the everlasting shore.
And in the kingdom of our Father
Every tongue shall find employ,
We'll come unto "Mount Zion" singing,
Crowned with everlasting joy!

FANNIE PARRY.

Pine Avenue, June, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Is Christ the very Eternal God?

The idea that Christ is the very eternal God is believed and advocated by thousands at the present day. For the benefit of such, I wish to ask a few candid questions in regard to the matter.

1. If Christ is the very eternal God, why did he affirm, (John 14: 28) "My father is greater than I?" Is it true that there is one that is greater than the eternal God? If so, who is he? where does he dwell? can I have access to him?

2. Why did the Father declare, (Matt. 3: 17) "This is my beloved Son?" Can a son be coeval with and the same as his father?

3. Christ declares, (Matt. 28: 18) "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." If Christ is the very eternal God, was not the eternal God entirely destitute of power "in heaven and in earth" till the time of his receiving that gift? And was not the giver superior to the eternal God prior to that time?

4. The Scriptures affirm, (Matt. 4: 1) that "Christ was tempted;" and again (James 1: 13) that "God cannot be tempted." If Christ is the very eternal God and could be tempted, and God himself cannot be tempted, are there not two Gods? one capable of being tempted and the other not? Which of the two had I better worship?

5. The Scriptures affirm (Heb. 2: 9) that Christ was "made a little lower than the angels." Was the eternal God made lower than his creatures?

6. Why is it that in the New Testament there are seventeen passages wherein the Father is styled the one, or only God, and none in which the Son is so styled?

7. Why is it that there are three hundred and twenty texts in which the Father is absolutely and by way of pre-eminence called God, and not one in which the Son is so called?

8. Why is it that there are ninety texts that teach us that all prayer and praise should be directed to the Father, and not in a single instance to the Son?

9. Why is it that there are thirteen hundred texts in the New Testament wherein the word God occurs, and not one necessarily implying the existence of more than one person in the Godhead, or that that one is any other than the Father?

10. If Christ was the very eternal God, who superintended his affairs in heaven in his absence for nearly forty years, during which he was on earth? And who heard and answered the petitions of his saints directed to him in heaven during that time?

11. If he was the eternal God, was there any living God in the universe for three days and nights during which he was in the heart of the earth? or from his death to the resurrection? Did God the mighty Maker die, or was it his Son? [illegible] Consistencies [illegible]

JOS. B. [illegible]

West Winsted, Ct.

The Camp[illegible]

It seems that we are, this season, to have two important campmeetings [illegible] of friends, I have concluded to [illegible] both, and do what God shall be [illegible] to do. Will not hundreds of [illegible] to the same conclusion, for [illegible] souls and the glory of God? I hope so.

One of these meetings is to be at Collinsville, Conn., and the other at Wilbraham, Mass. (See the notices.) That at Collinsville is somewhat local in its relations, but will, doubtless, be well attended, and we shall hope for a glorious meeting. The Wilbraham meeting is, as is well known, an "independent" one. That is, it is designed for "all kindreds, nations, tongues and languages" who will conform to the order of the meeting as directed by the committee, respect the rights of all, and aim to advance the interests of truth, and secure the good of the whole. It is not designed to be monopolised by one, or a clique, to urge sectional or sectarian views to the grief and harm of others. Let none come for this purpose. It is desired that each one who preaches, should preach what he regards as the word of God, freely and without fear or "trammels;" but, at the same time, he shall respect the feelings and rights of others, and observe christian courtesy and brotherly kindness. Here, then, will be no trouble. It is desired that all should worship God in their own form, with the utmost christian liberty; only, that no one, or ones, shall singly, or together, mar the general harmony of the meeting, or interfere with the general arrangement for the good of the whole.

Now, with this plan before you, dear friends, we cordially invite you, one and all—come, COME, COME! Come from the East, West, North, and South. Come, old and young. COME—all that can come! You wish to go somewhere to rusticate—come to Wilbraham—it may do you good, soul and body. You wish to rest—come to Wilbraham—perhaps you will "find rest to your souls" too. You wish to see loved friends—come to Wilbraham—you will see loved and loving friends, we trust, there. You wish to serve God better—come to Wilbraham—and it may be, it will be a very important help. You wish to be loved more—come to Wilbraham, and let us see you, and we will love you more, I think. You wish, some of you, to be BAPTIZED—come to Wilbraham, and we will be prepared to baptize you.

Let us make this a crowning meeting. This will be, indeed, one of the most important meetings the cause of truth, with us, ever saw. Important things hang on this meeting. Men and women of God, will you help? It is time for us to make a new move. We have "compassed this mountain" long enough—too long altogether. Are the great questions we preach of any importance? Are the great elements we hold of any consequence? Is the God of glory about to judge the world, glorify the saints, and damn the wicked? Shall we say, yes, and still slumber on? Will He not require it at our hand, that we rise up to the work? Shall we stop to count dollars and cents in the work of eternity? Shall we stop to carp about measures of selfish policy in the crisis of damnation or endless redemption? Shall we not now, even now, awake anew to the one great work of our awful vocation? Put on the harness. Walk. Run. Let the enemy avaunt at our approach. We are able. We can "walk in the strength of the Lord." We can walk unscathed amid storms of fire and thunder. We can ride on tumults, earthquakes. We can challenge earth and hell with truth's defiant smile. Shall we linger longer?

Come, ye ministers of God. Let us see each other once more. Come, and let us sharpen our "Jerusalem blades" by meeting them, lovingly, on each other. Let not a "hoof be left behind." Let not any stay at home. Bring your tribute to the King. "Settle" self, and sink the ship, and take the "Life boat." You are [illegible] it. But come. Brethren, give the [illegible] ters an extra collection and [illegible] along! They must be [illegible] pay you any thing at [illegible] must come, and [illegible] time, if you [illegible] about entering [illegible] us, at Wilbraham, take [illegible]

The World's Crisis

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 203. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 22.

The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING

AT

No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

§ 2. The Theology of Salvation.

In treating the question of universal salvation, we should inquire how the term salvation is used and applied in the Scriptures, and also what it implies. For it is an essential part of the doctrine of forgiveness, involving the question whether we are saved by justice or by grace.

The Greek word for salvation (soteria, soterion) and the corresponding verb (sozo) are used in the New Testament, with apparent reference to a final destiny, one hundred times. I may overcount a little; but I may safely say that if the word does not refer to man's final destiny in most of these instances, it does in none of them, and it assures the eternal life of no man. It is also worthy of remark that in the Syriac version it is rendered life, and the giving of life.

And of the hundred instances all except twelve apply the salvation to a class of men. Some of them do so very strongly. Thus Luke 13: 23, 24: "Are there few that be saved? . . . Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Phil. 1: 28: "An evidence to them of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God." 2 Tim. 2:10: "I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory."

Some of the instances not obviously partitive will be claimed by my opponent as implying a general salvation. Thus John 3:17: "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." (Compare 13:47.) But here the previous verses make faith the condition of salvation, even while they commend the divine love: "God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth," etc. And "the world" may easily signify all nations as compared with the Jews, who were claiming a monopoly of salvation. Thus, in another of the passages my opponent may claim, Acts 13:46, 47: "Seeing ye . . . judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee, to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation to the ends of the earth." The passage in John 3:17 seems to me no more to prove the salvation of every human individual than the expression in verse 26, "all come to him," shows that every Jew was baptized of John. When the Pharisees said of Christ, "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him" (ch. 11:48), and again, "Behold, the world is gone after him" (ch. 12:19), we do not suppose they meant every individual human being; yet in the last expression they use the same word which Christ used (kosmos, the world). Christ's promise might be as large, even larger than the Pharisees' complaint, and yet there be many unbelieving, and unsaved.

And when Christ says "the Son of man is come to save that which was lost" (Matt. 18:11; Luke 19:10), the context will show a comparison made between the self righteous Jews and those whom they hated and despised as having no inheritance with Abraham. Christ came to call not the righteous or self-righteous, but sinners to repentance. The poor in spirit, and the meek and lowly, were the true Israel. The passage indicates the [illegible] of those who rested securely and proudly in carnal hopes, i. e. in their Jewish blood, as much as it indicates anything.

So much for the extent of salvation as revealed in the Scriptures. [illegible] Universalists [illegible] that Christ came "to save his people from their sins;" that salvation from sinfulness is more important than salvation from punishment, for sin is worse than pain; and that the doctrine of salvation from punishment, aside from the other salvation, is very pernicious, though there is too much of it in the world.

Here I may suggest to my orthodox friends that the doctrine of endless and infinite pain as the result of sin naturally tends to the evil just named. The self-love of man is in advance of the moral sense. And when he is told that he is in danger of undying agony, we may say what we will about his deserving it, still he will care more for the danger than for the guilt. The "great salvation" he will think of as the deliverance from the infinite peril; the deliverance from sinful bondage will be comparatively a slight thing. And this will explain the crouching and cringing attitude of some professedly Christian minds before God, and the professed feeling of some—we trust unreal—that if annihilation were the end of sin, they would no longer fear God or serve him.

Here I also recognize the Universalist opinion of salvation from this and that sinful habit as a real doctrine of salvation, though not the whole doctrine nor the true doctrine. It seems to me a subordinate sense of the term; though I am very glad if any hate sin enough to prize such a salvation very highly, and I am sorry if any can not get any sense or meaning from the idea.

Yet a great question remains respecting the doctrine of salvation. Are we saved by grace, or by justice? Is there strictly any remission of the penalty of sin, or is there none?

I know that the doctrine of remitted penalty is liable to abuse; that corrupt human nature is willing enough to sin and then try to get rid of punishment—and that does not speak well or honorably for human nature. And I thank Universalists and Unitarians for insisting, very correctly, that certain bad consequences of sin are always inevitable; that it brings a bad and unhealthy condition of the soul, which no forgiveness or act of pardon can remedy at once; that the laws of our moral constitution, like all the laws of nature, are so wisely appointed that even Sovereign Grace still respects them; and so when we sin we must suffer.

But here we come at the gist of our question: If a bad condition of the soul, that is, sickness and disease, be the punishment of sin, how long must it last? what is its natural termination? and, may recovery be retarded by unforgiveness, or hastened and even secured by a work of pardon?

And here I think I find the common objection to Universalism well founded, viz: that in respect to penalty it has no doctrine of salvation. One can not be saved from what he was never exposed to; nor can one be saved from what he actually suffers. The Universalist, denying both the orthodox and the destructionist view of penalty, finds no salvation in that direction. And the only penalty in which he does believe is always suffered in full tale. Thus, between what is unjust and what is inevitable, there is no salvation.

This result is expressly admitted by Dr. T. S. Smith, in his "Illustrations of the Divine Government." He says: "The advocates for the corrective nature of punishment do not believe that all men will be saved, but that, sinners having been reclaimed by the discipline through which they will be made to pass, all men will ultimately be rendered pure and happy." Again: "It is true, that all who suffer future punishment endure the penalty of the law, and therefore, in a popular sense, can not be said to be forgiven." (Part II. c. 3.)

The obvious conclusion is that we are saved not by grace, but by justice, if we are saved at all. Dr. S. endeavors to turn the edge of this objection by saying that penalty itself is merciful and gracious, of which hereafter. But regarding penalty in the light of justice, which Dr. S. himself must in some sense allow, I can offer no better comment than in the words of Dr. Bushnell:

"In the school of modern Unitarianism, it is held that God can not deliver us of the just penalty of our sins at all; that we must bear it in the full and exact measure of justice, and that our only hope is to wear a passage through and get our deliverance, by the patient process of exhaustion. The argument is, that God is just, his character requires him to do justice; that he is immutable and cannot reverse his decreed penalties; and especially that we are all under the penalty of justice now, in so far as we transgress: the penalty being executed in us by a necessary law of nature, which, as God can not change it without a [illegible] which grates in misery and bondage on our bad experience. There is no possibility of a sudden remission, apprehended by faith and sealed by a new spiritual birth. We must begin to grow better, by a regular course of culture and amendment, and we must go on till we run out the flow of penal consequence and get the laws of retribution on our side." This view "wholly displaces the gospel, as a message of good news from heaven; denying even the possibility of pardon or remission, in any sense that gives it an effective value. Nothing can be said of pardon, save that it signifies a forgiving feeling in God to the penitent. It is that feeling, nothing more." (Christ in Theology, pp. 271–278.)

And the denial of salvation from penalty vitiates the doctrine of salvation from sin itself. For punishment certainly does not save from the sin already committed. Even if we admit the notion of expiation or compensation,—so much pain paying for so much sin—that is not salvation, but a compounding of losses. And there still remains the bad effect of the sin in the mental and moral habitude. The Universalist theory is that penalty is designed as a tonic to correct this, and so save from future sin. But this view formally rejects the notion of "remission of sins that are past" (Rom. 3:25), and involves another serious difficulty. Punishment is no longer a thing of justice in any sense; it is not even just, but becomes a sheer experiment of discipline. Thus Dr. Smith says; "Punishment is not retrospective, but prospective. You are to be punished, not because you have yielded to an evil volition, but that you may yield to an evil volition no more." (Part I. § 2.) That is, one is to be punished at a venture for sins that may never be committed! The only escape from this absurdity is in another, viz: that guilt is ill deserving not intrinsically but only because penalty is annexed; or that the punishment constitutes the crime. This I have endeavored to deduce in treating the difficulties both of the orthodox and the Universalist views on this subject, in Chap. 10 §§ 5, 6, of my book.

We come round again to the question, Is the disease of sin in the soul healed by forgiveness? I think the affirmative answer avoids all the difficulties I have alluded to. But this supposes that the moral disease, unhealed, is mortal. For if a personal immortality remains, that implies a continuance of all the faculties of personal and responsible being, including free agency, and involving the power of self-recovery; and then forgiveness is not needed. But if the disease is threatening, or if "the wages of sin is death," then forgiveness as a healing grace and power is legitimate. There is then "remission of sins that are past," for their penalty is revoked and their power is broken is the same work of the soul's recovery. Justification—or pardon—and sanctification are not divorced, but become inseparable. Mercy and truth are met together. Grace—or gratuitous favor and amnesty—is no repeal of law, but its reenactment, in the returning strength and life of one who was sinking into the outlawry of death.

Here I may remark that all the Scriptural language which represents sin as disease and our Savior as a Physician, is specially pertinent to this view. The governmental system of the Roman Empire has, I think, made our theology too forensic, and the Schoolmen have made it too dialectic. Has it not yet to become, as it were, more therapeutic? And when we make it such, shall we not "hold fast the form of sound words" and of "sound doctrine" (hygiainouses didaskalias, healthy instruction, 1 Tim. 1:10; 6:3; 2 Tim. 1:13; 4:3; Tit. 1:9, 13; 2:1, 2)?

§ 3. The Nature and Design of Punishment.

A doctrine of punishment has extensively prevailed which is much like this; that crime and sin are infringements of law, upon which the law or the majesty of the law-power, requires penal retribution, for which the severe name is vengeance. The law, it is commonly said, has been violated, "broken." And to "repair" this damage there is a demand for suffering, expiation, satisfaction.

The false element in this theory is indicated by the results to which it has been carried in views of the Atonement. The redemptive work of Christ has been regarded as a compensation, a payment of debt in the sinner's behalf, valid upon the sinner's acceptance of the substitute. That this idea does away with free grace on the part of God is confessed by one author who says: "Sure I am, that debt can never be forgiven which is paid." The difficulties of the theory are also betrayed by the [illegible] of the Atonement [illegible]

The Universalist theory of punishment [illegible] solely corrective and reformatory serves to [illegible] me an extreme reaction from the above view. It has been favored also by the modern reform in criminal codes and prison discipline, and by the discovery that a humane ministry of penalty may reform where rigorous and unmixed punishment only hardens. This view, however, may easily be carried to an extreme and false result. The transgressor of law may be regarded as simply unfortunate, and not as guilty; that which he needs may exclude all notion of what he deserves; he may be treated not as deserving any penalty, but as having special claims and rights, and as deserving to be reformed.

We need some view of the subject which shall avoid each extreme. And such a view I think is suggested by the Economy of Pain. To what purpose are the pangs and sighs and woes of which the world is so full? Are they all purely vindictive? Or are they all reformatory? Neither one nor the other. But they grow out of a natural system of penalty, very wise and merciful yet no less just, which is exemplified on a large scale in the nervous system. The design of the nerves of sensation, with their exquisite susceptibility of pain, is the protection of limb, life, and health. Take out the nerves from the body, and it might be maimed or destroyed without one's knowing it. They are the eyes and ears of the system, protecting it by their constant watch and their thousand alarms. Frost and cold are so fearful because they hurt so little,—benumbing and stealing away the senses and taking the life unwarned. These troublesome nerves with their magazine of pangs so like Pandora's box of all human ills, are the outposts and sharp sentinels that warn us of danger. They are all designed for our good. I thank God therefore for all the ministries of Pain. We could not live without them; and many would live longer and better if they had more of them.

At the bottom of Pandora's box in the fable, was Hope. But do we find hope at the end of all human pains? I find this—that many men push against the terrible dangers of which their kind nerves admonish them, and make a complete sacrifice of health, or limb, or life. And this is done not by holy martyrs only, dying under some lower law, that they may live up to a Higher Law, but by men of the lowest aims, rushing upon ruin in defiance of all law. Men do this sometimes for lucre. They do it oftener for lust; gratifying their queasy or their vicious appetites, purposely "living fast" and slipping rapidly and painfully down into their graves. They do it to glut their revenge; pursuing a foe to the ends of the earth, willing enough to die when he is dead.

In all these cases the punishing nerves demand and receive their dues. But what is the result? They were all designed to reform and save. In the general economy their pains were salutary and healing, but instead of that they have only killed. In short, they who disregard the lesson of penalty, perish under it, and with it. The pains are sharp and very torturing, because they were set to guard a precious treasure of life; and the beneficence which ordained their sharpness, holds out to the end, and lets them die out with life. They are, like the gospel itself, a sweet savor; of life unto life, or of death unto death, according as they are used or disused. But the beneficence goes no farther than death. When the life is thrown away, the slighted mercy is not bound to restore the rejected boon. Why should it?

An old writer has laid down the principle thus:

"Omnes poenae non reformantes sunt exterminantes."

All punishments exterminate when they do not reform. And our question now is,—Is this true of all kinds of penalty, or of the physical only?

I reply, the examples I have offered have all the force of the argument from analogy. And the argument is made very strong by the fact that we observe no contrary instances. So far as I know, in every department of nature, persistent action against the laws of being tends to deteriorate the nature and destroy the being itself. Real law can never be "broken;" it vindicates itself as immutable and sovereign, by breaking and crushing all that will oppose it.

But strong as the argument from analogy is, and much as it seems like a reason and nature of things, I doubt whether we are left to it alone. There are some things in the notion of Conscience that suggest the same law as applying to man's moral nature. When its admonitions are disregarded it becomes blunted. If one will do what he knows is wrong, his feelings of misgiving gradually die out; the twinges of conscience subside into a dull and dead pain; [illegible] talent disused wastes away. Capacity becomes incapacity. The whole doctrine of judicial blindness, which we discover in the Scriptures, may be a verification in the conscience of the rule: "He that hath, to him shall be given; and from him that hath not shall be taken that which he seemeth to have."*

But the conscience is, as it were, the nervous system of the soul. If it is not its vital faculty,—the very life of the moral and spiritual being,—it is at least the regulative faculty. When it is dead the feelings and will may get a little remaining control from obvious convenience or from conventional usage, or from the force of old habit; but there is nothing else to save one from ruin and death. And these mechanical forces cannot renew the spiritual life. That can come only from God; and by the supposition, the holiness, the purity, the self sacrificing love of God as exampled in Christ, have been declined. The economy of grace and truth which gave man a conscience is not bound to reinstate and renew it when man has dethroned and stifled it. That may be a sin unto death. And the natural penalty of the soul's death may be equally merciful and just.

Here, if I have named the true doctrine of natural punishment, I may suggest a view of artificial or special and enacted penalty, for consideration. Is it not anticipative,—a hastening of painful results of transgression, to bring them into clearer view? a make-weight to get the warning of nature felt and heard? When the reformation of the individual is hopeless, the punishment is justified as protecting the society, and its measure to be determined by the wise discretion of the society. The natural law of punishment still remains, as a divine law; the final execution of which may be the "vengeance" ascribed to God (Rom. 12:19).

* Dr. Bushnell gives among his "Sermons for the New Life" a discourse on these words which so far suggests the thought of annihilation that he considers the doctrine, and gives his reasons for thinking that conclusion can not be reached. It should be compared with some expressions in his Discourse on "Endless Life."

For the Crisis.

A Letter to a Medical Student.

DEAR FRIEND:—An affectionate solicitude for your spiritual and eternal well-being induces me, most earnestly, to entreat your attention to the solemn and kind warning of the Savior of sinners, addressed to us all, "Except ye repent ye shall—perish." When I hear of some young men of your profession yielding, by the grace of God, to the rightful claim of their Father in heaven, "My son, give me thine heart," I think of you, my dear friend, and lift my heart to God for your eternal salvation. Your solemn accountability to your Maker, Preserver, Lawgiver and Judge, you cannot reasonably question. "O that (you) were wise, and understood this, and would consider (your) latter end!" My friend knows that true wisdom requires us to look beyond the present. You do this, as it respects the present world. Why? Because you are concerned for your welfare beyond the present day and year. You make preparation for future mortal life. But what is your future mortal life compared with ETERNITY?

O, my dear sir, you and I, and "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Yet he "has so loved the world" as to give "his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life." O wondrous Love! Jesus Christ willingly laid down his life for us, for you, for me, to save us from condemnation and death, if we will only repent and believe in his precious name. And now, while I write to you, I pray my God that his own blessed Spirit may cause a Savior's dying love for you to melt your heart. He speaks to you from heaven. Will you turn away from him? Will you disregard his kind counsel, his appeal of love and mercy, "Why will you die?"

The spiritual disease of sin is upon you. There is no other Physician that can save you from its direful consequence of eternal death—"no other name under heaven by whom we must be saved." Come, then—come now to him, as a poor guilty sinner, before a holy God, whose law of perfect love and righteousness we all have broken; and he will in no wise cast you out. He will embrace you in the arms of his mercy and save you forever. With a penitent spirit, come to his cross for eternal life, and his precious blood which there flowed freely for you shall cleanse you from all sin. God forbid that you should go to the judgment to meet a rejected Savior in impenitence and unbelief.

What will the favor or patronage of dying men avail you, if you have not the favor of Almighty God? O, my dear sir, [illegible] to gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" What profit to gain a rich mortal life, and lose eternal life, and the endless enjoyment of your almighty Father's love and glory? Again, I implore you, let a Savior's dying love draw you to his cross, his service, and to his eternal blessedness.

"Come now to this Physician,
His help he'll freely give;
He makes no hard condition,
'Tis only look and live."

Will you not meet me with a penitent heart at the mercy-seat? You have the prayers of your affectionate friend,

H. GREW.

For the Crisis.

The Voyage of Life.

When peaceful sleep the weary billows
On the ocean's tranquil breast,
And soft the ripples play around us
In the wind's and water's rest;
It needs no strength to bear us onward,
Needs no captain's guiding will;
Perchance our feeble bark, unshattered,
Safe may pass the waters still:

But when in fury rage the waters
On the ocean's heaving breast,
And winds and waves in foaming anger
Form the billows' snowy crest,
Then need we, truly, strength of timbers,
And a skillful guiding hand,
And tight'ning hold on faith, our anchor,
As we near the promised land.

Life's sea to all is dark and stormy,
Strewn with wrecks, one watery grave,
To-day 'tis calm, to-morrow raging,
Who shall cross its restless wave?
Oh, may the bark be strong that bears us
O'er the ocean's raging tide,
And Jesus, thou our great Commander,
Land us safely at Thy side!

That through affliction's billows passing,
And temptation's breakers o'er,
We'll raise at last our triumph banner
On the everlasting shore.
And in the kingdom of our Father
Every tongue shall find employ,
We'll come unto "Mount Zion" singing,
Crowned with everlasting joy!

FANNIE PARRY.

Pine Avenue, June, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Is Christ the very Eternal God?

The idea that Christ is the very eternal God is believed and advocated by thousands at the present day. For the benefit of such, I wish to ask a few candid questions in regard to the matter.

1. If Christ is the very eternal God, why did he affirm, (John 14: 28) "My father is greater than I?" Is it true that there is one that is greater than the eternal God? If so, who is he? where does he dwell? can I have access to him?

2. Why did the Father declare, (Matt. 3: 17) "This is my beloved Son?" Can a son be coeval with and the same as his father?

3. Christ declares, (Matt. 28: 18) "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." If Christ is the very eternal God, was not the eternal God entirely destitute of power "in heaven and in earth" till the time of his receiving that gift? And was not the giver superior to the eternal God prior to that time?

4. The Scriptures affirm, (Matt. 4: 1) that "Christ was tempted;" and again (James 1: 13) that "God cannot be tempted." If Christ is the very eternal God and could be tempted, and God himself cannot be tempted, are there not two Gods? one capable of being tempted and the other not? Which of the two had I better worship?

5. The Scriptures affirm (Heb. 2: 9) that Christ was "made a little lower than the angels." Was the eternal God made lower than his creatures?

6. Why is it that in the New Testament there are seventeen passages wherein the Father is styled the one, or only God, and none in which the Son is so styled?

7. Why is it that there are three hundred and twenty texts in which the Father is absolutely and by way of pre-eminence called God, and not one in which the Son is so called?

8. Why is it that there are ninety texts that teach us that all prayer and praise should be directed to the Father, and not in a single instance to the Son?

9. Why is it that there are thirteen hundred texts in the New Testament wherein the word God occurs, and not one necessarily implying the existence of more than one person in the Godhead, or that that one is any other than the Father?

10. If Christ was the very eternal God, who superintended his affairs in heaven in his absence for nearly forty years, during which he was on earth? And who heard and answered the petitions of his saints directed to him in heaven during that time?

11. If he was the eternal God, was there any living God in the [illegible] those days and nights during which he lay in the heart of the earth? [illegible]

[illegible]

The Campmeetings.

It seems that we are, [illegible] two important campmeetings. [illegible] of friends, I have concluded to [illegible] both, and do what God [illegible] to do. Will not hundreds of [illegible] to the same conclusion, for [illegible] souls and the glory of God? I hope so.

One of these meetings is to be at Collinsville, Conn., and the other at Wilbraham, Mass. (See the notices.) That at Collinsville is somewhat local in its relations, but will, doubtless, be well attended, and we shall hope for a glorious meeting. The Wilbraham meeting is, as is well known, an "independent" one. That is,—it is designed for "all kindreds, nations, tongues and languages" who will conform to the order of the meeting as directed by the committee, respect the rights of all, and aim to advance the interests of truth, and secure the good of the whole. It is not designed to be monopolised by one, or a clique, to urge sectional or sectarian views to the grief and harm of others. Let none come for this purpose. It is desired that each one who preaches, should preach what he regards as the word of God, freely and without fear or "trammels;" but, at the same time, he shall respect the feelings and rights of others, and observe christian courtesy and brotherly kindness. Here, then, will be no trouble. It is desired that all should worship God in their own form, with the utmost christian liberty; only, that no one, or ones, shall singly, or together, mar the general harmony of the meeting, or interfere with the general arrangement for the good of the whole.

Now, with this plan before you, dear friends, we cordially invite you, one and all—come, COME, COME! Come from the East, West, North, and South. Come, old and young. COME—all that can come! You wish to go somewhere to rusticate—come to Wilbraham—it may do you good, soul and body. You wish to rest, come to Wilbraham—perhaps you will "find rest to your souls" too. You wish to see loved friends—come to Wilbraham—you will see loved and loving friends, we trust, there. You wish to serve God better—come to Wilbraham—and it may be, it will be a very important help. You wish to be loved more—come to Wilbraham, and let us see you, and we will love you more, I think. You wish, some of you, to be BAPTIZED—come to Wilbraham, and we will be prepared to baptize you.

Let us make this a crowning meeting. This will be, indeed, one of the most important meetings the cause of truth, with us, ever saw. Important things hang on this meeting. Men and women of God, will you help? It is time for us to make a new move. We have "compassed this mountain" long enough—too long altogether. Are the great questions we preach of any importance? Are the great elements we hold of any consequence? Is the God of glory about to judge the world, glorify the saints, and damn the wicked? Shall we say yes, and still slumber on? Will He not require it at our hand, that we rise up to the work? Shall we stop to count dollars and cents in the work of eternity? Shall we stop to carp about measures of [illegible] policy in the crisis of damnation or endless redemption? Shall we not [illegible] our awful vocation? [illegible] Walk. [illegible] approach. We are able. We can [illegible] the strength of the Lord. [illegible] We can [illegible]

Come, ye ministers of God, [illegible] each other once more [illegible] sharpen our "Jerusalem blades" [illegible] "hoof be left behind" [illegible] Bring your [illegible] the "Life boat." [illegible] it. But come. [illegible] an extra collection [illegible]

[illegible]

The World's Crisis

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 203. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. [illegible]

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

§ 2. The Theology of Salvation.

In treating the question of universal salvation, we should inquire how the term salvation is used and applied in the Scriptures, and also what it implies. For it is an essential part of the doctrine of forgiveness, involving the question whether we are saved by justice or by grace.

The Greek word for salvation (soteria, soterion) and the corresponding verb (sozo) are used in the New Testament, with apparent reference to a final destiny, one hundred times. I may overcount a little; but I may safely say that if the word does not refer to man's final destiny in most of these instances, it does in none of them, and it assures the eternal life of no man. It is also worthy of remark that in the Syriac version it is rendered life, and the giving of life.

And of the hundred instances all except twelve apply the salvation to a class of men. Some of them do so very strongly. Thus Luke 13: 23, 24: "Are there few that be saved? . . . Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Phil. 1: 28: "An evidence to them of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God." 2 Tim. 2:10: "I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory."

Some of the instances not obviously partitive will be claimed by my opponent as implying a general salvation. Thus John 3:17: "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." (Compare 13:47.) But here the previous verses make faith the condition of salvation, even while they commend the divine love: "God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth," etc. And "the world" may easily signify all nations as compared with the Jews, who were claiming a monopoly of salvation. Thus, in another of the passages my opponent may claim, Acts 13:46, 47: "Seeing ye . . . judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee, to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation to the ends of the earth." The passage in John 3:17 seems to me no more to prove the salvation of every human individual than the expression in verse 26, "all come to him," shows that every Jew was baptised of John. When the Pharisees said of Christ, "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him" (ch. 11:48), and again, "Behold, the world is gone after him" (ch. 12:19), we do not suppose they meant every individual human being; yet in the last expression they use the same word which Christ used (kosmos, the world). Christ's promise might be as large, even larger than the Pharisees' complaint, and yet there be many unbelieving, and unsaved.

And when Christ says "the Son of man is come to save that which was lost" (Matt. 18:11; Luke 19:10), the context will show a comparison made between the self righteous Jews and those whom they hated and despised as having no inheritance with Abraham. Christ came to call not the righteous or self-righteous, but sinners, to repentance. The poor in spirit, and the meek and lowly, were the true Israel. The passage indicates the non-salvation of those who rested securely and proudly in carnal hopes, i. e., in their Jewish blood, as much as it indicates anything.

So much for the extent of salvation as revealed in the Scriptures. And now for the nature of it. Universalists have well [illegible] that Christ came "to save his people from their sins;" that salvation from sinfulness is more important than salvation from punishment, for sin is worse than pain; and that the doctrine of salvation from punishment, aside from the other salvation, is very pernicious, though there is too much of it in the world.

Here I may suggest to my orthodox friends that the doctrine of endless and infinite pain as the result of sin naturally tends to the evil just named. The self-love of man is in advance of the moral sense. And when he is told that he is in danger of undying agony, we may say what we will about his deserving it, still he will care more for the danger than for the guilt. The "great salvation" he will think of as the deliverance from the infinite peril; the deliverance from sinful bondage will be comparatively a slight thing. And this will explain the crouching and cringing attitude of some professedly Christian minds before God, and the professed feeling of some—we trust unreal—that if annihilation were the end of sin, they would no longer fear God or serve him.

Here I also recognize the Universalist opinion of salvation from this and that sinful habit as a real doctrine of salvation, though not the whole doctrine nor the true doctrine. It seems to me a subordinate sense of the term; though I am very glad if any hate sin enough to prize such a salvation very highly, and I am sorry if any can not get any sense or meaning from the idea.

Yet a great question remains respecting the doctrine of salvation. Are we saved by grace, or by justice? Is there strictly any remission of the penalty of sin, or is there none?

I know that the doctrine of remitted penalty is liable to abuse; that corrupt human nature is willing enough to sin and then try to get rid of punishment—and that does not speak well or honorably for human nature. And I thank Universalists and Unitarians for insisting, very correctly, that certain bad consequences of sin are always inevitable; that it brings a bad and unhealthy condition of the soul, which no forgiveness or act of pardon can remedy at once; that the laws of our moral constitution, like all the laws of nature, are so wisely appointed that even Sovereign Grace still respects them; and so when we sin we must suffer.

But here we come at the gist of our question: If a bad condition of the soul, that is, sickness and disease, be the punishment of sin, how long must it last? what is its natural termination? and, may recovery be retarded by unforgiveness, or hastened and even secured by a work of pardon?

And here I think I find the common objection to Universalism well founded, viz: that in respect to penalty it has no doctrine of salvation. One can not be saved from what he was never exposed to; nor can one be saved from what he actually suffers. The Universalist, denying both the orthodox and the destructionist view of penalty, finds no salvation in that direction. And the only penalty in which he does believe is always suffered in full tale. Thus, between what is unjust and what is inevitable, there is no salvation.

This result is expressly admitted by Dr. T. S. Smith, in his "Illustrations of the Divine Government." He says: "The advocates for the corrective nature of punishment do not believe that all men will be saved, but that, sinners having been reclaimed by the discipline through which they will be made to pass, all men will ultimately be rendered pure and happy." Again: "It is true, that all who suffer future punishment endure the penalty of the law, and therefore, in a popular sense, can not be said to be forgiven." (Part II. c. 3.)

The obvious conclusion is that we are saved not by grace, but by justice, if we are saved at all. Dr. S. endeavors to turn the edge of this objection by saying that penalty itself is merciful and gracious, of which hereafter. But regarding penalty in the light of justice, which Dr. S. himself must in some sense allow, I can offer no better comment than in the words of Dr. Bushnell:

"In the school of modern Unitarianism, it is held that God can not deliver us of the just penalty of our sins at all; that we must bear it in the full and exact measure of justice, and that our only hope is to wear a passage through and get our deliverance, by the patient process of exhaustion. The argument is, that God is just, his character requires him to do justice; that he is immutable, and cannot reverse his decreed penalties; and especially that we are all under the penalty of justice now, in so far as we transgress: the penalty being executed in us by a necessary law of nature, which, as God can not change it without a [illegible] its currents upon us, till [illegible] the [illegible] law of cause and effect which grates in misery and bondage on our bad experience. There is no possibility of a sudden remission, apprehended by faith and sealed by a new spiritual birth. We must begin to grow better, by a regular course of culture and amendment, and we must go on till we run out the flow of penal consequence and get the laws of retribution on our side." This view "wholly displaces the gospel, as a message of good news from heaven; denying even the possibility of pardon or remission, in any sense that gives it an effective value. Nothing can be said of pardon, save that it signifies a forgiving feeling in God to the penitent. It is that feeling, nothing more." (Christ in Theology, pp. 271–273.)

And the denial of salvation from penalty vitiates the doctrine of salvation from sin itself. For punishment certainly does not save from the sin already committed. Even if we admit the notion of expiation or compensation,—so much pain paying for so much sin—that is not salvation, but a compounding of losses. And there still remains the bad effect of the sin in the mental and moral habitude. The Universalist theory is that penalty is designed as a tonic to correct this, and so save from future sin. But this view formally rejects the notion of "remission of sins that are past" (Rom. 3:25), and involves another serious difficulty. Punishment is no longer a thing of justice in any sense; it is not even just, but becomes a sheer experiment of discipline. Thus Dr. Smith says; "Punishment is not retrospective, but prospective. You are to be punished, not because you have yielded to an evil volition, but that you may yield to an evil volition no more." (Part I. § 2.) That is, one is to be punished at a venture for sins that may never be committed! The only escape from this absurdity is in another, viz: that guilt is ill deserving not intrinsically but only because penalty is annexed; or that the punishment constitutes the crime. This I have endeavored to deduce in treating the difficulties both of the orthodox and the Universalist views on this subject, in Chap. 10 §§ 5, 6, of my book.

We come round again to the question, Is the disease of sin in the soul healed by forgiveness? I think the affirmative answer avoids all the difficulties I have alluded to. But this supposes that the moral disease, unhealed, is mortal. For if a personal immortality remains, that implies a continuance of all the faculties of personal and responsible being, including free agency, and involving the power of self-recovery; and then forgiveness is not needed. But if the disease is threatening, or if "the wages of sin is death," then forgiveness as a healing grace and power is legitimate. There is then "remission of sins that are past," for their penalty is revoked and their power is broken is the same work of the soul's recovery. Justification—or pardon—and sanctification are not divorced, but become inseparable. Mercy and truth are met together. Grace—or gratuitous favor and amnesty—is no repeal of law, but its reenactment, in the returning strength and life of one who was sinking into the outlawry of death.

Here I may remark that all the Scriptural language which represents sin as disease and our Savior as a Physician, is specially pertinent to this view. The governmental system of the Roman Empire has, I think, made our theology too forensic, and the Schoolmen have made it too dialectic. Has it not yet to become, as it were, more therapeutic? And when we make it such, shall we not "hold fast the form of sound words" and of "sound doctrine" (hygiaianouses didaskalias, healthy instruction, 1 Tim. 1:10; 6:3: 2 Tim. 1:13; 4:3; Tit. 1:9, 13; 2:1, 2)?

§ 3. The Nature and Design of Punishment.

A doctrine of punishment has extensively prevailed which is much like this; that crime and sin are infringements of law, upon which the law or the majesty of the law-power, requires penal retribution, for which the severe name is vengeance. The law, it is commonly said, has been violated, "broken." And to "repair" this damage there is a demand for suffering, expiation, satisfaction.

The false element in this theory is indicated by the results to which it has been carried in views of the Atonement. The redemptive work of Christ has been regarded as a compensation, a payment of debt in the sinner's behalf, valid upon the sinner's acceptance of the substitute. That this idea does away with free grace on the part of God is confessed by one author who says: "Sure I am, that debt can never be forgiven which is paid." The difficulties of the theory are also betrayed by the contradictions respecting the extent of the Atonement [illegible] The [illegible] solely corrective, and regulatory seems to me an extreme reaction from the above view. It has been favored also by the modern reform in criminal codes and prison discipline, and by the discovery that a humane ministry of penalty may reform where rigorous and unmixed punishment only hardens. This view, however, may easily be carried to an extreme and false result. The transgressor of law may be regarded as simply unfortunate, and not as guilty; that which he needs may exclude all notion of what he deserves; he may be treated not as deserving any penalty, but as having special claims and rights, and as deserving to be reformed.

We need some view of the subject which shall avoid each extreme. And such a view I think is suggested by the Economy of Pain. To what purpose are the pangs and sighs and woes of which the world is so full? Are they all purely vindictive? Or are they all reformatory? Neither one nor the other. But they grow out of a natural system of penalty, very wise and merciful yet no less just, which is exemplified on a large scale in the nervous system. The design of the nerves of sensation, with their exquisite susceptibility of pain, is the protection of limb, life, and health. Take out the nerves from the body, and it might be maimed or destroyed without one's knowing it. They are the eyes and ears of the system, protecting it by their constant watch and their thousand alarms. Frost and cold are so fearful because they hurt so little,—benumbing and stealing away the senses and taking the life unwarned. These troublesome nerves with their magazine of pangs so like Pandora's box of all human ills, are the outposts and sharp sentinels that warn us of danger. They are all designed for our good. I thank God therefore for all the ministries of Pain. We could not live without them; and many would live longer and better if they had more of them.

At the bottom of Pandora's box in the fable, was Hope. But do we find hope at the end of all human pains? I find this—that many men push against the terrible dangers of which their kind nerves admonish them, and make a complete sacrifice of health, or limb, or life. And this is done not by holy martyrs only, dying under some lower law, that they may live up to a Higher Law, but by men of the lowest aims, rushing upon ruin in defiance of all law. Men do this sometimes for lucre. They do it oftener for lust; gratifying their queasy or their vicious appetites, purposely "living fast" and slipping rapidly and painfully down into their graves. They do it to glut their revenge; pursuing a foe to the ends of the earth, willing enough to die when he is dead.

In all these cases the punishing nerves demand and receive their dues. But what is the result? They were all designed to reform and save. In the general economy their pains were salutary and healing, but instead of that they have only killed. In short, they who disregard the lesson of penalty, perish under it, and with it. The pains are sharp and very torturing, because they were set to guard a precious treasure of life; and the beneficence which ordained their sharpness, holds out to the end, and lets them die out with life. They are, like the gospel itself, a sweet savor; of life unto life, or of death unto death, according as they are used or disused. But the beneficence goes no farther than death. When the life is thrown away, the slighted mercy is not bound to restore the rejected boon. Why should it?

An old writer has laid down the principle thus:

"Omnes poenae non reformantes sunt exterminantes."

All punishments exterminate when they do not reform. And our question now is,—Is this true of all kinds of penalty, or of the physical only?

I reply, the examples I have offered have all the force of the argument from analogy. And the argument is made very strong by the fact that we observe no contrary instances. So far as I know, in every department of nature, persistent action against the laws of being tends to deteriorate the nature and destroy the being itself. Real law can never be "broken;" it vindicates itself as immutable and sovereign, by breaking and crushing all that will oppose it.

But strong as the argument from analogy is, and much as it seems like a reason and nature of things, I doubt whether we are left to it alone. There are some things in the action of Conscience that suggest the same law as applying to man's moral nature. When its admonitions are disregarded it becomes blunted. If one will do what he knows is wrong, his feelings of misgiving gradually die out; the twinges of conscience subside into a dull, and dead, pain; regret [illegible] wrong are confused, and obliterated. The talent disused wastes away. Capacity becomes incapacity. The whole doctrine of judicial blindness, which we discover in the Scriptures, may be a verification in the conscience of the rule: "He that hath, to him shall be given; and from him that hath not shall be taken that which he seemeth to have."*

But the conscience is, as it were, the nervous system of the soul. If it is not its vital faculty,—the very life of the moral and spiritual being,—it is at least the regulative faculty. When it is dead the feelings and will may get a little remaining control from obvious convenience or from conventional usage, or from the force of old habit; but there is nothing else to save one from ruin and death. And these mechanical forces cannot renew the spiritual life. That can come only from God; and by the supposition, the holiness, the purity, the self sacrificing love of God as exampled in Christ, have been declined. The economy of grace and truth which gave man a conscience is not bound to reinstate and renew it when man has dethroned and stifled it. That may be a sin unto death. And the natural penalty of the soul's death may be equally merciful and just.

Here, if I have named the true doctrine of natural punishment, I may suggest a view of artificial or special and enacted penalty, for consideration. Is it not anticipative,—a hastening of painful results of transgression, to bring them into clearer view? a make-weight to get the warning of nature felt and heard? When the reformation of the indivival is hopeless, the punishment is justified as protecting the society, and its measure to be determined by the wise discretion of the society. The natural law of punishment still remains, as a divine law; the final execution of which may be the "vengeance" ascribed to God (Rom. 12:19).

* Dr. Bushnell gives among his "Sermons for the New Life" a discourse on these words which so far suggests the thought of annihilation that he considers the doctrine, and gives his reasons for thinking that conclusion can not be reached. It should be compared with some expressions in his Discourse on "Endless Life."

For the Crisis.

A Letter to a Medical Student.

DEAR FRIEND:—An affectionate solicitude for your spiritual and eternal well-being induces me, most earnestly, to entreat your attention to the solemn and kind warning of the Savior of sinners, addressed to us all, "Except ye repent ye shall—perish." When I hear of some young men of your profession yielding, by the grace of God, to the rightful claim of their Father in heaven, "My son, give me thine heart," I think of you, my dear friend, and lift my heart to God for your eternal salvation. Your solemn accountability to your Maker, Preserver, Lawgiver and Judge, you cannot reasonably question. "O that (you) were wise, and understood this, and would consider (your) latter end!" My friend knows that true wisdom requires us to look beyond the present. You do this, as it respects the present world. Why? Because you are concerned for your welfare beyond the present day and year. You make preparation for future mortal life. But what is your future mortal life compared with ETERNITY?

O, my dear sir, you and I, and "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Yet he "has so loved the world" as to give "his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life." O wondrous Love! Jesus Christ willingly laid down his life for us, for you, for me, to save us from condemnation and death, if we will only repent and believe in his precious name. And now, while I write to you, I pray my God that his own blessed Spirit may cause a Savior's dying love for you to melt your heart. He speaks to you from heaven. Will you turn away from him? Will you disregard his kind counsel, his appeal of love and mercy, "Why will you die?"

The spiritual disease of sin is upon you. There is no other Physician that can save you from its direful consequence of eternal death—"no other name under heaven by whom we must be saved." Come, then—come now to him, as a poor guilty sinner, before a holy God, whose law of perfect love and righteousness we all have broken; and he will in no wise cast you out. He will embrace you in the arms of his mercy and save you forever. With a penitent spirit, come to his cross for eternal life, and his precious blood which there flowed freely for you shall cleanse you from all sin. God forbid that you should go to the judgment to meet a rejected Savior in impenitence and unbelief.

What will the favor, or patronage of dying men avail us if we have not the favor of Almighty God? O, my dear sir, [illegible] to gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" What profit to gain a rich mortal life, and lose eternal life, and the endless enjoyment of your almighty Father's love and glory? Again, I implore you, let a Savior's dying love draw you to his cross, his service, and to his eternal blessedness.

> "Come now to this Physician,
> His help he'll freely give;
> He makes no hard condition,
> 'Tis only look and live."

Will you not meet me with a penitent heart at the mercy-seat? You have the prayers of your affectionate friend,

H. GREW.

For the Crisis.

The Voyage of Life.

When peaceful sleep the weary billows
On the ocean's tranquil breast,
And soft the ripples play around us
In the wind's and water's rest;
It needs no strength to bear us onward,
Needs no captain's guiding will;
Perchance our feeble bark, unshattered,
Safe may pass the waters still:

But when in fury rage the waters
On the ocean's heaving breast,
And winds and waves in foaming anger
Form the billows' snowy crest;
Then need we, truly, strength of timbers,
And a skillful guiding hand,
And tight'ning hold on faith, our anchor,
As we near the promised land.

Life's sea to all is dark and stormy,
Strown with wrecks, one watery grave,
To-day 'tis calm, to-morrow raging,
Who shall cross its restless wave?
Oh, may the bark be strong that bears us
O'er the ocean's raging tide,
And Jesus, thou our great Commander,
Land us safely at Thy side!

That through affliction's billows passing,
And temptation's breakers o'er,
We'll raise at last our triumph banner
On the everlasting shore.
And in the kingdom of our Father
Every tongue shall find employ,
We'll come unto "Mount Zion" singing,
Crowned with everlasting joy!

FANNIE PARRY.

Pine Avenue, June, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Is Christ the very Eternal God?

The idea that Christ is the very eternal God is believed and advocated by thousands at the present day. For the benefit of such, I wish to ask a few candid questions in regard to the matter.

1. If Christ is the very eternal God, why did he affirm, (John 14: 28) "My father is greater than I?" Is it true that there is one that is greater than the eternal God? If so, who is he? where does he dwell? can I have access to him?

2. Why did the Father declare, (Matt. 3: 17) "This is my beloved Son?" Can a son be coeval with and the same as his father?

3. Christ declares, (Matt. 28: 18) "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." If Christ is the very eternal God, was not the eternal God entirely destitute of power "in heaven and in earth" till the time of his receiving that gift? And was not the giver superior to the eternal God prior to that time?

4. The Scriptures affirm, (Matt. 4: 1) that "Christ was tempted;" and again (James 1: 13) that "God cannot be tempted." If Christ is the very eternal God and could be tempted, and God himself cannot be tempted, are there not two Gods? one capable of being tempted and the other not? Which of the two had I better worship?

5. The Scriptures affirm (Heb. 2: 9) that Christ was "made a little lower than the angels." Was the eternal God made lower than his creatures?

6. Why is it that in the New Testament there are seventeen passages wherein the Father is styled the one, or only God, and none in which the Son is so styled?

7. Why is it that there are three hundred and twenty texts in which the Father is absolutely and by way of pre-eminence called God, and not one in which the Son is so called?

8. Why is it that there are ninety texts that teach us that all prayer and praise should be directed to the Father, and not in a single instance to the Son?

9. Why is it that there are thirteen hundred texts in the New Testament wherein the word God occurs, and not one necessarily implying the existence of more than one person in the Godhead, or that that one is any other than the Father?

10. If Christ was the very eternal God, who superintended his affairs in heaven in his absence for nearly forty years, during which he was on earth? And who heard and answered the petitions of his saints directed to him in heaven during that time?

11. If he was the eternal God, was there any living God in the universe for three days and nights during which he was in the heart of the earth? or from his death to the resurrection? Did God the mighty Maker die, [illegible]

JOS. [illegible]

West [illegible]

The Campmeetings.

It seems that we are, this [illegible] two important campmeetings. [illegible] of friends, I have concluded to [illegible] both, and do what God shall [illegible] to do. Will not hundreds of others come to the same conclusion, for the good of souls and the glory of God? I hope so.

One of these meetings is to be at Collinsville, Conn., and the other at Wilbraham, Mass. (See the notices.) That at Collinsville is somewhat local in its reference, but will, doubtless, be well attended, and we shall hope for a glorious meeting. The Wilbraham meeting is, as is well known, an "independent" one. That is,—it is designed for "all kindreds, nations, tongues and languages" who will conform to the order of the meeting as directed by the committee, respect the rights of all, and aim to advance the interests of truth, and secure the good of the whole. It is not designed to be monopolised by one, or a clique, to urge sectional or sectarian views to the grief and harm of others. Let none come for this purpose. It is desired that each one who preaches, should preach what he regards as the word of God, freely and without fear or "trammels;" but, at the same time, he shall respect the feelings and rights of others, and observe christian courtesy and brotherly kindness. Here, then, will be no trouble. It is desired that all should worship God in their own form, with the utmost christian liberty; only, that no one, or ones, shall singly, or together, mar the general harmony of the meeting, or interfere with the general arrangement for the good of the whole.

Now, with this plan before you, dear friends, we cordially invite you, one and all—come, COME, COME! Come from the East, West, North, and South. Come, old and young. COME—all that can come! You wish to go somewhere to rusticate—come to Wilbraham—it may do you good, soul and body. You wish to rest—come to Wilbraham—perhaps you will "find rest to your souls" too. You wish to see loved friends—come to Wilbraham—you will see loved and loving friends, we trust, there. You wish to serve God better—come to Wilbraham—and it may be, it will be a very important help. You wish to be loved more—come to Wilbraham, and let us see you, and we will love you more, I think. You wish, some of you, to be BAPTIZED—come to Wilbraham, and we will be prepared to baptize you.

Let us make this a crowning meeting. This will be, indeed, one of the most important meetings the cause of truth, with us, ever saw. Important things hang on this meeting. Men and women of God, will you help? It is time for us to make a new move. We have "compassed this mountain" long enough—too long altogether. Are the great questions we preach of any importance? Are the great elements we hold of any consequence? Is the God of glory about to judge the world, glorify the saints, and damn the wicked? Shall we say yes, and still slumber on? Will He not require it at our hand, that we rise up to the work? Shall we stop to count dollars and cents in the work of eternity? Shall we stop to carp about measures of selfish policy in the crisis of damnation or endless redemption? Shall we not now, even now, awake anew to the one great work of our awful vocation? Put on the harness. Walk. Run. Let the enemy avaunt at our approach. We are able. We can "walk in the strength of the Lord." We can walk unscathed amid storms of fire and thunder. We can ride on tumults, earthquakes. We can challenge earth and hell with truth's defiant smile. Shall we linger longer?

Come, ye ministers of God. Let us see each other once more. Come, and let us sharpen our "Jerusalem blades" by crossing them, lovingly, on each other! Let not a "hoof be left behind." Let none stay at home. Bring your tribute to the King. "Settle" self, and sink the ship! and [illegible] the "Life boat." You are poor. [illegible] it. But come. Brethren, give the [illegible] ters an extra collection, and [illegible] along! They must be there. [illegible] pay you any thing at the [illegible] must come, and [illegible] time, if you never [illegible] about entering [illegible] us, at Wilbraham, take [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 208.

For the Crisis.

The Apostles' Twelve Thrones.

When Christ was discoursing to the disciples about the difficulty of getting a rich man into the kingdom of God, (Matt. 19:23 and onward,) Peter says to him, "We have left all and followed thee; what shall we have, therefore?" Christ answered, "Ye that have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." —Ver. 28. Premising that judge here signifies in Judges 3: 10, 10: 2, 3, 12: 7, 15:20; to rule, we proceed to inquire what will be the state of things when this promise shall be realized?

We seek first to learn what throne is Christ's throne; and where is its locality? "Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice, from henceforth even forever." Isa. 9: 7. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David."—Luke 1: 32. "Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ." Acts 2: 30, 31. Thus it was predicted by the prophet, that the Messiah should occupy David's throne. Gabriel promised the same to Mary before his birth; and according to Peter, it was necessary that he should be raised from the dead, that these predictions might be realized. Christ then must possess the throne of David restored.

Over whom did David reign? Over Israel. 2 Sam. 5:12. Where was David's throne? On Mt. Zion in Jerusalem. 2 Sam. 5: 4, 5. Note the following among other direct testimony, that Christ's throne is, also, to be there located. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Ps. 2: 6. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it. . . . There will I make the horn of David to bud, I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed."—Ps. 132:13–17. "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies."—Ps. 110: 2. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mt. Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 23. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come . . . When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Ps. 102: 13–16. From the above it is evident that Christ's occupancy of David's throne is subsequent to his second appearing.

Then when Christ shall have come again, when he "shall sit upon the throne of his glory," in Jerusalem—"in the regeneration"—"in his times" (1 Tim. 6:15)—"The times of restitution of all things," Acts 3:21, the twelve apostles will, also, occupy twelve thrones over the twelve tribes of Israel. We then inquire about the twelve tribes, where they will be, and what their condition. As to the where, we answer, they will occupy their own land—Palestine. That they are yet to return there is most abundantly shown by the prophets. We notice a few of the testimonies.

"But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold I am for you, and I will turn unto you; and ye shall be tilled and sown. And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded. . . . Yea I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel, and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men."—Ezk. 36: 8–12. That this prophecy cannot have had its fulfillment in the past, is evident from the fact, that the restoration from Babylon was only partial—embraced only two tribes and a scattering from the other ten tribes; this is to be completed—"The house of Israel, even all of it." Again, that return was mainly from one country; and at most from a few countries; but this is to be "out of all countries," into their own land, ver. 24; so much so, that if any of them be "driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee."—Deut. 30:4. See the whole of this 30th chapter. Can it be fulfilled without the literal return of Israel who once dwelt there and were driven out for their iniquities?

Again, read the vision of the two sticks, Ezk. 37: 15–28.

[illegible] the one stick and write upon it, [illegible] and for the children of Israel [illegible]; then take another stick [illegible], For Joseph, the stick of [illegible], and for all the house of Israel his companions; and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. . . . Wilt thou not show us [illegible] . . . Thus [illegible] the Lord God, Behold, I will take the [illegible] [illegible] one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince forever."—vers. 22–25.

Surely the return from Babylon did not fulfill this, either in the gathering of the twelve tribes, as is demanded; or in the union and independence of the kingdom nor in the purity of character, or perpetuity of possession. Let it lie over till "the Redeemer shall come to Zion," (Isa. 59:20,) and "shall set his hand again a second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the Islands of the sea; and he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." They will then be prepared to become one peaceful kingdom, for "the envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Isa. 11: 11–13.

These passages establish the proposition clearly, that the twelve tribes will again possess the land promised to Abraham; and as "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24), it must be subsequent to the return of the Lord. Very much more testimony on the point is at hand; but I would not tax your space and time unreasonably.

PHILO.

For the Crisis.

"Flesh and Blood."

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Cor. 15. 50.

This passage is often quoted to prove that there is to be no resurrection of the body. By another class it is quoted to prove that Christ has no kingdom. To me there is no need of either. The text was never designed to prove either, but another thing. The apostle was speaking of the necessity of a resurrection of the dead. The question came up respecting the body of such—"With what body do they come?" "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Now the doctrine taught to me, seems to be this; that the natural body is of the earth, earthy, corruptible, subject to a state of decomposition, which it naturally inherits, and does not inherit incorruption. If it had been of a higher origin, or possessed anything about it like immortality, it would have inherited incorruption; and if the body had been of incorruptible material, it would inherit the kingdom of God as a natural inheritance.

If this had been natural, there would have been no need of that which was spiritual. Hence the Lord from heaven was given, to give incorruption to the saints. This was Christ's inheritance; for his flesh did not see corruption; and my opinion is, if it had lain in Joseph's new tomb till to-day, it would have remained uncorrupted. The bodies of the saints will be of an incorruptible nature. If the body is raised, it must be substance, or there can be no body. The very idea of a body, presupposes substance; but it is incorruptible substance. It must be of an exquisitely delicate texture, capable of impressions of a purely spiritual kind. Who, that has ever felt the operation of the Spirit of God, that has not felt it with those organs through which we are made to feel?

A. KIDDER.

For the Crisis.

Piety and the Lord's Coming.

"Alas! when piety has no essential life, but a sort of galvanic existence. Alas! for those who are not good because God requires it, and because it is proper to be holy in summer and in winter; but merely put on a little goodness because the Lord is about to appear. I pray you don't regulate your piety by the guns of Europe. Live at all times a righteous, godly life; that is the only preparation for Christ's coming—a life of piety, sobriety, industry and watchfulness. But if you only refrain from sanding the sugar, from giving short measure, from getting intoxicated with the drunken, from giving eye-service, from making your house a hell, from slandering your neighbors, from oppressing your hirelings and robbing them of their dues;—if you refrain from these wicked deeds, only because the Lord is near at hand, then your piety and your virtue are reprobate silver, bogus coin, of value no where in this universe. Such a religion is a sham; it has no vital, no back-bone, no heart; it is a hollow sham,—not fit to live with, or to die with, or to go to judgment with."

WM. [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 27, 1859.

Poultney.

We arrived among this happy, hospitable, christian people, July 16th, and enjoyed a delightful prayer meeting, that was warm enough to melt a cold backslider's heart and set on fire the lukewarm. Three requested prayers. Notwithstanding the people are in the midst of the busy haying season, we think there could not have been less than seventy present. We are happy to learn that their prayer meetings are excellent and well sustained every week. Some have deserted from Satan's ranks since we were last with them, and are now rejoicing in the Lord.

Lord's day morning, we had another of those soul-stirring, heart-cheering love feasts, that are worth a journey of two hundred miles to enjoy. They have learned the happy art of speaking short and to the point. Their testimonies average less than a minute each. We could not help contrasting these short and interesting remarks that every body loves to hear, with the l o n g, dull, prosy, heartless talk, to which we are sometimes obliged to listen, when a few who have the gift of continuance spin out their tedious exhortations, or expoundings of some doctrinal point, entirely foreign to the interests of the meeting, till the weaker ones, who ought especially to take part, become disheartened and discouraged, either because there is no opportunity for them, or from a feeling of inability to "talk to edification," supposing it consists in a kind of set speech on some subject, whereas such generally tend to produce cold formality, and destroy the life of the meeting. It is rare that one talks over three minutes in prayer meeting without being tedious. These things are carefully avoided by the church at P. They believe in the doctrine of loving their neighbor as themselves; and we think but few churches carry out this principle in a more practical manner. When one member suffers, all seem to suffer with it. They find, by happy experience, that it is more blessed to give than to receive; and that a religion which shuns the poor, or refuses to administer to their wants, is not the christian religion.

This is emphatically a growing church—a living branch of the great vine. Love binds them together and warms their hearts for those unprepared for the great day of the Lord. They love the appearing of Jesus and the evidences that indicate his speedy coming. People take great pains to attend the meetings, forming large and attentive audiences.

At the close of the P. M. service, four were buried with Christ in baptism, and were much blessed. One had been a prominent and devoted member of the M. E. Church for several years, endeavoring to instruct others in the way to life, but had supposed that sprinkling was baptism till quite recently. When on the way to the water, he remarked, "This is the heaviest cross I ever bore," but on the way back, he could speak of sweeter peace and stronger faith than ever before enjoyed. He found the Lord very faithful to his promise, that after baptism, "ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." His great comfort confirmed the promise. In the evening, several came forward for prayers.

Tuesday evening, July 18th, we met again and had another refreshing season. Six or seven rose for prayers. The work is still onward. Praise the Lord.

RUTLAND. We learn that their social meetings in R. are increasing in interest. Our excellent Bro. M. Batchelor has become their pastor, and we trust will see the work of the Lord prosper in his hands. This church is about completing a convenient house of worship, located in a very eligible situation, fronting the park. This church has endured much opposition from without, but the Lord has been their strength. They know in whom they believe, and stand firm in the hope of the gospel, waiting for the coming King.

Jewish Officers in the French Army.

It is an interesting fact that there are a large number of Jewish officers in the French army. This shows their sympathy with Napoleon, and may yet have an important connection with the closing events in the battle of Armageddon. We wait with deep interest for the approach of coming events. We clip the following from the London Times:

The names and ranks of 140 Jewish officers now serving in the French army in Italy have been published. This is an extraordinary number, and yet the catalogue is incomplete, and a supplementary list is promised. As in France promotion entirely depends upon individual merit, we consider this number of officers as a most honorable testimony to Jewish bravery, skill, and morality, especially when it is borne in mind that the whole Jewish population of France does not exceed 100,000 souls. These officers are found in all regiments, from the guards to the baggage train. We can imagine (with what zeal) the French Jewish soldiers will fight Austrians, the bigoted oppressors and persecutors of their brethren in Central Europe.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17:

The prophecy of Rev. 17 is now a subject of deep interest to the Bible student, who loves the appearing of Christ. And it would be well for many others to remember the advice of the apostle Peter:—"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise. In your hearts, knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." 2 Pet. 1: 19–20. As the prophecy gives light, all who neglect it must walk in darkness in relation to coming events. Probably the mass of religious teachers have never been so negligent in the study of the prophets as at the present time, hence the churches seem to be asleep on subjects of the most thrilling interest. The Savior says, "Take ye heed, watch and pray . . . lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." At no period, we think, have the evidences of the Lord's speedy coming been so strong as at the present time. We see no grounds for doubts that we are near the time when it will be said, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15.

The "scarlet-colored beast" of Rev. 17, is the last power that supports the woman—the one that carries her to perdition. We think there can be no doubt that the woman symbolizes the Roman Catholic hierarchy at Rome, and the beast, the associated political power. This Roman beast has seven heads, one of which, evidently the last, is "wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast." Rev. 13: 3. This wounded and healed head, we think, represents the beast at the time it "was, and is not, and yet is." Has the woman, or Roman Catholic hierarchy, been sustained by a head of the beast answering this description? The dynasty of Napoleon Bonaparte appears to fill the prophetic picture thus far.

G. S. Faber, a noted expositor of the prophecies, who died Jan. 27th, 1854, at the age of eighty-one years, said:—

"We are distinctly taught that the polity, thus triply characterized by shortness of continuance, and death by the sword of military violence, and revival from the death thus inflicted, will go, together with the empire of which it is the seventh head, into UTTER DESTRUCTION." "Hence it is quite clear that, if the French Empireship be the short-lived and sword-slain and revived seventh head—of which, in the present day, there can scarcely, I think, be a reasonable doubt—then we must anticipate his sure and certain destruction along with that of the long-tolerated Roman Empire."

In 1816, forty-three years since, the year after Napoleon I. was carried to St. Helena, when speaking of the wounded and healed head of the beast, Mr. Faber says:—

"The wound, however, which was thus healed, was the wound which was inflicted on the short-lived seventh head. Therefore, the wounded, short-lived seventh head must have appeared to St. John to be the particular head which was healed. But the wounded, short-lived seventh head has been shown to be the short-lived FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, which was wounded to death by the sword of England. Therefore the FRENCH EMPERORSHIP is that mortally wounded seventh head, whose deadly wound is destined to be healed.

Thus are we apparently led, by the speaking-machinery of the pictured hieroglyphic, to a very important conclusion: the conclusion, namely, that the seventh head, which was mortally wounded by the sword, is the identical head which is destined to be healed.

Nor am I here presuming to play the prophet. So far from it, I simply state, either the very words of the prophecy, or the inspired description of what St. John beheld in the picture-history. The seventh head then, being the head which was mortally wounded by the sword, is the head which is destined to be healed." "The rise of the eighth form, in the verbal interpretation of the angel, corresponds with the healing of the sword-slain head in the pictured hieroglyphic. . . . . But the sword-slain head, thus destined to be healed, is the French Emperorship; and, according to the angel's interpretation, the literal mode in which it will be healed, is by the rise of an eighth form of a Roman government, which however is to be the same as one of the preceding seven. THE FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, therefore, will be healed by the rise of that eighth form, with which one of the preceding seven will identify itself. Now it plainly cannot be thus healed, unless that particular form out of the preceding seven, which is to be the same as the yet future eighth, shall be the seventh form or THE FRENCH EMPERORSHIP plainly could not be healed by its rise.

Hence the grand conclusion from the whole is immediately brought out: THE PREDICTED YET FUTURE EIGHTH FORM OF ROMAN GOVERNMENT WILL BE THE REVIVED FRENCH EMPERORSHIP."—[Supplemental 3d vol. to a Dissertation on the Prophecies. Dissert. i. sect. 4, pp. 78–92.

In 1835, a work on the Revelation was published in Dublin, Ireland, by Isaac Ash, in which the writer, when speaking of the seventh head of the beast, says:—

"The seventh form of government under Napoleon seems to be designed. This arose A. D. 1806, when Francis II. abdicated the official title of 'Emperor of the Romans,' which had been transferred from France to Germany by Otho, after he had subdued the kingdom of Italy, and, according to Gibbon, 'forever fixed the imperial crown to the name and nation of Germany.' Napoleon assumed the title of 'Emperor of the French' A. D. 1804, and that of 'King of Italy and Rome' A. D. 1806. . . . There was no longer an emperor of Rome, yet the king of Rome was an emperor." . . . "The event alone can discover how the beast, or now (1835) headless body of the empire, shall itself become an eighth form of government, distinct from all the preceding, and yet produced by them, and embodying the elements of them all. Such a state of things would resemble a universal confederacy, which should swallow up and contain within itself the effect of every species of authority."

"The event" now shows how the "headless body of the empire" has "become an eighth . . . embodying the elements of them all." The "confederacy" is formed, and the prophecy fast fulfilling. While "the world" "wonder" as "they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is," those who "take heed" to the "sure word of prophecy," see clear light amid the surrounding darkness, and already behold bright evidence that Gentile rule is about closing up, that the "day dawn" of glory is just ready to burst upon an astonished world. Let us keep ready to welcome the coming King of peace.

"Above Every Other Man."

Who occupies such a prominent position? Louis Napoleon. Such seems to be the decision of the world. His progress causes all to "wonder," who are not servants of the Lord and students of the prophets. The Springfield Republican remarks of this wonderful man:—"It is something to say of a man that, above every other man, he occupies the attention of the world. This can be said of Louis Napoleon to-day." This saying corresponds with Rev. 17:8.

The Republican, in speaking of his career as compared with Napoleon I. says:—"There was something, as we now look back upon it, which seems prophetic in the relations which the first Napoleon sustained to his reigning nephew. He and the empress Marie Louise held the boy at the font when he was baptized, and the Emperor, in the transports of his tenderness presented him to the people from his window in the Tuilleries."

Now his mandate makes the world tremble. How changed his position since the time he was in New York, and known as "a very fast boy, haunting the drinking saloons and being quite too familiar with houses of bad repute." At that time what event looked more improbable than that he should tread the steps of the illustrious Napoleon I.? Now we see him marching his troops over the same road and with greater success. How appropriate the inscription on one of the banners that greeted him, on his return through France to prepare the way for the establishment of the empire,—"The Uncle that was—the Nephew that is;" or, as expressed by the Revelator,—"The beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Napoleon III. is so like Napoleon I. in his strange career, that it seems like the return of the latter to fight his battles over again, only with more rapid success. When Louis Napoleon was at Brescia a few days since, he slept in a house once occupied by his uncle. A correspondent from that place says:

"Napoleon I., when here, honored the residence of the Fenarolli family with his presence. He slept one night in the palace where his successor has just been, after the lapse of a half century, under similar circumstances, pursuing with the same success the course of his victories. At the palace, the room where Napoleon I. slept has been religiously preserved, exactly as he left it. The bed, toilet table, and the writing table, in a closet adjoining, remain in the same state—in the same disorder. Napoleon III. joining in this feeling of respect, refused to occupy the apartment where his uncle had slept, and selected a room adjoining."

Spiritualism in Europe.

We often hear it said, "Spiritualism is dying out." Whenever we hear such a remark, it reminds us of an inexperienced blind man exploring a stream from its source to its termination; and judging of the extent of the river by the noise of its waters. After tracing the noisy brook down the hillside, plunging in angry roar among the rocks, he arrives where large streams unite and in their deep, silent flow, pass on with scarcely a murmur to the almost boundless ocean. When at this point of his journey, he says: "This river must be dying out, for it makes less noise than it did when I was nearer its source." If he were not blind, he would not make such a remark. Thus it is with Spiritualism. In its early history, it might be compared to a little cur that runs and barks at every passing traveler, but feared by no one; now, to the savage bull dog that gives no warning till he has his victim by the throat, in his death-grapple. It is true that Spiritualism is less noisy than its earlier history, but there is more policy and greater progress. The doctrines of Spiritualism are entering into the very heart of the evangelical churches; while a large proportion of those outside, have already adopted them and entirely rejected the Bible.

Dr. Gardner, a distinguished Spiritualist from Boston, is now in London, England, and writes to the Spiritual Age as follows:

"It may seem strange to you and your readers, to write of the progress of Spiritualism in Europe, when, but a few months since, through the columns of the immaculate, liberal and truth-telling Boston Courier, Prof. Felton, on his return from a brief visit to these shores, informed the readers of that paper in general, and the citizens of America in particular, under the imposing head of "The last Gasp of Necromancy," that Spiritualism was wholly dead and buried in Europe, and that it was in its dying struggles in America. Yet, in plain contradiction to the learned savan's assertion, I affirm, from what I have personally seen, and from information derived from gentlemen occupying high positions in society, both here in England and in France, that there has never been a time when so much attention has been given the subject as at the present. True, it is not loud-mouthed in its manifestations, and there are no public efforts put forth, by public lecturers or mediums; but, like the still small voice, it is working its way into the hearts of the people, particularly of the upper classes of society; and many persons who occupy very high and responsible positions in governmental matters, both in England and in France, as I am assured by those who know, are deeply interested in the subject. Indeed, learned professors in the highest institutions of learning in this country, do not consider the subject either a 'stupendous delusion' or its advocates 'impostors or fools;' . . . but have, on the contrary, manifested an earnest desire to give the whole subject a careful and candid investigation, whenever opportunities for so doing have been presented."

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

July, 9th.—A friend in one of the Middle States writes:—"I like your plan of raising funds for the distribution of tracts, &c. It strikes me as just the thing. I will try and send you a dollar before long. . . . May the Lord bless and sustain you in all your labors of love."

This morning I received the following, bearing a postmark that enabled me to guess as to its source.

"Bro. Hastings:—Please accept the enclosed as a donation to your Western Fund. Will you notice its receipt in the Crisis, as you have others without mentioning the place from which it came, simply that we may know that it has reached you from—FRIENDS."

Enclosed was $10. Thank you, "Friends." I trust you are also friends of Jesus. He says: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you." The Brother you speak of is not referred to in the letters in the Crisis.

Here is another letter.—"July 8, 1859. Bro. Hastings:—Looking over the Crisis last night, I saw your purpose to assist the cause of Christ in the West. May God bless you in all your efforts to do good. Enclosed are $3 for the West. I hope soon to send more. I have often felt a desire to assist the household of faith and to do good to those that know not Christ; and am thankful for this privilege. I have a great desire to do God's will and to observe his ways and to walk therein. Pray for me that I may be good, and you shall not be forgotten in the prayers of A."

Monday, July 11th.—Coming to the P. O at night, I found several letters. One from Bro. Grant with $2 from L. D. of Conn. It is n't the first remittance that has come from that hand to assist those that are hungering for the word of Life. The Lord loveth these cheerful givers. And here is another letter, long, warm and gushing from the heart of one who has read of the plan to send the truth to the great West, who says:—"Should some of my brothers or sisters, or even my dear pastor, know what I am about doing, they would reprove me, and I don't know but finally drop me; but I can't help that, I must go by my Bible, and I pray God to guide me into all truth. . . Accept from me $2, which I here enclose, to be a little wheel in your great and noble plan." But stop! for "I don't want this published," and so I shall keep the rest of this letter to myself. God bless you, fellow pilgrim, and bless your pastor and brethren and sisters too, and give them clear light to know and do God's will. Perhaps a few good, warm tracts might help some of them a little. Who next? Ah, here's a letter that opens well, two threes, $6 in it. Let's see how it reads.

"W——, July 10, '59.

Bro. H. L. Hastings:—Seeing your efforts to raise $1000 for sending tracts to the West, I send you $6, hoping it will aid and encourage you in the effort and do some good to those you are trying to benefit. Although an old backslider myself, I don't know why I should not try to do what I can to enable others to reach the kingdom, and hold up the hands of such as are making efforts to spread the light.

Yours truly, ——."

Look here, friend, you are most too clever a fellow for the devil to have. We can't quite spare you, I reckon. An old backslider—well, that's honest, and honesty is one good thing. If all the old backsliders would do as well as that, we would have the $1000 forthwith. The trouble is, that most of them backslide pocket and all, or perhaps their pockets never were converted at all. But you seem to have rather a generous christian feeling about your pocket. So you have deserted from the Lord's army and send on this $6 to scatter light and get a substitute to take your place. Well, thank you for this. But, friend, while you are willing to send out bread to the hungry, what makes you stay off there and eat husks yourself? Come home, you poor, hungry soul, God waits to receive you. Christ loves you still. O, turn to Him and seek him with all your heart. We want your prayers with this money. Come, let us have them. Then your prayers and your alms will come up together before God." Come, follow the plan of the saints of old who "first gave their ownselves unto the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."—2 Cor. 8:5. This is the right way. Money is better than nothing, but oh, give God your heart. Come now to Christ. Cast all your burdens on him. He wants to enfold you in the arms of love and mercy.

"Return, oh wanderer return,
And seek an injured father's face;
Those warm desires that in thee burn,
Were kindled by reclaiming grace."

To return. Here is another letter with $1 from A. K. of Vt. Here is another, without date, place or time, just received the 18th. "I suppose you can make some use of small amounts. The within you are at liberty to use in any way you think proper." $3. Short and sweet. I think we can use small sums just as well as large ones.

Here is another letter with $2. "I would like to be one to help forward the cause, so will you please accept my mite. Perhaps this will do no good, but if it should be the means, in the hands of God, of saving one poor soul, I shall be amply repaid for all the self-denial which it has cost me. I wish I could do more, but thank God that I can do this, and for the future, I mean to be more self-denying than I ever yet have been, that I may be able to do much more for him who has done so much for me. My prayer goes with this, and may every penny which shall be given be accompanied with a prayer that it may speak to the glory of God. I would like to know who that Bro. T. from Minnesota is, but as I suppose I shall not find out without giving my name, I must remain ignorant a little while longer. Go on, dear brother, in your good work, and the God of peace shall be with you. A sister in Christ."

Well, "sister in Christ," that was "a brother in Christ," out West; and as you know him as well as I do you, perhaps we are even. May be he will speak out and give you his name by and by. Won't you try to hunt up that "backslider?" I think he is in your state and vicinity. Get him started anew if possible. Thank you, sister, for your donation and your prayers. Pray without ceasing, and may God hear and answer your prayers.

Another letter.—"N. H. July 11*th*. Bro. Hastings:—I see by the Crisis that you are yet striving to get means to send the bread of Life to those who are destitute, and I will add my mite by sending $1. And may God bless you and prosper you in your endeavors to do good. And may your tracts be the means which God will use to win souls to Christ. From a sister who is striving for the kingdom." Well, sister, strive on for the kingdom, you shall gain the rest by and by. Be faithful to the end.

One more letter and I must close this epistle:

"Worcester, July 11*th*, 1859.

Dear Bro. Hastings:—I drop you a line by way of encouragement. We have read your appeals in relation to the Tract Fund, and our hearts have been stirred within us. Yesterday, the church in Thomas St., as soon as the subject was introduced, without discussion, voted to send you $50 for the above object. We chose a committee to raise the money, and they went immediately about their business. You shall have the amount in a few days. Keep in the good work, our hearts and hands shall be with you. W. A. S. S."

Thank the Lord for that. Your "hearts and hands," that is what we want in this work. Well, brethren, let us be of good courage.

Now, brethren at the West, read over my first letter and send in your orders for tracts, giving place, railroads and lines of transportation, and let the brethren far and near take hold, and we will soon have this ball in motion. I leave it with the Lord. He has the money in his hands. May He direct us. Your brother in Christ Jesus.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

For the Crisis.

On Secret Societies, Politics, etc.

If ye love them that love you what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you . . . If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. [illegible]

Immaterial!

For the Crisis.

I suppose that my friends generally understand that I am so "orthodox" as to believe in immaterial substance. This fact was the occasion of my present discussion with Mr Cobb, and his effort to rank me as a materialist seems to me very gratuitous. Some friends know also that I hastened the preparation of my book because I thought the doctrine of life in Christ burdened with materialism.

My Advent friends, some of whom believe that even God himself consists of material substance and exists in human form, will grant that I have made little parade of my orthodox heresy on this subject, though it has been ever undisguised. I have said little directly about it. Nor do I now wish to discuss the subject at length. But finding it frequently assumed that "immaterial substance" is a high sounding name for nothing, and meeting occasional amazement that any one can believe in being that is not matter, I wish to make a remark and propound a question.

My remark is that the argument for the immortality of the soul from its immateriality is fast passing away. It is found in some old books, and in the speech of some who read only old books. But the thinking men of the day confess that it is worthless. Hence we hazard nothing in granting that the soul is immaterial, and exists without the body. An able D. D. has told me that the attempt to show that the soul can not exist without the body and therefore the man may wholly die, seemed to him a vain effort to wield a sledge-hammer when a tack-hammer might do the business. And in the early history of christian opinion, as I have shown, the man who first held that the soul dies with the body, Tatian, was an orthodox man, and held eternal suffering. And just now the most talented of the Spiritualists, as I regard him, T. L. Harris, believes that the persistently wicked will become extinct.

My question is this: Have we not an example of something that has a most real and undeniable existence, with none of the qualities or properties commonly assigned to matter? It is often remarked and generally admitted that we know nothing of substance but by its qualities. On this fact is based the common distinction between matter and mind, as different kinds of substance. Their properties are different throughout. To think, to feel, and to will, are nothing at all like being heavy or light, square or round, large or small, long or broad, red or blue. And the two classes of qualities differ not in degree, not by more or less,—as gold is heavier than silver and more yellow than platinum, etc.,—but they are wholly different in kind. And if we know substances only from their properties, all observation and all inductive reasoning point to the conclusion that mind and matter are different substances. And the connection of mind with matter, as apparent in the facts of phrenology, does not at all conflict with the distinction of their natures.

But mind is not the example I wished to propose, but force, or power. The simplest instance is the attraction of gravitation. If I drop a book from my hand, it is somehow drawn down to the floor, or toward the earth. The fact is as familiar as sunshine, but who has ever explained it? What is it that draws the book down? If we could see an elastic piece of india-rubber pulling the book earthward, we should say that explained it. If we could grasp some linked chain fastened to the book, and feel some concealed imp pulling at the other end, we might say the cheat was detected. If we could with our microscope discover a few gossamer threads attaching and moving the book to the earth, then the secret would be out. But we do not find one of these things. We find no palpable, tangible, or visible cause of the wonder; and so, in despair of a reason, we render the lip-service of a name, and call it the "attraction of gravitation;" meaning thereby a certain kind of force or power that makes things heavy and persuades them to kiss the earth.

Of course it is no explanation to give a third name, or a fourth, instead of the first or second. You may call it the influence of the earth; but, pray, what is influence, or "influx," as the Swedenborgians call it? Some have tried to get further than a name, and have ascribed it to the undulations of an ether diffused through space; so it would be not unlike the movement of sound, or of light. But how such an ether should drag down the avalanches, instead of just giving them a blushing, microscopic startle, we are not told. The explanation needs explaining. In despair of any dissection or analysis of the power, we may still ask what kind of a thing is it? Is it a mere relation between other things, or is it an actual and real thing?

Here we come to the question, Can anything act where it does not exist? We suppose not. But then it will not do to say that this force or power resides in the earth, or in the book. It won't stay at home. It is very non-resident. It is a great truant; always running away and out in every possible direction. From the earth it [illegible] away after the book, and [illegible] [illegible] ... it [illegible] the book, or with a tone of very special authority says, "Sir, you are my prisoner," and the book, somehow, budges, and capitulates. I can not divine the mysterious process; but the thing is done, and I must believe it. Not the least marvel is that the force is hindered by no obstacle. Put a pane of glass between the earth and the book, and it darts forth just as quickly, and very scornfully shatters the glass in its retreat. Interpose a sheet of thick boiler iron, or ten thousand such, and it is not balked an instant, but grasps the book as soon as before. It courses through all water, and all pathless space, with the same ease. What, and where, I ask, is this power? The earth, certainly stays at home all the while. It never goes out of itself, never gets beyond its own surface. It is always in its right body, never beside itself. It does not go to the book; how, then, does it send for it? Do you call the attraction a quality or property of the earth? What do you mean? Do properties exist where substances do not? If you say no, then the earth itself takes the book without touching it. If you say yes, then we ask, what is the nature of this marvelous property or power of attraction?

I will not answer the question. I only remark, that if not one of the most real, it is one of the most effective things in the world. It allies the moon to its consort, and persuades both earth and moon to wait upon the sun. It makes all the planets comrades. It rules among the stars. It binds the sweet influences of the Pleiades, forms the bands of Orion, and guides Arcturus with his sons. It pledges all worlds and all atoms in a mystic brotherhood, and holds the fabric of the universe together.

I do not say that it is substance. Yet I dare say, it is not matter. It has no form, —neither length, breadth, nor thickness. "There is no voice, its sound is not heard." It works in all we see but itself is unseen. Though it gives weight to all other things, itself has none. While we all feel it holding us down to earth, no man has ever touched or handled it. And it has neither odor nor taste. It eludes all our senses, and may do so forever. It is a common opinion among thinkers that we should never have suspected its existence but from a kindred power of the mind itself,—the faculty of volition, or will. Good philosophers have made a distinction between phænomena and noumena; "things that do appear," and things discovered by the mind, though unseen.

The phænomena of the world may be more or less the effects of this power we are in quest of, but it is not among them. I do not say what it is. I will not say that it is spiritual substance. Though it seems to me very real, very substantial, and yet not itself matter, I will not give it any name. I will only ask my friends to explain its nature, before they object to my faith in immaterial substance, or quiz me much on the account of it. When we have explored a little more fully the depths of being, even in the atom, then we can afford to be a little positive on the nature of being, and perhaps say whether our Heavenly Father consists of matter, the same kind of substance which he has made and is every day showing to us.

C. F. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Appleton, Wis., June 10th, 1859, MARIA M., wife of Minor S. Smith, aged forty years.

Sr Smith was a member of the Baptist church from the early age of eleven years. Many thought she gave good evidence of conversion when but seven years old, but it was not thought best to receive her into the church at so early an age. At this time, she was remarkable for her devotion. She was often found reproving older persons than herself with unaffected gravity, when they were indulging in vain or trifling conversation. When but eight years old, lying in bed late one morning, her mother called to her, asking why she was lying so late; she answered, "I was thinking how good it would be to die and be with Jesus."

She remained a member of the Baptist church till 1849, when she embraced the faith of a soon coming Savior, and that he was coming to make alive and reward his children who have died in faith. She was then living in Homer, N. Y., where she made her house a "pilgrim's home." Many, no doubt, will remember her "labors of love" in providing for brethren from abroad, on the occasions of meetings in Homer. * * *

A husband and son mourn their loss. May her example, in her devotion to "the truth" and to christian principle, be to them a beacon light, that shall guide unto eternal life. * * *

She has gone, though not forever, but according to her faith, she will soon "come again from the land of the enemy."

I. K. LOMBARD.

Died, of liver complaint, at Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minnesota, July 7th, 1859, ELIZA A. STONE, wife of S. W. Stone, aged twenty-seven years.

The subject of this notice was formerly of the Methodist denomination, but in the winter of 1853 she embraced the "Advent faith," and was baptised in the month of January, by Eld. W. Pratt. With her dying breath she stated that she was "prepared to sleep in Jesus."

She leaves a husband and two small children to lament her departure. Her funeral was [illegible] attended by sympathising neighbors, [illegible] by the writer from the following text: Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. 1: 10.

"The trump shall sound—the gates of death
Shall make his children way;
From the cold tomb the slumb'rers spring,
And shine in endless day."

W. SHELDON.

Expositor, please copy.

Asleep in Jesus.

I was much impressed a few days since, while attending the funeral of the little boy of Bro. W. P. Leathe, in South Reading. He was sick but a few days, and suffered much in his last moments. He gave a most striking proof of his acceptance with his Savior, and seemed willing to go. Just before he died, he called his mother to his bedside, and told her he was not afraid to die, and that Christ would raise him at the last day, and wanted all his little friends to be good and meet him in the kingdom. Three of the primary schools were in attendance, and many a tear followed the sweet flowers that they dropped on his grave.

TO EDDIE.

Farewell to thee, Eddie,
Thou hast gone from us now,
And the cold stamp of death
Has been placed on thy brow;
And with sorrow we look
Upon thy lonely green grave,
Where the wild rose shall bloom,
And the willow shall wave.

S. D. EMERSON.

Stoneham, June 19th, '59.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Africa. Liverpool dates to the 9th inst.

An armistice has been concluded between the allied and Austrian armies till the 15th of August, and strong hopes of peace are now entertained.

THE WAR.

On the 7th inst., the Emperor of the French telegraphed to the Empress that an armistice had been concluded between the Emperor of Austria and himself, and that, Commissioners had been appointed to settle the clauses and duration of the armistice.

The Paris Moniteur, in publishing the official dispatch, appends the following remarks "It is necessary that the public should not misunderstand the extent of the armistice. It is limited merely to a relaxation of hostilities between the belligerent armies, which, though leaving the field open to negotiations, do not enable us for the present to see how the war may be terminated."

The armistice had given rise to a variety of speculations in the English papers.

The London Times believes in peace, and remarks that before the truce has ended the French army will be refreshed and reinforced, a fleet of gunboats will be ready for launching upon the Lake that surrounds Mantua, and a great army will be ready to make its descent upon the shores of Northern Italy. Broken and dispirited as Austria now is, she is yet better able to fight at this moment than she will be at any future time.

We believe therefore in peace, and we believe that the path to peace will be made smooth to her, for the Emperor has won the advantage, which for the moment he proposes to himself. If this war between France and Austria is ended, France comes tremendous in power out of the conflict, and Austria and Europe will look on with still increasing interest, and much meditation upon the future while she rests upon her arms.

The London Post inclines to think that the proposition for an armistice came from the moderation of the Emperor of the French, and is of the opinion that Austria will consent to sacrifice her Italian sway, and thus end the war.

The following items show the complexion of affairs before the armistice was announced.

Turin, July 7. The fortress of Peschiera, now invested by the Sardinian army, is cannonaded day and night. With the aid of the gunboats which will soon be landed on the Lake of Garda, the resistance is not expected to be very prolonged.

Berne, July 7. Advices have been received from Lameden to the 6th inst. All the Austrian troops have left Windschan and are concentrating on the Stelvio Pass, where a conflict is expected to day.

Fiume, July 6. Two French war steamers have been reconnoitering off this place. One thousand French soldiers have occupied Cherso. The occupation of Fiume by Austrian troops continues.

The Times correspondent with the Austrian army says that a bombardment of Verona and Mantua will not suffice. There must be a good deal of fighting at close quarters before anything can be done. They and the other strong holds of this great military quadrangle are very much stronger than they were ten years ago. There are great field works to be taken before any approach can be made to the main defences, and in the meanwhile Austria may have got together again an army capable of risking another general action.

At Verona quantities of grain are stored in every available place, and 35,000 Hungarian oxen are either there or in the immediate neighborhood. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says that on the 3d inst the French fleet, consisting of 64 sail, was at no great distance from Venice.

The Vienna Gazette publishes an amended list of the losses at Solferino. As to officers, the return gives 90 killed, 414 wounded, 13 made prisoners and 70 missing. Of rank and file, 2500 killed, and 11,213. Nothing is said respecting the number of men taken prisoners.

The French and Sardinians killed and wounded were 18,245. The numbers given by the Vienna Journal are believed to be below the truth. The management of the siege of Verona was said to have been confided to Marshal Vaillant. It is stated that on the 4th inst. Count D'Urban, son or nephew of the Governor of Verona, arrived at the headquarters of the Emperor of the French as the bearer of a flag of truce. The object of the mission was supposed to have reference to an exchange of prisoners.

The Times correspondent in the allied camp, July 2, says of the siege of Peschiera:

"Hitherto the Austrians have only amused themselves with keeping up a cannonade at the allied troops which are investing the place. You could estimate the advance of the allies by the more sustained fire, which this morning was so continuous that they must have discovered that the allies have not only established themselves, but broken ground and begun the trench work.

This morning Prince Napoleon came up from his camp on the Oglio, and had a long conference with the Emperor, who received likewise a visit from the King of Sardinia. The junction between the corps of the Prince and the Grand Army has been effected, and they may henceforth be considered as one. During his stay at Viadana M. Kossuth came up to see Prince Napoleon."

A letter in the Nord says: "Information has been received by the French admiral from the neutral vessels which have been allowed [illegible] [illegible] sailors who have deserted from the Austrian service, that all the forts along the sea coast are mined and ready to be blown up. They are united one to another by an electric wire, which starts from the fort of Malghera, about four miles from Venice, on the Padua road, and from whence the spark will be sent. Since the 15th, more than forty vessels have been sunk in the different passes."

A letter has been received from Baron Larrey, the Emperor's surgeon, in which he states that his horse was killed by a bullet, which, had it not been intercepted, would probably have struck the Emperor."

ATTEMPT TO POISON NAPOLEON.—The Florence correspondent of the Providence Journal writes: A French officer here tells the following story. He says it has not been printed in the French journals—and certainly we have seen no account—but the fact is known to the army, and the story is true. On Good Friday, if at no other time in the year, all good Catholics partake of the Communion. On that day, the 21st of April last, according to his habit, the Emperor was to receive the consecrated wafer in the chapel of the Tuilleries. Before going to the chapel he was told that he must not eat the holy particle that was to be offered him, as it had been prepared with a subtile and malignant poison for the purpose of destroying his life. The informant was a party to the diabolical secret, but horror of conscience and reverence for the Emperor led him to betray the conspiracy. The Emperor knelt at the altar during the mass, but did not eat the bread. When the service was finished, the officiating priest was invited into the apartment of the Empress to partake of a collation, while the wafer was submitted to a chemical examination. It was found to contain, as the informant had said, a concentrated poison. The priest is now in a fortress in Algeria. The soldier says that the priest was an instrument of the Jesuits, but whether in Italy, Austria, France, or England, is not understood.

The Pope has addressed a letter, dated June 18th, to the patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops in communion with the Holy See, in which he attacks the Sardinian government with great bitterness.

Peace Concluded.

Per steamship North Briton, Liverpool, 13th. The result of the interview between the Emperor of France and the Emperor of Austria was the Concluding of a Peace.

The following is the telegram from Napoleon to the Empress, announcing the fact:

Valleggio, July 11.—Peace is signed between the Emperor of Austria and myself. The bases of peace are: The Italian Confederation, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope, the Emperor of Austria concedes Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who transfers them to the King of Sardinia, the Emperor of Austria preserves Venice, but she will form an integral part of the Italian Confederation.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE PEACE.

The Daily News affirms that the past hopes and expectations of Italy are deceived. It adds: "History will call the Emperor to a strict account for having made war on false pretensions, and signed a mock and selfish peace,—a peace that leaves Austria impregnably fortified in Northern Italy—that connects Central Italy to the patronage of the Pope, and to the constant menace of military intervention on the part of the Pope's patrons and protectors—that takes no account of the welfare of the people, and substitutes for national independence a confederation under the lock and key of Austrian garrisons. The Emperor of France has sown the seeds of future wars, and the closer we examine the pretended pacification, the more futile and iniquitous it appears.

The Morning Post contends that the soul of the treaty agreed upon is the nationality guaranteed under every variety of local government, in a confederation of Italian States. The Emperor of Austria is to be King of Venetia solely as an internal member of the confederation. He will rule less than 3,000,000 Italians, and will be controlled by a Confederation ruling not less than 20,000,000. The Pope is shorn virtually of his temporal supremacy—he is deprived of the substance, but keeps the shadow.

The Times says that Venice must hope that her independence will not be a mere name, and that the influence of France and Austria united will not be more unbearable than that of Austria singly. The Romans must hope that the Italian Confederacy, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope, will be nothing like any government they have hitherto known. The Papal States are left as they were, but with a master greater than before. He is honorary President of the Italian Confederation, and Gen Guyon holds the sword at his side. The King of Naples is made a member of the Confederation, and has to learn the worth of that honor and its import. Europe has to welcome a new Power. England has nothing to do but to look on. Austria is somewhat humbled, but relieved of a difficulty. Sardinia is aggrandized with a province that mistrusts her, and a neighbor that has earned an imperishable and inexhaustible claim to her gratitude. The Grand Dukes, we suppose, are once more to be reinstated on their thrones. France has now the game in her own hands. She has Europe before her. She can raise all Italy and half the Austrian Empire against those Germans whom she has so often beaten, yet, on the very summit of her ambition she renounces. France has spent 50,000,000 sterling, and 50,000 men, only to give Milan a Piedmontese instead of an Austrian master, and to establish the Pope in a temporal dignity even beyond his imagination and capable of extension. Is all this real? The Emperor's game must be a very long one.

[From the Boston Journal.]

We have, therefore, as the result of the Italian War of 1859, these general facts: Peace, after an expenditure of 100,000 lives, and of an amount of money yet unknown, the erection of all Italy into a confederation, under the temporal authority of the Pope, thus immensely extending that much doubted prerogative, the annexation of Lombardy to the realms of Victor Emmanuel, thus adding 3,000,000 to his former 5,000,000 of subjects, making his the leading power in the new Confederation, and the retention of the Venetian States to the Emperor of Austria, comprising about 3,000,000 of people and the great defensive line of the Adige, with its two fortresses of Verona and Legnano, making these States, however, a part of the Italian Conferation in nearly the same manner that a large part of Francis Joseph's dominions is included in the Germanic Confederation. It does not yet appear how the Duchies are to be managed, but it is presumed that they will be reinstated. Personally, Louis Napoleon obtains a master influence in Italy through the gratitude of Sardinia. Francis Joseph loses Lombardy with its fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua, but saves Venice, and with it an influential voice in Catholic Italy. Victor Emmanuel nearly doubles his kingdom, while acquiring subjects not homogeneous with his own and merging a part of his sovereignty in the confederation. The Pope is nominally greater than he has been for a century, while his power will probably be even less than it is now.

The European (Liverpool) Times has the following:

"It is premature to discuss the terms on which the impending peace may hang, but it is evident that the rock ahead, as regards Louis Napoleon, is the temporal power of the Pope. The independence of Italy can never be placed on a solid and satisfactory basis while the States of the Church are ruled by the ecclesiastical power, and recent events show that his Holiness has no idea of parting with his rights of sovereignty. In his recent allocution to the Secret Consistory, the Pope menaces with excommunication all who dare to attack his temporal rights, but he relies, he says, on having the integrity of his dominions respected by the French Emperor, who has declared to him that the French army in Italy will do nothing against the dominions of the Holy See, but on the contrary protect and maintain them. It will be soon ascertained whether this pledge will be kept.

New Tract.

☞ THE PARABLE OF THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. Does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. This tract is now ready. See our list of books and tracts.

Notices, &c.

The Lyre—Special Notice.

As the book cannot be completed for the August campmeetings, many have desired us to get out the second part first containing the tunes and hymns for conference and campmeetings. This I propose to do, and will give due notice of the period when ready. All orders should be sent in without delay, to

J. V. HIMES, Boston, Mass.
MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.
H. L. HASTINGS, Providence, R. I.

Eld. Himes requests the insertion of the following notice:

East Kingston Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be holden in East Kingston, N. H., on the land of Mr. M. C. Eaton, one mile from the railroad depot. It will commence Aug. 22d, and continue over the Sabbath. Its objects being to revive the faith and hope of Adventists, and prepare themselves and others for the coming of the Lord, it is desired and expected that all will unite in the effort—laying aside prejudices, and heartily engaging in the work of saving souls, and thus preparing a people for the coming of the Lord, which draws nigh. Come, brethren, let us have one more rally in East Kingston—of happy memory—where we have seen so much of the power and goodness of God in time past. Let all God's people who can come up to the feast, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, bringing their unconverted children and friends, that they may be blessed and saved. Notice of tickets, board, etc., hereafter.

COMMITTEE.—Lendal Brown, Haverhill, Mass. J. H. Josselyn, Boston, Mass. Harris Pearson, Newburyport. C. P. Whitten, Lowell, Mass. Edmund Rowell, Kensington, N. H. Gorham Pillsbury, Kingston, N. H. J. T. Richardson, Lawrence, Mass.

EAST KINGSTON CAMPMEETING.—Arrangements have been made with the Superintendent of the Boston and Maine Rail Road, for tickets at half price between Lawrence and Great Falls, to be had at all the intermediate stations. Arrangements are being made also with the Concord and Portsmouth road for the same fare, which will be duly noticed.

Board and lodging and horse keeping is provided for on or near the ground, on reasonable terms.

All persons attending the meeting will stop at the East Kingston station. The camp is one mile from the station. Carriages will be in attendance.

J. V. HIMES, Superintendent.

Boston, July 25, '59.

☞ GENERAL MEETING AT SENECA FALLS, N. Y., commencing Tuesday evening, August 2d and continuing over the two Sundays following. The brethren in Seneca, Cayuga, Wayne and Yates Counties are earnestly requested to attend this meeting. Come, Brethren and Sisters, let us have one more good season in the cause of the Lord in this section of country. Come, lest we are, all of us, discouraged, and fall by the way, by reason of the manifold trials and temptations of life and that in sight of the prize. The "bright morning" is looming up in the distance, and soon will be here. Let us be found active in this cause and fighting for the truth "when the King of kings comes."

Bro. M. Grant, of Boston, will deliver a series of discourses on the subject of Life and Immortality only through Christ at this meeting. In behalf of the Church,

THOS. G. NEWMAN.

Campmeeting.

I wish to say to the Brn., one and all, that it is probable that our proposed Advent campmeeting will be in LYNN, as is desired, if no place preferable is soon suggested, and it will commence about the first of Sept., perhaps the fifth.

L. BOUTELL.

Groton, July 16.

Any suggestions about the meeting will be timely for a few days.

L. B.

JUST PUBLISHED, the Cottage Testament, by W. Patton, D. D., with Notes, Polyglott References, and Marginal Readings, also Maps, Tables, etc., Geographical descriptions of all the principal places in the New Testament alphabetically arranged. Complete in one volume, morocco, flexible binding. Price 75 cents. Sent by mail free, on receiving price. Address J. Babcock, Natick Post Office, R. I.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. HEALY,
Committee, R. STARKS,
E. M'CULLOCK.

Notice.

A meeting is expected to commence at North Searsport, Maine, on Saturday the sixth day of August next, at ten o'clock, A.M., and continue over the Sabbath. Eld. John Billings is expected to attend.

W. NICHOLS.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. PARRY.

July 2d, 1859.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H.

E. M. PREBLE.

THE PROPHETIC CHART.—Brethren and Sisters [illegible] that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John, engraved on stone. It is a beautiful [illegible] [illegible]. Address BARTHOLOMEW ROBERTS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Appointments.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday.......July 31st

L. D. Thompson will preach in
Lawrence, Mass.......Sunday, Aug. 7th
Haverhill.......Aug. 8th
South Reading.......Aug. 9th
Lowell.......Aug. 10th
Westford.......Aug. 12 & 13
Nashua, N. H.......Aug. 13th
North Springfield, Vt.......Sunday, Aug. 14th

Eld. H. Pratt will meet with the brethren in Springfield.......Sunday, July 31st
North Adams.......Aug. 7th
Vernon, Vt.......Aug. 14th

Eld. A. Durfee appoints to preach at
Pontiac, (Meeting House).......Sunday, July 31st
S. R. EDDY.

J. G. Smith will preach in Woodstock, N. H., (where Bro. Jackman appoints).......July 31st
Ossipee, (where Bro. J. Sanborn appoints) Aug. 7th

Bro. Champlin appoints to preach in
Bristol.......July 31st
J. H. SUTLIFFE.

Providence permitting, I will hold meetings as follows.—
Newfield, Ct., Sunday.......July 31st
Winsted, Tuesday.......Aug. 2nd
Pleasant Valley, Wednesday.......Aug. 3d
Bakerville, (if Bro. Mathewson appoints)...Aug. 4th
Collinsville, Friday.......Aug. 5th
North Canton, Sunday.......Aug. 7th
HIRAM MUNGER.

I propose to preach, the Lord willing, at
Seltico (chapel).......Aug. 7th
New Britain, Ct., Thursday evening.......Aug. 11th
Bristol, Ct., Sunday.......Aug. 14th

If these proposals conflict with previous arrangements, please notify immediately. Address H. F. Carpenter, Worcester, Mass.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2nd, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best.

MILES GRANT.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 22d. Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 6th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual.

M. G.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Cheshire.......July 31st
Fairhaven.......Aug. 7th
Southington.......Aug. 14th
Cheshire.......Aug. 21st
S. S. BREWER.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at North Herman, Me., July 31st.

I will preach as follows:—
Worcester, Mass., (eve.).......July 29th
Holden, Mass.......Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H.......Sunday, Aug. 7th

I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me.

S. W. BISHOP.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Carmel, Me., (meeting house).......Aug. 7th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

C. G. Carr.—The communication will appear in its turn.

Cash Receipts.

C C Dow 234, $3.00; Mr. Perry 194, $1.08; Dr. E S Robbins, $5.00.

G Wightman 213, E W Pond 204, C C Bradley 213, J Bousont 213,—50 cts. each.

Mr. N L Fowler 227, W Sprague 226, E A Black 194, I E Lang 226, J Umberland 226, M J Ackorn 226, M A Cook 226, P Bunnell 202, E G Scott 208, O Rawson 227, W Weeks 226, J Graham 221, W H Porter 226, Mrs. W Freemans 234, W Merrille 226, J E Baker 208, M M Lewis 221, N Fenton 226, G W Chisman 247, I Bliss 182, H N Mayhew 226, H Mecker 129, J Morrison 226, W Thayer 226, Miss E Jackson 228,—$1.00 each.

A Tomlinson 229, C S Lougee 229, Jas. Baker 229,—$1.50 each.

E G Ament 252, J Hook 244, J A Ferris 252,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J Pinkham $1.00; H Little $2.00, J Hook 12 cts, J Gierlow $1.00.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 8 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. [illegible]

[illegible] Words of [illegible] [illegible]

English Bibles.—[illegible]

Life and Religious [illegible]

The Excellency of the [illegible]

200 Stories for Children, [illegible] by T. M. Preble. An excellent [illegible] having incidents, well calculated to [illegible]. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT [illegible] per hundred; 2 cents single; postage [illegible]

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, [illegible] age 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Gennesee, N. Y. Price [illegible]

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS THINKERS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Sheldon. A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $3.00 per hundred, 5 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 25 cts.—postage 8 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 37 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths, by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State, by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lambert. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. [illegible] Orders with the CASH are solicited. [illegible] [illegible] cents worth, as packages of tracts [illegible] [illegible] Those who buy books to sell will receive [illegible] liberal discount. [illegible] sending stamps to pay the postage, [illegible] FREE, poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, [illegible] N. Y.

For sale also by N. Bonney, [illegible] Young, 133 William street, N. Y.

* The Landmarks [illegible] [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves [illegible] Little Children, Love [illegible] Resting Place; three, [illegible] Love, five, Abundance [illegible] Hastings. Just the [illegible]

Glad Tidings [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 208.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 27, 1859.

For the Crisis.

The Apostles' Twelve Thrones.

When Christ was discoursing to the disciples about the difficulty of getting a rich man into the kingdom of God, (Matt. 19:23 and onward,) Peter says to him, "We have left all and followed thee; what shall we have, therefore? Christ answered, "Ye that have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." —Ver. 28. Premising that judge here signifies in Judges 3: 10, 10: 2, 3, 12: 7, 15:20; to rule, we proceed to inquire what will be the state of things when this promise shall be realized?

We seek first to learn what throne is Christ's throne; and where is its locality? "Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice, from henceforth even forever." Isa. 9: 7. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David."—Luke 1: 32. "Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ." Acts 2: 30, 31. Thus it was predicted by the prophet, that the Messiah should occupy David's throne. Gabriel promised the same to Mary before his birth; and according to Peter, it was necessary that he should be raised from the dead, that these predictions might be realized. Christ then must possess the throne of David restored.

Over whom did David reign? Over Israel. 2 Sam. 5:12. Where was David's throne? On Mt. Zion in Jerusalem. 2 Sam. 5: 4, 5. Note the following among other direct testimony, that Christ's throne is, also, to be there located. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Ps. 2: 6. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it. . . . There will I make the horn of David to bud, I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed."—Ps. 132:13–17. "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies."—Ps. 110: 2. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mt. Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 23. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come . . . When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Ps. 102: 13–16. From the above it is evident that Christ's occupancy of David's throne is subsequent to his second appearing.

Then when Christ shall have come again, when he "shall sit upon the throne of his glory," in Jerusalem—"in the regeneration"—"in his times" (1 Tim. 6:15)—"The times of restitution of all things," Acts 3:21, the twelve apostles will, also, occupy twelve thrones over the twelve tribes of Israel. We then inquire about the twelve tribes, where they will be, and what their condition. As to the where, we answer, they will occupy their own land—Palestine. That they are yet to return there is most abundantly shown by the prophets. We notice a few of the testimonies.

"But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold I am for you, and I will turn unto you; and ye shall be tilled and sown. And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded. . . . Yea I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel, and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men."—Ezk. 36: 8–12. That this prophecy cannot have had its fulfillment in the past, is evident from the fact, that the restoration from Babylon was only partial—embraced only two tribes and a scattering from the other ten tribes; this is to be completed—"The house of Israel, even all of it." Again, that return was mainly from one country; and at most from a few countries; but this is to be "out of all countries," into their own land, ver. 24; so much so, that if any of them be "driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee."—Deut. 30:4. See the whole of this 30th chapter. Can it be fulfilled without the literal return of Israel who once dwelt there and were driven out for their iniquities?

Again, read the vision of the two sticks, Ezk. 37: 15–28.

"Take thee one stick and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions; and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. . . . [illegible] . . . Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, [illegible] and will gather them [illegible] and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince forever."—vers. 22–25.

Surely the return from Babylon did not fulfill this, either in the gathering of the twelve tribes, as is demanded; or in the union and independence of the kingdom nor in the purity of character, or perpetuity of possession. Let it lie over till "the Redeemer shall come to Zion," (Isa. 59:20,) and "shall set his hand again a second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the Islands of the sea; and he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." They will then be prepared to become one peaceful kingdom, for "the envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Isa. 11: 11–13.

These passages establish the proposition clearly, that the twelve tribes will again possess the land promised to Abraham; and as "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24), it must be subsequent to the return of the Lord. Very much more testimony on the point is at hand; but I would not tax your space and time unreasonably.

PHILO.

For the Crisis.

"Flesh and Blood."

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Cor. 15: 50

This passage is often quoted to prove that there is to be no resurrection of the body. By another class it is quoted to prove that Christ has no kingdom. To me there is no need of either. The text was never designed to prove either, but another thing. The apostle was speaking of the necessity of a resurrection of the dead. The question came up respecting the body of such—"With what body do they come?" "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Now the doctrine taught to me, seems to be this; that the natural body is of the earth, earthy, corruptible, subject to a state of decomposition, which it naturally inherits, and does not inherit incorruption. If it had been of a higher origin, or possessed anything about it like immortality, it would have inherited incorruption; and if the body had been of incorruptible material, it would inherit the kingdom of God as a natural inheritance.

If this had been natural, there would have been no need of that which was spiritual. Hence the Lord from heaven was given, to give incorruption to the saints. This was Christ's inheritance; for his flesh did not see corruption; and my opinion is, if it had lain in Joseph's new tomb till to-day, it would have remained uncorrupted. The bodies of the saints will be of an incorruptible nature. If the body is raised, it must be substance, or there can be no body. The very idea of a body, presupposes substance; but it is incorruptible substance. It must be of an exquisitely delicate texture, capable of impressions of a purely spiritual kind. Who, that has ever felt the operation of the Spirit of God, that has not felt it with those organs through which we are made to feel?

A. KIDDER.

For the Crisis.

Piety and the Lord's Coming.

"Alas! when piety has no essential life, but a sort of galvanic existence. Alas! for those who are not good because God requires it, and because it is proper to be holy in summer and in winter; but merely put on a little goodness because the Lord is about to appear. I pray you don't regulate your piety by the guns of Europe. Live at all times a righteous, godly life; that is the only preparation for Christ's coming—a life of piety, sobriety, industry and watchfulness. But if you only refrain from sanding the sugar, from giving short measure, from getting intoxicated with the drunken, from giving eye-service, from making your house a hell, from slandering your neighbors, from oppressing your hirelings and robbing them of their dues;—if you refrain from these wicked deeds, only because the Lord is near at hand, then your piety and your virtue are reprobate silver, bogus coin, of value no where in this universe. Such a religion is a sham; it has no ribs, no back-bone, no heart; it is a hollow sham,—not fit to live with, or to die with, or to go to judgment with."

WM. [illegible]

Poultney.

We arrived among this happy, hospitable, christian people, July 16th, and enjoyed a delightful prayer meeting, that was warm enough to melt a cold backslider's heart and set on fire the lukewarm. Three requested prayers. Notwithstanding the people are in the midst of the busy haying season, we think there could not have been less than seventy present. We are happy to learn that their prayer meetings are excellent and well sustained every week. Some have deserted from Satan's ranks since we were last with them, and are now rejoicing in the Lord.

Lord's day morning, we had another of those soul-stirring, heart-cheering love feasts, that are worth a journey of two hundred miles to enjoy. They have learned the happy art of speaking short and to the point. Their testimonies average less than a minute each. We could not help contrasting these short and interesting remarks that every body loves to hear, with the l o n g, dull, prosy, heartless talk, to which we are sometimes obliged to listen, when a few who have the gift of continuance spin out their tedious exhortations, or expoundings of some doctrinal point, entirely foreign to the interests of the meeting, till the weaker ones, who ought especially to take part, become disheartened and discouraged, either because there is no opportunity for them, or from a feeling of inability to "talk to edification," supposing it consists in a kind of set speech on some subject, whereas such generally tend to produce cold formality, and destroy the life of the meeting. It is rare that one talks over three minutes in prayer meeting without being tedious. These things are carefully avoided by the church at P. They believe in the doctrine of loving their neighbor as themselves; and we think but few churches carry out this principle in a more practical manner. When one member suffers, all seem to suffer with it. They find, by happy experience, that it is more blessed to give than to receive; and that a religion which shuns the poor, or refuses to administer to their wants, is not the christian religion.

This is emphatically a growing church—a living branch of the great vine. Love binds them together and warms their hearts for those unprepared for the great day of the Lord. They love the appearing of Jesus and the evidences that indicate his speedy coming. People take great pains to attend the meetings, forming large and attentive audiences.

At the close of the P. M. service, four were buried with Christ in baptism, and were much blessed. One had been a prominent and devoted member of the M. E. Church for several years, endeavoring to instruct others in the way to life, but had supposed that sprinkling was baptism till quite recently. When on the way to the water, he remarked, "This is the heaviest cross I ever bore;" but on the way back, he could speak of sweeter peace and stronger faith than ever before enjoyed. He found the Lord very faithful to his promise, that after baptism, "ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." His great comfort confirmed the promise. In the evening, several came forward for prayers.

Tuesday evening, July 18th, we met again and had another refreshing season. Six or seven rose for prayers. The work is still onward. Praise the Lord.

RUTLAND. We learn that their social meetings in R. are increasing in interest. Our excellent Bro. M. Batchelor has become their pastor, and we trust will see the work of the Lord prosper in his hands. This church is about completing a convenient house of worship, located in a very eligible situation, fronting the park. This church has endured much opposition from without, but the Lord has been their strength. They know in whom they believe, and stand firm in the hope of the gospel, waiting for the coming King.

Jewish Officers in the French Army.

It is an interesting fact that there are a large number of Jewish officers in the French army. This shows their sympathy with Napoleon, and may yet have an important connection with the closing events in the battle of Armageddon. We wait with deep interest for the approach of coming events. We clip the following from the London Times:

The names and ranks of 140 Jewish officers now serving in the French army in Italy have been published. This is an extraordinary number, and yet the catalogue is incomplete, and a supplementary list is promised. As in France promotion entirely depends upon individual merit, we consider this number of officers as a most honorable testimony to Jewish bravery, skill, and morality, especially when it is borne in mind that the whole Jewish population of France does not exceed 100,000 souls. These officers are found in all regiments, from the guards to the baggage train. We can imagine with what zeal the French Jewish soldiers will fight Austrians, the bigoted oppressors and persecutors of their brethren in Central Europe.

"The beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

The prophecy of Rev. 17 is now a subject of deep interest to the Bible student, who loves the appearing of Christ. And it would be well for many others to remember the advice of the apostle Peter:—"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise. In your hearts, knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." 2 Pet. 1: 19–20. As the prophecy gives light, all who neglect it must walk in darkness in relation to coming events. Probably the mass of religious teachers have never been so negligent in the study of the prophets as at the present time, hence the churches seem to be asleep on subjects of the most thrilling interest. The Savior says, "Take ye heed, watch and pray . . . lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." At no period, we think, have the evidences of the Lord's speedy coming been so strong as at the present time. We see no grounds for doubts that we are near the time when it will be said, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15.

The "scarlet-colored beast" of Rev. 17, is the last power that supports the woman—the one that carries her to perdition. We think there can be no doubt that the woman symbolizes the Roman Catholic hierarchy at Rome, and the beast, the associated political power. This Roman beast has seven heads, one of which, evidently the last, is "wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast." Rev. 13: 3. This wounded and healed head, we think, represents the beast at the time it "was, and is not, and yet is." Has the woman, or Roman Catholic hierarchy, been sustained by a head of the beast answering this description? The dynasty of Napoleon Bonaparte appears to fill the prophetic picture thus far.

G. S. Faber, a noted expositor of the prophecies, who died Jan. 27th, 1854, at the age of eighty-one years, said:—

"We are distinctly taught that the polity, thus triply characterized by shortness of continuance, and death by the sword of military violence, and revival from the death thus inflicted, will go, together with the empire of which it is the seventh head, into UTTER DESTRUCTION." "Hence it is quite clear that, if the French Empireship be the short-lived and sword-slain and revived seventh head—of which, in the present day, there can scarcely, I think, be a reasonable doubt—then we must anticipate his sure and certain destruction along with that of the long-tolerated Roman Empire."

In 1816, forty-three years since, the year after Napoleon I. was carried to St. Helena, when speaking of the wounded and healed head of the beast, Mr. Faber says:—

"The wound, however, which was thus healed, was the wound which was inflicted on the short-lived seventh head. Therefore, the wounded, short-lived seventh head must have appeared to St. John to be the particular head which was healed. But the wounded, short-lived seventh head has been shown to be the short-lived FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, which was wounded to death by the sword of England. Therefore the FRENCH EMPERORSHIP is that mortally wounded seventh head, whose deadly wound is destined to be healed.

Thus are we apparently led, by the speaking-machinery of the pictured hieroglyphic, to a very important conclusion: the conclusion, namely, that the seventh head, which was mortally wounded by the sword, is the identical head which is destined to be healed.

Nor am I here presuming to play the prophet. So far from it, I simply state, either the very words of the prophecy, or the inspired description of what St. John beheld in the picture-history. The seventh head then, being the head which was mortally wounded by the sword, is the head which is destined to be healed." "The rise of the eighth form, in the verbal interpretation of the angel, corresponds with the healing of the sword-slain head in the pictured hieroglyphic. . . . But the sword-slain head, thus destined to be healed, is the French Emperorship; and, according to the angel's interpretation, the literal mode in which it will be healed, is by the rise of an eighth form of a Roman government, which however is to be the same as one of the preceding seven. THE FRENCH EMPERORSHIP, therefore, will be healed by the rise of that eighth form, with which one of the preceding seven will identify itself. Now it plainly cannot be thus healed, unless that particular form out of the preceding seven, which is to be the same as the yet future eighth, shall be the seventh form or THE FRENCH EMPERORSHIP plainly could not be healed by its rise.

Hence the grand conclusion from the whole is immediately brought out: THE PREDICTED YET FUTURE EIGHTH FORM OF ROMAN GOVERNMENT WILL BE THE REVIVED FRENCH EMPERORSHIP."—[Supplemental 3d vol. to a Dissertation on the Prophecies. Dissert. i. sect. 4, pp. 78–92.

In 1835, a work on the Revelation was published in Dublin, Ireland, by Isaac Ash, in which the writer, when speaking of the seventh head of the beast, says:—

"The seventh form of government under Napoleon seems to be designed. This arose A. D. 1806, when Francis II. abdicated the official title of 'Emperor of the Romans,' which had been transferred from France to Germany by Otho, after he had subdued the kingdom of Italy, and, according to Gibbon, 'forever fixed the imperial crown in the name and nation of Germany.' Napoleon assumed the title of 'Emperor of the French' A. D. 1804, and that of 'King of Italy and Rome' A. D. 1805. . . . There was no longer an emperor of Rome, yet the King of Rome was an emperor." . . . "The event alone can discover how the beast, or now (1835) headless body of the empire, shall itself become an eighth form of government, distinct from all the preceding, and yet produced by them, and embodying the elements of them all. Such a state of things would resemble a universal confederacy, which should swallow up and contain within itself the effect of every species of authority."

"The event now shows how the "headless body of the empire" has "become an eighth . . . embodying the elements of them all." The "confederacy" is formed, and the prophecy fast fulfilling. While "the world" "wonder" as "they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is," those who "take heed" to the "sure word of prophecy," see clear light amid the surrounding darkness, and already behold bright evidence that Gentile rule is about closing up, that the "day dawn" of glory is just ready to burst upon an astonished world. Let us keep ready to welcome the coming King of peace.

"Above Every Other Man."

Who occupies such a prominent position? Louis Napoleon. Such seems to be the decision of the world. His progress causes all to "wonder," who are not servants of the Lord and students of the prophets. The Springfield Republican remarks of this wonderful man:—"It is something to say of a man that, above every other man, he occupies the attention of the world. This can be said of Louis Napoleon to-day." This saying corresponds with Rev. 17:8.

The Republican, in speaking of his career as compared with Napoleon I. says:—"There was something, as we now look back upon it, which seems prophetic in the relations which the first Napoleon sustained to his reigning nephew. He and the empress Marie Louise held the boy at the font when he was baptized, and the Emperor, in the transports of his tenderness presented him to the people from his window in the Tuilleries."

Now his mandate makes the world tremble. How changed his position since the time he was in New York, and known as "a very fast boy, haunting the drinking saloons and being quite too familiar with houses of bad repute." At that time what event looked more improbable than that he should tread the steps of the illustrious Napoleon I.? Now we see him marching his troops over the same road and with greater success. How appropriate the inscription on one of the banners that greeted him, on his return through France to prepare the way for the establishment of the empire,—"The Uncle that was—the Nephew that is;" or, as expressed by the Revelator,—"The beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Napoleon III. is so like Napoleon I. in his strange career, that it seems like the return of the latter to fight his battles over again, only with more rapid success. When Louis Napoleon was at Brescia a few days since, he slept in a house once occupied by his uncle. A correspondent from that place says:

"Napoleon I., when here, honored the residence of the Fenarolli family with his presence. He slept one night in the palace where his successor has just been, after the lapse of a half century, under similar circumstances, pursuing with the same success the course of his victories. At the palace, the room where Napoleon I. slept has been religiously preserved, exactly as he left it. The bed, toilet table, and the writing table, in a closet adjoining, remain in the same state—in the same disorder. Napoleon III. joining in this feeling of respect, refused to occupy the apartment where his uncle had slept, and selected a room adjoining."

Spiritualism in Europe.

We often hear it said, "Spiritualism is dying out." Whenever we hear such a remark, it reminds us of an inexperienced blind man exploring a stream from its source to its termination; and judging of the extent of the river by the noise of its waters. After tracing the noisy brook down the hillside, plunging in angry roar among the rocks, he arrives where large streams unite and in their deep, silent flow, pass on with scarcely a murmur to the almost boundless ocean. When at this point of his journey, he says: "This river must be dying out, for it makes less noise than it did when I was nearer its source." If he were not blind, he would not make such a remark. Thus it is with Spiritualism. In its early history, it might be compared to a little cur that runs and barks at every passing traveler, but feared by no one; now, to the savage bull dog that gives no warning till he has his victim by the throat, in his death-grapple. It is true that Spiritualism is less noisy than its earlier history, but there is more policy and greater progress. The doctrines of Spiritualism are entering into the very heart of the evangelical churches; while a large proportion of those outside, have already adopted them and entirely rejected the Bible.

Dr. Gardner, a distinguished Spiritualist from Boston, is now in London, England, and writes to the Spiritual Age as follows:

"It may seem strange to you and your readers, to write of the progress of Spiritualism in Europe, when, but a few months since, through the columns of the immaculate, liberal and truth-telling Boston Courier, Prof. Felton, on his return from a brief visit to these shores, informed the readers of that paper in general, and the citizens of America in particular, under the imposing head of "[illegible] of Necromancy," that Spiritualism was almost wholly dead [illegible] in Europe, and that it was [illegible] struggling in America. Yet, in plain contradiction to the learned savan's assertion, I affirm, from what I have personally seen, and from information derived from gentlemen occupying high positions in society, both here in England and in France, that there has never been a time when so much attention has been given the subject as at the present. True, it is not loud-mouthed in its manifestations, and there are no public efforts put forth, by public lecturers or mediums; but, like the still small voice, it is working its way into the hearts of the people, particularly of the upper classes of society; and many persons who occupy very high and responsible positions in governmental matters, both in England and in France, as I am assured by those who know, are deeply interested in the subject. Indeed, learned professors in the highest institutions of learning in this country, do not consider the subject either a 'stupendous delusion' or its advocates 'impostors or fools;' . . . but have, on the contrary, manifested an earnest desire to give the whole subject a careful and candid investigation, whenever opportunities for so doing have been presented."

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

July, 9th.—A friend in one of the Middle States writes:—"I like your plan of raising funds for the distribution of tracts, &c. It strikes me as just the thing. I will try and send you a dollar before long. . . . May the Lord bless and sustain you in all your labors of love."

This morning I received the following, bearing a postmark that enabled me to guess as to its source.

"Bro. Hastings:—Please accept the enclosed as a donation to your Western Fund. Will you notice its receipt in the Crisis, as you have others without mentioning the place from which it came, simply that we may know that it has reached you from—FRIENDS."

Enclosed was $10. Thank you, "Friends." I trust you are also friends of Jesus. He says: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you." The Brother you speak of is not referred to in the letters in the Crisis.

Here is another letter.—"July 8, 1859. Bro. Hastings:—Looking over the Crisis last night, I saw your purpose to assist the cause of Christ in the West. May God bless you in all your efforts to do good. Enclosed are $3 for the West. I hope soon to send more. I have often felt a desire to assist the household of faith and to do good to those that know not Christ; and am thankful for this privilege. I have a great desire to do God's will and to observe his ways and to walk therein. Pray for me that I may be good, and you shall not be forgotten in the prayers of A."

Monday, July 11*th.*—Coming to the P. O. at night, I found several letters. One from Bro. Grant with $2 from L. D. of Conn. It is n't the first remittance that has come from that hand to assist those that are hungering for the word of Life. The Lord loveth these cheerful givers. And here is another letter, long, warm and gushing from the heart of one who has read of the plan to send the truth to the great West, who says:—"Should some of my brothers or sisters, or even my dear pastor, know what I am about doing, they would reprove me, and I don't know but finally drop me, but I can't help that, I must go by my Bible, and I pray God to guide me into all truth. . . Accept from me $2, which I here enclose, to be a little wheel in your great and noble plan." But stop! for "I don't want this published," and so I shall keep the rest of this letter to myself. God bless you, fellow pilgrim, and bless your pastor and brethren and sisters too, and give them clear light to know and do God's will. Perhaps a few good, warm tracts might help some of them a little. Who next? Ah, here's a letter that opens well, two threes, $6 in it. Let's see how it reads.

"W——, July 10, '59.

Bro. H. L. Hastings:—Seeing your efforts to raise $1000 for sending tracts to the West, I send you $6, hoping it will aid and encourage you in the effort and do some good to those you are trying to benefit. Although an old backslider myself, I don't know why I should not try to do what I can to enable others to reach the kingdom, and hold up the hands of such as are making efforts to spread the light.

Yours truly, ——."

Look here, friend, you are most too clever a fellow for the devil to have. We can't quite spare you, I reckon. An old backslider—well, that's honest, and honesty is one good thing. If all the old backsliders would do as well as that, we would have the $1000 forthwith. The trouble is, that most of them backslide pocket and all, or perhaps their pockets never were converted at all. But you seem to have rather a generous christian feeling about your pocket. So you have deserted from the Lord's army and send on this $6 to scatter light and get a substitute to take your place. Well, thank you for this. But, friend, while you are willing to send out bread to the hungry, what makes you stay off there and eat husks yourself? Come home, you poor, hungry soul, God waits to receive you. Christ loves you still. O, turn to Him and seek him with all your heart. We want your prayers with this money. Come, let us have them. Then your prayers and your alms will come up together before God. Come, follow the plan of all saints of old who "first gave their ownselves unto the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."—2 Cor. 8:5. This is the right way. Money is better than nothing, but oh, give God your heart. Come now to Christ. Cast all your burdens on him. He wants to enfold you in the arms of love and mercy.

"Return, oh wanderer return,
And seek an injured father's face;
Those warm desires that in thee burn,
Were kindled by reclaiming grace."

To return. Here is another letter with $1 from A. K. of Vt. Here is another, without date, place or time, just received the 18th. "I suppose you can make some use of small amounts. The within you are at liberty to use in any way you think proper." $3. Short and sweet. I think we can use small sums just as well as large ones.

Here is another letter with $2. "I would like to be one to help forward the cause, so will you please accept my mite. Perhaps this will do no good, but if it should be the means, in the hands of God, of saving one poor soul, I shall be amply repaid for all the self-denial which it has cost me. I wish I could do more, but thank God that I can do this, and for the future, I mean to be more self-denying than I ever yet have been, that I may be able to do much more for him who has done so much for me. My prayer goes with this, and may every penny which shall be given be accompanied with a prayer that it may speak to the glory of God. I would like to know who that Bro. T. from Minnesota is, but as I suppose I shall not find out without giving my name, I must remain ignorant a little while longer. Go on, dear brother, in your good work, and the God of peace shall be with you. A sister in Christ."

Well, "sister in Christ," that was "a brother in Christ," out West; and as you know him as well as I do you, perhaps we are even. May be he will speak out and give you his name by and by. Won't you try to hunt up that "backslider?" I think he is in your state and vicinity. Get him started anew if possible. Thank you, sister, for your donation and your prayers. Pray without ceasing, and may God hear and answer your prayers.

Another letter.—"N. H. July 11*th.* Bro. Hastings:—I see by the Crisis that you are yet striving to get means to send the bread of Life to those who are destitute, and I will add my mite by sending $1. And may God bless you and prosper you in your endeavors to do good. And may your tracts be the means which God will use to win souls to Christ. From a sister who is striving for the kingdom." Well, sister, strive on for the kingdom, you shall gain the rest by and by. Be faithful to the end.

One more letter and I must close this epistle:

"Worcester, July 11*th*, 1859.

Dear Bro. Hastings:—I drop you a line by way of encouragement. We have read your appeals in relation to the Tract Fund, and our hearts have been stirred within us. Yesterday, the church in Thomas St., as soon as the subject was introduced, without discussion, voted to send you $50 for the above object. We chose a committee to raise the money, and they went immediately about their business. You shall have the amount in a few days. Keep in the good work, our hearts and hands shall be with you. W. A. S. S."

Thank the Lord for that. Your "hearts and hands," that is what we want in this work. Well, brethren, let us be of good courage.

Now, brethren at the West, read over my first letter and send in your orders for tracts, giving place, railroads and lines of transportation, and let the brethren far and near take hold, and we will soon have this ball in motion. I leave it with the Lord. He has the money in his hands. May He direct us. Your brother in Christ Jesus.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

For the Crisis.

On Secret Societies, Politics, etc.

If ye love them that love you what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you . . . If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Immaterial!

I suppose that my friends generally understand that I am so "orthodox" as to believe in immaterial substance. This fact was the occasion of my present discussion with Mr Cobb, and his effort to rank me as a materialist seems to me very gratuitous. Some friends know also that I hastened the preparation of my book because I thought the doctrine of life in Christ burdened with materialism.

My Advent friends, some of whom believe that even God himself consists of material substance and exists in human form, will grant that I have made little parade of my orthodox heresy on this subject, though it has been ever undisguised. I have said little directly about it. Nor do I now wish to discuss the subject at length. But finding it frequently assumed that "immaterial substance" is a high sounding name for nothing, and meeting occasional amazement that any one can believe in being that is not matter, I wish to make a remark and propound a question.

My remark is that the argument for the immortality of the soul from its immateriality is fast passing away. It is found in some old books, and in the speech of some who read only old books. But the thinking men of the day confess that it is worthless. Hence we hazard nothing in granting that the soul is immaterial, and exists without the body. An able D. D. has told me that the attempt to show that the soul can not exist without the body and therefore the man may wholly die, seemed to him a vain effort to wield a sledge-hammer when a tack-hammer might do the business. And in the early history of christian opinion, as I have shown, the man who first held that the soul dies with the body, Tatian, was an orthodox man, and held eternal suffering. And just now the most talented of the Spiritualists, as I regard him, T. L. Harris, believes that the persistently wicked will become extinct.

My question is this: Have we not an example of something that has a most real and undeniable existence, with none of the qualities or properties commonly assigned to matter? It is often remarked and generally admitted that we know nothing of substance but by its qualities. On this fact is based the common distinction between matter and mind, as different kinds of substance. Their properties are different throughout. To think, to feel, and to will, are nothing at all like being heavy or light, square or round, large or small, long or broad, red or blue. And the two classes of qualities differ not in degree, not by more or less,—as gold is heavier than silver and more yellow than platinum, etc.,—but they are wholly different in kind. And if we know substances only from their properties, all observation and all inductive reasoning point to the conclusion that mind and matter are different substances. And the connection of mind with matter, as apparent in the facts of phrenology, does not at all conflict with the distinction of their natures.

But mind is not the example I wished to propose, but force, or power. The simplest instance is the attraction of gravitation. If I drop a book from my hand, it is somehow drawn down to the floor, or toward the earth. The fact is as familiar as sunshine, but who has ever explained it? What is it that draws the book down? If we could see an elastic piece of india-rubber pulling the book earthward, we should say that explained it. If we could grasp some linked chain fastened to the book, and feel some concealed imp pulling at the other end, we might say the cheat was detected. If we could with our microscope discover a few gossamer threads attaching and moving the book to the earth, then the secret would be out. But we do not find one of these things. We find no palpable, tangible, or visible cause of the wonder; and so, in despair of a reason, we render the lip-service of a name, and call it the "attraction of gravitation;" meaning thereby a certain kind of force or power that makes things heavy and persuades them to kiss the earth.

Of course it is no explanation to give a third name, or a fourth, instead of the first or second. You may call it the influence of the earth; but, pray, what is influence, or "influx," as the Swedenborgians call it? Some have tried to get further than a name, and have ascribed it to the undulations of an ether diffused through space; so it would be not unlike the movement of sound, or of light. But how such an ether should drag down the avalanches, instead of just giving them a blushing, microscopic startle, we are not told. The explanation needs explaining. In despair of any dissection or analysis of the power, we may still ask what kind of a thing is it? Is it a mere relation between other things, or is it an actual and real thing?

Here we come to the question, Can anything act where it does not exist? We suppose not. But then it will not do to say that this force or power resides in the earth, or in the book. It [illegible] at home. It is very non-resident. It is a great traveler, always roaming away and out in every possible direction. [illegible] earth is [illegible] after the book, and by [illegible] authority says, "Sir, you are my prisoner," and the book, somehow, budges, and capitulates. I can not divine the mysterious process; but the thing is done, and I must believe it. Not the least marvel is that the force is hindered by no obstacle. Put a pane of glass between the earth and the book, and it darts forth just as quickly, and very scornfully shatters the glass in its retreat. Interpose a sheet of thick boiler iron, or ten thousand such, and it is not balked an instant, but grasps the book as soon as before. It courses through all water, and all pathless space, with the same ease. What, and where, I ask, is this power? The earth, certainly stays at home all the while. It never goes out of itself, never gets beyond its own surface. It is always in its right body, never beside itself. It does not go to the book; how, then, does it send for it? Do you call the attraction a quality or property of the earth? What do you mean? Do properties exist where substances do not? If you say no, then the earth itself takes the book without touching it. If you say yes, then we ask, what is the nature of this marvelous property or power of attraction?

I will not answer the question. I only remark, that if not one of the most real, it is one of the most effective things in the world. It allies the moon to its consort, and persuades both earth and moon to wait upon the sun. It makes all the planets comrades. It rules among the stars. It binds the sweet influences of the Pleiades, forms the bands of Orion, and guides Arcturus with his sons. It pledges all worlds and all atoms in a mystic brotherhood, and holds the fabric of the universe together.

I do not say that it is substance. Yet I dare say, it is not matter. It has no form,—neither length, breadth, nor thickness. "There is no voice, its sound is not heard." It works in all we see but itself is unseen. Though it gives weight to all other things, itself has none. While we all feel it holding us down to earth, no man has ever touched or handled it. And it has neither odor nor taste. It eludes all our senses, and may do so forever. It is a common opinion among thinkers that we should never have suspected its existence but from a kindred power of the mind itself,—the faculty of volition, or will. Good philosophers have made a distinction between phænomena and noumena; "things that do appear," and things discovered by the mind, though unseen.

The phænomena of the world may be more or less the effects of this power we are in quest of, but it is not among them. I do not say what it is. I will not say that it is spiritual substance. Though it seems to me very real, very substantial, and yet not itself matter, I will not give it any name. I will only ask my friends to explain its nature, before they object to my faith in immaterial substance, or quiz me much on the account of it. When we have explored a little more fully the depths of being, even in the atom, then we can afford to be a little positive on the nature of being, and perhaps say whether our Heavenly Father consists of matter, the same kind of substance which he has made and is every day showing to us.

C. F. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Appleton, Wis., June 10th, 1859, Maria M., wife of Minor S. Smith, aged forty years.

Sr. Smith was a member of the Baptist church from the early age of eleven years. Many thought she gave good evidence of conversion when but seven years old; but it was not thought best to receive her into the church at so early an age. At this time, she was remarkable for her devotion. She was often found reproving older persons than herself with unaffected gravity, when they were indulging in vain or trifling conversation. When but eight years old, lying in bed late one morning, her mother called to her, asking why she was lying so late, she answered, "I was thinking how good it would be to die and be with Jesus."

She remained a member of the Baptist church till 1849, when she embraced the faith of a soon coming Savior, and that he was coming to make alive and reward his children who have died in faith. She was then living in Homer, N. Y., where she made her house a "pilgrim's home." Many, no doubt, will remember her "labors of love" in providing for brethren from abroad, on the occasions of meetings in Homer. * * *

A husband and son mourn their loss. May her example, in her devotion to "the truth" and to christian principle, be to them a beacon light, that shall guide unto eternal life. * * *

She has gone, though not forever, but according to her faith, she will soon "come again from the land of the enemy."

I. K. Lombard.

Died, of liver complaint, at Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minnesota, July 7th, 1859, Eliza A. Stone, wife of S. W. Stone, aged twenty-seven years.

The subject of this notice was formerly of the Methodist denomination, but in the winter of 1853 she embraced the "Advent faith," and was baptized in the month of January, by Eld. W. Pratt. With her dying breath she stated that she was "prepared to sleep in Jesus."

She leaves a husband and two small children to lament her departure. Her funeral [illegible] attended by sympathizing neighbors [illegible] from the following text: Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. 1: 10.

"The trump shall sound—the gates of death
Shall make his children way;
From the cold tomb the slumberers spring,
And shine in endless day."

W. Sheldon.

Expositor, please copy.

Asleep in Jesus.

I was much impressed a few days since, while attending the funeral of the little boy of Bro. W. P. Leathe, in South Reading. He was sick but a few days, and suffered much in his last moments. He gave a most striking proof of his acceptance with his Savior, and seemed willing to go. Just before he died, he called his mother to his bedside, and told her he was not afraid to die, and that Christ would raise him at the last day, and wanted all his little friends to be good and meet him in the kingdom. Three of the primary schools were in attendance, and many a tear followed the sweet flowers that they dropped on his grave.

TO EDDIE.

Farewell to thee, Eddie,
Thou hast gone from us now,
And the cold stamp of death
Has been placed on thy brow;
And with sorrow we look
Upon thy lonely green grave,
Where the wild rose shall bloom,
And the willow shall wave.

S. D. Emerson.

Stoneham, June 19th, '59.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Africa. Liverpool dates to the 9th inst.

An armistice has been concluded between the allied and Austrian armies till the 15th of August, and strong hopes of peace are now entertained.

THE WAR.

On the 7th inst., the Emperor of the French telegraphed to the Empress that an armistice had been concluded between the Emperor of Austria and himself, and that, Commissioners had been appointed to settle the clauses and duration of the armistice.

The Paris Moniteur, in publishing the official dispatch, appends the following remarks: "It is necessary that the public should not misunderstand the extent of the armistice. It is limited merely to a relaxation of hostilities between the belligerent armies, which, though leaving the field open to negotiations, do not enable us for the present to see how the war may be terminated."

The armistice had given rise to a variety of speculations in the English papers.

The London Times believes in peace, and remarks that before the truce has ended the French army will be refreshed and reinforced, a fleet of gunboats will be ready for launching upon the Lake that surrounds Mantua, and a great army will be ready to make its descent upon the shores of Northern Italy. Broken and dispirited as Austria now is, she is yet better able to fight at this moment than she will be at any future time.

We believe therefore in peace, and we believe that the path to peace will be made smooth to her, for the Emperor has won the advantage, which for the moment he proposes to himself. If this war between France and Austria is ended, France comes tremendous in power out of the conflict, and Austria and Europe will look on with still increasing interest, and much meditation upon the future while she rests upon her arms.

The London Post inclines to think that the proposition for an armistice came from the moderation of the Emperor of the French, and is of the opinion that Austria will consent to sacrifice her Italian sway and thus end the war.

The following items show the complexion of affairs before the armistice was announced.

Turin, July 7. The fortress of Preschiera, now invested by the Sardinian army, is cannonaded day and night. With the aid of the gunboats which will soon be landed on the Lake of Garda, the resistance is not expected to be very prolonged.

Berne, July 7. Advices have been received from Lameden to the 6th inst. All the Austrian troops have left Windschan and are concentrating on the Stelvio Pass, where a conflict is expected to-day.

Fiume, July 6. Two French war steamers have been reconnoitering off this place. One thousand French soldiers have occupied Cherso. The occupation of Fiume by Austrian troops continues.

The Times correspondent with the Austrian army says that a bombardment of Verona and Mantua will not suffice. There must be a good deal of fighting at close quarters before anything can be done. They and the other strong holds of this great military quadrangle are very much stronger than they were ten years ago. There are great field works to be taken before any approach can be made to the main defences, and in the meanwhile Austria may have got together again an army capable of risking another general action.

At Verona quantities of grain are stored in every available place, and 35,000 Hungarian oxen are either there or in the immediate neighborhood. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says that on the 3d inst the French fleet, consisting of 64 sail, was at no great distance from Venice.

The Vienna Gazette publishes an amended list of the losses at Solferino. As to officers, the return gives 90 killed, 414 wounded, 13 made prisoners and 70 missing. Of rank and file, 2500 killed, and 11,213. Nothing is said respecting the number of men taken prisoners.

The French and Sardinians killed and wounded were 18,245. The numbers given by the Vienna Journal are believed to be below the truth. The management of the siege of Verona was said to have been confided to Marshal Vaillant. It is stated that on the 4th inst. Count D'Urban, son or nephew of the Governor of Verona, arrived at the headquarters of the Emperor of the French as the bearer of a flag of truce. The object of the mission was supposed to have reference to an exchange of prisoners.

The Times correspondent in the allied camp, July 2, says of the siege of Peschiera:

"Hitherto the Austrians have only amused themselves with keeping up a cannonade at the allied troops which are investing the place. You could estimate the advance of the allies by the more sustained fire, which this morning was so continuous that they must have discovered that the allies have not only established themselves, but broken ground and begun the trench work.

This morning Prince Napoleon came up from his camp on the Oglio, and had a long conference with the Emperor, who received likewise a visit from the King of Sardinia. The junction between the corps of the Prince and the Grand Army has been effected, and they may henceforth be considered as one. During his stay at Viadura M. Kossuth came up to see Prince Napoleon."

A letter in the Nord says: "Information has been received by the French admiral from the neutral vessels which have been allowed [illegible], and from several Italian sailors who have deserted from the Austrian service, that all the forts along the sea coast are mined and ready to be blown up. They are united one to another by an electric wire, which starts from the fort of Malghera, about four miles from Venice, on the Padua road, and from whence the spark will be sent. Since the 15th, more than forty vessels have been sunk in the different passes."

A letter has been received from Baron Larrey, the Emperor's surgeon, in which he states that his horse was killed by a bullet, which, had it not been intercepted, would probably have struck the Emperor."

Attempt to Poison Napoleon.—The Florence correspondent of the Providence Journal writes: A French officer here tells the following story. He says it has not been printed in the French journals—and certainly we have seen no account—but the fact is known to the army, and the story is true. On Good Friday, if at no other time in the year, all good Catholics partake of the Communion. On that day, the 21st of April last, according to his habit, the Emperor was to receive the consecrated wafer in the chapel of the Tuileries. Before going to the chapel he was told that he must not eat the holy particle that was to be offered him, as it had been prepared with a subtile and malignant poison for the purpose of destroying his life. The informant was a party to the diabolical secret, but horror of conscience and reverence for the Emperor led him to betray the conspiracy. The Emperor knelt at the altar during the mass, but did not eat the bread. When the service was finished, the officiating priest was invited into the apartment of the Empress to partake of a collation, while the wafer was submitted to a chemical examination. It was found to contain, as the informant had said, a concentrated poison. The priest is now in a fortress in Algeria. The soldier says that the priest was an instrument of the Jesuits, but whether in Italy, Austria, France, or England, is not understood.

The Pope has addressed a letter, dated June 18th, to the patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops in communion with the Holy See, in which he attacks the Sardinian government with great bitterness.

Peace Concluded.

Per steamship North Briton, Liverpool, 13th. The result of the interview between the Emperor of France and the Emperor of Austria was the Concluding of a Peace.

The following is the telegram from Napoleon to the Empress, announcing the fact.

Valleggio, July 11.—Peace is signed between the Emperor of Austria and myself. The bases of peace are: The Italian Confederation, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope; the Emperor of Austria concedes Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who transfers them to the King of Sardinia; the Emperor of Austria preserves Venice, but she will form an integral part of the Italian Confederation.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE PEACE.

The Daily News affirms that the past hopes and expectations of Italy are deceived. It adds: "History will call the Emperor to a strict account for having made war on false pretensions, and signed a mock and selfish peace,—a peace that leaves Austria impregnably fortified in Northern Italy—that connects Central Italy to the patronage of the Pope, and to the constant menace of military intervention on the part of the Pope's patrons and protectors—that takes no account of the welfare of the people, and substitutes for national independence a confederation under the lock and key of Austrian garrisons. The Emperor of France has sown the seeds of future wars, and the closer we examine the pretended pacification, the more futile and iniquitous it appears.

The Morning Post contends that the soul of the treaty agreed upon is the nationality guaranteed under every variety of local government, in a confederation of Italian States. The Emperor of Austria is to be King of Venetia solely as an internal member of the confederation. He will rule less than 3,000,000 Italians, and will be controlled by a Confederation ruling not less than 26,000,000. The Pope is shorn virtually of his temporal supremacy—he is deprived of the substance, but keeps the shadow.

The Times says that Venice must hope that her independence will not be a mere name, and that the influence of France and Austria united will not be more unbearable than that of Austria singly. The Romans must hope that the Italian Confederacy, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope, will be nothing like any government they have hitherto known. The Papal States are left as they were, but with a master greater than before. He is honorary President of the Italian Confederation, and Gen. Guyon holds the sword at his side. The King of Naples is made a member of the Confederation, and has to learn the worth of that honor and its import. Europe has to welcome a new Power. England has nothing to do but to look on. Austria is somewhat humbled, but relieved of a difficulty. Sardinia is aggrandized with a province that mistrusts her, and a neighbor that has earned an imperishable and inexhaustible claim to her gratitude. The Grand Dukes, we suppose, are once more to be reinstated on their thrones. France has now the game in her own hands. She has Europe before her. She can raise all Italy and half the Austrian Empire against those Germans whom she has so often beaten; yet, on the very summit of her ambition she renounces. France has spent 50,000,000 sterling, and 50,000 men, only to give Milan a Piedmontese instead of an Austrian master, and to establish the Pope in a temporal dignity even beyond his imagination and capable of extension. Is all this real? The Emperor's game must be a very long one.

[From the Boston Journal.]

We have, therefore, as the result of the Italian War of 1859, these general facts: Peace, after an expenditure of 100,000 lives, and of an amount of money yet unknown, the erection of all Italy into a confederation, under the temporal authority of the Pope, thus immensely extending that much doubted prerogative; the annexation of Lombardy to the realms of Victor Emmanuel, thus adding 3,000,000 to his former 5,000,000 of subjects, making his the leading power in the new Confederation; and the retention of the Venetian States to the Emperor of Austria, comprising about 3,000,000 of people and the great defensive line of the Adige, with its two fortresses of Verona and Leguano, making these States, however, a part of the Italian Confederation in nearly the same manner that a large part of Francis Joseph's dominions is included in the Germanic Confederation. It does not yet appear how the Duchies are to be managed, but it is presumed that they will be reinstated. Personally, Louis Napoleon obtains a master influence in Italy through the gratitude of Sardinia. Francis Joseph loses Lombardy with its fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua, but saves Venice, and with it an influential voice in Catholic Italy. Victor Emmanuel nearly doubles his kingdom, while acquiring subjects not homogeneous with his own and merging a part of his sovereignty in the confederation. The Pope is nominally greater than he has been for a century, while his power will probably be even less than it is now.

The European (Liverpool) Times has the following:

"It is premature to discuss the terms on which the impending peace may hang, but it is evident that the rock ahead, as regards Louis Napoleon, is the temporal power of the Pope. The independence of Italy can never be placed on a sufficient [illegible] while the States of the Church are ruled by the ecclesiastical power, and recent events show that his Holiness has no idea of parting with his rights of sovereignty. In his recent allocution to the Secret Consistory, the Pope menaces with excommunication all who dare to attack his temporal rights, but he relies, he says, on having the integrity of his dominions respected by the French Emperor, who has declared to him that the French army in Italy will do nothing against the dominions of the Holy See, but on the contrary protect and maintain them. It will be soon ascertained whether this pledge will be kept.

New Tract.

☞ The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. Does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. This tract is now ready. See our list of books and tracts.

Notices, &c.

The Lyre—Special Notice.

As the book cannot be completed for the August campmeetings, many have desired us to get out the second part first containing the tunes and hymns for conference and campmeetings. This I propose to do, and will give due notice of the period when ready. All orders should be sent in without delay, to

J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass.
Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.
H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Eld. Himes requests the insertion of the following notice:

East Kingston Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be holden in East Kingston, N. H., on the land of Mr. M. C. Eaton, one mile from the railroad depot. It will commence Aug 22d, and continue over the Sabbath. Its objects being to revive the faith and hope of Adventists, and prepare themselves and others for the coming of the Lord, it is desired and expected that all will unite in the effort—laying aside prejudices, and heartily engaging in the work of saving souls, and thus preparing a people for the coming of the Lord, which draws nigh. Come, brethren, let us have one more rally in East Kingston—of happy memory—where we have seen so much of the power and goodness of God in time past. Let all God's people who can come up to the feast, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, bringing their unconverted children and friends, that they may be blessed and saved. Notice of tickets, board, etc., hereafter.

Committee.—Lendal Brown, Haverhill, Mass. J. H. Joselyn, Boston, Mass. Harris Pearson, Newburyport. C. P. Whitten, Lowell, Mass. Edmund Rowell, Kensington, N. H. Gorham Pillsbury, Kingston, N. H. J. T. Richardson, Lawrence, Mass.

East Kingston Campmeeting.—Arrangements have been made with the Superintendent of the Boston and Maine Rail Road, for tickets at half price between Lawrence and Great Falls, to be had at all the intermediate stations. Arrangements are being made also with the Concord and Portsmouth road for the same fare, which will be duly noticed.

Board and lodging and horse keeping is provided for on or near the ground, on reasonable terms.

All persons attending the meeting will stop at the East Kingston station. The camp is one mile from the station. Carriages will be in attendance.

J. V. Himes, Superintendent.

Boston, July 25, '59.

☞ General Meeting at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing Tuesday evening, August 2d and continuing over the two Sundays following. The brethren in Seneca, Cayuga, Wayne and Yates Counties are earnestly requested to attend this meeting. Come, Brethren and Sisters, let us have one more good season in the cause of the Lord in this section of country. Come, lest we are, all of us, discouraged, and fall by the way, by reason of the manifold trials and temptations of life and that in sight of the prize. The "bright morning" is looming up in the distance, and soon will be here. Let us be found active in this cause and fighting for the truth "when the King of kings comes."

Bro. M. Grant, of Boston, will deliver a series of discourses on the subject of Life and Immortality only through Christ at this meeting. In behalf of the Church,

Thos. G. Newman.

Campmeeting.

I wish to say to the Brn, one and all, that it is probable that our proposed Advent campmeeting will be in Lynn, as is desired, if no place preferable is soon suggested, and it will commence about the first of Sept., perhaps the fifth. L. Boutell.

Groton, July 16.

Any suggestions about the meeting will be timely for a few days. L. B.

Just published, the Cottage Testament, by W. Patton, D. D., with Notes, Polyglott References, and Marginal Readings, also Maps, Tables, etc., Geographical descriptions of all the principal places in the New Testament alphabetically arranged. Complete in one volume, morocco, flexible binding. Price 75 cents. Sent by mail free, on receiving price. Address J. Babcock, Natick Post Office, R. I.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. Healy,
Committee, R. Starks,
E. M'Culloch.

Notice.

A meeting is expected to commence at North Searsport, Maine, on Saturday the sixth day of August next, at ten o'clock, A. M. and continue over the Sabbath. Eld. John Billings is expected to attend.

W. Nichols.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. Mathewson.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. Parry.

July 2d, 1859.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. Preble.

The Prophetic Chart.—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John, engraved on wood. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. [illegible] Address Bartholomew Bowers, Philadelphia, Pa.

Appointments.

Bro. Wm. G. Moncrieff, will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday........July 31st

L. D. Thompson will preach in
Lawrence, Mass........Sunday, Aug. 7th
Haverhill........Aug. 8th
South Reading........Aug. 9th
Lowell........Aug. 10th
Westford........Aug. 12th
Nashua, N. H........Aug. 13th
North Springfield, Vt........Sunday, Aug. 14th

Eld. H. Pratt will meet with the brethren in Springfield........Sunday, July 31st
North Adams........Aug. 7th
Vernon, Vt........Aug. 14th

Eld. A. Durfee appoints to preach at Pontiac, (Meeting House)........Sunday, July 31st
S. R. Eddy.

J. G. Smith will preach in Woodstock, N. H., (where Bro. Jackman appoints)........July 31st
Ossipee, (where Bro. J. Sanborn appoints) Aug. 7th

Bro. Champlin appoints to preach in
Bristol........July 31st
J. H. Sutliffe.

Providence permitting, I will hold meetings as follows:—
Newfield, Ct., Sunday........July 31st
Winsted, Tuesday........Aug. 2nd
Pleasant Valley, Wednesday........Aug. 3d
Bakerville, (if Bro. Mathewson appoints)........Aug. 4th
Collinsville, Friday........Aug. 5th
North Canton, Sunday........Aug. 7th
Hiram Munger.

I propose to preach, the Lord willing, at
Scitico (chapel)........Aug. 7th
New Britain, Ct., Thursday evening........Aug. 11th
Bristol, Ct., Sunday........Aug. 14th
If these proposals conflict with previous arrangements, please notify immediately. Address H. F. Carpenter, Worcester, Mass.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2nd, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best.

Miles Grant.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 23d, Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 6th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual. M. G.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Cheshire........July 31st
Fairhaven........Aug. 7th
Southington........Aug. 14th
Cheshire........Aug. 21st
S. S. Brewer.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at North Herman, Me., July 31st.

I will preach as follows:—
Worcester, Mass., (eve.)........July 29th
Holden, Mass........Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H........Sunday, Aug. 7th
I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me. S. W. Bishop.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Carmel, Me., (meeting house)........Aug. 7th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

C. G. Carr.—The communication will appear in its turn.

Cash Receipts.

C C Dow 234, $3 00, Mr. Perry 195, $1 08; Dr. E S Robbins, $5 00.

G Wightman 213, E W Pond 204, C C Bradley 213, J Bousont 213,—50 cts. each.

Mr. N L Fowler 22?, W Sprague 226, E A Black 194, I E Lang 226, J Umberhind 226, M J Ackorn 226, M A Cook 226, P Bonnell 202, E G Scott 208, O Rawson 227, W Weeks 226, J Graham 221, W H Porter 226, Mrs. W Freemans 234, W Merrille 226, J E. Baker 208, M M Lewis 221, N Fenton 226, G W Chiseman 247, I Bliss 182, H N Mayhew 226, H Mecker 129, J Morrison 226, W Thayer 226, Miss E Jackson 228,—$1 00 each.

A Tomlinson 239, C S Lougee 222, Jas. Baker 229,—$1.50 each.

E G Ament 252, J Hook 244, J A Ferris 252,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J Pinkham $1.00, H Little $2 00; J Hook 12 cts., J Gierlow $1.00.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more, books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, [illegible] per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and sinfulness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 3 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By G. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. [illegible] copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. [illegible] hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 125 William St., New York; Trinne and Spofford, Cincinnati, and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of [illegible] designed for public and private worship, [illegible] by J. V. Himes, [illegible]

Cruden's Concordance [illegible] $1.50.

[illegible] 3 cts. single; [illegible]

Words of Warning. [illegible] postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them to all [illegible] that they can be bought [illegible]

Life and Religious Experience of [Hiram] Munger, including many stirring [illegible] connected with [illegible] told by himself. [illegible] and will be read with interest by all. Price [illegible] —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the [illegible] or Christ the promised Messiah [illegible] Seymour. An excellent tract [illegible] the Scriptures, and upon the [illegible] day. Every one should have a copy. Price [illegible] per hundred,—4 cts. single. [illegible]

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of [illegible] incidents, well calculated to [illegible] Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on [illegible] $2.00 per hundred; 3 cents single; postage 1 cent.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Shephard.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $2.00 per hundred, 3 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained; and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 5 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early enemies of Christianity, by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life: embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State, by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Spalding. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks, separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searcher, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us supply them. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by [illegible] Young, 125 William street, N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in sets of six, which can be separated [illegible] contains, The Coming and [illegible] 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of [illegible] Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church [illegible] ry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning [illegible] Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are [illegible] that can be separated [illegible] Little Children, Love and [illegible] Resting Place; three, [illegible] Love, five, Abounding [illegible] Hastings. Just the thing [illegible] classes of [illegible]

Glad Tidings [illegible]

Immaterial.

For the Crisis.

I suppose that my friends generally understand that I am so "orthodox" as to believe in immaterial substance. This fact was the occasion of my present discussion with Mr Cobb, and his effort to rank me as a materialist seems to me very gratuitous. Some friends know also that I hastened the preparation of my book because I thought the doctrine of life in Christ burdened with materialism.

My Advent friends, some of whom believe that even God himself consists of material substance and exists in human form, will grant that I have made little parade of my orthodox heresy on this subject, though it has been ever undisguised. I have said little directly about it. Nor do I now wish to discuss the subject at length. But finding it frequently assumed that "immaterial substance" is a high sounding name for nothing, and meeting occasional amazement that any one can believe in being that is not matter, I wish to make a remark and propound a question.

My remark is that the argument for the immortality of the soul from its immateriality is fast passing away. It is found in some old books, and in the speech of some who read only old books. But the thinking men of the day confess that it is worthless. Hence we hazard nothing in granting that the soul is immaterial, and exists without the body. An able D. D. has told me that the attempt to show that the soul can not exist without the body and therefore the man may wholly die, seemed to him a vain effort to wield a sledge-hammer when a tack-hammer might do the business. And in the early history of christian opinion, as I have shown, the man who first held that the soul dies with the body, Tatian, was an orthodox man, and held eternal suffering. And just now the most talented of the Spiritualists, as I regard him, T. L. Harris, believes that the persistently wicked will become extinct.

My question is this: Have we not an example of something that has a most real and undeniable existence, with none of the qualities or properties commonly assigned to matter? It is often remarked and generally admitted that we know nothing of substance but by its qualities. On this fact is based the common distinction between matter and mind, as different kinds of substance. Their properties are different throughout. To think, to feel, and to will, are nothing at all like being heavy or light, square or round, large or small, long or broad, red or blue. And the two classes of qualities differ not in degree, not by more or less,—as gold is heavier than silver and more yellow than platinum, etc.,—but they are wholly different in kind. And if we know substances only from their properties, all observation and all inductive reasoning point to the conclusion that mind and matter are different substances. And the connection of mind with matter, as apparent in the facts of phrenology, does not at all conflict with the distinction of their natures.

But mind is not the example I wished to propose, but force, or power. The simplest instance is the attraction of gravitation. If I drop a book from my hand, it is somehow drawn down to the floor, or toward the earth. The fact is as familiar as sunshine, but who has ever explained it? What is it that draws the book down? If we could see an elastic piece of india-rubber pulling the book earthward, we should say that explained it. If we could grasp some linked chain fastened to the book, and feel some concealed imp pulling at the other end, we might say the cheat was detected. If we could with our microscope discover a few gossamer threads attaching and moving the book to the earth, then the secret would be out. But we do not find one of these things. We find no palpable, tangible, or visible cause of the wonder; and so, in despair of a reason, we render the lip-service of a name, and call it the "attraction of gravitation;" meaning thereby a certain kind of force or power that makes things heavy and persuades them to kiss the earth.

Of course it is no explanation to give a third name, or a fourth, instead of the first or second. You may call it the influence of the earth; but, pray, what is influence, or "influx," as the Swedenborgians call it? Some have tried to get further than a name, and have ascribed it to the undulations of an ether diffused through space; so it would be not unlike the movement of sound, or of light. But how such an ether should drag down the avalanches, instead of just giving them a blushing, microscopic startle, we are not told. The explanation needs explaining. In despair of any dissection or analysis of the power, we may still ask what kind of a thing is it? Is it a mere relation between other things, or is it an actual and real thing?

Here we come to the question, Can anything act where it does not exist? We suppose not. But then it will not do to say that this force or power resides in the earth, or in the book. It will not stay at home. It is very non-resident. It is a great truant, always running away and out in every possible direction. From the earth it scampers away after the book, and by some art known to itself and God—I [illegible] it arrests the book, or with a tone of very special authority says, "Sir, you are my prisoner," and the book, somehow, budges, and capitulates. I can not divine the mysterious process; but the thing is done, and I must believe it. Not the least marvel is that the force is hindered by no obstacle. Put a pane of glass between the earth and the book, and it darts forth just as quickly, and very scornfully shatters the glass in its retreat. Interpose a sheet of thick boiler iron, or ten thousand such, and it is not balked an instant, but grasps the book as soon as before. It courses through all water, and all pathless space, with the same ease. What, and where, I ask, is this power? The earth, certainly stays at home all the while. It never goes out of itself, never gets beyond its own surface. It is always in its right body, never beside itself. It does not go to the book; how, then, does it send for it? Do you call the attraction a quality or property of the earth? What do you mean? Do properties exist where substances do not? If you say no, then the earth itself takes the book without touching it. If you say yes, then we ask, what is the nature of this marvelous property or power of attraction?

I will not answer the question. I only remark, that if not one of the most real, it is one of the most effective things in the world. It allies the moon to its consort, and persuades both earth and moon to wait upon the sun. It makes all the planets comrades. It rules among the stars. It binds the sweet influences of the Pleiades, forms the bands of Orion, and guides Arcturus with his sons. It pledges all worlds and all atoms in a mystic brotherhood, and holds the fabric of the universe together.

I do not say that it is substance. Yet I dare say, it is not matter. It has no form,—neither length, breadth, nor thickness. "There is no voice, its sound is not heard." It works in all we see but itself is unseen. Though it gives weight to all other things, itself has none. While we all feel it holding us down to earth, no man has ever touched or handled it. And it has neither odor nor taste. It eludes all our senses, and may do so forever. It is a common opinion among thinkers that we should never have suspected its existence but from a kindred power of the mind itself,—the faculty of volition, or will. Good philosophers have made a distinction between phænomena and noumena; "things that do appear," and things discovered by the mind, though unseen.

The phænomena of the world may be more or less the effects of this power we are in quest of, but it is not among them. I do not say what it is. I will not say that it is spiritual substance. Though it seems to me very real, very substantial, and yet not itself matter, I will not give it any name. I will only ask my friends to explain its nature, before they object to my faith in immaterial substance, or quiz me much on the account of it. When we have explored a little more fully the depths of being, even in the atom, then we can afford to be a little positive on the nature of being, and perhaps say whether our Heavenly Father consists of matter, the same kind of substance which he has made and is every day showing to us.

C. F. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Appleton, Wis., June 10th, 1859, Maria M., wife of Minor S. Smith, aged forty years.

Sr. Smith was a member of the Baptist church from the early age of eleven years. Many thought she gave good evidence of conversion when but seven years old; but it was not thought best to receive her into the church at so early an age. At this time, she was remarkable for her devotion. She was often found reproving older persons than herself with unaffected gravity, when they were indulging in vain or trifling conversation. When but eight years old, lying in bed late one morning, her mother called to her, asking why she was lying so late; she answered, "I was thinking how good it would be to die and be with Jesus."

She remained a member of the Baptist church till 1849, when she embraced the faith of a soon coming Savior, and that he was coming to make alive and reward his children who have died in faith. She was then living in Homer, N. Y., where she made her house a "pilgrim's home." Many, no doubt, will remember her "labors of love" in providing for brethren from abroad, on the occasions of meetings in Homer. * * *

A husband and son mourn their loss. May her example, in her devotion to "the truth" and to christian principle, be to them a beacon light, that shall guide unto eternal life. * * *

She has gone, though not forever; but according to her faith, she will soon "come again from the land of the enemy."

I. K. Lombard.

Died, of liver complaint, at Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minnesota, July 7th, 1859, Eliza A. Stone, wife of S. W. Stone, aged twenty-seven years.

The subject of this notice was formerly of the Methodist denomination, but in the winter of 1853 she embraced the "Advent faith," and was baptized in the month of January, by Eld. W. Pratt. With her dying breath she stated that she was "prepared to sleep in Jesus."

She leaves a husband and two small children to lament her departure. Her funeral was largely attended by sympathizing neighbors. [illegible] preached by the writer from the following text: Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. 1: 10.

> "The trump shall sound—the gates of death
> Shall make his children way;
> From the cold tomb the slumb'rers spring,
> And shine in endless day."

W. Sheldon.

Expositor, please copy.

Asleep in Jesus.

I was much impressed a few days since, while attending the funeral of the little boy of Bro. W. P. Leathe, in South Reading. He was sick but a few days, and suffered much in his last moments. He gave a most striking proof of his acceptance with his Savior, and seemed willing to go. Just before he died, he called his mother to his bedside, and told her he was not afraid to die, and that Christ would raise him at the last day, and wanted all his little friends to be good and meet him in the kingdom. Three of the primary schools were in attendance, and many a tear followed the sweet flowers that they dropped on his grave.

TO EDDIE.

> Farewell to thee, Eddie,
> Thou hast gone from us now,
> And the cold stamp of death
> Has been placed on thy brow;
> And with sorrow we look
> Upon thy lonely green grave,
> Where the wild rose shall bloom,
> And the willow shall wave.

S. D. Emerson.

Stoneham, June 19th, '59.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Africa. Liverpool dates to the 9th inst.

An armistice has been concluded between the allied and Austrian armies till the 15th of August, and strong hopes of peace are now entertained.

THE WAR.

On the 7th inst., the Emperor of the French telegraphed to the Empress that an armistice had been concluded between the Emperor of Austria and himself, and that, Commissioners had been appointed to settle the clauses and duration of the armistice.

The Paris Moniteur, in publishing the official dispatch, appends the following remarks: "It is necessary that the public should not misunderstand the extent of the armistice. It is limited merely to a relaxation of hostilities between the belligerent armies, which, though leaving the field open to negotiations, do not enable us for the present to see how the war may be terminated."

The armistice had given rise to a variety of speculations in the English papers.

The London Times believes in peace, and remarks that before the truce has ended the French army will be refreshed and reinforced, a fleet of gunboats will be ready for launching upon the Lake that surrounds Mantua, and a great army will be ready to make its descent upon the shores of Northern Italy. Broken and dispirited as Austria now is, she is yet better able to fight at this moment than she will be at any future time. We believe therefore in peace, and we believe that the path to peace will be made smooth to her, for the Emperor has won the advantage, which for the moment he proposes to himself. If this war between France and Austria is ended, France comes tremendous in power out of the conflict, and Austria and Europe will look on with still increasing interest, and much meditation upon the future while she rests upon her arms.

The London Post inclines to think that the proposition for an armistice came from the moderation of the Emperor of the French, and is of the opinion that Austria will consent to sacrifice her Italian sway and thus end the war.

The following items show the complexion of affairs before the armistice was announced:

Turin, July 7. The fortress of Preschiera, now invested by the Sardinian army, is cannonaded day and night. With the aid of the gunboats which will soon be landed on the Lake of Garda, the resistance is not expected to be very prolonged.

Berne, July 7. Advices have been received from Lameden to the 6th inst. All the Austrian troops have left Windschan and are concentrating on the Stelvio Pass, where a conflict is expected to-day.

Fiume, July 6. Two French war steamers have been reconnoitering off this place. One thousand French soldiers have occupied Cherso. The occupation of Fiume by Austrian troops continues.

The Times correspondent with the Austrian army says that a bombardment of Verona and Mantua will not suffice. There must be a good deal of fighting at close quarters before anything can be done. They and the other strong holds of this great military quadrangle are very much stronger than they were ten years ago. There are great field works to be taken before any approach can be made to the main defences, and in the meanwhile Austria may have got together again an army capable of risking another general action.

At Verona quantities of grain are stored in every available place, and 35,000 Hungarian oxen are either there or in the immediate neighborhood. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says that on the 3d inst. the French fleet, consisting of 64 sail, was at no great distance from Venice.

The Vienna Gazette publishes an amended list of the losses at Solferino. As to officers, the return gives 90 killed, 414 wounded, 13 made prisoners and 70 missing. Of rank and file, 2500 killed, and 11,213. Nothing is said respecting the number of men taken prisoners.

The French and Sardinians killed and wounded were 18,245. The numbers given by the Vienna Journal are believed to be below the truth. The management of the siege of Verona was said to have been confided to Marshal Vaillant. It is stated that on the 4th inst. Count D'Urban, son or nephew of the Governor of Verona, arrived at the headquarters of the Emperor of the French as the bearer of a flag of truce. The object of the mission was supposed to have reference to an exchange of prisoners.

The Times correspondent in the allied camp, July 2, says of the siege of Peschiera:

"Hitherto the Austrians have only amused themselves with keeping up a cannonade at the allied troops which are investing the the place. You could estimate the advance of the allies by the more sustained fire, which this morning was so continuous that they must have discovered that the allies have not only established themselves, but broken ground and begun the trench work.

This morning Prince Napoleon came up from his camp on the Oglio, and had a long conference with the Emperor, who received likewise a visit from the King of Sardinia. The junction between the corps of the Prince and the Grand Army has been effected, and they may henceforth be considered as one. During his stay at Viadura M. Kossuth came up to see Prince Napoleon."

A letter in the Nord says: "Information has been received by the French admiral from the neutral vessels which have been allowed to leave Venice, and from several Italian sailors who have deserted from the Austrian service, that all the forts along the sea coast are mined and ready to be blown up. They are united one to another by an electric wire, which starts from the fort of Malghera, about four miles from Venice, on the Padua road, and from whence the spark will be sent. Since the 15th, more than forty vessels have been sunk in the different passes."

A letter has been received from Baron Larrey, the Emperor's surgeon, in which he states that his horse was killed by a bullet, which, had it not been intercepted, would probably have struck the Emperor."

Attempt to Poison Napoleon.—The Florence correspondent of the Providence Journal writes: A French officer here tells the following story. He says it has not been printed in the French journals—and certainly we have seen no account—but the fact is known to the army, and the story is true. On Good Friday, if at no other time in the year, all good Catholics partake of the Communion. On that day, the 21st of April last, according to his habit, the Emperor was to receive the consecrated wafer in the chapel of the Tuilleries. Before going to the chapel he was told that he must not eat the holy particle that was to be offered him, as it had been prepared with a subtile and malignant poison for the purpose of destroying his life. The informant was a party to the diabolical secret, but horror of conscience and reverence for the Emperor led him to betray the conspiracy. The Emperor knelt at the altar during the mass, but did not eat the bread. When the service was finished, the officiating priest was invited into the apartment of the Empress to partake of a collation, while the wafer was submitted to a chemical examination. It was found to contain, as the informant had said, a concentrated poison. The priest is now in a fortress in Algeria. The soldier says that the priest was an instrument of the Jesuits; but whether in Italy, Austria, France, or England, is not understood.

The Pope has addressed a letter, dated June 18th, to the patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops in communion with the Holy See, in which he attacks the Sardinian government with great bitterness.

Peace Concluded.

Per steamship North Briton, Liverpool, 13th. The result of the interview between the Emperor of France and the Emperor of Austria was the Concluding of a Peace.

The following is the telegram from Napoleon to the Empress, announcing the fact.

Valleggio, July 11.—Peace is signed between the Emperor of Austria and myself. The bases of peace are: The Italian Confederation, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope; the Emperor of Austria concedes Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who transfers them to the King of Sardinia; the Emperor of Austria preserves Venice, but she will form an integral part of the Italian Confederation.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE PEACE.

The Daily News affirms that the past hopes and expectations of Italy are deceived. It adds: "History will call the Emperor to a strict account for having made war on false pretensions, and signed a mock and selfish peace,—a peace that leaves Austria impregnably fortified in Northern Italy—that connects Central Italy to the patronage of the Pope, and to the constant menace of military intervention on the part of the Pope's patrons and protectors—that takes no account of the welfare of the people, and substitutes for national independence a confederation under the lock and key of Austrian garrisons. The Emperor of France has sown the seeds of future wars, and the closer we examine the pretended pacification, the more futile and iniquitous it appears.

The Morning Post contends that the soul of the treaty agreed upon is the nationality guaranteed under every variety of local government, in a confederation of Italian States. The Emperor of Austria is to be King of Venetia solely as an internal member of the confederation. He will rule less than 3,000,000 Italians, and will be controlled by a Confederation ruling not less than 26,000,000. The Pope is shorn virtually of his temporal supremacy—he is deprived of the substance, but keeps the shadow.

The Times says that Venice must hope that her independence will not be a mere name, and that the influence of France and Austria united will not be more unbearable than that of Austria singly. The Romans must hope that the Italian Confederacy, under the honorary Presidency of the Pope, will be nothing like any government they have hitherto known. The Papal States are left as they were, but with a master greater than before. He is honorary President of the Italian Confederation, and Gen. Guyon holds the sword at his side. The King of Naples is made a member of the Confederation, and has to learn the worth of that honor and its import. Europe has to welcome a new Power. England has nothing to do but to look on. Austria is somewhat humbled, but relieved of a difficulty. Sardinia is aggrandized with a province that mistrusts her, and a neighbor that has earned an imperishable and inexhaustible claim to her gratitude. The Grand Dukes, we suppose, are once more to be reinstated on their thrones. France has now the game in her own hands. She has Europe before her. She can raise all Italy and half the Austrian Empire against those Germans whom she has so often beaten; yet, on the very summit of her ambition she renounces. France has spent 50,000,000 sterling, and 50,000 men, only to give Milan a Piedmontese instead of an Austrian master, and to establish the Pope in a temporal dignity even beyond his imagination and capable of extension. Is all this real? The Emperor's game must be a very long one.

[From the Boston Journal.]

We have, therefore, as the result of the Italian War of 1859, these general facts: Peace, after an expenditure of 100,000 lives, and of an amount of money yet unknown; the erection of all Italy into a confederation, under the temporal authority of the Pope, thus immensely extending that much doubted prerogative; the annexation of Lombardy to the realms of Victor Emmanuel, thus adding 3,000,000 to his former 5,000,000 of subjects, making his the leading power in the new Confederation; and the retention of the Venetian States to the Emperor of Austria, comprising about 3,000,000 of people and the great defensive line of the Adige, with its two fortresses of Verona and Leguano, making these States, however, a part of the Italian Conferation in nearly the same manner that a large part of Francis Joseph's dominions is included in the Germanic Confederation. It does not yet appear how the Duchies are to be managed, but it is presumed that they will be reinstated. Personally, Louis Napoleon obtains a master influence in Italy through the gratitude of Sardinia. Francis Joseph loses Lombardy with its fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua, but saves Venice, and with it an influential voice in Catholic Italy. Victor Emmanuel nearly doubles his kingdom, while acquiring subjects not homogeneous with his own and merging a part of his sovereignty in the confederation. The Pope is nominally greater than he has been for a century, while his power will probably be even less than it is now.

The European (Liverpool) Times has the following:

"It is premature to discuss the terms on which the impending peace may hang, but it is evident that the rock ahead, as regards Louis Napoleon, is the temporal power of the Pope. The independence of Italy can never be placed on a safe and satisfactory basis while the States of the Church are ruled by the ecclesiastical power, and recent events show that his Holiness has no idea of parting with his rights of sovereignty. In his recent allocution to the Secret Consistory, the Pope menaces with excommunication all who dare to attack his temporal rights, but he relies, he says, on having the integrity of his dominions respected by the French Emperor, who has declared to him that the French army in Italy will do nothing against the dominions of the Holy See, but on the contrary protect and maintain them. It will be soon ascertained whether this pledge will be kept.

New Tract.

☞ The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. Does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. This tract is now ready. See our list of books and tracts.

Notices, &c.

The Lyre—Special Notice.

As the book cannot be completed for the August campmeetings, many have desired us to get out the second part first containing the tunes and hymns for conference and campmeetings. This I propose to do, and will give due notice of the period when ready. All orders should be sent in without delay, to

J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass.
Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.
H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Eld. Himes requests the insertion of the following notice:

East Kingston Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be holden in East Kingston, N. H., on the land of Mr. M. C. Eaton, one mile from the railroad depot. It will commence Aug. 22d, and continue over the Sabbath. Its objects being to revive the faith and hope of Adventists, and prepare themselves and others for the coming of the Lord, it is desired and expected that all will unite in the effort—laying aside prejudices, and heartily engaging in the work of saving souls, and thus preparing a people for the coming of the Lord, which draws nigh. Come, brethren, let us have one more rally in East Kingston—of happy memory—where we have seen so much of the power and goodness of God in time past. Let all God's people who can come up to the feast, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, bringing their unconverted children and friends, that they may be blessed and saved. Notice of tickets, board, etc., hereafter.

Committee.—Lendal Brown, Haverhill, Mass. J. H. Josselyn, Boston, Mass. Harris Pearson, Newburyport. C. P. Whitten, Lowell, Mass. Edmund Rowell, Kensington, N. H. Gorham Pillsbury, Kingston, N. H. J. T. Richardson, Lawrence, Mass.

East Kingston Campmeeting.—Arrangements have been made with the Superintendent of the Boston and Maine Rail Road, for tickets at half price between Lawrence and Great Falls, to be had at all the intermediate stations. Arrangements are being made also with the Concord and Portsmouth road for the same fare, which will be duly noticed.

Board and lodging and horse keeping is provided for on or near the ground, on reasonable terms.

All persons attending the meeting will stop at the East Kingston station. The camp is one mile from the station. Carriages will be in attendance.

J. V. Himes, Superintendent.

Boston, July 25, '59.

☞ General Meeting at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing Tuesday evening, August 2d and continuing over the two Sundays following. The brethren in Seneca, Cayuga, Wayne and Yates Counties are earnestly requested to attend this meeting. Come, Brethren and Sisters, let us have one more good season in the cause of the Lord in this section of country. Come, lest we are, all of us, discouraged, and fall by the way, by reason of the manifold trials and temptations of life and that in sight of the prize. The "bright morning" is looming up in the distance, and soon will be here. Let us be found active in this cause and fighting for the truth "when the King of kings comes."

Bro. M. Grant, of Boston, will deliver a series of discourses on the subject of Life and Immortality only through Christ at this meeting. In behalf of the Church,

Thos. G. Newman.

Campmeeting.

I wish to say to the Brn., one and all, that it is probable that our proposed Advent campmeeting will be in Lynn, as is desired, if no place preferable is soon suggested; and it will commence about the first of Sept., perhaps the fifth.

L. Boutell.

Groton, July 16.

Any suggestions about the meeting will be timely for a few days. L. B.

Just published, the Cottage Testament, by W. Patton, D. D., with Notes, Polyglott References, and Marginal Readings; also Maps, Tables, etc., Geographical descriptions of all the principal places in the New Testament alphabetically arranged. Complete in one volume, morocco, flexible binding. Price 75 cents. Sent by mail free, on receiving price. Address J. Babcock, Natick Post Office, R. I.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. Healy,
Committee, R. Starks,
E. M'Cullock.

Notice.

A meeting is expected to commence at North Searsport, Maine, on Saturday the sixth day of August next, at ten o'clock, A.M., and continue over the Sabbath. Eld. John Billings is expected to attend.

W. Nichols.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our campmeeting near Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. Johnson, occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. 22d. Particulars hereafter.

S. G. Mathewson.

Grove Meeting.

Elder Miles Grant will hold a grove Meeting, between the villages of Fort Edward and Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th of July, and closing the following Sunday, after the afternoon services. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend, and take part in the services.

J. Parry.

July 2d, 1859.

☞ Meetings every Sabbath, at the house formerly occupied by the F. W. Baptists, on the corner of Centre and Green Sts., Concord, N. H. T. M. Preble.

The Prophetic Chart.—Brethren are informed that I have had a prophetic chart of the visions of Daniel and John, engraved on stone. It is a beautiful engraving, 11 by 14 inches. Price 10 cts., [illegible]. Address Bartholomew [illegible], Philadelphia, Pa.

Appointments.

Bro. Wm. G. Moncrieff will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday........July 31st

---

L. D. Thompson will preach in
Lawrence, Mass..............Sunday, Aug. 7th
Haverhill...............................Aug. 8th
South Reading..........................Aug. 9th
Lowell.................................Aug. 10th
Westford...............................Aug. 11th
Nashua, N. H...........................Aug. 12th
North Springfield, Vt.........Sunday, Aug. 14th

Eld. H. Pratt will meet with the brethren in
Springfield....................Sunday, July 31st
North Adams............................Aug. 7th
Vernon, Vt.............................Aug. 14th

Eld. A. Durfee appoints to preach at
Pontiac, (Meeting House).......Sunday, July 31st
S. R. Eddy.

J. G. Smith will preach in Woodstock, N. H., (where Bro. Jackman appoints)..........July 31st
Ossipee, (where Bro. J. Sanborn appoints) Aug. 7th

Bro. Champlin appoints to preach in
Bristol................................July 31st
J. H. Sutliffe.

Providence permitting, I will hold meetings as follows:—
Newfield, Ct., Sunday..................July 31st
Winsted, Tuesday.......................Aug. 2nd
Pleasant Valley, Wednesday.............Aug. 3d
Bakerville, (if Bro. Mathewson appoints)..Aug. 4th
Collinsville, Friday...................Aug. 5th
North Canton, Sunday...................Aug. 7th
Hiram Munger.

I propose to preach, the Lord willing, at
Scitico (chapel).......................Aug. 7th
New Britain, Ct., Thursday evening.....Aug. 11th
Bristol, Ct., Sunday...................Aug. 14th

If these proposals conflict with previous arrangements, please notify immediately. Address H. F. Carpenter, Worcester, Mass.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2nd, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best.

Miles Grant.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 22d, Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 6th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual. M. G.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Cheshire...............................July 31st
Fairhaven..............................Aug. 7th
Southington............................Aug. 14th
Cheshire...............................Aug. 21st
S. S. Brewer.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield appoint to preach at North Herman, Me., July 31st.

I will preach as follows:—
Worcester, Mass., (eve.)...............July 29th
Holden, Mass.,.................Sunday, July 31st
Auburn, N. H.,..................Sunday, Aug. 7th

I shall look for letters at all of the above places, consequently if these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, brethren will please notify me.

S. W. Bishop.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in
Carmel, Me., (meeting house)...........Aug. 7th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

C. G. Carr.—The communication will appear in its turn.

Cash Receipts.

C C Dow 234, $3.00; Mr. Perry 198, $1.08; Dr. E S Robbins, $5.00.

G Wightman 213, E W Pond 204, C C Bradley 218, J Bousont 213,—50 cts. each.

Mr. N L Fowler 229, W Sprague 226, E A Black 104, I E Lang 226, J Umberhind 226, M J Ackorn 226, M A Cook 226, P Bunnell 202, E G Scott 208, O Rawson 227, W Weeks 226, J Graham 221, W H Porter 226, Mrs. W Freemans 234, W Merrills 226, J E. Baker 208, M M Lewis 221, N Fenton 236, G W Chissman 247, I Bliss 182, H N Mayhew 236, H Mecker 129, J Morrison 226, W Thayer 226, Miss E Jackson 228,—$1 00 each.

A Tomlinson 229, C S Lougee 229, Jas. Baker 229,—$1.50 each.

E G Ament 252, J Hook 244, J A Ferris 253,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J Pinkham $1.00; H Little $2.00; J Hook 12 cts; J Gierlow $1.00.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 3 cts. single; [illegible] copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.50 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati, and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. [illegible] off per dozen. [illegible]

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. [illegible] Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid, $1.50.

Bible [illegible] 3 cts. single; [illegible]

Words of Warning. [illegible] single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low as [illegible] that they can be bought [illegible].

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. [illegible] and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts. —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. [illegible] Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the [illegible] of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $2.00 per hundred,—3 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the families. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Gennesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians, by H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $2.00 per hundred, 3 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 3 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.,—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Landfeet. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than 50 cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 128 William street, N. Y.

---

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six, [illegible] which can be separated for distribution. [illegible] contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the [illegible] Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, [illegible] ry; Restitution, by Cyril; [illegible] Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are [illegible] that can be separated [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another; [illegible] Resting Place; three, [illegible] Love; five, Abounding [illegible] Hastings. Just the thing to [illegible] classes of [illegible]

Glad Tidings [illegible]

[illegible]

For the Crisis.

Conscience.

[illegible] monitor, which is placed in [illegible] to guide him in his short [illegible] voyage through life, is rarely [illegible] entirely destroyed in the human breast. It may, by long perseverance in evil, become blunted, asleep, or [illegible] with a red-hot iron," till it is [illegible] as the knee of a dromedary; yet, at moments most unexpected, it starts up in the cerecloths of some buried sin, appalling its reckless possessor by bringing to his startled remembrance crimes dimmed in the long vista of the past, even as a wet sponge passed over an ancient picture gives a transient vividness to its faded colors. How often the veteran murderer, whose soul has been surrounded by a triple crust of coagulated gore, has, in the dead of night, been haunted by visions of his deeds, while conscience, like the subtle lightning, fuses the dried up mass, and to his eyes makes it [illegible] and smoking, as it did a score of years ago, till voluntarily he gives up his life, preferring death to the torture of this agony of soul.

Again, men who have carried on a long course of successful and undetected cheating, have been so wrought upon as to make two and three fold restitution for frauds committed, unknown to all save themselves and their God. Although, perhaps, rolling in wealth and surrounded by every thing which riches could afford, they were miserable, for

> "They thought upon their untold crime,
> And never dared to pray."

The conscience, when in active and healthy operation, acts as a "spirit level," which in a moment warns us when we lean from our moral perpendicular. It admonishes us before the anxious eye of friendship, or the more keen, quick glance of any enemy can detect the erring step; and we feel almost as crestfallen as if the sin were written on our forehead. Suppose we have a friend, the dearest earth contains, whose good opinion we respect, whose bounty and unwearied care we have experienced, and whose worth and honor we know and appreciate; suppose we used to speak to him as to a brother, and, with a knowledge that all was right within, we greeted him and clasped his hand with all the hearty welcome of honesty and love. But temptation came, and overcome us. How sadly different we feel; we shun his eye, and, when we would speak, our voices sink broken and hollow in our chests. Already there is a chasm betwixt us, over which we would gladly throw the bridge of a free confession of our fault, nor can we rest day or night until a reconciliation takes place and we are friends once more.

Early in the history of our race have we an illustration of this. Man in his state of innocence feared not the presence of his Maker; but when he had partaken of the deadly tree, the first fruit of which was a knowledge of his shame, he sought no more communion with his God, but strove to hide himself. When Joseph's brethren came to buy corn in Egypt, and he, trying them, commanded that they should bring with them their younger brother to prove their story true that they were not spies, as he affected to consider them, and bound Simeon as a hostage, they thought of how they had conspired against their father's favored child, and thus communed; "We are very guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us. And Reuben answered them saying, Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore, behold, also his blood is required." Gen. 42: 21, 22.

The conscience of David smote him when, stealing upon the sleeping Saul, he but cut off his persecutor's skirt, because as king he was the Lord's anointed. 1 Sam. 24: 6. But he had to repent of a yet more grievous sin after he had been called to sit upon the throne.

When the hapless Judas, seeing that his betrayed Master made no escape, stung by remorse, brought back the price of his fearful treachery, and throwing them at his tempter's feet said, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood;" and went and hanged himself.

Herod, whose bloody vow had slain the Baptist, when he heard of the miracles of Christ, was perplexed and conscience stricken when some one said that John had risen from the dead. Luke 9: 7. His mind's eye saw the mangled form of one whose fearless words of truth had sown with thorns his lawless bed, and he was miserable.

Our Lord put it home to those hypocrites who, with furious zeal, had [illegible] to him the poor adultress, demanding judgment, thus: "He that is [illegible] you, let him cast the [illegible]." His heart-searching eye [illegible] secret sins; they knew it, [illegible] being convicted [illegible] went out one by [illegible] eldest, even unto the [illegible] was left alone, and the [illegible] in the midst." Jno. 8: 7, [illegible] of them, old or young, upon [illegible] the [illegible] produced to show the result of a self-accusing conscience, and the necessity that we should do nothing to bring against us its thousand envenomed points. Yet there is a possibility that even acts of oppression and great cruelty, where there is not spiritual light, may be committed with a full approval of conviction. This Paul asserts was the case with himself, even when he breathed threatenings and slaughter against the christians, and armed with authority, was pursuing them to the death. He says: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I did also in Jerusalem; and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the high priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them." Acts 26: 9, 10. This declaration was intended to demonstrate that he was acting in strict accordance with his sense of duty when engaged in a ruthless persecution, and might be held as an earnest of his honesty and determination in holding the views which he now advocated relative to Christ.

But every danger of being misled by a warped conviction, may be obviated by having the conscience purified from acts of supererogation, whereby the bigot and the devotee seek to accomplish their salvation, independent of faith. This purgation can alone be effected by the blood of Christ, which purges the "conscience from dead works to serve the living God." "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 9: 14 and 10: 22.

This purified conscience is the good one which Paul speaks of in his 1st Epistle to Timothy, 5th verse. "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience and of faith unfeigned;" and which he admonishes him to hold fast. "Holding faith and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck."—1 Tim. 1:19. Alas, how many fearing to ride out the storm, have slipped their cable and gone ashore upon the rocks of destruction!

This good conscience will also prevent a man from indulging any appetite which might be the cause of a weaker brother stumbling. To wit, if a man who once was a victim to a vice or evil habit, say drinking or the use of tobacco, has abjured it altogether because he cannot be moderate in its use, sees another, who is a christian, partake, be it never so daintily, the devil may sieze upon that moment to urge the temptation with irresistible force.

The work of a good conscience should be made manifest in the teachings of those who profess to be the preachers of God's word, that their hearers may bear witness with their hearts that they have been faithful to their trust. This Paul urges upon his brethren. "Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not: but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the work of God deceitfully; but by manifestations of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the light of God."—2 Cor. 4: 1, 2.

This handling the word deceitfully has become fashionable among modern divines. That is, by sophistry they explain away its meaning, excuse or palliate particular sins, set aside commandments because they say reason forbids obedience, generalize precepts where they cross their own inclinations or those of their wealthiest hearers, refraining from utterance of certain stern truths which might make them unpopular, affecting moderation to secure a good living, calling dancing or play-going innocent amusement or harmless relaxation; in a word, being too indolent and luxurious to pull against the stream, they go with the full tide, catering to their folly and in the end sharing largely in their condemnation. Men may be dazzled with the brilliant oratory of such preachers, but they do not commend themselves to their hearers' consciences. Ministers should above all others avoid every appearance of tampering with the things of this world, or engaging in or excusing its pleasures. "For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; and through their knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?"—1 Cor. 8:10, 11. The knowledge of having preserved their integrity was the source of much congratulation to Paul and his brethren. "For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward."—2 Cor. 1:12.

This happy frame of mind may be enjoyed by every one, who, taking Christ for his guide, and the word of God for a lamp to his feet, heedless of the thorns which lie in his path or the temptations which allure him aside, pursue his race upward and onward. Full of confidence in his divine Master and the holiness of his cause, he can exclaim with the sorely tried but triumphant Job, "My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me as long as I live."

Jno. F. Osmon.

For the Crisis.

"Passing Away."

BY VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Why grieve for the friends that are passing away?
When I, as an exile, regretting my stay,
Am waiting the hour for some kindlier clime
To dawn, when, released from the sorrows of time,
I shall grasp the loved in a closer embrace,
Nor fear the stern monster my joys can efface.
Shall I weep for the bright hopes of youth decayed?
Or strive to redeem them from ashes and shade?
As fruitless the task as to call for the wave,
That rolls darkly on with its fellows, to lave
Its edges of foam in the deep briny sea,
To reverse its bright pathway of waters for me.
Or yearn for the love that will never return?
Nay! the treach'rous dream from my heart I would spurn,
And with it the sorrows I would not recall;
Let the veil of forgetfulness cover them all.
Shall retrospect bring me the calm, peaceful hour,
With its bridal of beauties in star-lit bower;
Where the angel's wing drooped low as he bore
In his pure snowy bosom some gift as of yore?
It also would bring the sharp thorn to my view,
The burial of gladness, the frosts which threw
A blight o'er that bower; for the hand that gave,
Spoiled its loved treasures and garnished its grave.
I would weep no more, for the fountains are dry;
Years have furrowed the cheek and have dimmed the eye,
But never have ransomed a friend from the tomb,
Or the wilderness decked with a fresher bloom;
Perchance the light zephyrs that winged its swift way,
Bore some heart-broken sigh to the realms of day,
And were it accepted at Heaven's high throne,
I'll bless the deep sorrow that made it my own.
Ah! why should I weep that the earth groweth old?
For its streams shall yet wander o'er sands of gold;
Like an old weary pilgrim it seemeth gray,
And its doom has been written—"passing away."
But out of its ashes we then shall behold
(For sure it is promised) a beautiful world;
Then the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
And man roam again in an Eden restored.
When the storm has expended its fury below,
As it passes, we gaze on the gaily decked bow,
And what its blasts gleaned from the golden grain,
It repays seven fold with its cooling rain.
Thus, with Jesus' smile, earth can never destroy
One gleam of its sunshine or wave of its joy.
Though trials should glean a few tears by the way,
The promise so cheering will more than repay.
The tempter may stir up some storm as of old,
When Job was hedged in with his honors and gold;
Though a far darker storm should burst through his ire,
And the vengeful clouds charged with his subtle fire;
The defenceless brow may be scathed by the storm,
But love's blessed sunshine will keep the heart warm.
Though darkly the wilderness closes around
A path, where the thorn and the thistle abound;
Hope's beautiful vista, resplendent with light,
Is gemmed with the promise like stars of the night;
And sweet in the distance faith brings to the view
The fathomless depths of the ether blue;
That mirrors the love of a sinless world,
That man cannot fathom or angels unfold.
Her bright magic pencil brings out to the view
The immortal scenery faithful and true;
A bright constellation of beauty and grace,
That no darkling shadow of earth can efface.
Like Paul, the frail mortal seems almost submerged
In the glory-lit crest of the immortal surge;
Earth's shadowy outlines are fading away,
With seraphs we bask in the immortal day,
On some floating cloudlet our feet scarcely press
Its bosom of gossamer; longing for rest,
We reach forth our arms to the beautiful goal,
And glory ineffable circles the soul.
We meet the dear mother we've missed, ah! so long,
The golden-haired sister unites in our song;
Then why should we weep for earth's transient decay,
Or sigh for the loved that are "passing away?"

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 11.

NINEVEH.

The first account we have of the city of Nineveh, is found recorded in Gen. 10: 11. It was originally a colony of Babylon, from which it was distant about three hundred miles, somewhat less, and was founded by Asshur, 3000 years B. C. It was equal, if not superior to, Babylon. As early as the time of Isaiah, it was sacked and injured by the invasion of the Babylonians and Medes. In the year 601 B. C. it was utterly destroyed by one Cyaxeres, a Mede, about one hundred years after the prediction of its overthrow by Nahum the prophet.

There being no reliable history of this city, and all trace of it having been entirely obliterated, some foolish sceptics have questioned the Bible account of its existence and greatness. Says one of these infidel writers; "The pretended empire of Assyria was not even in existence in the days of Jonah, for it is said he prophesied under the petty king Joash." Again, "It is said in the book of Jonah that there were one hundred and twenty thousand new born infants (!); this would require a population of five millions. Now five millions of inhabitants in a city not yet built, is a circumstance rather strange and uncommon."—Philosophy of History, pp. 58, 59.

But truly wonderful are the workings of Divine providence to confound the wisdom of the worldling, and establish the word of truth! At least 2,500 years after the destruction of Nineveh by fire, her blackened and charred monuments are disclosed to the view of men by the efforts of Layard, and again man is permitted to tread the lion-guarded palaces of Sennacherib, and the long desolate streets of Nineveh; and her inscriptions arise from the dust, and testify to the authenticity of Holy Writ. One of them contains a description of Sennacherib's campaign against surrounding nations, and this is one sentence: "Hezekiah, king of Judah, who had not submitted to my authority, forty-six of his principal cities and fortresses, and villages depending upon them, of which I took no account, I captured and carried away their spoil."—"The next passage," says Layard, "is somewhat defaced, but the substance of it appears to be, that he took from Hezekiah the treasure he had collected in Jerusalem, thirty talents of gold, and eight hundred talents of silver, the treasures of his palace, besides his sons and daughters, and his male and female servants or slaves, and brought them all to Nineveh."—Compare with 2 Kings 18: 18–14. Another inscription reads thus: "Solomon reigned over the kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt; they brought presents and served Solomon all the days of his life. He had dominion over all the region on this side of the river, from Tipsah even unto the Azzah, over all the kings on this side the river."—Compare with 1 Kings 4: 21–24. These inscriptions have reference to various persons named in the Bible:—Jehu, Omri, Menahem, kings of Israel; Hazael, Sorgon, Sennacherib, Esarhaddon, kings of Syria; Merodach, Nebo and Dagon, idol gods; Judea, Samaria, Ashdod, and forty other places mentioned in the Bible. For three thousand years were these memorials of ancient Nineveh entombed in the earth, hidden from all, but now are made manifest for the confirmation of the word of God, and putting to the blush that "incredulity," which Sir Walter Raleigh aptly calls the "wit of fools."

Having given these evidences in proof of Nineveh's existence, we will now give some further description of it, and the prophecies relating thereto. For a long time the capital of Assyria was an extensive and populous city. Its walls are said to have been an hundred feet in height, sixty miles in compass, and to have been defended by 15,00 towers, each 200 feet high. One historian relates that the king of Assyria, after the complete discomfiture of his army, confided in an old prophecy that Nineveh would not be taken unless the river should become the enemy of the city; that after an ineffectual siege of two years, the river, swollen with long continued and tempestuous torrents, inundated part of the city, and threw down the wall for the space of twenty furlongs, and that the king deeming the prediction accomplished, despaired of his safety, and erected an immense funeral pile, on which he heaped his wealth, and with which himself, his household and palace, were consumed.

In the book of Nahum the prophet it is recorded, "the gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved." "Nineveh is of old like a pool of water." "With an over running flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof."

Another prediction uttered by the same prophet is illustrated by the historian. He relates that the king of Assyria, elated with his former victories, and ignorant of the revolt, that Bactrians had abandoned himself to scandalous inaction, had appointed a time of festivity, and supplied his soldiers with abundance of wine, and that the general of the army, apprized by deserters of their negligence and drunkenness, attacked the Assyrian army while the whole of them were fearlessly giving way to indulgence, destroyed great part of them, and drove the rest into the city, thereby verifying the words of the prophet;" "While they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Again, the prophet alludes to the spoil; "Take the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold; for there is no end of the store and glory out of all the pleasant furniture." The historian affirms that many talents of gold and silver, preserved from the fire, were carried to Ecbatana.

The prophet not only predicts the overthrow of the city by an overflowing flood, but also by a devouring fire. The utter and perpetual overthrow of Nineveh is foretold by the prophet: "The Lord will make an utter end of the place thereof . . . Affliction shall not rise up the second time. . . She is empty and void, and waste." "And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and like a wilderness . . . . How is she become a desolation, and a place for beasts to lie down!" In the second century, Lucian, a native of a city on the banks of the Euphrates, testified that Nineveh had utterly perished,—that there was no vestige of it remaining,—that none could tell where it was once situated.

So entirely was every vestige of this city, once great in wealth, and mighty in strength, and beautiful in its palaces, swept from the face of the earth, that infidels rise up and declare the Bible history respecting it to be false. But buried Nineveh has had a resurrection, and now from the tomb of ages, with a voice from the dead, she bears her undeniable testimony to the truth of her former existence and greatness.

W.

☞ Do not confound difficulties with hindrances. Difficulties are often sent directly by the Lord to exercise and try our faith; hindrances, I think, never, although permitted through Satan and our own evil hearts. Difficulties are not necessary hindrances, because the race is not to be run with speed, but with "patience;" and so, while difficulties are exercising faith, and drawing out energy of purpose and character, a man may be making great strides in his christian race, and the difficulty be the very occasion of his progress.—J. W. Reeve.

☞ Almost any sting, except the "sting of conscience," may be cured by putting some spirits of turpentine upon the place, for the pain will cease in one minute.

For the Crisis.

Persecution, What is it?

> "Are there no foes for me to face?
> Must I not stem the flood?"

What is persecution? To be scourged in synagogues, brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake? Is it to be stoned, sawn asunder, slain with the sword, to wander about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented? Is it to be cast into the lions' den or the fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than is wont? This doubtless is persecution for righteousness' sake; but is this all? Is not opposition to God's truth, in every form, persecution? to vex, afflict, harass with injustice and false accusation? to inflict pain from hatred or malignity? What persecution more to be dreaded, than a slanderous tongue, malice prepense, a tongue set on fire of hell? Misrepresentation, silent, satanic inuendoes destroy reputation and usefulness, hinder the cause of truth and salvation. Doubtless the vexatious hindrances of Paul among false prophets and false brethren, the time-servers and popular seekers of his age, their virulent opposition to his reformatory steps, were more aggravating and soul-trying than to suffer shipwreck, be stoned, beaten with rods or to "receive forty stripes save one."

We may not, at this age of refinement, under our modified laws of civilization, be burned at the stake, led to the scaffold, or cast into a lion's den, for preaching the gospel in all its freeness and fulness; but think you persecution has ceased, or the offence of the cross? Is not human nature still the same? Is not satan the very same satan, going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour? or transforming himself into an angel of light? Is there not the same hatred for truth and holiness now, as when Christ was put to death, John the Baptist beheaded, James slain with the sword and Peter crucified with his head downwards? And who were the most virulent persecutors in the time of the holy prophets and apostles? Who? The gentiles, the heathen, men of the world? Nay, but a corrupt, ungodly church, a wicked Sanhedrim; those having a name to live who were dead, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; whom Christ denounced as false prophets Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outward, but within were full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanliness. "Fill ye up then," says Christ "the measure of your fathers; ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." (See Matt. chapter 23, which is a true and graphic picture of the present degeneracy.)

Has the offence of the cross ceased? Let any man of God stand boldly against the perpetual backslidings, the fashions, and follies, the extravagant wickedness in costume, the idolatry in dress, in church building, the popery of the age, the "accursed" traffick in the bodies and souls of men, the cowardice and criminal silence of ministers, editors, churches, tract and missionary associations, while our brother's blood crieth; and see if the offence of the cross has ceased, or the age of persecution. We perceive that those who tell us persecution has ceased, that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to place themselves in the battle's front, and beard the lion in his den. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, who are at ease in Zion, and cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, and loving the praise of men more than the praise of God.

> "Where is thy cross? the daily care,
> The daily toil, the daily strife—
> The warfare they are called to bear
> With foes who aim at more than life."

What says Paul? "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution."

> "Must I be carried to the skies
> On flowery beds of ease,
> While others fought to win the prize,
> And sailed through bloody seas?"

New York. D. F. N.

For the Crisis.

"The Earth Abideth Forever."

ECCL. 1: 4.

This world will keep moving in its orbit as long as eternity endures, although it has to pass through a fiery process, to remove the curse that sin has caused. Wicked men and devils will be destroyed—blotted out of existence. Before the great restitution takes place, the trump of God will sound, the righteous dead arise out of their graves, the living saints upon the earth be changed in the twinkling of an eye and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so be ever with him. Then they will come into possession of that immortality which they had been seeking for through all their pilgrimage here upon earth.

When this old earth has been purified and brought back to its Eden state again, paradise restored, the saints of God of every age and clime with Christ; the great captain of their salvation will take possession and live and reign upon it forever. Then this promise of Scripture will be fulfilled—"the meek shall inherit the earth." The wicked have no immortality. There is no life promised to them. Death and destruction is their doom. [illegible] —never to have life. All is lost and lost forever. All the glory which the saints of God will enjoy upon the new earth is gone. The New Jerusalem, adorned with jasper walls and golden streets, the tree of life, the bowers of paradise, the crystal stream that runs through its midst, and the great company of all the redeemed, from Adam to the last sinner that will be converted to God, will all be lost; not for want of probationary time to make their peace with God, but loving the honors, pleasures and riches of this wicked world, they could not spare time to repent.

O sinner, seek the Lord with all your heart, while the door of mercy is wide open. Your time is short; soon the Master will rise up and shut the door, and then it will be too late. Six thousand years of this world are about ended. All, or nearly all of the signs that were to proceed the Savier's coming, are in the past. "The sign of the Son of man" is in the future, and when that appears, the unrighteous will call for rocks and mountains to fall upon them, to hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" J. Howland.

New Bedford.

For the Crisis.

My Pilgrimage.

Commissioned of my Lord to go,
And not to stop for rain or snow;
We have to run, leave all behind,
And preach glad tidings to mankind.
By day and night I preach and pray,
My work is hard for every day;
A weary pilgrim, homeward bound,
Rest surely here cannot be found.
A missionary; the world my field;
The Spirit's sword I have to wield;
I'm like a man upon the wheel,
He must go round though bad he feel.
Sixteen years I've run the round,
And still upon this earth I'm found—
Beseeching men to turn, and seek
To be like Christ—among the meek.
No salary promised; only bread
And water sure. We shall be fed,
If all is left, and we are pure,
Reproach and suffering will be sure.
A bitter cup we have to drink,
'Tis a hard life, I sometimes think,
Oot in the world, no scrip or purse,
Our friends look cold, and this is worse.
I often stop to weep and sigh,
And almost wish that I could die;
I look to Christ, and then I see
One who was rich, made poor for me.
I hear him say—"The birds have nests,
And foxes holes in which to rest,"
"The Son of man," I hear him say,
"No place his sacred head to lay."
My murmurings now have gone and fled;
I'll follow Christ, my living Head;
I'll keep the faith and fight by grace,
And so I'll run the heavenly race.
We suffer on and will not fear,
The better day is drawing near;
Pilgrims and strangers we must be,
If we would live and reign with Thee;
O Lord, inspire our hearts anew,
And help us all our journey through.

L. Boutell.

For the Crisis.

Swarm of Bees out West.

HIVED IN A LOG CABIN, BY W. P.

Be Abiding, Abounding, Abundant, Active.
Be Becoming, Better, Benevolent, Beneficent.
Be Constant, Circumspect, Charitable, Courteous.
Be Delightsome, Discreet, Dutiful, Devoted.
Be Esteemed, Enterprising, Encouraged, Earnest.
Be Frank, Fearless, Friendly, Fruitful.
Be Good, Grateful, Gratuitous, Godly.
Be Homely, Healthy, Hospitable, Happy.
Be Innocent, Intellectual, Inspiring, Invulnerable.
Be Judicious, Just, Joy-inspiring, Justified.
Be Keen, Kind-hearted, Knowing, Kindly.
Be Laborious, Liberal, Lovely, Long-suffering.
Be Methodical, Moral, Mutual, Manly.
Be Neighborly, Natural, Notable, Noblest.
Be Old-fashioned, Observing, Obedient, Orthodox.
Be Pure, Perfect, Pacific, Pilgrims.
Be Quick-sighted, Qualified, Quieting, Quickened.
Be Reliable, Resolute, Religious, Right.
Be Stout, Subservient, Spiritual, Successful.
Be Unbiassed, Undoubted, Unfaulty, United.
Be Veracious, Vigorous, Valiant, Vital.
Be Wakeful, Working, Winning, Worthy.
Be Xn's (christians) X-like, Xemplary, ⋈.—Isa. 60: 22.
Be Yourself, Yea, Yearning, Yoke-fellows.
Be Zetetic, Zealotical, Zephyr-like, Zealous.

And the Alpha and Omega will be with you, now and forevermore. Amen. So let it be. Selah.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

Important Information.

Death by drowning is produced through the want of air to breathe—it is death similar to that produced by smothering. If respiration and its consequence, the circulation of blood, can be restored, the person will be saved; it is [illegible] likely that this can be done in the case of persons immersed for some time in the water, than in cases of trance, where the vital functions are suspended for long periods. In this connection we commend to the perusal of all, the rules for the [illegible] given, by the eminent English physician, Dr. Marshall Hall:—

1. Treat the patient instantly, on the spot, in the open air, exposing the face and chest to the breeze, except in severe weather.

2. To clear the throat.—Place the patient gently on the face, with one wrist under the forehead; all fluids, and the tongue itself, then fall forward, leaving the entrance into the windpipe free. If there be breathing, wait and watch; if not, or if it fails,—

3. To excite Respiration.—Turn the patient well and instantly on his side, and excite the nostrils with snuff, or the throat with a feather, etc., and dash cold water on the face, previously rubbed warm. If there be no success, lose not a moment, but instantly

4. To imitate Respiration. Replace the patient on his face, raising and supporting the chest well on a folded coat or other article of dress. Turn the body very gently on the side, and a little beyond, and then briskly on the face, alternately, repeating these measures deliberately, efficiently and perseveringly, fifteen times in the minute, occasionally varying the side. (When the patient reposes on the chest, this cavity is compressed by the weight of the body, and expiration takes place; when he is turned on the side, this pressure is removed, and inspiration occurs.) When the prone position is resumed, make equable, but efficient pressure, with quick movement, along the back of the chest, removing it immediately before rotation on the side. This first measure augments the expiration, the second commences inspiration. The result is respiration, and, if not too late, life.

5. To Induce Circulation and Warmth. Meantime, rub the limbs upwards, with firm, grasping pressure, and with energy, using handkerchief, etc. By this measure the blood is propelled along the veins towards the heart. Let the limbs be thus warmed and dried and then clothed, the bystanders supplying the requisite garments. Avoid the continuous warm bath, and the position on or inclined to the back. This treatment is to be persevered in for three or four hours, as it is the erroneous opinion that persons are irrecoverable because life does not soon make its appearance. Cases have come under the notice of the Royal Humane Society of successful result even after five hours.

Loss of Voice.

It is stated that "the younger Spurgeon, a minister of great promise, has lost his voice and is sinking into consumption." As he is superior in some respects to his renowned brother, his early death will be regretted by multitudes. Many young clergymen of great promise have prematurely died in consequence of their own mismanagement in one or two particulars. They speak on too high a key to begin with, not giving the lungs time to warm up, to bring themselves up to the effort. A good traveler does not start on a trot, when he wants his horse to make a good journey that day. John Newland Maffit could speak with apparently a slight effort, at the end of an hour's sermon, loud enough to be heard by thousands; but he always commenced on a low key. His first hymn and prayer were scarcely audible. The next important point is to cool off very gradually, before leaving the assembly, when the discourse is ended—very gradually indeed—and then, even in summer time, bundle up well before leaving the house, and walk away quickly. Many an excellent minister has sacrificed life by the neglect of these two precautions.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Cholera.—The following extract from the letter of a clergyman to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, presents a very simple, and, he says, effectual preventive of cholera, as well as a remedy of great power:—

"The preventive is simple, a teaspoonful of powdered charcoal taken three or four times a week in a cup of coffee or other liquid in the morning.

"When attacked with cholera a mixture of an ounce of charcoal, an ounce of laudanum, an ounce of brandy, or other spirits, may be given as follows, after being well shaken: a teaspoonful every five minutes. In half an hour I have known this effectually to relieve and stay the disease. As the patient becomes better the mixture may be given at longer intervals.

I have known a patient in the blue stage, and collapsed, perfectly recovered in a few hours.

"The charcoal was tried as a preventive on a large plantation in the Mauritius, and not a single individual out of eight hundred was attacked with cholera."

Hot Bread.—Dr. Bunting, who is now making experiments on the stomach of the famous Alexis St. Martin, says that hot bread does not digest. It ferments in the stomach, provokes inflammation, and is a fruitful producer of dyspepsia.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months....4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months..15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months 22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Bro., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligation to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis. [illegible] Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to us, give their Town, County and State [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

For the Crisis.

Conscience.

[illegible] monitor, which is placed in [illegible] to guide him in his short [illegible] through life, is rarely [illegible], entirely destroyed in the [illegible] breast. It may, by long persever[illegible], become blunted, asleep, or [illegible] with a red-hot iron," till it is [illegible] the knee of a dromedary; [illegible] most unexpected, it starts [illegible] of some buried sin, [illegible] its reckless possessor by bringing to his startled remembrance crimes dimmed [illegible] vista of the past, even as a wet sponge passed over an ancient picture gives a transient vividness to its faded colors. How often the veteran murderer, whose soul has been surrounded by a triple crust of coagulated gore, has, in the dead of night, been haunted by visions of his deeds, while conscience, like the subtle lightning, fuses the dried up mass, and to his eyes makes it [illegible] red and smoking, as it did a score of years ago, till voluntarily he gives up his life, preferring death to the torture of this agony of soul.

Again, men who have carried on a long course of successful and undetected cheating, have been so wrought upon as to make two and three fold restitution for frauds committed, unknown to all save themselves and their God. Although, perhaps, rolling in wealth and surrounded by every thing which riches could afford, they were miserable, for

> "They thought upon their untold crime,
> And never dared to pray."

The conscience, when in active and healthy operation, acts as a "spirit level," which in a moment warns us when we lean from our moral perpendicular. It admonishes us before the anxious eye of friendship, or the more keen, quick glance of any enemy can detect the erring step; and we feel almost as crestfallen as if the sin were written on our forehead. Suppose we have a friend, the dearest earth contains, whose good opinion we respect, whose bounty and unwearied care we have experienced, and whose worth and honor we know and appreciate; suppose we used to speak to him as to a brother, and, with a knowledge that all was right within, we greeted him and clasped his hand with all the hearty welcome of honesty and love. But temptation came, and overcome us. How sadly different we feel; we shun his eye, and, when we would speak, our voices sink broken and hollow in our chests. Already there is a chasm betwixt us, over which we would gladly throw the bridge of a free confession of our fault, nor can we rest day or night until a reconciliation takes place and we are friends once more.

Early in the history of our race have we an illustration of this. Man in his state of innocence feared not the presence of his Maker; but when he had partaken of the deadly tree, the first fruit of which was a knowledge of his shame, he sought no more communion with his God, but strove to hide himself. When Joseph's brethren came to buy corn in Egypt, and he, trying them, commanded that they should bring with them their younger brother to prove their story true that they were not spies, as he affected to consider them, and bound Simeon as a hostage, they thought of how they had conspired against their father's favored child, and thus communed; "We are very guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us. And Reuben answered them saying, Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore, behold, also his blood is required." Gen. 42: 21, 22.

The conscience of David smote him when, stealing upon the sleeping Saul, he but cut off his persecutor's skirt, because as king he was the Lord's anointed. 1 Sam. 24: 6. But he had to repent of a yet more grievous sin after he had been called to sit upon the throne.

When the hapless Judas, seeing that his betrayed Master made no escape, stung by remorse, brought back the price of his fearful treachery, and throwing them at his tempter's feet said, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood;" and went and hanged himself.

Herod, whose bloody vow had slain the Baptist, when he heard of the miracles of Christ, was perplexed and conscience stricken when some one said that John had risen from the dead. Luke 9: 7. His mind's eye saw the mangled form of one whose fearless words of truth had sown with thorns his lawless bed, and he was miserable.

Our Lord put it home to those hypocrites who, with furious zeal, had [illegible] him the poor adultress, demanding judgment, thus: "He that is [illegible] you, let him cast the [illegible]." His heart-searching eye [illegible] sins; they knew it, [illegible] heard it, being convicted [illegible], went out one by [illegible] eldest, even unto the [illegible] was left alone, and the [illegible] in the midst." Jno. 8: 7. [illegible] of them, old or young, upon [illegible] would dare begin the [illegible] produced to show the result of a self-accusing conscience, and the necessity that we should do nothing to bring against us its [illegible] envenomed points. Yet there is a possibility that even acts of oppression and great cruelty, where there is not spiritual light, may be committed with a full approval of conviction. This Paul asserts was the case with himself, even when he breathed threatenings and slaughter against the christians, and armed with authority, was pursuing them to the death. He says: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I did also in Jerusalem; and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the high priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them." Acts 26: 9, 10. This declaration was intended to demonstrate that he was acting in strict accordance with his sense of duty when engaged in a ruthless persecution, and might be held as an earnest of his honesty and determination in holding the views which he now advocated relative to Christ.

But every danger of being misled by a warped conviction, may be obviated by having the conscience purified from acts of supererogation, whereby the bigot and the devotee seek to accomplish their salvation, independent of faith. This purgation can alone be effected by the blood of Christ, which purges the "conscience from dead works to serve the living God." "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 9: 14 and 10: 22.

This purified conscience is the good one which Paul speaks of in his 1st Epistle to Timothy, 5th verse. "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience and of faith unfeigned;" and which he admonishes him to hold fast. "Holding faith and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck."—1 Tim. 1:19. Alas, how many fearing to ride out the storm, have slipped their cable and gone ashore upon the rocks of destruction!

This good conscience will also prevent a man from indulging any appetite which might be the cause of a weaker brother stumbling. To wit, if a man who once was a victim to a vice or evil habit, say drinking or the use of tobacco, has abjured it altogether because he cannot be moderate in its use, sees another, who is a christian, partake, be it never so daintily, the devil may sieze upon that moment to urge the temptation with irresistible force.

The work of a good conscience should be made manifest in the teachings of those who profess to be the preachers of God's word, that their hearers may bear witness with their hearts that they have been faithful to their trust. This Paul urges upon his brethren. "Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not: but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the work of God deceitfully; but by manifestations of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the light of God."—2 Cor. 4: 1, 2.

This handling the word deceitfully has become fashionable among modern divines. That is, by sophistry they explain away its meaning, excuse or palliate particular sins, set aside commandments because they say reason forbids obedience, generalize precepts where they cross their own inclinations or those of their wealthiest hearers, refraining from utterance of certain stern truths which might make them unpopular, affecting moderation to secure a good living, calling dancing or play-going innocent amusement or harmless relaxation; in a word, being too indolent and luxurious to pull against the stream, they go with the full tide, catering to their folly and in the end sharing largely in their condemnation. Men may be dazzled with the brilliant oratory of such preachers, but they do not commend themselves to their hearers' consciences. Ministers should above all others avoid every appearance of tampering with the things of this world, or engaging in or excusing its pleasures. "For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; and through their knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?"—1 Cor. 8: 10, 11. The knowledge of having preserved their integrity was the source of much congratulation to Paul and his brethren. "For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward."—2 Cor. 1:12.

This happy frame of mind may be enjoyed by every one, who, taking Christ for his guide, and the word of God for a lamp to his feet, heedless of the thorns which lie in his path or the temptations which allure him aside, pursue his race upward and onward. Full of confidence in his divine Master and the holiness of his cause, he can exclaim with the sorely tried but triumphant Job, "My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me as long as I live."

Jas. F. Cowan [?]

For the Crisis.

"Passing Away."

BY VESTA R. CUDWORTH.

Why grieve for the friends that are passing away?
When I, as an exile, regretting my stay,
Am waiting the hour for some kindlier clime
To dawn, when, released from the sorrows of time,
I shall grasp the loved in a closer embrace,
Nor fear the stern monster my joys can efface.
Shall I weep for the bright hopes of youth decayed?
Or strive to redeem them from ashes and shade?
As fruitless the task as to call for the wave,
That rolls darkly on with its fellows, to lave
Its edges of foam in the deep briny sea,
To reverse its bright pathway of waters for me.
Or yearn for the love that will never return?
Nay! the treach'rous dream from my heart I would spurn,
And with it the sorrows I would not recall;
Let the veil of forgetfulness cover them all.
Shall retrospect bring me the calm, peaceful hour,
With its bridal of beauties in star-lit bower;
Where the angel's wing drooped low as he bore
In his pure snowy bosom some gift as of yore?
It also would bring the sharp thorn to my view,
The burial of gladness, the frosts which threw
A blight o'er that bower; for the hand that gave,
Spoiled its loved treasures and garnished its grave.
I would weep no more, for the fountains are dry;
Years have furrowed the cheek and have dimmed the eye,
But never have ransomed a friend from the tomb,
Or the wilderness decked with a fresher bloom;
Perchance the light zephyrs that winged its swift way,
Bore some heart-broken sigh to the realms of day,
And were it accepted at Heaven's high throne,
I'll bless the deep sorrow that made it my own.
Ah! why should I weep that the earth groweth old?
For its streams shall yet wander o'er sands of gold;
Like an old weary pilgrim it seemeth gray,
And its doom has been written—"passing away."
But out of its ashes we then shall behold
(For sure it is promised) a beautiful world;
Then the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
And man roam again in an Eden restored.
When the storm has expended its fury below,
As it passes, we gaze on the gaily decked bow,
And what its blasts gleaned from the golden grain,
It repays seven fold with its cooling rain.
Thus, with Jesus' smile, earth can never destroy
One gleam of its sunshine or wave of its joy.
Though trials should glean a few tears by the way,
The promise so cheering will more than repay.
The tempter may stir up some storm as of old,
When Job was hedged in with his honors and gold;
Though a far darker storm should burst through his ire,
And the vengeful clouds charged with his subtle fire;
The defenceless brow may be scathed by the storm,
But love's blessed sunshine will keep the heart warm.
Though darkly the wilderness closes around
A path, where the thorn and the thistle abound;
Hope's beautiful vista, resplendent with light,
Is gemmed with the promise like stars of the night;
And sweet in the distance faith brings to the view
The fathomless depths of the ether blue;
That mirrors the love of a sinless world,
That man cannot fathom or angels unfold.
Her bright magic pencil brings out to the view
The immortal scenery faithful and true;
A bright constellation of beauty and grace,
That no darkling shadow of earth can efface.
Like Paul, the frail mortal seems almost submerged
In the glory-lit crest of the immortal surge;
Earth's shadowy outlines are fading away,
With seraphs we bask in the immortal day,
On some floating cloudlet our feet scarcely press
Its bosom of gossamer; longing for rest,
We reach forth our arms to the beautiful goal,
And glory ineffable circles the soul.
We meet the dear mother we've missed, ah! so long,
The golden-haired sister unites in our song;
Then why should we weep for earth's transient decay,
Or sigh for the loved that are "passing away?"

For the Crisis.

Literal Fulfillment of Prophecy. No. 11.

NINEVEH.

The first account we have of the city of Nineveh, is found recorded in Gen. 10: 11. It was originally a colony of Babylon, from which it was distant about three hundred miles, somewhat less, and was founded by Asshur, 3000 years B. C. It was equal, if not superior to, Babylon. As early as the time of Isaiah, it was sacked and injured by the invasion of the Babylonians and Medes. In the year 601 B. C. it was utterly destroyed by one Cyaxeres, a Mede, about one hundred years after the prediction of its overthrow by Nahum the prophet.

There being no reliable history of this city, and all trace of it having been entirely obliterated, some foolish sceptics have questioned the Bible account of its existence and greatness. Says one of these infidel writers; "The pretended empire of Assyria was not even in existence in the days of Jonah, for it is said he prophesied under the petty king Joash." Again, "It is said in the book of Jonah that there were one hundred and twenty thousand new born infants (!); this would require a population of five millions. Now five millions of inhabitants in a city not yet built, is a circumstance rather strange and uncommon."—Philosophy of History, pp. 58, 59.

But truly wonderful are the workings of Divine providence to confound the wisdom of the worldling, and establish the word of truth! At least 2,500 years after the destruction of Nineveh by fire, her blackened and charred monuments are disclosed to the view of men by the efforts of Layard, and again man is permitted to tread the lion-guarded palaces of Sennacherib, and the long desolate streets of Nineveh; and her inscriptions arise from the dust, and testify to the authenticity of Holy Writ. One of them contains a description of Sennacherib's campaign against surrounding nations, and this is one sentence: "Hezekiah, king of Judah, who had not submitted to my authority, forty-six of his principal cities and fortresses, and villages depending upon them, of which I took no account, I captured and carried away their spoil."—"The next passage," says Layard, "is somewhat defaced, but the substance of it appears to be, that he took from Hezekiah the treasure he had collected in Jerusalem, thirty talents of gold, and eight hundred talents of silver, the treasures of his palace, besides his sons and daughters, and his male and female servants or slaves, and brought them all to Nineveh."—Compare with 2 Kings 18: 13–14. Another inscription reads thus: "Solomon reigned over the kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt; they brought presents and served Solomon all the days of his life. He had dominion over all the region on this side of the river, from Tipsah even unto the Azzah, over all the kings on this side the river."—Compare with 1 Kings 4: 21–24. These inscriptions have reference to various persons named in the Bible:—Jehu, Omri, Menahem, kings of Israel; Hazael, Sorgon, Sennacherib, Esarhaddon, kings of Syria; Merodach, Nebo and Dagon, idol gods; Judea, Samaria, Ashdod, and forty other places mentioned in the Bible. For three thousand years were these memorials of ancient Nineveh entombed in the earth, hidden from all, but now are made manifest for the confirmation of the word of God, and putting to the blush that "incredulity," which Sir Walter Raleigh aptly calls the "wit of fools."

Having given these evidences in proof of Nineveh's existence, we will now give some further description of it, and the prophecies relating thereto. For a long time the capital of Assyria was an extensive and populous city. Its walls are said to have been an hundred feet in height, sixty miles in compass, and to have been defended by 15,00 towers, each 200 feet high. One historian relates that the king of Assyria, after the complete discomfiture of his army, confided in an old prophecy that Nineveh would not be taken unless the river should become the enemy of the city; that after an ineffectual siege of two years, the river, swollen with long continued and tempestuous torrents, inundated part of the city, and threw down the wall for the space of twenty furlongs, and that the king deeming the prediction accomplished, despaired of his safety, and erected an immense funeral pile, on which he heaped his wealth, and with which himself, his household and palace, were consumed.

In the book of Nahum the prophet it is recorded, "the gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved." "Nineveh is of old like a pool of water." "With an over running flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof."

Another prediction uttered by the same prophet is illustrated by the historian. He relates that the king of Assyria, elated with his former victories, and ignorant of the revolt, that Bactrians had abandoned himself to scandalous inaction, had appointed a time of festivity, and supplied his soldiers with abundance of wine, and that the general of the army, apprized by deserters of their negligence and drunkenness, attacked the Assyrian army while the whole of them were fearlessly giving way to indulgence, destroyed great part of them, and drove the rest into the city, thereby verifying the words of the prophet;" "While they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Again, the prophet alludes to the spoil; "Take the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold; for there is no end of the store and glory out of all the pleasant furniture." The historian affirms that many talents of gold and silver, preserved from the fire, were carried to Ecbatana.

The prophet not only predicts the overthrow of the city by an overflowing flood, but also by a devouring fire. The utter and perpetual overthrow of Nineveh is foretold by the prophet: "The Lord will make an utter end of the place thereof . . . Affliction shall not rise up the second time. . . She is empty and void, and waste." "And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and like a wilderness . . . . How is she become a desolation, and a place for beasts to lie down!" In the second century, Lucian, a native of a city on the banks of the Euphrates, testified that Nineveh had utterly perished,—that there was no vestige of it remaining,—that none could tell where it was once situated.

So entirely was every vestige of this city, once great in wealth, and mighty in strength, and beautiful in its palaces, swept from the face of the earth, that infidels rise up and declare the Bible history respecting it to be false. But buried Nineveh has had a resurrection, and now from the tomb of ages, with a voice from the dead, she bears her undeniable testimony to the truth of her former existence and greatness.

W.

☞ Do not confound difficulties with hindrances. Difficulties are often sent directly by the Lord to exercise and try our faith; hindrances, I think, never, although permitted through Satan and our own evil hearts. Difficulties are not necessary hindrances, because the race is not to be run with speed, but with "patience;" and so, while difficulties are exercising faith, and drawing out energy of purpose and character, a man may be making great strides in his christian race, and the difficulty be the very occasion of his progress.—J. W. Reeve.

☞ Almost any sting, except the "sting of conscience," may be cured by putting some spirits of turpentine upon the place, for the pain will cease in one minute.

For the Crisis.

Persecution, What is it?

> "Are there no foes for me to face?
> Must I not stem the flood?"

What is persecution? To be scourged in synagogues, brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake? Is it to be stoned, sawn asunder, slain with the sword, to wander about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented? Is it to be cast into the lions' den or the fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than is wont? This doubtless is persecution for righteousness' sake; but is this all? Is not opposition to God's truth, in every form, persecution? to vex, afflict, harass with injustice and false accusation? to inflict pain from hatred or malignity? What persecution more to be dreaded, than a slanderous tongue, malice propense, a tongue set on fire of hell? Misrepresentation, silent, satanic inuendoes destroy reputation and usefulness, hinder the cause of truth and salvation. Doubtless the vexatious hindrances of Paul among false prophets and false brethren, the time-servers and popular seekers of his age, their virulent opposition to his reformatory steps, were more aggravating and soul-trying than to suffer shipwreck, be stoned, beaten with rods or to "receive forty stripes save one."

We may not, at this age of refinement, under our modified laws of civilization, be burned at the stake, led to the scaffold, or cast into a lion's den, for preaching the gospel in all its freeness and fulness; but think you persecution has ceased, or the offence of the cross? Is not human nature still the same? Is not satan the very same satan, going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour? or transforming himself into an angel of light? Is there not the same hatred for truth and holiness now, as when Christ was put to death, John the Baptist beheaded, James slain with the sword and Peter crucified with his head downwards? And who were the most virulent persecutors in the time of the holy prophets and apostles? Who? The gentiles, the heathen, men of the world? Nay, but a corrupt, ungodly church, a wicked Sanhedrim; those having a name to live who were dead, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; whom Christ denounced as false prophets Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outward, but within were full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanliness. "Fill ye up then," says Christ "the measure of your fathers; ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." (See Matt. chapter 23, which is a true and graphic picture of the present degeneracy.)

Has the offence of the cross ceased? Let any man of God stand boldly against the perpetual backslidings, the fashions, and follies, the extravagant wickedness in costume, the idolatry in dress, in church building, the popery of the age, the "accursed" traffick in the bodies and souls of men, the cowardice and criminal silence of ministers, editors, churches, tract and missionary associations, while our brother's blood crieth; and see if the offence of the cross has ceased, or the age of persecution. We perceive that those who tell us persecution has ceased, that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to place themselves in the battle's front, and beard the lion in his den. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, who are at ease in Zion, and cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, and loving the praise of men more than the praise of God.

> "Where is thy cross? the daily care,
> The daily toil, the daily strife—
> The warfare they are called to bear
> With foes who aim at more than life."

What says Paul? "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution."

> "Must I be carried to the skies
> On flowery beds of ease,
> While others fought to win the prize,
> And sailed through bloody seas?"

New York. D. F. N.

For the Crisis.

"The Earth Abideth Forever."

ECCL. 1: 4.

This world will keep moving in its orbit as long as eternity endures, although it has to pass through a fiery process, to remove the curse that sin has caused. Wicked men and devils will be destroyed—blotted out of existence. Before the great restitution takes place, the trump of God will sound, the righteous dead arise out of their graves, the living saints upon the earth be changed in the twinkling of an eye and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so be ever with him. Then they will come into possession of that immortality which they had been seeking for through all their pilgrimage here upon earth.

When this old earth has been purified and brought back to its Eden state again, paradise restored, the saints of God of every age and clime with Christ; the great captain of their salvation will take possession and live and reign upon it forever. Then this promise of Scripture will be fulfilled—"the meek shall inherit the earth." The wicked have no immortality. There is no life promised to them. Death and destruction is their doom. [illegible] —never to have life. All is lost and lost forever. All the glory which the saints of God will enjoy upon the new earth is gone. The New Jerusalem, adorned with jasper walls and golden streets, the tree of life, the bowers of paradise, the crystal stream that runs through its midst, and the great company of all the redeemed, from Adam to the last sinner that will be converted to God, will all be lost; not for want of probationary time to make their peace with God, but loving the honors, pleasures and riches of this wicked world, they could not spare time to repent.

O sinner, seek the Lord with all your heart, while the door of mercy is wide open. Your time is short; soon the Master will rise up and shut the door, and then it will be too late. Six thousand years of this world are about ended. All, or nearly all of the signs that were to proceed the Savior's coming, are in the past. "The sign of the Son of man" is in the future, and when that appears, the unrighteous will call for rocks and mountains to fall upon them, to hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

J. Howland.

New Bedford.

For the Crisis.

My Pilgrimage.

Commissioned of my Lord to go,
And not to stop for rain or snow;
We have to run, leave all behind,
And preach glad tidings to mankind.
By day and night I preach and pray,
My work is hard for every day;
A weary pilgrim, homeward bound,
Rest surely here cannot be found.
A missionary; the world my field;
The Spirit's sword I have to wield;
I'm like a man upon the wheel,
He must go round though bad he feel.
Sixteen years I've run the round,
And still upon this earth I'm found—
Beseeching men to turn, and seek
To be like Christ—among the meek.
No salary promised; only bread
And water sure. We shall be fed,
If all is left, and we are pure,
Reproach and suffering will be sure.
A bitter cup we have to drink,
'Tis a hard life, I sometimes think,
Out in the world, no scrip or purse,
Our friends look cold, and this is worse.
I often stop to weep and sigh,
And almost wish that I could die;
I look to Christ, and then I see
One who was rich, made poor for me.
I hear him say—"The birds have nests,
And foxes holes in which to rest,"
"The Son of man," I hear him say,
"No place his sacred head to lay."
My murmurings now have gone and fled;
I'll follow Christ, my living Head;
I'll keep the faith and fight by grace,
And so I'll run the heavenly race.
We suffer on and will not fear,
The better day is drawing near;
Pilgrims and strangers we must be,
If we would live and reign with Thee;
O Lord, inspire our hearts anew,
And help us all our journey through.

L. Boutell.

For the Crisis.

Swarm of Bees out West.

HIVED IN A LOG CABIN, BY W. P.

Be Abiding, Abounding, Abundant, Active.
Be Becoming, Better, Benevolent, Beneficent.
Be Constant, Circumspect, Charitable, Courteous.
Be Delightsome, Discreet, Dutiful, Devoted.
Be Esteemed, Enterprising, Encouraged, Earnest.
Be Frank, Fearless, Friendly, Fruitful.
Be Good, Grateful, Gratuitous, Godly.
Be Homely, Healthy, Hospitable, Happy.
Be Innocent, Intellectual, Inspiring, Invulnerable.
Be Judicious, Just, Joy-inspiring, Justified.
Be Keen, Kind-hearted, Knowing, Kindly.
Be Laborious, Liberal, Lovely, Long-suffering.
Be Methodical, Moral, Mutual, Manly.
Be Neighborly, Natural, Notable, Noblest.
Be Old-fashioned, Observing, Obedient, Orthodox.
Be Pure, Perfect, Pacific, Pilgrims.
Be Quick-sighted, Qualified, Quieting, Quickened.
Be Reliable, Resolute, Religious, Right.
Be Stout, Subservient, Spiritual, Successful.
Be Unbiassed, Undoubted, Unfaulty, United.
Be Veracious, Vigorous, Valiant, Vital.
Be Wakeful, Working, Winning, Worthy.
Be Xn's (christians) X-like, Xemplary, ⋈.—Isa. 60: 22.
Be Yourself, Yea, Yearning, Yoke-fellows.
Be Zotetic, Zealotical, Zephyr-like, Zealous.

And the Alpha and Omega will be with you, now and forevermore. Amen. So let it be. Selah.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

Important Information.

Death by drowning is produced through the want of air to breathe—it is death similar to that produced by smothering. If respiration and its consequences, the circulation of blood, can be restored, the person will be saved; it is no more unlikely that this can be done in the case of persons immersed for some time in the water, than in cases of trance, where the vital functions are suspended for long periods. In this connection we commend to the perusal of all, the rules for the [illegible] given by the eminent English physician, Dr. Marshall Hall:—

1. Treat the patient instantly, on the spot, in the open air, exposing the face and chest to the breeze, except in severe weather.

2. To clear the throat. Place the patient gently on the face, with one wrist under the forehead; all fluids, and the tongue itself, then fall forward, leaving the entrance into the windpipe free. If there be breathing, wait and watch; if not, or if it fails,

3. To excite Respiration. Turn the patient well and instantly on his side, and excite the nostrils with snuff, or the throat with a feather, etc., and dash cold water on the face, previously rubbed warm. If there be no success, lose not a moment, but instantly

4. To imitate Respiration. Replace the patient on his face, raising and supporting the chest well on a folded coat or other article of dress. Turn the body very gently on the side, and a little beyond, and then briskly on the face, alternately repeating these measures deliberately, efficiently and perseveringly, fifteen times in the minute, occasionally varying the side. (When the patient reposes on the chest, this cavity is compressed by the weight of the body, and expiration takes place; when he is turned on the side, this pressure is removed, and inspiration occurs.) When the prone position is resumed, make equable, but efficient pressure, with quick movement, along the back of the chest, removing it immediately before rotation on the side. This first measure augments the expiration, the second commences inspiration. The result is respiration, and, if not too late, life.

5. To Induce Circulation and Warmth. Meantime, rub the limbs upwards, with firm, grasping pressure, and with energy, using handkerchief, etc. By this measure the blood is propelled along the veins towards the heart. Let the limbs be thus warmed and dried and then clothed, the bystanders supplying the requisite garments. Avoid the continuous warm bath, and the position on or inclined to the back. This treatment is to be persevered in for three or four hours, as it is the erroneous opinion that persons are irrecoverable because life does not soon make its appearance. Cases have come under the notice of the Royal Humane Society of successful result even after five hours.

Loss of Voice.

It is stated that "the younger Spurgeon, a minister of great promise, has lost his voice and is sinking into consumption." As he is superior in some respects to his renowned brother, his early death will be regretted by multitudes. Many young clergymen of great promise have prematurely died in consequence of their own mismanagement in one or two particulars. They speak on too high a key to begin with, not giving the lungs time to warm up, to bring themselves up to the effort. A good traveler does not start on a trot, when he wants his horse to make a good journey that day. John Nowland Maffit could speak with apparently a slight effort, at the end of an hour's sermon, loud enough to be heard by thousands; but he always commenced on a low key. His first hymn and prayer were scarcely audible. The next important point is to cool off very gradually before leaving the assembly, when the discourse is ended—very gradually indeed—and then, even in summer time, bundle up well before leaving the house, and walk away quickly. Many an excellent minister has sacrificed life by the neglect of these two precautions.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Cholera.—The following extract from the letter of a clergyman to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, presents a very simple, and, he says, effectual preventive of cholera, as well as a remedy of great power:—

"The preventive is simple, a teaspoonful of powdered charcoal taken three or four times a week in a cup of coffee or other liquid in the morning.

"When attacked with cholera a mixture of an ounce of charcoal, an ounce of laudanum, an ounce of brandy, or other spirits, may be given as follows, after being well shaken: a teaspoonful every five minutes. In half an hour I have known this effectually to relieve and stay the disease. As the patient becomes better the mixture may be given at longer intervals.

I have known a patient in the blue stage, and collapsed, perfectly recovered in a few hours.

"The charcoal was tried as a preventive on a large plantation in the Mauritius, and not a single individual out of eight hundred was attacked with cholera."

Hot Bread.—Dr. Bunting, who is now making experiments on the stomach of the famous Alexis St. Martin, says that hot bread does not digest. It ferments in the stomach, provokes inflammation, and is a fruitful producer of dyspepsia.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis [illegible] will be 13 cents a year to any part of [illegible] United States [illegible] Canada [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 204. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. [illegible]

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859, by C. F. Hudson, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Dist. of Mass.

Discussion of Human Destiny.

Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all?

AFFIRMATIVE, BY REV. C. F. HUDSON.

CHAPTER V.—(Concluded.)

§ 4. Is the selection of a Class to Immortality worthy of God?

I have freely admitted that God would not be just to himself if he were simply just to his creatures. True to his nature as love, he must bestow upon men more and better than they deserve. And because God is not only love, but infinite love, my opponent may think the conclusion direct and inevitable that God must bestow upon each moral creature the infinite boon of immortal life for which his moral constitution adapts him.

From this conclusion I dissent, for several reasons.

1. All analogy favors the idea of a sifting of the human species, and a conservation of the best, or of the individuals that mature. I have not time to array the facts in this analogy, but may refer to what I have said elsewhere on the subject, and quote as follows: "A true analogy would make the probation of mankind not an exception to the rule, but the highest example of it. The law of selection in the case of man is different; the end is the same. The vegetable lifeling is the sport of chance. The animal, with its spontaneity, can help and provide for itself; subject, however, to many dangers which it can not avert, and to man's dominion. Man, by his free will, is elevated to a higher rank,—beyond the reach of fate, but not of hazard. Indeed, the nations of men that have not heard the Word of Life are scarcely beyond the reach of fate; though strictly, as moral beings, they are salvable, and perish through unbelief in Him who is 'not far from every one of them.' Those who dwell in Christendom stand higher than they, and may fall further. Yet the design of the species is accomplished in those who are perfected, and who shall never perish, because moral perfectness is an end in itself, and, when attained, may be ever maintained. Man, as a race, is still subject to the sifting analogies that underlie him. As free, he is called upon to choose for himself, to make his calling and election sure, to acquit himself as a man. Failing of this, he is rejected, or reprobate, as refuse and worthless. He is likened to tares, to the useless produce of the fisher's net, to the field of briers and stones, whose end is to be burned. Condemned as morally unworthy, his reprobation has a higher ethical significance, while its literal import remains." (Future Life, pp. 239, 240.)

2. While God is bound, in justice or equity, not to make existence a curse, he is not bound to make it a blessing. That there is such an obligation is very strongly asserted by Mr. Ballou, in his "Divine Character Vindicated," where he thinks that "human existence, if enforced at all, should be to each and every individual, when taken as a whole, a good, and not an evil, a blessing, and not a curse." (p. 122.)

This would be true if man had no moral freedom, and were not capable of deserving evil as well as good. But this fact seems to me entirely overlooked in Mr. B.'s statement. But if man may deserve evil at all, he may deserve evil on the whole; and though his continuance in a sinful and evil immortality would be past all reason, yet there may be the best reason for his failure of immortality. And one may so fail that his brief existence shall be a loss rather than a gain. We may well suppose that this was the case with Judas. "Woe unto him by whom the Son of man is betrayed. Better were it for that man if he had never been born."

[illegible] cause we would like to have it, we may persuade ourselves that we have some claim to it, or that it is not fairly withholden from us. But if bestowed, it is and ever will be an infinite gratuity.

3. In the economy of God's empire of holy blessedness, a comparative claim of one individual may be overruled by the higher claim of another. In point of right, I must yield to any one who can fill my place in the universe better than I can. Even in propriety and benevolence, I might wish to yield my place to such an one, for the general good. And if I have impaired my capacity of usefulness, it is not for me to say that infinite power, and wisdom, and goodness too, can not replace me. Especially if incapacity and deterioration have gone so far that the process of recovery may be slow and difficult.

4. Virtue is heroic. And it may be worthy of God to select, and to elect, those who are morally heroic for the inheritance of immortality. The forms of heroism may be as various as the Christian virtues and graces; yet it may be one essential element of all Christian virtues. Self-sacrifice, self-denial, is essentially and peculiarly Christian. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he can not be my disciple." And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, can not be my disciple. Though we may not take those words of Christ literally, they will contain the principle I have named. God has a right to be choice respecting the members of his family, and to require of those who aspire to that honor the most strenuous efforts to prove worthy of it. With all their differences, a close resemblance has been observed between the Stoic and the Christian systems of morals. And the Stoics held the immortality of a class. Christ, teaching a higher virtue and offering a higher glory, may bestow such immortality by a higher right. The Christian race differs from the Grecian games, as it has more crowns than one; yet we must strive, if we would triumph. It is a true hymn that says:

> "Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve,
> And press with vigor on;
> A heavenly race demands thy zeal,
> And an immortal crown.
>
> 'Tis God's all-animating voice
> That calls thee from on high;
> 'Tis his own hand presents the prize
> To thine aspiring eye.
>
> A cloud of witnesses around
> Hold thee in full survey!
> Forget the steps already trod,
> And onward urge thy way."

§ 5. Is the immortality of a Class unkind to man?

Here I must meet a very common objection based on the parental feeling, and will close with one or two direct arguments.

1. It is not a hardship that one should fail to be a parent of immortality. Many persons, as deserving and as affectionate as the average, are never parents at all, and never will be unless there is marriage in the heavenly state. George Washington was father of a country, but never of a child. It is not essential, then, to the blessedness of the saved, that they should be able to claim certain ones as their offspring. You may say that childless saints will be strangers to certain feelings of celestial joy; perhaps they will; yet in the resources of the celestial kingdom they shall lack no supply for any noble and holy capacity of their being; the Lord is their Shepherd, they shall not want.

But to be childless, says one, is not so hard as bereavement, and loss of children. And here I encounter the whole force of the Universalist sentiment: A parent would not let a child suffer or die, if he could prevent it. If the Heavenly Father, who loves us better than we love our children, allows suffering and death, it must be because he has something better in store to prove his love.

Such is the argument, offered to show that each human family must find all its members in the heavenly mansions. It seems to me inadequate for the following reasons:

(1.) Parental affection is commonly a modification of self-love. The child is a second self. That is why one cares more for his own child than for his neighbor's. But one's desire for a child's immortality should be of as high a moral type as the desire for personal immortality. The promise is no less rigid to the child than to the parent; "To those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality." If, then, the parental feeling, and, I may add, the feelings that lead to parentage,—which, like other qualities may be inherited,—if these are subordinated to other sentiments of piety, I do not know but one may have high hopes of [illegible] there is a "christian nurture" which may devote and train the child for the higher life from its earliest infancy.

But if the parental regard is worldly, and the child is from the first devoted to and trained for the world, one can not complain if it avails no further. And even if the parent shall rise to nobler aims, and shall deplore the fruits of past ungodliness, He who is "able of the stones to raise up children to Abraham" may grant other consolation than an unbroken family circle in the kingdom of eternal life. To be at all a parent of immortality is exalted honor. Is there unkindness if one is not more?

(2.) Although God is not bound, against the perversion of free will, to make each man's existence on the whole a blessing, still as matter of fact those who finally perish may have much to be thankful for. Most human beings seem to enjoy more than they suffer. And this may be true even if existence is finally lost. It may be almost a law of life that the pains of its decay should not outweigh the joys it brings. It may still be true that the failure of immortal life shall make it morally better that one had never been born. And they who perish may feel this on the same principle that disappointed lovers so often think life a curse—only with a million fold more reason.

I have used the phrase "parent of immortality," but only for argument's sake. The Scriptures, I think, teach a higher parentage than human, for the immortal life. They who have "power to become the sons of God" are "born not of flesh, nor of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God." God is the "Father of Spirits," and the distinction between soul and spirit may apply in this argument.

2. The power of evil habit and of memory may render immortality burdensome. The time has been when death was deemed an emancipation from all earthly habits and minor differences of character. The good, it was thought, would be perfectly blessed as soon as they were dead, and the bad perfectly wretched. And all the good and all the bad were respectively put on nearly the same level. In accordance with this philosophy, or lack of philosophy, some of the early Universalists regarded death as putting an end to all distinctions of character. Sin came of the body; and to be out it was to be in holiness and in heaven.

Maturer thought has changed all that. The soul, we now think, has its own laws, as every other real thing must have; and all its changes and improvements must observe those laws. Death is no longer the panacea for all its ills. The other world may be very unlike the present; yet it may bear strong analogies. Fatal as its atmosphere may be to those who have rejected its life, its gentle zephyrs may not at once heal all the soul's ills. Though God works miracles at sundry times in his teaching and training of the human race, we may doubt whether there are miracles in the general economy of man's destiny. The result is, we must have some apprehensions, lest the laws of our physical and moral being may, even beyond the tomb, make death better than life.

In bodily sickness death is often preferred to the pains and weariness of slow convalescence. Just so evil habits of thought, feeling, and action, may require so long and weary a purgation on the other side, and may put one so far behind his companions in the heavenly race, that he would prefer not to tax their kindness, or seek their company. One may be so imbruted by habits of unbelief that the capacity for faith in disinterested kindness shall be gone. Cunning philosophers have doubted every such thing here,—who shall say they may not doubt there? Unhappy personal relations may fatally threaten all future happiness. The seducer may prefer never to meet the victim, all whose hopes he has sacrificed for lust. The murderer may decline the courtesies of heaven with one for whom he could find no room on earth. And if as some have thought, the memory retains all one's past history, how many may be so burdened and stung with poignant recollections that even the freeness and largeness of divine mercy can not give them rest. I believe in God's infinite power. But infinite power can not work contradictions; and it will not disregard the laws of created being, or of man's moral nature. And if God should administer the cup of Lethe to any, and so destroy or change a part of their personal being, out of kindness, he may also, for aught we know, kindly let them die, and may fill his universal domain with those who have earlier and more fully consecrated themselves to goodness.

3. Many persons, not the worst of men, have no desire for immortality. This desire has been called natural and instinctive, and we hear of the inextinguishable [illegible] being. But, granting that this is the rule, and that it proves the actual immortality of those who rightly cherish it, there are exceptions so marked as to claim attention, if not to limit the argument. And for examples I will not name those who have doubted immortality because they have never distinctly heard or thought of it, but those who have lived in the midst of the sentiment.

If I mistake not, Joseph Barker, well known as having renounced Christianity, eschews all faith in an after life, and, apparently, all desire therefor. I do not think him an immoral man, though he has shared as a "reprobate" in the honors of a book-dedication. I would not judge him, or say a word against him. I do not devote him to death. But I name him as one who has been an able preacher of the Gospel; was specially likely to fall in love with immortality; and is too acute to be necessarily prejudiced against it by what others say or think about it. He now thinks this life and its comforts are as much as any of us ought to wish or care for. I am very sure if he should die out with the rest of us, he would be the last man to complain. And I verily believe if he should be called to die only with a few followers, he would not wish to be disappointed, but would bear his peculiar fate as proudly as a hero. I may be mistaken in my man; but are there not such?

A more noted example is David Strauss, the author of "The Life of Jesus," which has made such a stir with its mythical theory. His acquaintance with the doctrine of immortality is even larger than that of Barker; but he rejects it all. In his later work, entitled "Glaubenslehre" or the Doctrine of Faith, he concludes: "The idea of a future world is the last enemy which speculative criticism has to oppose, and, if possible, to overcome."

He, certainly, will not complain of death. I do not say how much such opinions may prove in the question of what will be. But in the present question we must consult the choice and preference of men as they are, especially if they be able men, who may speak for themselves. And upon their testimony I submit the question whether the doctrine I hold, which is infinitely better than their wishes, is at all unmerciful.

For the Crisis.

Dreams of To-morrow.

We believe there are none, who are endowed with average powers of mind, however low or degraded their situation, but what occasionally at some still hour, thinks of to-morrow, and with it usually comes a sort of satisfaction, although in many cases entirely unfounded, yet arises on the account of our clinging so tenaciously to hope, or otherwise hope clinging to us, being as it were a part of us. We have seen the slave of alcohol when not under its immediate influence, grow pale as he considers on the morrow. The very thought brings conviction, and he trembles,—full well he knows the path he is walking; and now he realizes the dangers, and beholds the inevitable end. It is then compassion whispers in his ears, she pleads and chides; his helpless infants rise before him, and all the fondness of a father's love is called forth, and involuntarily a noble resolution crowds itself into that mind, that has long dwelt upon scenes too revolting to mention, and he fancies himself a reformed man with plenty and content smiling about him on the morrow, and his sunken eyes brighten in anticipation. But how deceitful are the workings of the human heart! how dangerous is procrastination!

The laughing child, whose horizon has scarcely been dimmed by a cloud, will talk of to-morrow, and as his countenance brightens, his eye dilates with pleasure, you who can discern, can read, and that unmistakably, that this child walks his journey of to-day cheered by the bright anticipations of to-morrow.

Ask that student who is toiling up the rugged acclivity of knowledge, for what purpose he passes those sleepless nights, and wearies that lofty brow in plunging into the depths of science, and methinks a smile will play over that pale face, as he tells you of to-morrow.

The weary mariner, who has been tossed on the turbulent and tempestuous waves of the ocean, dreams of to-morrow, while yet the waves roll mountains high, and toss his fragile bark as if in solemn mockery of his illusive dream. The warrior in the midst of battle, who fears not the cannon's destructive mouth, and who stands undaunted, when the thunder of artillery is shaking as it were the elements—will point you to the future, to-morrow, when fame shall twine a wreath for his brow more lasting than that [illegible] the monarch, because enshrined in the hearts of the people! [illegible]

But of all the dreams that afford [illegible] pleasure, or lasting satisfaction, are those which are experienced by the christian; for he, too, thinks of to-morrow, and how often, when in the dark valleys of life does he contrast the present to-day with the future to-morrow. To-day he is a subject of sorrow, sickness and death. To-morrow a recipient of happiness and immortality. To-day, friends that he loves are taken from him, some are resting in his own church-yard, while others are far away, whose funeral dirge has been the wild chorus of the waves of old ocean. To-morrow he dreams of a happy reunion, and though sorrowful, he walks on cheered by these anticipations.

But in dreaming of to-morrow, let us not be deceived; if our hopes are founded upon anything but our desires or self-love, let us beware. Let us remember if we would reap rich harvests in the future, we must sow the seeds of usefulness. For "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If we sow the seeds of folly, we shall reap destruction.

Reader, "make your mark;" raise the standard, and undeviatingly try to follow our Guiding Star, that most certainly will bring you through the dark mazes, which you may be called to pass through, and safely bring you to that bright to-morrow. Let not your heart soften, or your vigor relax; in which case, you may be willing to think you cannot make another advance; nor let your eyes be even turned towards the gardens of pleasure and sinfulness, lest you approach and enter, and there lose the happiness of innocence, and forget your original intentions, and unawares are entangled in the labyrinths of inconsistency, and be hurled into the chasm of darkness and despair, where no bright to-morrow will illumine your path.

SARAH E. SCOTT.
Vernon, Vt.

For the Crisis.

A few of many Reasons why I wish to be in a consecrated state.

If I am not wholly set apart for the Lord, to acknowledge him in all my ways, then I am unprepared to engage in the great work of warning sinners of their approaching doom. When by the help of the Spirit they are aroused, the cry forced, what shall I do to be saved? how unfit to tell them, how vain to present the plan of salvation, until I am consecrated. Again, when any member of the body is struggling against the severities of the tempter's cruel power, hope nearly fled, apparently almost ready to sink in despair, thinking one so indifferent, so neglectful, yea, so vile at times, can never again hope in the mercy of God, can never again expect to gain the promised land; it is good to cheer the fainting, desponding one, by pointing to the Lamb of God—the perfect Sacrifice—the great Advocate, who ever lives to intercede for agonizing ones. But if the mind has become so darkened that this fails to cheer, then how good to retire alone before God, and ask him to do the work; ask him to lift upon the erring one the light of his countenance once more, for Jesus' sake, and feel it will be done. One not consecrated is inefficient for this work.

When disease presses upon the frail frames of those we love in the gospel, and fast consumes them, we realize that soon they must be borne to the silent earth; we bow submissively; we consider they are taken from the evil to come; we are not ignorant of Satan's devices; we believe God doeth all things—this is the language of a consecrated child.

But how few are truly consecrated! Yet praise to God for the few self-denying, cross-bearing ones, who consider they are not their own, but, having been bought with a price, glorify God by keeping themselves unspotted, by obeying every gospel requirement, by subjecting themselves to others, instead of consulting selfish interests. My brother, sister, are you among these few? O, am I among them? Spirit of the Eternal Father! help to settle the question correctly. Teach us our position, lest we be summoned before thy bar deceived, trusting in something aside from the blood of the crucified Jesus. O show us that thou art pure and canst not view one that is impure with pleasure. Show us the gospel way of becoming pure, by obeying thy word, acting constantly in thy fear, trusting in the blood of Jesus for salvation.

Fearfully perilous indeed is the present time. We need the whole gospel armor. Let us see that every part is on, and well girded. Where can we dispense with it? from morn till eve we need it; we need it in the family circle, in the more public affairs of life, in administering to others. O yes, sisters, we need it while receiving calls from christians and especially from worldlings and backsliders. Poor creatures! they might not have been amid the careless throng, treading the downward road [illegible] they but have come in contact with more of the real salt of the earth. Let us lift our hearts to God, that we may have that salt in ourselves that shall have effect upon others.

To the church in Danielsonville: Though separated, hearts are made one in the gospel. Remain one in Spirit, one in purposing to obtain the Kingdom. Prayers are no less earnest for absent loved ones. I exhort you to be earnest, to prove yourselves good soldiers of the cross. Pray often; seek to know the will of God; confide in each other—you are worthy of each other's confidence—give the enemy no advantage over you; let him not fill your mind with suspicion; if you don't know an evil, have that charity that thinks no evil. Frequent the prayer circle; don't let trifles absent you. Do not seek for rest here; the Rest is soon to be given. We are engaged in a warfare now, but if we endure to the end we shall be crowned with an eternal home in the kingdom of God.

> Homeward bound pilgrim, wayworn and weary,
> Dangers and perils thy lone steps attend,
> Fear all around thee, the way dark and dreary.
> Still press thee onward, there's a prize at the end.
> O, calmly view the black clouds hanging o'er thee,
> Deep be thy peace, as the storm gathers round;
> Oft rest thy thoughts on the prospects before thee,
> Dauntless and fearless, be still homeward bound.

JANE D. ROBERTS.
New Hartford, Conn.

For the Crisis.

Epitome of the Illinois Annual Conference.

Conference met in Kelley township, Warren county, June 10th, 1859. Organized as follows: M. Chandler, President; H. H. Janes, Vice President; W. Pratt, Secretary; J. C. Shaw, Cor. Secretary; G. W. Rathburn, Treasurer. Voted, All brethren in attendance be invited to take part in the deliberations of the conference.

W. Pratt addressed the conference in relation to its object, giving an outline of our wide field, and its wants, and what our friends in the limits of the conference have a right to expect from this session; hoped divine wisdom would aid us in our deliberations, that to some extent at least (if not in full) their expectations may be met. The conference then listened with interest to brethren who gave a brief account of the cause in their vicinity.

Bro. G. W. Herd, of Kelly township, said, "Our church is in a prosperous condition. The people without are disposed favorably, and listen to our views with much interest. We number twenty-seven or twenty-eight. Have a Sabbath School, some thirty or more scholars, and a Bible class."

Bro. Gibson from Indian Grove church, remarked, "Our little church, I trust, are all striving for a home in the coming kingdom. We are living in harmony and making some advancement, I think. We number twenty. We meet next Lord's day to organize a Sabbath School."

Bro. Black said, "I feel grateful that we are so pleasantly situated, and I am satisfied the spirit and love of God is with us."

Elder G. W. Rathburn spoke of his labors. "One year ago I was set apart for the gospel ministry. I have traveled thirty and forty miles, and preached three times on Sunday in Scott Co., Iowa, and other places. Found ears to hear and much interest manifested. I came to this place and commenced meetings. I preached night after night and visited families day after day. I labored hard, and talked fifteen hours in twenty-four. Met with some opposition, but after laboring three weeks I began to see truth taking effect. The result was, I have seen two churches raised up, and I am thankful to see them banded together. I have often been on my face in the dust before God, and I feel satisfied God directed my steps to this place. I have labored in this immediate vicinity with some success."

Elder W. Pratt gave some facts in relation to the truth. "Have traveled somewhat extensively and preached constantly. He had aimed to present those truths that would arrest the direful influence of false theories; was glad to inform the friends that he had seen good accomplished. In some places the mass had been reached; prejudice, bigotry, and sectarianism have given away and an investigation was the result, to see whether these things were so. Spiritualism had found [illegible] Bible taught that [illegible]

[illegible] tionalist minister came out strong on that question and took the most of the church with him. Wherever I have preached the subject fully, I find many that admit that doctrine to be the most harmonious view they ever heard and wonder why it is not preached more. In Ripley, Brown county, a Christian preacher had come out and was preaching it. I did not learn the effect on the church. I find one serious difficulty to encounter in my travels. We can raise up churches, but no one to feed them, hence, left destitute. Bro. Chandler had been laboring at one of my appointments in Brown county with success. Quite a number added to the church. There is still a good interest. There is an ear to hear on every hand. The field is large and laborers few. In the place where I live we have had some influence that has been retarding our progress. Some friends have been effected by the discovery of gold at Pike's Peak. Others are talking of leaving for Kansas and California. Some had made up their minds to stay by the stuff, or fight alone if required."

Elder Scott. "Have been mostly confined at home, and probably will be during the season, looking after his temporal affairs. Preaches part of the time on Sundays, to good acceptance. We are deprived of a place of worship, and have been since last January. The Baptists closed the doors of the church against us, when they had no more right to do so than they had to turn us out of our own houses. Nevertheless, truth is spreading and we trust God will overrule it for good."

Voted, G. W. Herd, G. W. Rathburn, W. Pratt, appointed as business committee. Voted, to adjourn till four o'clock P. M.

Met at the adjourned hour and listened to the report of the Evangelist. Elder Chandler said, "I commenced my work in connection with the appointment by the annual Conference held in Ottawa last May, 1858. First quarterly meeting was held in Princeton, Iowa, June 3d. The last year I have held sixteen quarterly meetings. Extent of country that I have been under the necessity of traveling over, to fill these appointments, is about four hundred miles north and south, and one hundred and fifty miles east and west. The whole distance of travel the last year has been about three thousand miles. I have preached about three hundred and sixty-five sermons. I have baptised nearly one hundred. Organised five churches and set in order a number of others. And I can say the [illegible] the cause is on the rise. There is a great interest to hear all over the conference. Calls on every hand for help."

REPORT.

MONEY AND PRESENTS RECEIVED DURING THE YEAR.

I.—Rock Island District.

Sweetland Church, Iowa	[illegible]
	[illegible]

II.—Military Tract District, Ill.

St. Alban's Church and Warsaw Prairie	[illegible]
Walker's Neck Church	[illegible]
Ripley Church	[illegible]
	[illegible]

III.—Galena District.

Elizabeth Church	[illegible]
	[illegible]

IV.—Fox River District.

Ottawa Church	[illegible]
Earlville Church	[illegible]
Shabbona Grove Church	[illegible]
Amboy Church	[illegible]
	[illegible]

V.—Received from friends and churches where I did not hold quarterly meetings, yet labored with them.

Churches in Warren County, Ill.	[illegible]
Friends at Onion Grove	[illegible]
J. C. Shaw	[illegible]
Friends at Viroquois, Wis.	[illegible]
Seneca, Church	[illegible]
Kingsbury Church, Ind.	[illegible]
Whole amount received	[illegible]
My traveling expenses during the year	[illegible]
Leaving a balance	[illegible]

MOSES CHANDLER.

Conference accepted the report. Conference listened to reports from brethren relative to their interest in the cause and the interest in their localities.

Bro. Benj. H. Osborn, of Peoria, Ill., formerly of Bridgeport, Conn., said, "[illegible] I have felt for fifteen years [illegible] interest in the Advent truths [illegible] Advent truth is a [illegible] brethren have got [illegible] God's dealings with [illegible] conclusive evidence [illegible]

Bro. S. C. Shaw spoke, "I still have the same interest in this blessed cause, yet I have not done much. I think if we could have preaching, a church might be established. Only myself and some of our family are believers. Some brethren within four or five miles, would be glad to have some efficient laborer come among us." Bro. S. lives near Watega.

Bro. Hubbard said, "I do not know as I have anything to say that is encouraging or discouraging. Some have been waiting for us to turn infidels, but myself and wife standing firm, some have concluded to read and ascertain the reasons for our hope. They have become favorably disposed. Glad to have some of our preaching brethren come among us. Bro. Chapman was there in past days, but we have now a new class and I think some good could be done."

Voted, to adjourn until next morning at 9 o'clock.

Met at the hour appointed. Business committee reported.

Whereas; In the providence and mercy of God we are again permitted to meet in conference, and hear from our brethren scattered abroad, and learn their trials, prosperity and wants, and

Whereas; We are cheered to learn the blessed effect of the truth we hold so dear—arousing many to search the Scriptures—turning from error and embracing truth—from sin to righteousness; that this glorious work may continue, therefore,

Resolved—We make our mission during the coming year—if time permit—a special subject of prayer to Almighty God for his blessing to attend our efforts in our wide field,—knowing a Paul may plant and Apollos water, but the Lord giveth the increase.

Resolved—We not only pray earnestly that our efforts may be crowned with success, but we urge our friends to take hold of the work with more zeal and vigor and prosecute the same with that energy and fortitude that the enterprise in which we are engaged demands.

Resolved—While we make christian character the only test of fellowship, and the proclamation of the speedy coming kingdom our great and special work, we keep the blessed truth of life only through Christ before the people, believing it holds a position in the system of divine truth, that, and that only can strike a death blow to the wide-spreading and direful influence of Spiritualism in all its varied forms, that is so prevalent in this age.

CHRISTIAN DUTIES.

Whereas; In the providence of God our field of labor is in the wide west, where laborers are few; and, whereas our churches in many localities are destitute and suffering for the want of some of God's servants to break to them the bread of life, and

Whereas; Some of the servants have left for other fields—others are unable to labor in consequence of ill health, and still others have been under the necessity of engaging in some lawful business for the support of their families, therefore,

Resolved—We recommend to our churches to heed our Lord's injunction and pray earnestly to our heavenly Father to send forth more laborers into this part of His vineyard.

Resolved—We urge our friends as steward of the Lord's goods, to consecrate freely of their substance to relieve the poor, and see that the wants of the servants who labor among them are supplied, that they may devote their whole time to the work of God, whereby they may be more useful to the church and world, and more effectually fulfill their high and holy calling.

Resolved—We recommend to our churches to enter into some arrangements by which they may be able to support preaching part, or all of the time.

Resolved—We urge our friends to encourage and aid those promising and devoted young men, that feel called to the work and have a gift to teach, that they may be able to go forward in their holy calling, and not become discouraged by the opposition and frowns of the world, for want of sympathy on the part of our brethren.

SPEEDY COMING KINGDOM.

Whereas; We understand the prophetic Scriptures give unmistakable evidence of the near approach of the second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, and

Whereas; Professed christendom, if they do not oppose, take little interest in this all-important and thrilling subject, therefore we deem it important to state plainly our position; hence,

Resolved—That, consecutive prophecy gives earth's history from the Babylonian empire to the end of this dispensation.

Resolved—The prophetic periods in the book of Daniel the prophet and in John the revelator carry us down the stream of time to the time of the end and also to the end of the gospel dispensation, and terminate near the time in which we live, which is a strong evidence of speedy redemption.

Resolved—The natural signs which were to precede the advent of our Lord, have become history, hence, the church is warranted in lifting up her head "knowing her redemption draweth nigh."

Resolved—The present distress with perplexity, the great commotion among the nations, the marshalling and tumultuous [illegible] of the armies of earth, betoken, unmistakably, the great gathering—the last great battle—and the coming of the King of kings to establish His everlasting reign [illegible] Resolved, [illegible] in these great [illegible] to the saints, to heed [illegible] injunction, "What manner of [illegible] to be in all holy conversation [illegible] looking for and hasting [illegible] the day of God."

[illegible] chance of an [illegible] was next considered. After the remarks of several brethren in relation to the propriety of sending out an evangelist—considering the pressure of the times, they concluded that two could be more easily and better supported than one; hence, Voted,—That two evangelists be chosen for the coming year. On balloting, Brn. M. Chandler and W. Pratt were chosen to fill the office.

Voted, The evangelists make a report quarterly, through the paper, of their receipts and traveling expenditures.

Voted, Elder W. Pratt be instructed to correspond with ministering brethren east, and other localities, for the purpose of inviting and persuading them to come and help us in our large and destitute field of labor.

Voted, We recommend all of our churches to establish Sunday Schools and Bible classes.

Voted, The conference tender its thanks to our friends in this place for their kindness and hospitality.

Voted, The minutes of this conference be sent to the "Crisis" and "Herald" for publication.

Voted, The conference adjourn to meet the last Tuesday in May, 1860; the place, left with the standing committee.

MOSES CHANDLER, President.
WALTER PRATT, Secretary.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 3, 1859.

Poultney.

Knowing the interest felt among our readers for the cause of Christ in this place, we would say for their comfort, the good work here is still onward. Several have been converted recently, and are rejoicing in the blessed hope of the gospel; among the rest, is one of Dr. Kane's men who accompanied him in the "Arctic Expedition." He is from Philadelphia. He was stopping a few days in this place, and was persuaded to attend one of our meetings, when the Spirit and word took hold of his mind with power. Within a few days he found peace, and has since been buried with Christ in baptism. He says he had not been in church more than four times in eleven years. He was one of those reasonable men that could not believe in the doctrine of eternal torment; or a God that will eternally torture his creatures. Now all looks plain and consistent to his mind. The attributes of our heavenly Father and his Son stand forth in all their goodness, mercy and lovely nature. He sees justice and mercy combined in the destruction of the wicked, but not in their eternal "preservation" "in indescribable agonies."

We have never attended better prayer meetings than those here enjoyed. In the midst of haying, we have had present from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. Twelve more have been baptized, making in all one hundred and two. The church numbers one hundred and eighteen members, and several others purpose to join soon. Many are under conviction. The good work is still onward. Pray for Poultney.

Peace.

Louis Napoleon and the Emperor of Austria have concluded a treaty of peace upon the following bases:—

"1st. The Italian Confederacy under the honorary Presidency of the Pope.

2d. The Emperor of Austria concedes his rights in Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who transfers them to the King of Sardinia.

3d. The Emperor of Austria preserves Venice; but she will form an integral part of the Italian Confederation."

This treaty was signed at Villafranca, July 11th, but is producing much dissatisfaction. Says the London News:—

"History will call the Emperor to a strict account for having made war on false pretensions, and signed a mock and selfish peace—a peace that leaves Austria impregnably fortified in Northern Italy; that connects Central Italy to the patronage of the Pope, and to the constant menace of military intervention on the part of the Pope's patrons and protectors; that takes no account of the welfare of the people, and substitutes for national independence a confederation under the lock and key of Austrian garrisons. The Emperor of France has sown the seeds of future wars, and the closer we examine the pretended pacification, the more futile and iniquitous it appears."

Others, in speaking of the treaty of peace, say it is a "patched affair—a mere prolongation of the armistice; that it would fail to satisfy the French people, would cause discontent to the Italians, and chagrin to Austria, and that amidst so many complications, even were the parties involved sincerely desirous of peace, circumstances would arise to disappoint their wishes."

The London News, when speaking of the "moderation" of Napoleon, about which so much has been said, remarks:—

"It was a chivalrous, but not, to speak by the card, a 'moderate' act, to put two hundred thousand men in line in order to turn a rival Emperor out of Northern Italy. But having done so, it will not be, strictly speaking, an act of absolute 'moderation' to stop short at the point where the real difficulties of the campaign begin, and [illegible] sacrificed some thousand hecatombs to the God of battles, and now, "when France is satisfied Europe is content," let me make things pleasant with Austria, and go back and celebrate the St. Napoleon at Notre Dame.' This sort of 'moderation' may do very well as an operation for the rise on the Bourse, but as distant and disinterested spectators, we have a right to ask whether it would deserve the satisfaction of Italy and of Europe?"

The treaty of peace must be very obnoxious to the entire republican party in Italy, because the Pope is made "the honorary President" of "the Italian confederation." He is the very one whom they hate worst, and consider the chief mover in causing their bitter oppression. They have no sympathy with his abominable deeds. A correspondent from Florence, in the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, when speaking of the massacre committed by the Pope's troops at Perugia, says:—

"The feeling of abhorrence excited by the atrocities committed is extreme, and the sentiment of hostility towards the Papal government, both within and beyond the limits of the States of the Church, has become more profound than before."

Again, the republican party will be exceedingly dissatisfied with Napoleon for leaving the Austrians in possession of their stronghold in the "famous quadrangle" of fortifications, when he promised to liberate the Italians from Austrian bondage. Although the first act of the drama has come to a conclusion sooner than we expected, we see no prospect of continued peace, but shall look with deep interest for the opening of the next scene, which, doubtless, will be still more dreadful than the one just terminated.

Another Italian correspondent, when referring to the affair at Perugia, says:—

"The 'holy father' has given the death blow to his temporal dominion, and that no country, Catholic or Protestant, in this nineteenth century of ours, will dare to protest in favor of the Pope, if all his subjects in self-defence throw off his stupid, barbarous, besotted yoke, and ally themselves to the other States of Italy, under Victor Emanuel."

Theodore Parker writes from Montreux, Switzerland, and says, "The causes of war are everywhere."

The following shows the feeling of the Jews in Germany:

"There are revolutionary elements in Germany which have not yet come into service, and which are very formidable. The Jewish element, for example.

It is unknown. The Jews, except in certain corners of the provinces where they carry on commerce, have no particular role in France. Those who have appeared are incidents, and are not properly facts and signs. The Jewish venom is not felt in the unbelieving mass.

In Germany it is altogether different. The Jews occupy almost the first role, and are revolutionists of the first brood. They have writers, philosophers, poets, orators, publicists, bankers, and in the head and heart all the weight of their ancient ignominy. They will have a redoubtable day for Germany, followed perhaps by a dreadful day for themselves."

The Neapolitans have addressed a circular to their King, Frances II., in which they say:—

"The thrones of the Peninsula are ceasing to be anything more than a memory. Some have fallen, never again to be raised up. Yours tremble beneath your feet.... Will you seal your ears to the thunders of the voices of your people? Woe to kings who sleep on their cannon! An idea, when it is general, when it is sovereign, laughs at grape shot, and scorns the bayonets of despotism, which turn against those who wield them.... Now is the acceptable time. Happy you, if you will seize it to your advantage; unhappy you, if hesitating you forget who you are. Remember that your father lived eleven years of exile, of palpitation and of fear; that his dwelling was a rock, his miserable palladium an evil counselled policy. What was the end of it? You know. You will not have forgotten the 22d of May.... The sole recollection that we are Italians, will avenge the outrages of our country, and wash its wounds in the blood of its traitors. Consider! decide!"

Says the London News:—

"There never was a question on which the national will was more deep and fixed than the question of the future fate of Italy.... We want to see Italy free as speedily and as completely as possible.... To talk of the French Emperor's right to dispose of Lombardy because he has driven the Austrians beyond its confines, and of Austrian's right to insist on the retention of Venetia because its towns are still garrisoned by her troops, is to defy anew the brute right of mere possession by force, against which the war, as a war of principle, was avowedly begun."

We see no prospect that the peace can be of long continuance. The war elements, like mighty waters that meet with obstructions in their course, accumulate only to spread greater devastation in their terrible progress.

Ancona.

This is an important seaport town on the Adriatic, recently evacuated by the Austrian troops. It is claimed by the Pope. The following shows the popular feeling in this section of the Pontiff's dominions:

"At about eleven o'clock in the morning the people proceeded to the palace of the magistracy and presented an address, in which they expressed their firm intention of co-operating in the war against Austria. The gonfaloniere then waited in person upon the delegate, the people occupying the great square. Ladies were seen placing themselves in front of the people to prevent [illegible] goons arrived, but they also were received with cheers. In the afternoon the delegate resigned his functions to the municipality, and left the town on the following day.

The gendarmes retired to Osimo, the chasseurs and artillerymen in the fortress remained passive spectators of the occurrence, while the municipality published a proclamation, stating that they intended to invoke the protection of Victor Emanuel."

From the foregoing it may be seen that the Pope has a very troublesome family to manage, and that his children are losing all respect for their "holy (?) father." Indeed, they already hate him and his institutions so bitterly, that they can hardly wait for the time to arrive when, like blood hounds, they can be let loose on the object of their disgust and utterly destroy him.

On the 20th of June the Pope issued an address to the cardinals, in which he excommunicates the revolutionists. The following is an extract from the address:—

"It is because after having, by means of protestations, sent through our Cardinals of State to all the Ambassadors and Ministers of neighboring Powers, expressed our disapproval and detestation of the late culpable attempts at rebellion, that now, venerable brothers, raising our voice in this consistory, we protest with the whole force of our soul against all that the rebels have dared to do in various places, and by virtue of our supreme authority we disapprove, reject and abolish each and all of the acts committed by Bologna, Ravenna, Perugia, and other places, against our legitimate and sacred authority, and against the principal of the Holy See. By whatever name they are called, in whatever way they are performed, we declare these acts to be vain, illegitimate and sacrilegious. More than this, for the benefit of all we recall to memory the excommunications and the other ecclesiastical pains and penalties inflicted at various times by the sacred canons and the decrees of council, especially by that of Trent, against all those who have dared in any way to rebel against the temporal power of the Roman Pontiff; and we further declare that those who in Bologna, Ravenna, Perugia, or any other city, have dared to violate or trouble the paternal jurisdiction of St. Peter by deed or conspiracy, or in any other way, have already wretchedly fallen under their action."

France and England.

It is evident that the French under a Bonaparte most earnestly desire to avenge the battle of Waterloo. They wish to see England humbled before the name that stands above every other name in the estimation of a Frenchman. Notwithstanding the pretended friendship of France for England, a strong and secret desire, of which we frequently get a glimpse, is evidently abiding in every Frenchman's bosom, for the hour to arrive when they can plant their triumphal banner upon British soil. The following from a Paris correspondent gives some idea of the real feeling in France:

"PARIS, July 7, 1859.—It is certainly singular that such unanimity in such discordant classes should have been found. At first the proverbial politeness of Frenchmen renders it difficult to penetrate the disguise they surround themselves with; but a little patience, a little gentle manœuvring, a little malicious treading on toes or pet corns, is sure to bring out the truth, and a Frenchman is still a Frenchman to the backbone. 'Yes,' he says, 'England is the hereditary enemy of France—still, as of yore, detested by every mother's son of us—and we do not deny that to humiliate her, to make her hold a place consonant to her insular insignificance in the estimation of the civilized world, would stir up every soul in France. Lord Howden has done us no injustice when he says that to this purpose the widow would give her last son, the beggar his last sou; but we are not such fools as to run a muck at you without knowing thoroughly our plans.'"

Kossuth's Proclamation.

Kossuth seems to be fully aroused for the liberation of Hungary from the galling Austrian yoke. The Hungarians have implicit confidence in Kossuth, and stand ready to move as soon as they hear the word of command. They are prepared to adopt the motto—"Liberty or death."

The Parma correspondent of the London Times says:—

"Kossuth came to Parma on Sunday last (June 26th) and had a long interview with the Prince. He speaks as a potentate, like one who holds both Hungary and the troops of that nation in the Austrian service in his pocket, to be played off against the Court of Vienna whenever it may suit his purpose."

In his proclamation he says:

"Six days before the catastrophe of Villagos, when Russia and treason forced the heroic Hungarian people to lay down their gorgeous arms, I spoke to you for the last time. I have been silent during ten long and painful years. But, thank God! the moment has now come at which I can again raise my voice, and call the brave Maygar nation to arms to fight for the liberty of Hungary. That liberty succumbed on the 13th August, 1849, and in its fall it dragged down the liberty of all Europe. To reconquer it I shall soon reappear among you on the sacred soil of Hungary. I bring to you my two sons, whom the tiger Haynan (the precise Hungarian epithet used is stronger than this, and cannot be translated,) gorged with the carnage, sent to me, not thinking for what work of vengeance I should bring them up..... Rise, Magyars! Sacrifice your crops! Let them be trampled under foot to the last blade by your friends and your enemies! I swear to you by the God of the Magyars, that I will enrich your soil for a thousand years, whilst reconquering Hungarian liberty!" [illegible] Kossuth for the [illegible] scythe, as well as every musket, is a weapon." This reminds us of what the prophet Joel says: "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men .... beat your plough-shares into swords, and your pruning hooks (Marj. scythes) into spears; let the weak say I am strong."

The Massacre at Perugia.

The following account of the massacre at Perugia will be read with deep interest, as it shows fresh cause for hating the harlot, seated on the scarlet colored beast. The hour of her retribution is rapidly approaching. The scene at Perugia is only a repetition of what she has done, probably, a thousand times.

"FLORENCE, June 25th, 1859.

Since I last wrote, news has been received here of the most dreadful massacre that ever stained the pages of history, ancient or modern. It happened at Perugia. This city, like many others in the Pope's dominion, had declared itself in favor of Nationality, had formed a Provisional Government, and was waiting for an answer from the King of Sardinia, who had been requested to take them under his protection. When this was known at Rome, orders were given to a body of the so-called Swiss Guards—(in reality there are few Swiss among them; it is even against the laws of Switzerland now for their citizens to serve as mercenaries)—composed of rascals from every nation, who fight for money, to go and take Perugia. They traveled by forced marches, and were ready to give up for fatigue at Fuligno, when it was promised them that they should be allowed to pillage the city if they would only go on. The city was attacked on the 20th; and, after a severe fight, they entered, being assisted by the Domican Monks, who let them in by a gate near their convent. The citizens then sent a white flag to treat, borne by the Secretary of the Provisional Government. The only answer was, he was shot down and run through the body. Then began the slaughter. Every house had been marked by the Papal party which was to be entered; and no age, sex, nor condition was spared.

Many a woman was saved a life of shame by death, for they left them not alive to tell what they suffered. Women were ripped open with the bayonet; young infants were struck against the walls and their bodies thrown out the windows. The hospitals were all cleared of the sick—every one killed. In a boarding school the children were all butchered. At the Hotel de France, an American family (from Boston) was near being destroyed,—but fortunately had time to hide in a small closet. The hotel keeper's wife was saved with them; the poor fellow, her husband, was not in time, but was shot down and bayonetted. Two servants and his daughter, a young girl of seventeen, were shot dead. They then broke open the door where the Americans and servants, nine in number, were concealed, and, though the ladies begged on their knees, they would have all been killed, had not the gentleman showed his passport, and found that the first soldier spoke French. By offering him a large sum of money he prevailed on him to stand sentry and keep away the others—pretending to have received orders to do so. They were kept in this small place for five hours, witnessing the murders and the destruction of all their property in the trunks. Their servants were robbed of everything also. What the robbers could not take away they destroyed entirely. Late at night they left the city, seeing four dead in the hotel, three on the steps, two outside the house—nine in all. And this at one house!

The family arrived here last night, and brought with them the poor woman whose life had been saved with theirs. Poor creature, she could not stay in a house where all her family had been scattered—and she left alone. I saw to-night another gentleman who had been there and was in the fight—he narrowly escaped. These and many other dreadful things happened in the four or five hours of Saccagi. It is said the officer who commanded, has been promoted for valiant conduct, perhaps he may receive the red cross! It is to be hoped that the Pope knew nothing of all this. Antonelli is considered the one on whom most blame rests—it is even said that he has left the country. The Pope was too tender hearted to take part in the war of Independence—too much a minister of peace. Could he have permitted his soldiers to plunder and commit these most awful crimes? Infants murdered! Is this what the follower of St. Peter should allow? yet the orders seem to have come from high authority, and the thing has been done. The blood of the slain will call aloud to heaven, and on earth the call will be answered. Already that terrible word Vendetta has been sworn. Not one of these 2,500 men can live. Sooner or later they will have to pay the debt. "Su me l'haida pagar" says the Roman—and he keeps his word.

The excitement here has been intense. The government has not published anything except the official bulletin. In it is enough—'women and unarmed people were killed—the city given up to pillage on the 20th—the same work began again on the 21st.' The number of killed is not known—some say four hundred! No wounded. A poor countryman who heard the bulletin read, observed, Our father does religion much harm. The ignorant believe the Pope responsible for all, and the priests, especially the Dominicans, the true brothers of the Inquisition, may soon find their life a burden. Florence is full of curses deep and low. This is the beginning of sorrows. The official account mentioned these foreign blood hounds as Swiss troops. Swiss residents in Florence drew up a protest saying that but few of them were of that nation, and that they deplored, equally with all, these awful cruelties, and that it is against the Swiss law, and that these men have no country.

We are all anxious to find out what course will be pursued by the Emperor of France when he hears of this carnage. He must see that the entire civilized world demands of him an investigation. The French troops were at Rome when the order was given. They certainly would not have allowed them to move away had it been known that women and children [illegible]

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

July 14th.—Received this letter with $1 without name or date: "Dear Bro. Hastings:—I was on First day last, visiting an invalid brother and while there was deeply impressed by your letter and appeal in a late number of the Crisis. And I hasten, with the expected blessing of 'Our Father in heaven,' to enclose to you the first installment of my mite. May the good Lord prosper your great undertaking, and give to you also a renewal of health, to see with your eyes its accomplishment. I am in Christ's love and fellowship, your pilgrim brother."

Another letter. "Bro. Hastings:—I have read with interest that piece of yours in the Crisis in regard to the raising $1000 for publishing tracts to send West. My heart responded to the call, and I felt a desire to aid in this noble work. Enclosed is $5 for this purpose. Although not rich in this world's goods I give it cheerfully, considering Him who was rich yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. The Lord bless you in your labor of love. A sister hoping for life."

Another sends $1 and writes: "The mites you have received and the cheerfulness with which you receive them encourages me to offer mine. Until I read your last in the Crisis, I really thought the little I could do would be of no account. But when I hear you say 50 cents from every subscriber of that paper would raise the desired sum, surely mine shall not be withheld even if I should have to wear 'a ribbon less.' May the Lord bless you with health and strength and means to carry forward your noble purpose. I should be glad to do more if I could. From an unworthy sister."

I hope, sister, that you did n't think that I was doing business on so large a scale that I could n't use small sums in it. My Master said that the widow who gave two mites had cast in more than all the rest. He reckons the amount given by what is left in the pocket. You have perhaps given more in His sight than others who might give their hundreds. The Scotch Proverb is, "Many a mickle makes a muckle." Friends need not be afraid to send small sums if they desire to do so. Ten cents from each one who reads this paper would probably more than raise the $1000. Six cents worth of Postage stamps will pay the postage to send three or four hundred pages of tracts into the regions beyond. All may help, only let none distress themselves or go beyond duty. Let all look to God for direction.

Here is a sister who understands the matter, and who, after having scattered many tracts herself, writes again: "Dear Bro.:—Enclosed are $2 which I forward for the tract cause. They are not $50 but may do a little good as fifties are made of twenty-five two's."

And here is another from a brother at the West, in Illinois: "I think the plan to send your publications to the West a good one, but it needs some discretion in distributing them. I want to spend and be spent in the cause of truth. I hardly know what to do. My means are somewhat limited, and I have a little family, wife and five little ones, depending on me, and my health is quite poor. What can I do? I do n't feel as though I could settle down and be at ease, while a careless world are dying for the truth. I am willing to devote my time, what I can possibly take from my family, in going from house to house, and talking with the people on the coming of Christ and leaving tracts for them to read. If there are those East that cannot enter the work themselves, but wish to contribute for the spread of the truth, if they will forward their contributions to you, and you will forward me the tracts, I think I can place them where they will do good. I have felt as though I wanted to pay for every tract I circulate, but perhaps it would be better to let others who are able and willing, share in the work in this way... I want to circulate, more than any others, works that will bring the people to love Jesus and his appearing."

This brother is recently from New England. He has previously had some $30 worth of books, and has paid for them, too. He is a good laborer and his heart and hand are in the work. In this letter he sends $25 for books and tracts. You see what he proposes to do. He can preach a little, and is not like some preachers, above doing what Paul did for two years at Ephesus, i. e. teaching "from house to house" as well as publicly. I think this brother should have $25 worth of tracts from the $1000 fund, besides the books and tracts he has ordered. If the Lord will I hope to start them for the West before the first of August. Come, brethren, who cannot go out there, let us help those who have gone. These are the kind of letters and appeals that have come thumping against my heart for the last six or eight years, and these are what has made me so earnest in the tract department. I thank God [illegible] waking up to the subject. Let the battle be pushed to the gate.

[illegible] speaks for itself so plainly that I have nothing to say upon it. Another from "C. F. H." offering 300 tracts—and another which reads thus: "R——. Bro. Hastings:—Here is a pin for one of the little wheels. Please accept from a sister." There, I think that if all the little wheels are pinned on with such pins as that ($1) they will run well and not get off the axle or the track either. May God bless the unknown sender of this pin for the little wheels.

Here comes another with fifty cents for "husband" and fifty cents for "Mary," but who they are I am not quite certain. I trust the "Mary" has chosen the good part which shall not be taken from her. And here is another without name or date containing $5, "to spread the blessed gospel of the kingdom." Bro. G. writes and sends $5 more from a brother whose name must not be told. Then there is another letter containing a widow's mite, $2 from one who "loves the coming and kingdom of the Blessed Savior," and who feels willing to cast in her portion and trust the Lord for means to get her "winter's coal." Sister, if the coal does n't come, if you will give me your name, I will send you money to get it.

July 18th.—I must go to New York and begin the publication of some tracts. So having made preparations and started for the cars, I stopped at the P. O. on my way and found $22 from the New Bedford church—thus fulfilling their pledge of $50. Their word is as good as their bond. Here is another letter post-marked "O——," with $1 enclosed for the tract fund, and a brief line written to say so, but not a name nor a sign to tell who it could be, and yet I fancied it might be one whose face I had seen years ago. Was it sister S—? I cannot tell, but the Rewarder of good deeds done in secret knows well who it is.

But here is another letter from a brother who a few weeks before sent me a V for a poor preacher out West and he has got an answer which his wife says is worth the V, and so, as he quaintly says, fearing that the preacher being so overjoyed might "break his rope" he enclosed $10 more for me to send to him "to lengthen it out a little." I do n't know what the preacher will say to that for I suspect that he exhausted his vocabulary over the V, and may have no words to tell of the feelings appropriate to the reception of an X. Besides, is $5 more for tracts for that brother. I like this way, and would be glad to have any who send money, specify where and to whom they would like to have tracts sent. Will you do it?

And now, by the way, I think I must quote a few lines from that brother's letter to me, to let you know how things are moving out West. "Friends" at L——, here is something about the subject of your inquiries.

* * * "I like your plan for distributing tracts in the West first-rate. The fact is the times are such here we can do nothing, comparatively, selling books or tracts at present. It is two years or more since I have been able to sell any books. I believe I have remitted all the money to you that I have received on books, except some $5 last fall or winter that I had to use for my family, and have never got it to pay you unless I send back the V you sent today. I did sell "Voice of the Church" last week, and have the $1 in my pocket. I have thought if I could ever sell books enough to pay you up I should let all the tracts I have and those you gave me slide. Well, if the Lord will, I would be glad if your plan could be carried into operation. I have thought, prayed and studied, how this wide West could be reached, enlightened and saved. I have often asked the question at midnight hour, Must this vast field remain destitute until the Lord comes? Must its thousands of inhabitants come to the judgment without ever listening to the sound of the last great message God is sending forth to warn men of their approaching doom? Are there no friends of humanity that are willing to aid those that are laboring hard, depriving themselves of the society of their dearest friends, using the most rigid economy to get the necessaries of life, preaching all that poor frail mortality can endure, walking ten or twenty miles to appointments with blistered feet, going without expecting a dime—being happily disappointed if they receive it,—not knowing where their bread is coming from except as God's ravens bring it along, and receiving only forty or fifty dollars a year for the support of their families? Is their no means in God's treasure? Are there no others that are willing to help push the car up this heavy grade? (There will be plenty to ride when it begins to run alone.) Must a few men stand in open combat against all the enemies that are pouring in their bombshells, chain-shot, and red hot balls on every side? Would our government, or any government see a few soldiers occupy such a position and never make an effort to re-inforce them, or at least see that they had plenty of ammunition?

These are some of the many inquiries I have made. Now we would be glad to have some of our ministering brethren come West, and we hope to see better times, ere long, that temporal wants may be supplied. [illegible] and make a little advance, until we get helpe from some quarter. Well, I will close. Accept our thanks for your interest in our efforts, your kindness will never be forgotten, You have relieved us in time of straits—in affliction, and tears could only express our thanks.

"We are all quite well, except I have been suffering from toothache and a sore leg which threatens to be a bad affair, I chafed it with my boots in walking. It was doing well until I had to repeat my journey a few days, after to get to my appointment with my heavy winter boots, (for I have not had funds to get anything lighter,) and chafed it badly and took cold, and have had and am still having a bad leg. But it will be better if I can find time to keep quiet. If times were anything like good West, I could find a number that would readily take hold and help you carry out your plan. But they cannot possibly now. I will say furthermore, if our friends feel disposed to scatter their bread out on these western waters, if time rolls on a short space I have no doubt there will be a change in the wind, and it will wash all of their bread back again and perhaps the loaves may increase in their journey."

So you see, brethren, we have news from "The seat of war." Well, God help the soldiers to war a good warfare. We will try and send you some "ammunition," and help you turn the battle to the gate. Hold on—don't be discouraged. Your Captain was perfected through sufferings; He is with you and will be to the end.

I must close by saying I have been to New York and returned. Have got some tracts under way—a few new ones and lots of old ones. Before you receive this I expect to have about 280,000 pages of tracts ready for distribution. Who calls for them? Send in your orders. They will be sent free to all who wish for them. More will be printed ere these are gone. Those who want to buy can have 1600 pages for $1, or 1200 pages by mail prepaid for $1. Let us work fast. I want to print more soon. I have received other letters, which I shall notice in my next. Adieu.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

NOTICE.—More than 280,000 pages of tracts are now being manufactured and will be ready before these words meet the reader's eye. Send your orders for them at once. I have three new Important Questions: Do you pray? Are you safe? Are you saved? Four pages each. Price 25 cents per 100, or $1 for 1600 pages; when they are sent by mail pre-paid, 1200 pages for $1. Let those who wish to buy send in, and let those who wish to scatter them at the West free send in their orders. These tracts are paid for and are for free distribution, and all are welcome to send for them.

Address orders: H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

Correspondence.

From P. Alling.

BRO. GRANT:—Recently we have been favored with a visit from our beloved Bro. Cook, who spent some ten days in dispensing the good word of the Lord in this vicinity,—principally at North Fairfield and Plymouth in this (Huron) county, in both of which places there are quite a number of living members of the body of Christ, who were much edified and, I trust, advanced in the divine life. I think I never saw him so imbued with the spirit of Christ, than at present. His attainments in knowledge of the truth, and in the Christian graces were surprising to all. Ah, what progress can be made in the pathway to glory, when our hearts and energies are all directed heavenward, with an eye singly fixed upon the crown at the end of the race.

In his labors he exhibited Bro. Stevenson's prophetic and historic diagram upon the chronology of our world's history, which is certainly the most deeply interesting chart I ever saw, and proves, apparently, that we are about at the end of Gentile times. The work displays very much research, and is instructive to all who will allow themselves to be interested in God's revealed purposes, as delineated by his prophets, who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. It evidently contains very much of Bro. C.'s own deep powers of thought and labors, blended with those of its accredited author. The only kink (as he is pleased to call it) or perceptible dark point in it, is that pertaining to the time and event that marks the going forth of the decree to restore and build Jerusalem. The author has fixed upon the 32d year of Artaxerxes' reign, when Nehemiah went up from Babylon the second time, (see Neh. 5: 14 and 13: 6,) when the final work of restoration was finished, as the true point, and cites to Ezra 6: 14, from which it would seem that the sole reign of that king was to be included in sending forth of the one commandment of the God of Heaven.

If this view be correct, then as a matter of course, the 2300 years cannot end earlier than, as is claimed, A. D. 1866. This point is not endorsed by Bro. Cook,—he merely gives the facts, and leaves his hearers to judge for themselves. He thinks the [illegible] evidences, as to the time of Christ's first advent, his crucifixion, and the signs of the times, will not, with our present light, justify such an extension of time. Hence, till additional light shall shine through that dark point, our only safety consists in a constant watchfulness and preparation for the return of our long absent Lord, which event must certainly be very near.

Norwalk, O. P. ALLING.

From Sr. Julia Dodge.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I feel as though I would write a word of exhortation. Suffer it, will you, Brethren and Sisters, from one who loves you. Brethren in the ministry, ye who stand on the watch tower, blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in God's holy mountain; say, "let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." Come, go unto God's armory and get fitted up anew for the work; for the harvest of the Lord has come. "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Come, get you down; for the press is full, and the vats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision."

This looks to me like the time to prove ourselves, whether we are Lord's really, or only nominally. Nothing but christian character will stand in the day of judgment. Brethren and sisters, let us hasten to adorn ourselves with the righteousness of Christ. Let us keep a meek and quiet spirit, and let our moderation be known to all men. Let us do all we can to save others, for soon it will be said, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he which is filthly, let him be filthly still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

"The angel comes, he comes to reap
The harvest of the Lord;
O'er all the earth with fatal sweep,
Wide waves his flaming sword.

Oh! King of mercy, grant us power
Thy fiery wrath to flee;
In thy destroying angels' hour,
Oh! gather us to thee."

JULIA DODGE.

Pawlings, May 12th, 1859.

From Elder M. Batchelor.

Dear Brethren scattered abroad, tossed on Time's tempestuous waves: Cheer up! there is land ahead. We have truth on our side, and if truth is with us, God is with us; and if God be for us who can be against us; God will finally prevail, and he will bring his children off conquerors, and we shall reign on the earth: yes, where we have toiled, wept, and suffered reproach, we shall bask in the manifest glory of God, when the whole earth shall be filled with his glory. Let us keep our eye upon the prize, for it will surely soon be given.

Rutland, Vt.

From E. O. Allen.

BRO. GRANT:—I would say to you, that light and truth are spreading slowly in this region of country. When I came out here, there was no one that I could find who was a believer in the doctrine taught in the Bible relative to the second coming of Christ, sleep of the dead, destruction of the wicked, and a literal resurrection; but more teaching that death is the gate to glory, when the soul would wing its way into the world of spirits. What shall I do? was the inquiry. The Lord said, go into my vineyard and work. I could not say nay, as I was not my own, and resolved to go. While I mused, the fire burned, and to hold my peace, it seemed to me I could not. I committed my way fully to the Lord, and began to open my mouth for him. To be short, it soon brought be in great derision. Some said "infidel," some said they did not see how he could be infidel, for he talked Bible. Persecution came pretty warm, which drove the sympathy of part of the people to me. I began to circulate books, such as Pauline Theology, Bible vs. Tradition, Storrs' Six Sermons, and the result is, quite a number have embraced the truth on life death and the second coming of Christ. One very profane man has since experienced religion, and declares the truth saved him from rejecting his Bible, and was the means of bringing him to Christ.

One brother has embraced the doctrine, and begun to preach it. The Lord blesses his labors.

I would say of my own experience, my rejoicing has been through some little trial, which is not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed at the coming of Jesus. ETHAN O. ALLEN.

Waupun, Wis.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

A brother writes:—"I am a searcher for the truth. I have always believed, or tried to believe, in the separate existence of the human soul, till of late. I am an officer in a church which believes as I do; but I shall no longer stand upon another man's foundation, but, with the help of God, will search the Scriptures for myself." [That's right, brother.—Ed.]

☞ Time is like a river, in which metals and solid substances are sunk, while chaff and straws swim upon the surface.—Bacon.

☞ No cloud can overshadow the christian, but the eye of his faith will discern a rainbow in it.—Horne.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamship Ocean Queen. From Southampton the 20th.

There is nothing additional in regard to the bases of peace. Discontent is apparently increasing, particularly in Italy.

Louis Napoleon had arrived at St Cloud.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says the representatives of Austria, France and Sardinia will soon meet at Zurich, to conclude the treaty of peace. There will be no Congress, as the two Emperors have agreed to settle their differences without the intervention of the neutral powers.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News, after careful inquiry, affirms that the terms of peace have not only occasioned a feeling of disappointment and even indignation among all those who took a sincere interest in the objects of the war, but have very seriously damaged and lowered the Emperor in the opinion of all classes of society.

ITALY.

Strong indications of discontent at the terms of peace were visible in some parts of Italy.

At Florence, great agitation prevailed, and the Provisional government had issued a proclamation which describes the peace of Villa-Franca as betraying the finest hopes; that the Tuscan government participated in the sentiments of the Tuscan people on the subject, and declares that Tuscany will not be replaced under the yoke and influence of Austria, against her will and rights.

According to Le Nord, a French corps d'armee of 40,000 men will remain in Italy until the reorganization of the country according to the tenor of the peace of Villa Franca.

The Piedmontese correspondent of the Daily News says that fresh Piedmontese troops are going to the Romagna, with Napoleon's consent, to maintain order and take from the Pope all hope of recovering it by the help of Swiss guards.

The most important towns of the Roman States have sent deputations to Garibaldi.

Modena and Parma are said to be in a state of revolt.

The Emperor of Austria, according to an official dispatch, which reached Paris, commands the whole of his forces to remain in position, and to be provided with food and military resources just as they would have been had peace not been declared.

Orders have been given to some French ships to protect French subjects and property in Tuscany, in case of need.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post says it has never been intended to support by the army of France the return of the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

It was reported that Sardinia had recalled her representatives from Tuscany and Modena, and that the Provisional Government of Tuscany and Modena were organizing forces to oppose the return of their respective Grand Dukes.

SARDINIA.

The Times correspondent at Turin says the peace has produced the greatest exasperation and dejection in that capital. The Emperor Napoleon is accused of being a traitor to Italy. His portraits have been withdrawn, to prevent shop windows from being broken. Two hundred French policemen were at Turin.

The reception of the Emperor and King was cold; there were no "vivas" for the Emperor.

By the Turin correspondent of the Daily News, the Piedmontese are described as prey to grief and stupor, in consequence of the peace, which leaves Sardinia without a fortified frontier.

The Opinione of Turin does not conceal the dissatisfaction with which it sees Venice remain in the hands of Austria. It attributes Cavour's resignation to the insufficiency of the terms of peace.

The Peace.

The London Times, after showing the futility of many of the assigned reasons for the hasty peace, insists that the following is something like the truth of the matter:

"History tells us what passed at Tilsit, and some French memoir will doubtless at a future day relate what was the conversation at Villafranca. It is not necessary, however, to wait for the authentic report; the results suggest what the conversation must have been. 'Surely,' we can imagine Francis Joseph to have said, 'my Imperial brother cannot intend to revolutionize Hungary and to establish a focus of insurrection in Italy?' 'Not the least in the world. I care no more for these Italians than you do. This matter has gone quite far enough for my purpose. You see now that France is necessary to Austria. We will settle this affair, and I will leave you stronger in Italy than you ever were. I will also make everything straight between you and Russia. You shall be one of us, and we three together will impose law on Europe.' Is it to be wondered at that Francis Joseph, with a beaten army and a bankrupt exchequer, was not proof against such temptations?"

The European Times concludes an editorial on the treaty as follows:

"The anxiety is about the future. Will this success whet his ambition or satiate it—have the scenes of horror and devastation placed visually before his eyes by the loss of 100,000 lives in this short campaign cured him of the 'pride, pomp and circumstance of war,' or will he wade still deeper in the blood of slaughtered humanity?

That he is the most extraordinary man of his age is undeniable, and that he has projects to work out in the future that bode little rest for the peace of Europe is a growing conviction in the minds of the English public. It is thought in certain quarters that he has prematurely patched up this peace to make a friend of Austria, just as he declined to press hard upon Russia at the close of the Russian war.

If he can always succeed by beating his opponents to make friends of them, he possesses a charm for the extension of empire, but that he has strengthened his position by the events of the last two or three months hardly admits of a doubt. He has proved himself to be what he was not before—a practical soldier, and if his ambition is for extended empire, he will fix his eye on the Rhine, and contrive to play Austria against Prussia.

We have no faith in his intention of 'revenging Waterloo.' If he failed—as fail he would—he would lose all; but he may contrive to set the continental despots by the ears, and push his frontier, through their instrumentality, to the left bank of the great German river. We are only enabled to read the future by the past."

ITEMS.

The Journal of Naples tells us that Vesuvius is getting more and more out of sorts, and is fretting and fuming at a very violent rate; the river of lava running out of the lower openings of the crater is already more than three miles long, and is widening and deepening every day. It is destroying orchards and vineyards, and it will be a piece of good fortune if the damage is not much greater as the stream continues to roll towards the sea.

The London Morning Advertiser has worked itself into a full conviction that the Emperor of the French is about to invade England. The theory is, that the Italian war was a mere feint, got up for the purpose of enabling the Emperor Napoleon to complete his preparations against England without exciting suspicions, and also for the purpose of testing the mettle of his armies and the efficacy of his rifled artillery. These objects having been gained, and England being as yet in a state of unpreparedness for defence, the war with Austria was abruptly terminated, and the Emperor Francis Joseph, like the Emperor of Russia, converted into an ally of France and a foe of England.

Already we learn that the Austrain Emperor is about to burst the cerements of the vaults in the Capuciner Kirche at Vienna, and bring forth from its tomb the corpse of the Duc de Reichstadt, that King of Rome who, by the grace of Napoleon III., has received posthumous Imperial honors, in the teeth of the treaties of 1815, which repudiated his political existence. The corpse of Napoleon II. may be brought to Paris in state, that the Emperor may make a commencement of a dynastic sepulchre.

Very few have read the statement that the fortresses remain in the hands of Austria, without disappointment. To such, the reasoning of Wellington in his memorandum of Aug. 31, 1815, to Castlereagh, may be consoling. He is discussing the question, Is it expedient for the allies to demand the surrender of certain fortresses by France? He says it depends on a variety of political and military considerations: e. g.

"Whether the possession of the fortresses named is that which gives France the formidable strength complained of, or if transferred to the allies would give them the wished for strength; whether it is not a combination of population, pecuniary resources and artificial strength which makes France so formidable; and whether the transfer of the last only to certain of the allies, leaving the two first in the possession of France, that is to say, to give the allies fortresses, without additional resources in men to form garrisons and armies to defend them, and resources in money to maintain those garrisons and armies, would not tend to their weakness rather than to their strength: at the same time that the measure would afford to France a just pretence for war, and all the means which injured national pride could give for carrying it on."

The revival in Ireland is exciting great attention among the religious portion of the community. It is made especially so, as its beginning can be traced directly to the Fulton street meeting for prayer. Less than a year ago, two men made a visit to the meeting from the Emerald Isle. They were greatly interested. They went home—circulated tracts—appointed meetings for prayer, and the marvelous work began. Ex-Mayor Lambert, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has just come back from that theatre of one of the most wonderful revivals that the age has seen.—Cor. of Boston Journal.

It is related that 60,000 Russians are to be sent from the Caspian to Khiva, from which place they—conjointly with a Persian corps—are to march against the Turcomans.

"THE ROMAN QUESTION."—(From the "Introduction," by Dr Kirk.)—But the "occupation" of Rome by the French army is probably as fatal a movement for the papal power as was the visit of Luther to Rome. True, the French military man is not apt to be a Luther, or a saint of any school. But it is impossible that the highly educated officers of the French army can reside in Rome as masters for several years, without seeing that the claim of the church in that city to be the most godly, Christ-like, pure, wise, unearthly, most filled with the Holy Ghost, most completely in the apostolical line, is a claim as preposterous, as hypocritical, as absurd as the world ever witnessed. And when it shall serve the purpose of Louis Napoleon to put down the moral prestige of certain gentlemen in France that are troubling him; or when, as now, he wants to show the world that the Augean stable needs some cleansing, and a good deal of ventilation, he can set about it with a reasonable prospect of success. He has the material; and the public may be sure that what he writes, directly or indirectly, cannot be pooh-poohed into obscurity. This book is a Paixhan gun against a rotten ship. If semi-official, it is evidently designed to bring the sympathies of mankind on the side of the allies in the present conflict. And surely every honest man who accepts the facts here presented must say, "Vive l'Empereur! Vive l'Italie!"

THE REVOLT IN NAPLES.—A letter from Naples (9th July) in La Presse gives horrible details of the destruction dealt by grape shot on the Swiss regiments, who are utterly in a state of disorganization; some barricaded in their barracks, others fighting desperately; a large number crossing the Roman frontier, carrying confusion and pillage on their route. There is an end at last to this remnant of medieval barbarism, hired mercenaries.

The latest accounts from Garibaldi extend to the 8th, and they show that his operations in the Valteline had been as successful as elsewhere. He had under his command a fine corps of 13,000 men, besides the depot at Como and the garrisons which he had left at different places along the lake of Como and the river Adda. It is said that if the Hungarians choose to rise, they may rely on the aid of Garibaldi.

The Times correspondent at Turin, writing on the 11th inst, says:—"The formation of the Hungarian legion proceeds prosperously. It comprises a good many Roumans, of which race Austria has several millions of subjects. The legion now amounts to about 5000 men."

A private letter received in New York says that the massacre at Perugia had created an intense excitement in Milan, and on the 2d of July the Pope, Cardinal Antonelli and Col. Schmidt were burned in effigy on the Plaza d'Armi.

The accounts from Vienna state that nothing but the sudden conclusion of peace has prevented an insurrection in Hungary.

Kossuth and Hungary.

The city article in the London Times, from which the alleged agreement between Louis Napoleon and Kossuth, published in our last foreign dispatches, was taken, also contains the following:

"Kossuth has by this time had an interview with the French monarch at headquarters, and the circumstances by which their meeting was preceded are thus narrated: Col. Nicholas Kiss, who is residing in Paris, and who married a French lady of fortune, conducted all the preliminary steps. Overtures were made to him which he had to communicate to Kossuth, and he has therefore of late been constantly to and fro between the two countries. For some time he found it impossible to bring about an understanding. Kossuth required guarantees of the good faith of the Emperor, which his majesty hesitated to give, and it was at last resolved at Paris to send Kossuth a message that a determination had been formed to raise Hungary with or without his aid. Kossuth replied that in that case he would issue an address to the Hungarian nation, warning them not to believe the Emperor's assurances. This proved decisive. Kossuth was invited to Paris, and left London for that city a few days before the departure of his majesty for the army. He was received at the Tuileries by the Emperor, and certain defined conditions were then agreed to.

DOMESTIC.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE MICHIGAN SOUTHERN RAILROAD.—It is now believed, that the number of deaths caused by this disaster does not exceed forty-five. Mr. J. W. Hawks of Charlestown, [illegible] account of the accident. After [illegible] he was a passenger, and that he [illegible] forty yards down the stream from where the train was precipitated into it, Mr. Hawks says:

"The first thing that arrested my attention on entering the car that I had left was that I was standing on a pile of dead bodies. One man I thought alive and gazing into my face. I turned the lamp around, and the glazed eye of death told me that all was over. A lady had her arm clasped around his neck, with a frightful wound in her head, her feet caught and crushed in the wheels of the car. At their feet lay a beautiful boy, with his head severed from his body as close as it could have been done by the guillotine. Some were just in the pangs of death. Others, caught and crushed by the falling timbers begged me to kill them and put them out of their misery. There was a lady going to meet her husband, with her daughter, six years old, and a babe at her breast. The mother and little girl were killed. The mother had clasped the babe in such a manner that it was unhurt.

The ground was strewed with heads, arms, legs and dead bodies. I saw several with their backs broken and their lower limbs paralyzed, writhing in the sand. Some of them would clutch me as I passed with a grasp from which it was almost impossible to free myself. Several beautiful boys and girls were taken from the water and laid upon the bank. Others were crushed between the wheels, with their faces and hands upturned in a supplicating manner. I passed a woman who begged me to 'find her children.' She was crying, 'Oh! my dear family! oh, my six children!' Both of her legs were crushed off below the knee. She lived ten or fifteen minutes. I afterwards assisted in taking two of her children from the wreck, dead. Two more fine boys of hers were found—one with his leg cut off; the other had lost an arm, and both were living when I left."

☞ We have sent all our subscribers their papers regularly, and cannot supply back numbers, having none on hand of last week's issue.

Notices, &c.

TIME OF THE WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING CHANGED TO AUGUST 29.—This change will accommodate two other campmeetings and not discommode us as much as it will accommodate either of them. To be good neighbors is the way to have good neighbors. Our Methodist brethren, that hold their annual campmeeting in the same place, very much wish to commence their meeting the 22d of August, on account of their other arrangements. After consulting Bro. Ladd and others, I think it best to commence our meeting August 29th. HIRAM MUNGER,
For the Committee.

CAMPMEETING
at Wilbraham, August 29th.

Our annual feast of tabernacles will commence the 29th of August, on the old ground in Wilbraham, and hold one week. We hope for the best, the most successful and profitable gathering of the Lord's people that has ever been held there. The objects of the meeting, and the wishes of the committee with reference to its character, have been fully and well expressed in Bro. E. Burnham's campmeeting letter of last week.

Let us all lay aside the weights—harness for the battle in the panoply of God, and come up to certain victory. Let us all pray much and come with the fire burning in our hearts, and Wilbraham mountain will never be forgotten.

The arrangements for R. R fares have not been fully made, but will be as favorable as last year, and more so if possible. Abundant facilities for boarding and horse keeping at reasonable rates. Also tent room for those who are not otherwise provided for.

HIRAM MUNGER,
RANDL. E. LADD, } Committee.
GEO. T. ADAMS.

Ohio Conference.

The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

Come, one and all, panoplied, not like the warriors of earth, with the weapons of destruction, but having on the entire christian armor, with hearts imbued richly with the spirit of prayer, love and faith, that we may yet, if needs be, a little longer wield the sword of the Spirit, which is mighty, even to the pulling down and destruction of all earthly and oppressive dominions. Let us come thus armed, dear brothers and sisters, and our meeting will be one of profit to us all, and God will be glorified.

G. W. CHERRY,
E. B SOUTHWICK, } Committee.
P. ALLING

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

☞ The next Quarterly Conference of Western Central Maine has been invited and will meet in South Livermore, Sept. 1st, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We hope all the ministers of the quarterly conference will be there, (and ministers from other parts of the State are cordially invited,) and as many brethren and sisters as can consistently come. Come with faith in God, ready to work in his cause for the salvation of souls. Call on Brs. Soper, Silas Timberlake, Addison Cambell, and Chs. Boothby, about one mile from North Turner Bridge. In behalf of the Conference,

L. C. WELLCOME, Mod.
I. WIGHT, Sec.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. O. HEALY,
Committee, E. STARKS,
E. M'CULLOCK.

Notice.

The Lord willing, our [illegible] Collinsville, Ct., on land of Bro. [illegible] occupied by us last year, will commence Aug. [illegible] Particulars hereafter.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday........Aug. 7th

J. K. Bellows will preach in Hattertown, (school house)..............Aug. 7th
A. D. EASTWOOD.

C. H. Perkins appoints to preach at Exeter, N. H...................Sunday, Aug. 7th

By request of the committee of the church in Hartford, Ct., I shall preach to them the first two Sundays in August.

I shall be in Springfield, Mass., Friday, the 5th of August, and preach if it is convenient.

The 7th I shall be in New Britain—stay over night, and hold meetings if the brethren think best.

Bristol, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the 9th and 10th. M. BATCHELOR.

H. F. Carpenter appoints to preach in Bristol, Ct..............................Aug. 21st

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in Worcester..................Sunday, Aug. 14th

T W Piper will preach in
Meredith Centre..........................Aug. 14th
West Ossipee...............................Aug. 21st
Madison.....................................Sept. 4th
Sandwich...................................Sept. 11th

L. D. Thompson will preach in
Lawrence, Mass.....................Sunday, Aug. 7th
Haverhill.....................................Aug. 8th
South Reading................................Aug. 9th
Lowell..Aug. 10th
Westford......................................Aug. 11th
Nashua, N. H..................................Aug. 12th
North Springfield, Vt...............Sunday, Aug. 14th

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Tuesday evening, Aug. 2d, to continue every evening through the week and over the Lord's day, and as much longer as may be thought best. MILES GRANT.

P. S.—Those who wish my labors between Rochester and Boston, subsequent to the above appointment, can address me at Poultney, Vt., till July 22d, Seneca Falls, N. Y., till Aug. 6th; after that, at Boston, Mass., as usual. M. G.

Eld. B. Pratt will meet with the brethren in
North Adams...............................Aug. 7th
Vernon, Vt.....................................Aug. 14th

Providence permitting, I will hold meetings as follows:—
Collinsville, Friday.........................Aug. 5th
North Canton, Sunday.......................Aug. 7th
HIRAM MUNGER.

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Fairhaven......................................Aug 7th
Southington...................................Aug. 14th
Cheshire..Aug. 21st
S. S. BREWER.

Eld. T. Smith appoints to preach in Carmel, Me., (meeting house)..............Aug. 7th

S W Bishop will preach in Auburn, N. H............................Aug. 7th

J. G. Smith will preach in Ossipee, (where Bro. J Sanborn appoints,) Aug. 7th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

G W Turner—All right

Correspondents will address me in the future in care of J. E. Perkins, Box No. 1142, Boston.
CHAS. H. PERKINS.

E. N. Overloch—All right.

Cash Receipts.

Ab. Prindle 222, 75 cts; E Baker 232, 32 cts; A D Eastwood 247, 3.00; C P Whitten 252, $4.00.

B Robberts 215, C E Follansbee 201, 50 cts. each.

H McShore 228, L C Johnson 234, B P Buswell 228, H Thompson 229, A C Powell 228 A M'Clure 228, B Seymour, L Thomas 228, T Knowles 228, J Clifford 208, J Ross 216, E R Knight 220, J Clothy 227, J Kimball for poor, C Swift 170, Mrs. Chadwick 226, L Peck 222, † H C Dow 228, H Bowns 196, H F Holton 234, A Perkins 221, Dr. C O Town 193, J S Mayberry 204, J Kimball 234, C C West 249, Mrs. O Bush 254, Mrs. J M Easterly 222,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—I H Harding 10 cts, J B Waite $3.00; Eld. T. Smith $2.25, H Williams 25 cts, A H Liswell 38 cts, E Baker 68 cts, P Pfeil 30 cts, M S Chambers $3.00.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single; [illegible] copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. [illegible] per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price [illegible] postage 9 cts. 14 [illegible] per dozen. [illegible]

[illegible] Commentary [illegible] Bible [illegible] should have a copy. Price, postpaid, $1.50.

[illegible] 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct. [illegible]

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them [illegible] than they can be bought in any other place in the country.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very interesting work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts. —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's [illegible] or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $2.00 per hundred,—3 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the reader. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genneseo, N. Y. Price $2., postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Shephard.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $2.00 per hundred, 3 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The [illegible] of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's [illegible] epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. [illegible]

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) [illegible] Price, postpaid, 40 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the scent of Man; by Lambert. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality, 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 128 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of [illegible] which can be separated for distribution. The [illegible] contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, [illegible] 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, [illegible] Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, [illegible] ty; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice [illegible] Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are [illegible] that can be separated for distribution [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another; [illegible] Resting Place; three, My Friend; [illegible] Love, five, Abundant Grace; [illegible] Hastings. Just the thing [illegible] classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or [illegible] and sin are to end in the [illegible] struction of wicked men and [illegible] ment. All texts on Future [illegible] andarranged. By J. Blain. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms: or, the [illegible] God the Father, the Kingdom of [illegible] of the Lord Jesus Christ; [illegible] as it was, as it is, and as it [illegible] Preble. Price $2.00 per hundred [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and [illegible] of our agent in Portland, [illegible] Sumner street.

☞ The following [illegible] had of J. R. [illegible] Harp, by [illegible] Christian [illegible] Great Controversy. [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Pen Pictures of Bible Scenes—No. 6.

BY GEORGE F. ALLEN.

THE DAYS OF NOAH—THE ANTEDILUVIAN AGE.

[The [illegible] of the following poem has appeared in the [illegible], but having made some alterations in it, I have thought best to incorporate it [illegible] series of articles.—G. F. A.]

[illegible] the stream of time my thoughts are [illegible]
To years beyond the flood. Fair is the scene
That meets the eye, yet clothed with smiles that [illegible]
[illegible] glow from Paradise. Fair fields are there,
Widespread with harvests, hills thick strown with [illegible] with flocks,
That yield unbounded wealth. And far away
The domes of cities rise, from whose great marts
The ceaseless din of busy life is borne.
The hills, the plains, the streams, all things are fair,
For earth is young in years, unmarred by age;
Yet man, alas! is old in crimes and sins,
And darkened deeds that rise to Heaven's throne
And call for vengeance dire.

In all the earth
One holy man alone is found, and he,
By all a dreamer deemed, is scorned by all.
For years he's warned the world of coming wrath,
Till o'er his brow the frost of age hath left
Its trace of life's decline. Still daily rings
His voice prophetic 'long the crowded way,
And heedless pass the throng that old man by,
Till faint and sick at heart he sits him down
To weep o'er earth, and seek once more in faith
A new and stronger will to meet his foes.
Anon a wonder strange and new appears—
The prophet builds an Ark, so large and strong,
Of such proportions vast, 'tis deemed by all
As fit to ride the ocean's flood and brave
Its shock of stormy waves. Yet laughs the world
When told that this shall be the only hope
Of man, when bursts the coming flood o'er earth.

The Ark is done! Its tale's grown old at last,
And thoughts of man are bent on gayer scenes;
The Ark is done, nor heedeth now the throng
The omen dark, that tells of coming doom,
When beasts and fowls forsake their native haunts,
A happy pair of every wond'rous kind,
As if they were by Heaven taught to seek
Within the Ark of Hope a safe retreat
From the impending storm that brooded o'er
A sinful world.

So long the years had flown
And ever clothed the earth with flowers fair,
And all the lovely scenes that soothe the heart;
So long had man been cheered by Autumn's wealth,
And all the gen'rous fruits that earth bestows,
That now his heart was lifted up with pride.
He thought these scenes their course would ever run,
Nor cease to gladden him through future years
With new found joys. And thus they turn their thoughts
Against the warning voice of Heaven's seer,
And drink more deeply from the poisoned fount
Of present bliss.

To scornful man, at length,
The holy prophet bade a last adieu;
His last sad tears of holy sorrow wept
For those whom he so long had sought to save.
And then within the blest secure abode,
That Heaven long for him had nobly planned,
He sought retirement and composure sweet,
To test alone the mercy of his God.

Now slow the long appointed days rolled on!
But still in his accustomed round the sun
O'er the fair earth each morn in splendor rose,
While at each dewy eve's return the moon,
With radiance of her sweet smiles, lent charms
To hill and dale, as yet not full bereft
Of Eden beauty. And from their bright halls,
Around empyrean vast above,
The circling orbs with modest beauty shone,
To deck the night with shining gems of love.
Thus nature gave no warning sign to man
Of swift approaching wrath. But all in dreams
Of luxury were lost unconscious now,
Lulled by the syren song of peace and hope,
To quiet and repose.

Then with sweet smiles,
Bright forms of youth and beauty met, the hours
To while away with banquet, song and dance;
And wild the merry laugh and reckless shout
Resounded through the halls of revelry;
While on the ear entrancing music stole,
That drove all gloomy thoughts of care away.
At bridal banquets then met loving hearts,
To whom the distant future bright appeared,
As aged matrons blessed their daughters fair,
When to their childhood haunts they bade adieu,
In other homes to dwell and cheer with love.
The miser to his hoarded heaps brought wealth,
And daily still devised new plans for gain.
All were in charms of giddy scenes absorbed,
And if perchance the prophet's name arose,
'Twas made the laughing theme of low-bred mirth;
The holy seer was scorned, God's name was mocked,
None deemed destruction near.

But lo! at length,
The direful day, so long foretold, arrived,
Yet brightly glowing through the golden gates
Of rosy east rode forth the morning sun.
Each woodland, hill and dale, in sunlight sweet
Of glad, delicious morn, with beauty glowed.
Forest and grove with harmony awoke,
As through their shades swelled forth the songs of birds.
Thus nature glad rejoices; and hopeful man
With joyous heart to daily toil went forth
'Mong fields luxuriant, still musing o'er
The wealth he should enjoy in coming years.
Then on that direful morn a thousand hearts
With hope beat high, that, ere the set of sun,
Were pulseless in the raging torrent's stream.

But soon at length, o'er heaven's azure brow
The gloomy pall of wrath, pre-aging clouds,
Its dismal folds of night together rolled.
Anon the booming thunder, long and loud,
Its wild and startling notes sent forth around.
And then athwart the demon driven clouds
Fierce gleamed the arrow tongues of vivid flame,
That to each heart a thrill of horror sent.
Then from on high the storm, impetuous,
Like the wild rush of mighty cataracts,
To earth descended swift; the purling rills
[illegible] rivers then were swift transformed.
[illegible] seem to foaming seas were changed,
[illegible] bosoms bearing on
[illegible] and gorgeous cities fair,
That long had been the boasted pride of years.
[illegible] was seized,
[illegible] they saw fulfilled,
[illegible] they climbed with hope,
[illegible] to these wild heights could reach;
[illegible] the Ark they saw
[illegible] billows sailing by;
[illegible] loud they called,
[illegible] to their suppliance was deaf;
And removed justice now around them wrapped
[illegible]

Higher still
[illegible]

Washing the lower hills. And to the verge
Of the high hills [illegible] vast
Around its violent sweep, [illegible] life
They hopeless clung.

[illegible] With horror, one by one,
They saw the rushing tide bear swift away
Their dearest friends, till but the stronger few
Alone remained; they too, life's last loved trace,
Soon in the dark abyss were hopeless lost.
Then o'er the highest mounts a shoreless sea,
Unbounded, vast, around this solid sphere
Wrapped close its wat'ry shroud.

Like a dark spot
'Mong clouds, still rode the Ark in safety on,
By Heaven's hand preserved. Dark days and months
In slow succession passed. But in His love
God still remembered man, and 'suaged the flood;
Then on the mountain heights of Ararat
Gently reposed, at last, the heaven-borne Ark,
Safe from its voyage o'er the boundless main.
By Noah then the raven, thrice the dove,
Forth from the Ark were sent, earth to explore;
And when ere long the faithful dove returned
With olive branch of peace, man to the earth
Once more his footsteps turned, its quiet vales
To bless with homes of love.

But ah! the scene
Which on his vision stole, how sadly changed.
Once where the sunny vales with beauty smiled,
Wide sundered chasms often now appeared.
And sloping hills, long since with verdure clad,
That were with flowers crowned in days of yore,
Were of their beauty 'reft. Among the vales
No vine-clad cottage, nor proud castle wall,
The lonely scene with love and gladness graced.
For desolation sad was brooding o'er
Each scene of earth, now sadly, darkly changed,
Man's blighting sin the origin and sole cause.

But when from Noah's humble offering
Sweet incense to Jehovah rose on high,
Then Mercy on her pinions fair of love
Once more to earth came down, man's griefs to heal,
His thorny path of life with joy to cheer.
Then hope awoke again within man's breast,
And shed a halo bright o'er coming years,
As arching far the east there fair appeared
The golden bow, God's signet ring of faith,
A sign to man that earth no more by flood
Should be o'erwhelmed.

Thus perished they to whom
The prophet's warning voice of coming woe
Long seemed an idle dream; the faithful few
Alone were saved. From this dark scene, O man!
Receive instruction; let its teachings deep
Within the heart be set; the kind voice heed
That e'er chides thee; the Ark of mercy seek,
And o'er life's stormy sea 't will guide thee safe
To Zion's holy mount, where seraph hosts
Shall bid thee welcome to their feasts of love.

For the Crisis.

The True Divinity of the Son of God.

An enlightened holy faith must ever acknowledge the divinity of Him who is "the brightness of his (Father's) glory and the express image of his person."—Heb. 1 : 3. The nature of this divinity, or the question, whether it is derived or independent, must be determined, not by human wisdom, but by the plain testimony of the Word which "abideth forever." To ascertain the truth relative to this important question, another subject must be first considered, viz., Who is the ONE "only true God?" We are agreed (who are not atheists) that there is but one only living and true God; but alas! we are not agreed who he is. Forbearing one another in love, let us humbly endeavor to enlighten each other, praying that the Spirit of truth may unite us "in the same judgment," that we may "speak the same thing," relative to this sublime subject, involving the honor of "the only true God and (of) Jesus Christ whom (he has) sent."

No plain divine testimony must be rejected because it is, in some respects, "past finding out" by finite minds. Reason confirms the truth of the Word of the Lord, that there must be some things pertaining to the Infinite Being, "unsearchable" by us who are of yesterday and know comparatively nothing. It must be admitted, however, that there can be no revelation of any subject to the human understanding, of which that understanding can have no perception. The sacred scriptures distinguish such things, and such things as the Almighty may not choose to reveal at present, from the things which he has revealed; the former "belong to God;" the latter "to us and to our children."—Deut. 29: 29. Both of natural and spiritual things our knowledge is imperfect. We know that the grass grows; but no philosopher perfectly comprehends how it grows. The human mind has some perception of the knowledge and wisdom of Jehovah, but how incomprehensible are these glorious attributes!

Now, let all our theories give place to the plain testimony of the Word of eternal truth concerning this great question, Who is the One only living and true God? Whoever he is, he will not allow us to give his glory to another. Isa. 42 : 8. In the honor of being "from everlasting to everlasting," the one only independent, self-existent source of "all things," he will allow none other in the universe to participate.—Isa. 44 : 6. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is ONE Lord." Beloved brethren, is it not the plainly manifest purpose of this divine declaration, to exclude a plurality of persons from "the eternal God-head?" Is not this confirmed by the testimony of the inspired apostle, "God is ONE?"—Gal. 3: 20. Can any brother cast a shade of doubt concerning the true import of these plain passages by adducing a single declaration from either Testaments that God is two or three? Even 1 John 5 : 7 (acknowledged by learned trinitarians to be an interpolation,) does not affirm that the three are one God. Judge now, brethren, how stands the Bible evidence, in respect to plain and positive affirmation, for the personal unity or plurality of the Godhead. Ought we not with [illegible] hesitate denying that God is one person, when we cannot adduce a single divine declaration that he is three? Is it not reasonable to suppose that if it is an eternal fact that the Almighty God of the universe exists in three distinct intelligent persons, that a divine revelation would announce a fact of such magnitude, by at least one plain and positive declaration? Is it, I ask, reasonable to suppose that it would be left to be found out by inferential deduction?

Supposing, however, that the above testimonies are inadequate to establish the fact that God is one person only; I proceed to ask, if all doubt ought not to be considered annihilated, if, in addition to these passages, we find repeated plain and positive declarations that ONE person is this one only living and true God?

Again we come to the living oracles of truth, to determine the momentous question: Who is this one God who claims supremacy in the universe? "The faithful witness" shall answer it. "These words spake Jesus and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said: FATHER, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee; as Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal; that they might know thee (FATHER) the ONLY true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17:1–3. Brethren, could Jesus Christ have used any language which could more plainly exclude a plurality of persons from the Godhead? All acknowledge that the Father is one person only. He is "the ONLY true God." The inspired apostle confirms this eternal truth. "To us there is but one God, the FATHER, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by (dia not hypo) whom are all things, and we by him." Alas! Paul, we have, in the nineteenth century of christian truth and light, to adopt your lamentation, "Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge."—1 Cor. 8 : 6, 7. Surely, my dear brethren, the trinitarian hypothesis falls before these plain, positive and harmonizing testimonies. Here is a three-fold cord which cannot be broken.

1. "There is but one God."

2. He is the FATHER, "the Father" is "the only true God."

3. As such, he is distinguished from the very person which trinitarianism confounds with him as supreme.

Some objections demand and shall receive a courteous and candid review.

1. "The first annunciation of the being of God was in a manner implying a plurality of persons." As the plural form is used in different languages simply to denote dignity, no criticism on the word "Elohim," which subverts the above plain testimonies of God's Word, is admissible. "Let us make man," implies a plurality of persons associated, in some manner, in the creation of man; but it neither implies a plurality of persons in the Godhead or the equality of the persons thus associated. The passage finds a solution in the holy word, which perfectly harmonizes with the great truth of the divine unity. "God created all things by Jesus Christ."—Eph. 3 : 9; Heb. 1 : 2. See again 1 Cor. 8 : 6, 7, which plainly teaches that God our Father is the source and our divine Lord Jesus Christ the medium—the former the principal, the latter the agent of "all things."—Comp. Titus 2 : 5, 6.

2. "Christ was that Holy thing conceived of the Holy Ghost." As this refers to the "body prepared" (Heb. 10 : 5) for the divine Son of God, who previously existed, Rom. 1 : 3, 4; being "the first born of every creature," Col. 1 : 12, "the beginning of the creation of God;" Rev. 3 : 14, it can give no support to trinitarianism.

3. "As a Son—being begotten by the Father—He must nevertheless by the immutable laws of generation have possessed the nature of Him by whom he was begotten, that is to say, God." As a Son, begotten by the Father, he indeed does partake of the nature of the Father, in a far higher sense than the children of God, begotten of him, are made "partakers of the divine nature."—2 Peter 1 : 4. "Nevertheless, by the immutable laws of generation," he must be a derived being, consequently neither eternal or independent. So he declares, "I live by the Father," without any limitation to a particular nature. John 6 : 57.

4. "He was worshiped by the Magi, by the apostles, and by the angels—while the Scriptures everywhere assert that God is the only proper object of worship." The Scriptures indeed teach that "God is the only proper object of supreme worship; but they teach that other beings are objects of subordinate worship. We read 1 Chron. 29 : 20, that the congregation (of Israel) blessed the Lord God of their fathers and bowed down their heads, and worshiped the Lord and the king," i. e. David. See also Luke 14 : 10; Dan. 2 : 46; Acts 10: 25. The argument proves too much. It proves that persons, whom the Scriptures recognize as being worthy of service, are supreme Deity; "for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Matt. 4 : 10. Angels and men are commanded to worship "the first begotten," Son of God, in his true character and nature, as "the first begotten" Son, and not as "the unbegotten" Jehovah. He is also thus worshiped to the glory of the Father.—Phil. 2 : 11. Is the supreme God worshiped to the glory of another?

5. "He hath been exalted above every name that is named; therefore He must be God, or else possess a name above the name of God." It is written, "God also hath highly exalted him," etc. Phil 2 : 9. He is therefore a distinct being from God. If he is supreme, who is that being who can exalt him? "Who hath given to the Almighty?" Our blessed Lord is indeed "God, (or Ruler) over all," but it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God ('even the Father' v. 24) may be all in all." A testimony confirming Christ's plain and positive assertion, John 17 : 1–3, that the Father is the ONLY true God."

6. "All power in heaven and earth is given unto him. This we call Almighty power—an attribute of God only; hence Christ is God." It is a glorious truth that our Lord's power, given him in heaven and earth, by the Father, is competent to the grand purposes of his mediation; but the fact of its being "given" him proves his dependence. "Who hath given to the Almighty?"

7. "In the beginning was the Word which became flesh and dwelt among men—in the person of Christ." The fact of the Word, or "begotten Son," John 1 : 14, being with the Father "in the beginning of the creation, proves his existence before his incarnation, but is no proof of his eternity. Eternity has no beginning.

8. "The Word—was God." The application of this title to the Son cannot prove his supremacy, because it is applied to other beings vastly inferior to him. Ps. 82 : 6; Ex. 12 : 12; 22 : 28; Ps. 82 : 1; John 10 : 34, 35; Ex. 7 : 1; 2 Cor. 4 : 4; 1 Cor. 8 : 5.

9. "The fact that He is equally Lord with God the Father, shows that in rank, he is one with God—'Lord God.'" I do not know of any passage in which our dear Savior Jesus Christ is denominated "Lord," if there was, it must be understood in harmony with his own testimony that the Father alone is supreme. John 17 : 1–3. The word translated "equal" in Phil. 2 : 6, should be like or as. See Doddridge and Macknight on the passage.

10. "He says I and my Father are one." Not one God. He prayed that he and his disciples may be one, even as he and the Father are one. John 17 : 22.

11. "He declares whosoever hath seen me hath seen the Father." This he himself explains. "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself; but the Father which dwelleth in me he doeth the works."—John 14 : 10.

12. "The Scriptures often declare he is God." John 1 : 1–4, 14; 2 Cor. 5 : 19; 1 Tim. 3 : 16; Titus 1 : 3; 2 : 10; Heb. 1 : 8. This is the same as No. 8, answered above. I remark, in addition, that John 1 : 1–14 teaches us that the Word, as God, is begotten. 2 Cor. 5 : 19, reads "God was in Christ," &c. 1 Tim. 3 : 16. The ancient manuscripts read, "He who was manifest in the flesh." See Griesbach. Titus 1 : 3 and 2 : 10, refer to the Father. See Titus 2 : 4–6; Heb. 1 : 8. The following verse teaches, that as God, he has a God, who has anointed him for the high office of God, Ruler or King in Zion. See Ps. 2 : 6.

I respectfully submit, that "no system of hermeneutics requires a construction of these passages, which subverts the testimony of "the faithful Witness." John 17 : 1–3 that the Father only is supreme; "the only true God." Pre-existence does not prove eternal existence. As the Son of God was the first begotten, "the first born of every creature," and "the beginning of the creation of God," his pre-existence, antecedent to his being "made flesh," is not to be doubted.

Finally, it is remarked, "We dare not trust in any short of an Almighty Being to accomplish the salvation our fallen nature demands." This is a correct principle. We have destroyed ourselves, and in God only is our help. We are to trust in Jehovah to save us. We do so when we trust in the means his infinite wisdom and love employ in this gracious work. If we do not trust in these means, under God, we do not trust in God. Now read Titus 3 : 4 to 6, which, in harmony with numerous other passages, most plainly establishes the glorious principle, that our Father "God our Savior," saves us "through Jesus Christ our Savior."

1 Tim. 3 : 16, has no reference to the incomprehensibility of the nature of the Diety. The term "mystery" would be more correctly rendered secret. See Campbell's Dissertations on the word mysterion. The import is, that our salvation by the Son of God, is a great and glorious manifestation of the wisdom love and power of God. It "was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest;" Rom. 16 : 25, 26, and explained by the apostle in the very passage, 1 Tim. 3 : 16, in six particulars.

The trinitarian hypothesis, that three persons are but one being, is just as confounding to every rational perception of the human mind, as is the proposition, that there are three beings in one person. Suppose, however, it was possible that there should be three infinite intelligent persons in the universe. Cui bono? Three, or three thousand, would be of no more value to the universe than one. There can be no addition to infinite. The plea of mystery in the case, can certainly have no claim to our regard, until at least one plain and positive declaration of such an apparent contradiction is adduced from the sacred volume.

A fear of intruding on the kindness of our editor prevents the addition of many other arguments. May the Spirit of truth unite us therein, and especially unite us in the love and service, and eternal enjoyment of the only true God, and of Jesus Christ whom he hath sent. Humbly and respectfully submitted, dear brethren, by your servant for Jesus' sake.

HENRY GREW.

Philadelphia, June 22d, 1859.

Selections.

[Read the following stirring appeal to a D. D., whose name we withhold, who figured largely at the meeting of the Tract Society, at New York.—Bro. Trask, press the battle.—ED.]

An Appeal to Rev. ——, D. D., on the Evils of Tobacco.

REV. SIR: The figure made with your tobacco-box at the meeting of the Tract Society, May 11, 1859, excites attention. We embellish tracts with pictures, which enforce the idea we present: the dandy with his cigar, the courtesan with a cigarette, the loafer with his quid, and the divine enveloped in tobacco fumes. Life might be given to this tract by a picture of the Rev. —— at the Academy of Music, in the midst of clergymen, judges, lawyers and admiring friends, chewing his quid, bandying about his tobacco-box, and, in derision, offering it to Dr. Bacon, as he referred to the sin of using tobacco! Impressive picture! I shall not use it,—courtesy forbids.

Excellent men regret, sir, that on that occasion you gave the weight of your character in favor of a loathsome vice, a monstrous iniquity. Science classes tobacco with rank poisons, and we teach boys to shun it as the fangs of a rattlesnake. Physicians, whose word is law, state that twenty thousand of our countrymen are killed by it every year! "The American church," says Dr. Coles, "consumes five millions of dollars on it every year!" Sufficient to support fifteen of the American Board! The nation consumes thirty millions of dollars on it. Sufficient to support ninety of the American Board! Whole nations, Mexico, Turkey, and the like, are emasculated by it. An English statesman observes, "As the discovery of the American continent cursed Europe with tobacco, it is questionable whether the discovery has been more of a blessing than a curse!"

Such, dear sir, is the evil you sported with before an immense audience. We were grieved as we saw it; but, as liberty of speech on such occasions is contraband, we were silent; hence, I write to tell you and others that we are sorry YOU DID WHAT YOU DID, THEN AND THERE.

1. I am sorry, because it tends to discourage all efforts in the ANTI-TOBACCO REFORM. Laborers in this field have a hard time. They battle an insidious foe, which is murdering thousands without their knowing it. They battle a foe entrenched in lust, in appetite, in fashion, in merchandise, in church and state. They wage the battle without wealth or organizations, and with no reward but the humble laurels of virtue.

We expect to meet the common enemy in smoke-rooms and dens of infamy, and to be the song of the drunkard; but when you, Dr. ——, with your polished sanctity, sport with this GREAT CURSE, and, in actions louder than words, tell such an audience that you use and will use the drug, and in haughty defiance pass it to others,—and when your admirers cheer and clap the act, and seem to say, "It is the voice of a god, and not of a man," we poor reformers are for the moment sick at heart; and did not God give us grit, as well as grace, we should give up the ghost.

2. I am sorry you did it, because it was an insult to the most respectable part of the audience. Tobacco is a poisonous abomination. The public use of it anywhere and everywhere, by anybody and everybody, is a nuisance. If to pollute common air, coaches, cars, parlors, halls, temples of worship, and the BODY—the temple of God—is not a nuisance, what is? Nuisances at large are out of place. They should be cared for by police, have the benefit of pest-houses, or ride quarantine. They have no right to stalk abroad, or to appear on a christian platform in the Academy of Music. If you, dear sir, are insensible to this nuisance, is it not because you have been long under its potency? Some listen to the roar of artillery till they are deaf; some use assafœtida till tastes are extinct.

Look up and down the land, in cars, in depots, in churches, you see significant inscriptions. "NO SMOKING HERE!" "NO CHEWING HERE!" "If young gentlemen," said Daniel Webster, "must smoke, let them take the horse-shed." Put it to vote in heaven or earth, and would not the vote be, let tobacco victims everywhere take the horse-shed?

3. I am sorry you did it, because tobacco using is an enslaving habit; and, however defiantly you used that box, did you not show us that you were a slave sporting in chains? To be a slave is to have lost the power of resistance,—to be subject to a tyrant, a lust, a passion, or imperious appetite. Such is a tobacco victim! I speak not at hap-hazard, but (ab imo pectore) that I do know and testify; that which I have endured myself; what I have seen in thousands. I say, if there is a slave on earth, he is such who is wedded to this narcotic. Here is an undeniable fact,—this habit long indulged, enslaves you as well as its humblest victim. As the eye of a servant is unto the hands of his master, does not your eye turn to this idol as the last thing at night, the first in the morning? "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?"

Alas, dear sir, how often have you tried to master this tyrant! How often have you been defeated! Never do good men appear to such disadvantage as when under the dominion of tobacco. I say, with Dr. Woods, "I would as soon be a chattel slave on a plantation, as a slave to tobacco!"

4. I am sorry you did it, because your example corrupts your fellow-men. Ninety-nine in a hundred, it is said, acquire this habit from infectious example. Be this as it may, the example of gentlemen in positions like yours is powerfully destructive. You are an example to the flock. Your flock is large. Your writings and influence are identified with the church of God, through the land. Newspapers have widely trumpeted this transaction; and, I dare say, many students in our seminaries, many deacons, many church-members, who before were half ashamed of this habit, on seeing that Dr. ——, the CORYPHEUS of the OLD SCHOOL, makes light of it, have come to the conclusion it is no sin, and now, without one twinge of remorse, roll the sin as a sweet morsel under their tongues!

OUR BOYS, SIR! What shall we do with these rising and expanding millions? We teach them that tobacco, alcohol, profanity and Sabbath desecration, belong to the same category, to the same infernal chorus of vices! A half a million of little fellows, in Hannibal style, have pledged eternal hatred to tobacco! What shall we do with our bands of hope, and your example, hallowed with piety and hoary with age? Ah, sir! hunt up heresy the world over till you die, and you will find nothing so destructive of "Young America," soul and body, as tobacco, which your example commends. "Young friend," said I to a youth, "why do you chew?" His reply was laconic: "My father chews, our minister chews, and I will." I wrote to a Boston millionnaire, soliciting aid in my work among youth; his reply is instructive:

"REV. SIR: I have received your little book, UNCLE TOBY ON TOBACCO, and thank you for it. But the best proof of its utility should be its effects upon the clergy. We can hardly expect youth to refrain from tobacco, when their moral teachers set them so bad an example. When you have reformed those of your own profession, if you will apply to me, I will give fifty dollars to reform the rest of mankind.

Yours very respectfully, etc.,

D. S——."

5. I am sorry you did it, because it shows that, though a Master in Israel, you are ignorant of one of Satan's powerful devices. Admit the Bible idea, that there is a superhuman agent, malignant and subtle, who luxuriates in mischief; admit that men are often moved by an agency so insidious as to be unconscious of it, and we may with as much reason infer that Satan uses this drug to destroy souls in the streets of New York, and souls in your church, as that he uses any agency, or as that he used an apple to effect the apostasy in Eden. Account for the mournful fact, if you can, that a drug so nauseous in spite of every taste and every instinct, now has mastery over two hundred millions, without the hypothesis that Satan has a hand in it! Render under Satan the things that be Satan's.

Tobacco stupefies sensibility, produces self-satisfaction, and soothes the subjects of Satan in their sins! Its lulling potency makes many a minister an amiable dolt; robs him of zeal for revivals, and of courage to wield the battle-axe; seats him in his easy-chair to nurse his dignity, and to be satisfied with his spiritual attainments, till death winds up the scene!

Tobacco to thousands of young men has unearthly charms. It allays anxiety, extracts arrows of conviction, and makes them satisfied whether saints or sinners. It not only renders them insensible to the Gospel, but it often paralyzes the will, and its victim is like a fort, with traitors within and enemies without, whilst the sentinel is drunk! It often breaks down all manliness, and the victim is in the condition of the poor collegian, who in tears cried, "What I would that I do not, but what I hate that I do."—"O, I need tobacco to give me resolution to give up tobacco!"

It is deplorable enough that the Gospel must encounter a heart which is at enmity with God; but, O! if it must encounter not only an enemy, but a sot; not only a sot, but a paralytic; not only a paralytic, but a fool—the case is incomparably worse.

Such, sir, are the effects of tobacco, not on all, but on multitudes who hear the gospel. Satan knows this; and, if he does not, has not the sagacity commonly ascribed to him, and is unfit for his office.

6. I am sorry you did it, because you trifled with sin. I say nothing of the waste of time or money, but maintain that this habit is a sin, because it violates the laws of life, touching BODY, MIND, and SOUL. The laws of nature are the laws of God, and their violation is as positively sinful as that of any law in the Word of God. The amount of tobacco which I presume you daily use, would, if given in a liquid state, kill a dog or a horse at once; and would have killed you long since, had not nature indignantly thrown off much of the poison by perspiration, expectoration, and the like.

The idea that you can surcharge your mouth with it, and the virus enter the nerves, the veins, and spread over the membrane, and do no injury, is as absurd as to suppose that your body can take the explosions of an electric battery with no effect; or that lightning never burns a dwelling, never kills man or beast! Tobacco does kill. On entering the circulation it poisons the quality and diminishes the quantity of blood, and mars the beauty of our race by making multitudes of haggard, trembling, gloomy creatures, in the shape of men!

It maddens the nervous system, masters the ganglionic nerves, makes the heart quiver under its grasp, destroys its regular pulsations, makes it beat slower and slower, till it ceases to beat,—the victim dies; he has committed suicide. People call it heart-disease! There lie before me the statements of physicians, which specify eighty diseases which may arise from the use of tobacco.

I have nearly a thousand letters, from gentlemen in various walks of life, which show that tobacco has been to them a sore evil; many of them express gratitude to God that they have renounced the sin.

I regret that you trifled with a sin so destructive. Not a sin of limited prevalence, but reigning over millions! Not a sin of Adam, or sin in any visionary sense, but a sin against God, which a child can understand, a child can define.

Thousands, sir, of precious ministers of Christ have renounced this sin, and I beg you to do the same. I have fought this enemy for [illegible] years, and God, who taught my hands to war, has given me trophies of success. I have a cabinet of spoils. I have tobacco-boxes given me by noble captains in national service, and also by doctors of divinity, many of whom we delight to honor. I ask for your box,—the very box which figured so boldly at the Academy of Music! Give it to me, my dear sir, and it shall be to the good of my struggling cause, and the public will know that you, a venerable divine, are not descending to the grave, trifling with a loathsome sin.

Yours respectfully, GEO. TRASK.

Fitchburg, Mass., 1859.

Reading for Youth.

For the Crisis.

Young Samuel's Call.

There stands the youthful Samuel,
Pattern of other days;
A gift so precious from the Lord,
Nurtured in wisdom's ways.

His mother with him yearly went
Unto the temple gate;
His little coat, fruit of her toil,
Before the Lord they wait.

Given of God, she but returned,
Yea, lent him to the Lord;
But in those days God did not speak
Open to men his word.

One night he rises, but he thinks
The prophet's voice to heed—
Lo I am here, for thou did'st call—
Think of his faithful deed.

Again and yet again the Lord
Called with his voice so rare;
Eli, the aged prophet, then
Knew that the Lord was there.

He said—Lie down, and if he calls,
Then thou shalt say—Speak, Lord;
He hears the call, he answered—Speak,
Thy servant hears thy word.

He ministered in holy things,
A youth, but faithful then;
He grew in favor with the Lord,
And with his fellow-men.

Oh, would that all in youth might seek
The blessing of the Lord;
Thus grow in grace and favor too,
Learn and obey His word.

S. R.

Rutland, Vt.

A Cracked Commandment.

We heard a suggestive expression related the other day of a very little girl, who was taken by her mother into a shop, where a tempting basket of oranges stood exposed for sale. While her mother was engaged in another part of the room, the little one feasted her eyes on the fruit, and nursed the temptation in her heart, till it grew too strong to be resisted, and she hid one of the oranges under her apron, and walked quickly away. But conscience remonstrated so strongly, that after a little reflection, she walked as quickly back, and as slyly replaced the orange in the basket. Again the forbidden fruit, out of her possession, presented its tempting side, and again she yielded. After a sharper conflict than before, conscience gained a second victory, and the almost stolen orange was again and finally restored. With a saddened countenance she walked home with her mother, and when they were alone, burst into tears, exclaiming, "Oh, mother, I've cracked one of the commandments! I didn't break it, mother—quite—but—I'm sure I cracked it."

We shall never again see a piece of doubtful conduct, without thinking—there's a commandment cracked.—Examiner.

"Did He Get In?"

Little Charlie R—— had listened very attentively while his father read at family worship the third chapter of Revelation. But when he had repeated that beautiful verse, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come into him, and will sup with him, and he with me," he could not wait until his father had finished, but ran up to him with the anxious inquiry—"Father, did he get in?" I would ask the same question of every child—"Has the Savior got into your heart?" He has knocked again and again—he is knocking now. Open your heart and bid him welcome, and this will be the happiest day of your life.

Are you kind to your Mother?

Who guarded you in health, and comforted you when ill? Who hung over your little bed when you were fretful, and put the cooling drink to your parched lips? Who taught you how to pray, and gently helped you to learn to read? Who has borne with your faults, and been kind and patient in your childish ways? Who loves you still, and who contrives and works and prays for you every day you live? Is it not your mother, your own dear mother? Now let me ask you, "Are you kind to your mother?"

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, who sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligation to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who write [illegible] should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State [illegible]

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be [illegible] cents a year to any part of [illegible] the United States.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 205. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 24.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Music of Ocean.

I.

A voice comes rising on the breeze,
It comes with soft and lovely sound,
Above the tumult of the seas,
When storm-rock'd waves with foam are crown'd.

II.

From climes of sunny lands it comes,
From hills with spreading palm trees crown'd,
From slopes by still and happy homes,
They breathe a minstrelsy profound.

III.

Thou'rt come from many a palmy shore,
And from the coral gems below;
Thou'rt wafted by the wildest roar,
Or softest breath that zephyrs blow.

IV.

And from a thousand gem-crown'd isles,
Where fragrant flowers perennial bloom,
Where summer's never ceasing smiles
Should chase away life's darkest gloom.

V.

We hear thee in each chalic'd shell,
As oft we lift it to our ear;
That far off music seems to swell,
Within its windings, soft and clear.

E. A. W.

West Winsted, June 25, 1859.

For the Crisis.

The Truths we Advocate.

A few days since a person said to me, "I've talked considerable with your folks, and it seems to me, they have but one idea in the world."

"And that is?" I inquired.

"The coming of the Lord," he replied, with a visible sneer. "You can't speak to a Millerite half a second till up he jumps and tells you the Lord's a-coming right away; and if you say you don't believe it, he sets you down immediately as one of the lost."

Now, although this was spoken in a mocking tone by one who affected to despise religion, yet, upon reflection, I found that there was some truth in the statement, allowing for the hyperbole used in such cases. Myself have heard some of the brethren who seemed to set themselves against every subject except the time and manner of the coming of that great and anxiously looked for event, gathering, as it were, their garment tightly around them, as if they feared a sinner's touch, even although the degraded hand was held up to them in supplication. It is true that the fulfillment of the christian's hope rests upon the return of his Lord; that the joyous expectation of beholding the transcendent glory of the Redeemer, and being made partaker thereof, is the chief strength of the saint militant; that all his struggles and privations would be for naught but that the coming of the Blessed One promises to him a rest and reward, even life for evermore. Having this settled we should look to other duties, rather than sit with arms folded as if our work was done, and that we had accomplished enough to ensure an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. With so many around us perishing for the lack of truth, what man amongst us having the love of Christ in his heart, can say "there is nothing for me to do?" Until that time does arrive which ushers in the unparalleled magnificence of the Second Advent, while there is a sin unrepented of, or an impenitent sinner in existence, there is ample work for the living christian. And he who does not his utmost to rescue lives from the destroyer, shall not stand acquitted before the Judge of quick and dead.

With this fact in view we should one and all determine to do all the good we can, by warning sinners of their danger and pointing them to the refuge provided; cooperating with those who have an eye single to the glory of God, and the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and, as our "Covenant" says, "making CHRISTIAN CHARACTER the ONLY TEST of fellowship and communion." Thus far, and no further, extend our liberal views. With those clap-trap expressions of brotherhood and liberality in religion, we have no sympathy, as they are most lovingly expressed by the sickly sentimentality of the spiritualist, or the superlatively adoring pantheist, who prates about a "Divine principle," and a God in every blade of grass. We hold that all men need a Savior, and that he who is not at work for God is in the service of the devil. This line of division should be kept clear and well defined, even though it gives us the name of sectarians. The Bible has given laws with rewards or punishments for their observance, or the reverse; and shall christians take to their bosoms and their confidence those who set at naught His statutes, and laugh alike at promises or threats? One says, "why should I blame a man or treat him as a stranger or an enemy, because he believes not the Bible, or in the existence of God, if his reason refuse to accept it?"

We answer, that it is not man we war against, but the evil influence proceeding from the great Adversary of heaven, which, swaying his passions, perverts his reason and his sight, that otherwise, if left unwarped and clear, would at once declare for God, and the holiness of his Word. The human reason never left the universe without its Maker, although sophistry and ghastly infidelity attempted it. One glance up to the star-studded dome of a clear midnight sky, is sufficient to scatter every species of Atheism to the winds, and indelibly stamp upon the deep blue firmament the awful name of the Omnipotent.

This is the first great truth we advocate, the foundation of our faith, and from which springs a being like unto Him, whose name and mission is the dearest and sweetest sound which ever fell upon the ear of man, even Jesus Christ, who came into the world to save sinners. These we believe in common with every denomination of Christians; but we also believe that he is the only intercessor between God and man, the only name given under heaven whereby we can be saved; that praying to the Virgin Mary, and to saints and angels, is as contrary to the laws of God as the worship of Vishnu or Juggernaut; and that the triple-crowned minion of Antichrist who sits upon the tottering throne of the bloody Papacy is the most foul blasphemer that ever polluted the universe of God. This is no stronger than I mean it to be; for is not the monster red with the life-blood of the children of the Most High, and does it not catch at the sacred and dearly-purchased prerogative of Christ, even the forgiveness of sins?

Another great truth which we advocate is, the Unconscious state of the Dead. This important doctrine which has but lately been resurrected from its long and forcible entombment of centuries, should be held up unceasingly before the eyes of the people, as it is the most effective Bible weapon to combat that growing demoralizer—Spiritualism. The wide spread dogma of man's inherent immortality, which heathen philosophy created, gives the greatest scope to the wildest flight of diseased imagination, and has been no mean auxiliary to priestly chicanery. The Scriptures explicity affirm that "the dead know not anything," that "their thoughts perish," that "there is no wisdom or knowledge in the grave;" and it has been proved by the most profound searchers of the Divine Word, that the existence of an immortal soul is not once hinted at! This undying principle in man, which makes a thing of dust indestructive as the Deity, has given rise to many and conflicting notions of the final issue of the sinner's fate. First, as he could not die, and was unfit for heaven, stern bigotry, and unbending zeal consigned the unhappy wretch to an eternity of woe. With others, this merciless sentence was too much, and Purgatorial fires were introduced to fit the most salvable for the company of heaven, whilst a large portion of the incorrigible were no better off than at the beginning. Then came the ultra-universalist, who in the plenitude of his unbounded benevolence, and in opposition to the Bible, gives eternal life and happiness to every son of Adam. This last is the violent reaction from everlasting misery, and is as unscriptural in its indulgence as the first is in its cruelty. Now comes the question—"what becomes of the impenitent?" We answer; that as immortality comes through Christ alone, all who are out of Christ, shall be cut off from existence, and sink into the dark gloom of interminable death. This is all that God can do with them, consistent with his wisdom and unimpeachable justice. Some say that such a fate is all the wicked could desire. We have nothing to do with that. All we know is, the Bible teaches that those who have not their part in the first resurrection shall become as stubble in the devouring flame. O, what a terrible thought, that one should take his last, despairing look at life, ere he is hurled into a grave, whose dark obscurity shall never, never be lit up by a beam of a day of resurrection! That over that charnel-house of unnumbered dead, millions of ages shall roll and yet no life, no thought shall animate the dreadful stillness which casts its everlasting pall over their nothingness! And yet they might have been partakers of the immortality which blooms in every ransomed face. Death and life were set before them. Some quaffed the deadly chalice, whilst others drank of that river, the streams of which make glad the city of God; and as life unfading is the greatest gift, so perpetual death must be the greatest evil.

Thus then there are many things to preach and teach besides the speedy coming of the Lord. There are errors to combat, sinners to convert, the poor to feed, the sick to visit, the sorrowful to comfort; and while we are doing these works of faith and charity, we may speak of our hopes and our glad expectations, till the Advent of the coming Messiah will be looked for with joy, by thousands who else had listened to it with indifference, or turned away in disgust, as from the crazy fanaticism of narrow bigotry.

Let us beware that we do no hurt to a cause which we seek to advance, by an unkindness to any who think not as we do. Let love be the great characteristic of our body, and it will do far more for the spread of truth than all the violent coercion which intolerance can wield. To win souls to Christ is the great aim of christians, and the spirit of gentleness in persuading sinners to come to Jesus, is more effectual than attempts to make them go by force or fear of the stab of tongue or bayonet.

JNO. F. COTTON.

For the Crisis.

Exposition of First Peter Chapter 3:18-20.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing.

This passage of Scripture has been the occasion of endless controversy, giving rise to much speculation and many and varied explanations. The Roman Catholic claims it as sustaining his view of a place after death, called Purgatory, where by virtue of fire and the mediation of the spirit of Christ at his visit therein, certain sins are purged away from the souls of the dead. The Restorationist quotes it as proving salvation for man after death, when the Lord is supposed to have gone to the spirits of the impenitent in their infernal abode, offering them pardon, which they accept, making hell a very successful place to preach in. The Episcopal church, and some others, refer to the passage as proving an intermediate state for the souls of the pious, equivalent to hades, to which place the Savior's spirit went at his decease to comfort the departed therein detained. Others, like Dr. Whitby, interpret the spirits in prison not as meaning individuals naturally and truly dead, "but only the Gentiles dead in trespasses and sins, and by the prophet Isaiah thrice styled they who are 'in prison.'" And others, still, refer the imprisoned spirits to the antediluvians who, while yet alive, were shut up to judgment, awaiting their punishment as doomed criminals in a dungeon await their execution. Thus purgatory, hades, the vulgar hell, etc., are each and all by turns supposed to be inculcated in the vexed passage, evidently hard to be understood.

We think we have a better view than any or all of these, and is more in harmony with the evident nature of man and hades; and being sustained by high human authority, as well as the Scriptures, we here offer it. I have always been puzzled in relation to the text in the light of either of the views above mentioned—for,

1. The Roman Catholic dogma of purgatory, I never could receive, or imagine for a moment it was inculcated in any passage in the Bible, being too radical a protestant for that.

2. The Restorationist view I could not accept, for I never could read my Bible as teaching the final salvation of all souls; and, besides, the passage does not look that way; it is not universalian, but has a special and exclusive antediluvian application.

3. The English church view seemed untenable, for how could Christ's spirit go at his death to the under-world, or hades, and minister there for weal or woe, when it is expressly said he gave it into the hands of the Almighty Father, whom our Lord's prayer locates not in hades or hell but "in heaven?" Moreover, hades is in the earth, and I am very sure that heaven is not.

4. How could his spirit enter hades to comfort the dead, whether good or bad, when there is not a particle of evidence in all God's word that any (pnuema) spirit ever goes to hades when men die, and never goes there at all only for purposes of resurrection?

5. Furthermore, spirit and soul are two things. Christ's soul did go to hades when he died, and was buried, Acts 2:27, but his spirit did not. And as Dr. Fuller and Bishop Pearson clearly prove that the preaching was done by the Spirit of God, and not by the soul of Christ, (by which Spirit—God's—and not by a returning soul was Christ quickened,) consequently the preaching must have been outside of hades.

6. And then, as everything in hades is dead, so Christ's soul—which in Acts 2, simply means himself—was dead while there. Unto this condition "he made his soul an offering," it was "sorrowful unto death," "poured out his soul unto death," etc. So that being dead, and therefore knowing "not anything," it was impossible in the nature of things for him in the invisible under-world to institute the "open proclamation of the gospel," as the Greek word Keerussa uniformly denotes.

7. The word hades is not found in the passage before us, and as to the "prison," it might mean hades, as Bp. Hobart decides; or, it might be the vulgar hell, as the Catholics and Restorationists think: or, it might be the grave, if it could be proved that spirit ever went into the grave. Who is to decide?

8. And if it taught, as some hold, that our Lord, with the Father, went in the Holy Spirit to the antediluvians and preached to them while they were alive, why does Peter call those rebels in the flesh, pnuemata (spirits)? rather an unusual,—though perhaps not entirely unscriptural—way of naming human flesh and blood, for "a (pnuema) spirit hath not flesh and blood."—Luke 24:39.

9. And yet the face of the passage seemed to show that he who was "with the Father before the world was," and who was put to death in the flesh, went by the Spirit of the Father, somewhere, and at sometime in the past, and preached to certain spirits in prison; and this work seeming to have been done according to verse 20, "in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing." Yet why mention the Noachian spirits and no other? So I have been puzzled, and concluded to do with the passage what I generally do with all other texts I cannot understand,—keep my eye upon it, wait, dig, and pray for more and better light. And as I think the better light now shines, having freely received I freely give.

The key is found in the following criticism on the passage by Rev. Alexander Piri, a learned minister of Newburgh in Scotland, whose "Posthumous Works" were published, Edinburgh, 1805. In vol. 3, p. 181, he says:

"Connect the 19th and 20 verses in one, and you read thus, 'by which—i. e., by the Holy Spirit—and by the spirits on guard, he went and preached to the unbelieving in the days of Noah,' etc. Such (he says) is the regular order of the words in the original; attending to which we find that the spirits in prison do not form the audience addressed, but are the preachers themselves."

Now Piri himself, as also L. Barrington, understood the spirits in prison in this verse to mean the same as the souls in verse 20; so they refer them to Noah and his family shut up in the ark and guarded and watched. But human souls are not human spirits. And accepting his translation in the main, but rejecting his further criticisms, we come at once to his presentation of the clearer view of Jean Le Clere, the learned French Expositor of 1714. On p. 182, Piri says:

"Le Clere thinks that by spirits keeping guard are meant angels who (diaphulatto,) keep men, as we are told in Psalms 91:11; Luke 4:10, and hence are expressly called watchers in Dan. 4:13. The Divinity is said to have called the men that lived before the flood to repentance, in company with the angels, who admonished Noah to exhort them to a better life. I should render this passage thus, and being quickened by the Spirit by which he went with the spirits that watch and preached to the unbelieving, etc. When God is about to do anything among men he is represented as coming down with the angels as his guard. For this reason, coming down with the angels to admonish Noah and command him to call men to repentance, he is said to have gone with the spirits that watch; and besides, to have done that which Noah did in his name and by his command." Thus far Le Clere. "The above interpretation," says Piri, "is very ingenious, and to me the most plausible of any I have read." Undoubtedly it is the true one.

For as I before hinted, the Greek keerusso rendered "preached," in all its sixty usages in the New Testament evidently means what the lexicographers say it does, viz., the above-board, open, public proclamation of the gospel to live men on the earth's surface, and never an invisible and clandestine preaching thereof to dead men in hades below its surface. Respecting phulakee, rendered "prison" in the passage, every Greek reader knows that the word primarily means a place of watching or keeping guard. The word is found forty-six times in the Greek N. T., and is variously rendered prison, ward, hold, cage, and watch. In Luke 2:8, it is translated in its verbal form, "keeping watch over the flocks by night." So too in Matt. 14:25; 24:43; Mark 6:48; Luke 12:38, where it is twice used, it is rendered watch. In ancient times the night was divided into four phulakai or watches, because at these times some were appointed to keep guard or to watch for the safety of the army or city. As to the propriety of changing "by" to "with" in the text, no one will dispute it when made aware that the Greek en is variously rendered in the N. T. in, among, with, by, at, through, because, throughout, on, etc. That the angels watch over, guard, and keep men, will not be disputed. The Syriac eer and eereem in Dan. 4:13, 17 is, as Le Clere says, properly rendered watcher and watchers. And those "watchers" were the angels of God. They encamp around all who fear God. They keep the good from dashing their feet against the stones. The word rendered "keep" in Ps. 91:11, is shomar, and means, says Prof. Pick, to keep, to watch, or to guard. Its Greek equivalent in Luke 4:10 is diaphulatto, which means the same thing. Why then should not phulakee in the passage under consideration be rendered watch? And as the passage fairly teaches that the preaching was performed "in the days of Noah," when the antediluvians were yet alive in flesh and blood, and not disembodied, so too the word pneuma rendered spirit is with much more propriety applied to the angels than to men. For "are they not all ministering (pneumata) spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"—Heb. 1:14. And finally, the translation made by Le Clere and Piri is a natural one, and an easy and fair transposition of the sacred text of the original.

I conclude then with Bp. Pearson, that "in vain are we taught to understand Peter of the promulgation of the gospel to the Jews or Gentiles then in hades, since the words so evidently relate to the long suffering of God to men then living in the days of Noah," and agree with St. Augustine who in Ep. 99 says of the prison, "It belongs not at all to Christ's descent into hell." If my exposition be false, overthrow it: if it be true and reasonable, then receive it.

Wardsboro, Vt., July, 1859.

For the Crisis.

Christ in his Saints.

BRO. GRANT:—The following article was published a year since in a monthly periodical, but will be new to nearly all the readers of the Crisis.

There is no truth more plainly revealed in the word of God than this, that Christ dwells in the hearts of his saints. With what confidence the apostle Paul exclaims, —"I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me!" When enumerating the blessings for which he prayed in behalf of his Ephesian brethren, he names this, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." The deep interest of his soul toward his Galatian brethren is thus expressed: "My little children, of whom I travail in birth, until Christ be formed in you."

When writing to the church at Rome, he among other things exhorts them to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ;" and in his epistle to the Colossians, he declares that "the mystery which hath been hid for ages, and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints," the "riches" and "glory" of which he would have made "known among the Gentiles," is this, "Christ in you, the hope of glory." Of his Corinthian brethren, he with great confidence asks, "Know ye not, your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"

How may we attain unto this inestimable blessing—an inward Christ? In reply to the question proposed by a disciple just prior to his crucifixion, "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" Jesus says, "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." With this agree the words of John; "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Again he says, "And this is the love of God, that ye keep his commandments." Both Jesus and John show that true love will be evinced by an obedience to the divine precepts, and that in the hearts of those who thus love, Christ will dwell. Jesus also says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples indeed, if ye have love one to another." John harmonizes with this when he says, "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us." And now, lest we mistake the character of that love which we must have, in order to insure the indwelling of God, the apostle gives us an infallible test: "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments."

Obedience to the commands of God is the touchstone, given by Christ and the apostle John, by which we may know whether our love be of the genuine kind or not. It is not a love based on affinities and theories, but it is a love that "is shed abroad in the heart, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Though one had the power to speak the language of all men, and with the eloquence of angels—though they possessed the gift of prophecy, and had understanding of all mysteries and sciences—though by mighty faith they could remove mountains into the midst of the sea, and with the spirit of wonderful benevolence bestow all their goods to feed the poor, and nobly die a martyr's death rather than yield their principles, yet, if destitute of this pure and heaven-born love—all, all beside, would profit them nothing. It is such, yea, it is the same "love wherewith" the Father loved the Son, for says Jesus, in his prayer to the Father, "And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it; that the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them, and I in them." It is a "love without dissimulation, an "unfeigned love," and he who has it in his heart, will do "no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

The apostle Paul exhorts his brethren to be "rooted and grounded in love"—it is the "good ground" which bringeth forth an "hundred fold." We are to forbear one another in love," and to "speak the truth in love." Is the church to "make increase of the body, unto the edification of itself?" —it must be "in love." Are its members to be "knit together?"—it is in love." Would we have an active faith?—it "works by love." This is a love that is not "in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

If the possessor of this love "sees a brother or a sister naked, and destitute of daily food," he says not "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding he giveth them not those things that are needful to the body." Love feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, lifts the heavy burden from the weary shoulder, relieves the distressed, comforts the feeble minded, and supports the weak. Such is the love which leads to obedience, and secures an indwelling Christ. And such is the oneness existing between the saint and his Savior, that an act done to the one is done to the other also. Hear the King as he sits on the throne of his glory, saying unto those upon his right hand,—"Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Yes, they had fed him when hungry, given him drink when thirsty, clothed him when naked, visited him when sick, ministered unto him when in prison. And how? By doing it even unto the least of those his brethren, for in them Christ dwelt.

Brother! sister! hast thou ever thought, "O, that I had lived when the Savior was upon earth! with what delight would I have hung upon his words,—with what eager haste prepared a repast and a couch for his refreshment, when hungry and weary with fasting and long journeying. How I would have brought the cooling water with which to lave his fevered brow, and bathe his soil-worn feet. I would have applied balm to his bleeding wounds, when scourged by Roman soldiers, and near his cross would I have taken my stand and mingled my tears with weeping Mary's, and from the fulness of my heart told him my grief and love." Turn thine eye no longer back to Nazareth, to Gethsemane, nor Calvary, but remember that Christ is here; he yet lives and dwells "with men on earth," and while thou art bestowing kindly acts of love on his saints, thou art in verity ministering to him whom thy soul loveth.

But not only is the language, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done unto me," applicable to the acts of love and kindness manifested toward his saints, but it may equally apply to the acts of hatred and unkindness. Christ is even now "wounded in the house of his friends," even now "spitefully entreated," reproached, falsely accused, rejected, "crucified afresh, and put to open shame." That unkind word—that averted eye—that passing by on the other side, is not merely an insult, a slight toward a "little one"—a weak member of the church of Christ. That refusal to bestow the needful food and clothing upon a poor one of the flock, was not a neglect of them only. That bitter word of envy or malice—that effort to mar the reputation of one perhaps more highly esteemed than yourself, was not the injury inflicted on them merely—that barbed arrow pierced the heart of Jesus.

Think of it, oh think of it, thou righteous Pharisee, who regardest with so much complacency thy robe of good works, and long prayers, and lookest with scorn upon the poor trembling saint by thy side, who scarcely dares look upward, so overwhelmed is he with the consciousness of his own demerit,—think of it, I say. Thou despisest Christ in the person of his lowly follower. Think of it, oh think of it, thou envious one, who seekest to cast a blight upon the reputation of one who perchance has won laurels to himself by faithful devotedness to God; it is not his fair name alone thou stainest with thy black calumny, but Christ's precious name is reproached also. Beware, lest the fate of those who in ancient days reviled and falsely accused, be also thine.

O, would you honor Christ? Would you feast him at your dwellings, comfort him when sad, refresh him when weary? Minister thus to his saints, even though the lowly ones of earth, and thou wilt indeed minister unto him, for Christ liveth in them.

M. D. W.

Richmond, Me.

For the Crisis.

The Nations are Angry.

If any doubt it, let such read of ev n as they pass. Prussia recently gave orders for the mobilization (or calling into active service) of her vast army—every able-bodied male under forty years of age is a soldier in Prussia. Since peace was declared, this order has been revoked; and yet the same spirit that gave rise to its passage exists. The papers in that country were requested, i. e. compelled, not to express any opinion contrary to the wishes of the ruler. The Prince Regent has power—absolute—to declare war—or peace—as he chooses. Should he think best to declare war, for any cause, war would follow. Germany is in a ferment, and longs to attack France for past and present offences. Germany can raise a vast army easily. Provocation exists for war since peace as before. Austria has been humbled, Germany, as a sympathizer, is exasperated. Russia informed Germany if she engaged in the controversy, the political equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. So if Germany should attempt to strike France, the Russian bear would spring with a death hug to the fray. England's Lion is growling at the terms of peace between France and Austria. The British press condemn violently Louis Napoleon's course in the matter. The London Times says of him: "Of all the riddles he has proposed to Europe, none is more puzzling and intricate than . . the late treaty of peace. . . The treasure is spent, the blood shed—the war is ended, and the peace is made; but no one, as we can see, is better for the fight. Perhaps he has imposed some secret obligation on Austria never again to interfere with Italy. If it is so, then all is right. The Pope and Grand Dukes are put in pride of place merely to give his great principles—'the sovereignty of the people'—a clear stage. If they can hold their own—good. If not, then down topple Pope, and raiser, and Italy left to herself works out her own regeneration."

The London News says:—"It was with appeals and promises to Italy, that the war was commenced. . . . The war is terminated for the present, without securing the objects for which it was undertaken. The allied armies are marching homeward, leaving the noble work at most but half done. Italy is not free. . . . The Austrian vulture, though beaten off the right side, still plants his cruel talons in the left, of that long suffering country. The enemies of freedom and progress are exultant. The friends of despotism and intolerance,—the supporters of the Holy Alliance, and Papal rule,—are almost beside themselves with sudden joy. It is a jubilee for Austrian Grand Dukes, Italian Cardinals, French Priests, and English Peers."

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says:—"The terms of peace have occasioned a feeling of disappointment and indignation among all those who took a sincere interest in the objects of the war," etc. And the English journals generally ridicule the terms of peace. This shows that if they can't have peace as they please, they had rather have war rage. It is stated on high authority, that both Emperors—Louis Napoleon and Francis Joseph—are convinced that the bases for peace, which they so hastily agreed upon, are in many respects [illegible]. And who can tell they will not [illegible] on account of this [illegible]? The greatest activity [illegible] coast—the channel coast [illegible] with earth [illegible]. It shows that [illegible] work of war [illegible].

... In our own country arms are being made for the European nations. At Col. Colt's Armory, in Connecticut, 10,000 Revolving rifles are being manufactured for the British government, sufficient to arm six regiments—and "no six regiments can be so effectually armed, as with these Revolving Rifles and with the sword bayonet." Austrian agents are also here examining the various improved weapons of war. Now if these instruments were not wanted, they would not be ordered. Depend upon it, peace is not of long duration.

In Italy discontent at the terms of peace is visible. In Florence great agitation prevailed thereat—describing the peace as betraying the finest hopes. Tuscany declares she will not again be replaced under the Austrian yoke. Fresh Piedmontese troops, it is said, are going to the Romagna with Napoleon's consent, to preserve order and take from the Pope all hope of recovering it by help of Swiss Guards. Modena and Parma are in a state of revolt. Tuscany and Modena are organizing troops to oppose the return of their Grand Dukes. The Emperor of Austria commands the whole of his forces to remain in position—to be provided with food and military resources, just as they would have been had not peace been declared." The dying advice of Prince Metternich to Francis Joseph, in relation to the present war, is said to have been:—"Defeat is not destruction—a city, a fortress may be rebuilt—an Empire never. Listen to no advice—hearken to no proposition of peace—and, above all, enter into no treaty whatever either with the Bonapartes or the House of Savoy." Does this look like a continuance of peace? It is said that Russia has the plan of a campaign made out, in anticipation of future events—and that the peace concluded between France and Austria, "will not last two years,"—that she is determined to take Constantinople, and either reduce Turkey to the position of a Russian colony, or swallow it altogether. In England, Lord Lyndhurst made a speech, advocating the raising and maintaining of 100,000 men—regarding the assertion that France has no wish to invade England as undeserving of confidence. Its general spirit is known to harmonize with much of the spirit of the leading men of Great Britain.

Louis Napoleon has stated (whether he means so or not), to the Pope's question, that "the power of the papacy shall be respected." This power rules over men. Men dwell in Italy. "Italy shall be free!" says Garibaldi. "We won't have the Pope for our Governor!" say the Romagna mountaineers, by thousands.

Our own affairs with Mexico are complicated. It is said that our minister to that government has given it as his opinion, that an honorable adjustment of them is impossible, and that reparation for the injuries done us, must be obtained at the cannon's mouth. Does it look peaceable ahead, on earth? It may seem so to some now. Perhaps it is the calm preceding the coming tornado. We cannot tell what may come; we should hardly be surprised at anything, we live in such an eventful age.

Events upon events are rushing along like the billows of the storm-tossed ocean. Earth's prospect looks dark enough for the future. The history of the past is not to be desired to be enacted over again, for it is written by the sword dipped in the blood of its victims. Events of the present send a shudder to the breast, and make the blood run cold, at the recital of scenes of horror and carnage on the battle-field. But who can tell the future? How long will such things be? God only knows; a few short years it may be,—perhaps sooner than we think—the last act in the tragedy of earth will end, the trump of the Archangel bid the curtain fall, and the King of kings and Lord of lords appear in His majesty, and then where will the proud monarchs and blood-stained heroes of earth be found?

> Lo! He comes with clouds descending,
> Once for favored sinners slain,
> Thousands, thousands saints attending,
> Swell the triumph of His train!
> Hallelujah!
> Jesus comes and comes to reign."

J. N. Berry.

Dorchester, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Report of the Rhode Island Conference.

Carolina Mills, R. I., June 29, 1859.

Conference met according to adjournment from the Quarterly meeting in March, 1859, at Providence, R. I. Bro. Bellows in the chair. Prayers offered by several brethren.

Elders A. Durfee and James Hemmenway were invited to take part in our deliberations. There were some remarks made on the subject of trying to interest the churches in uniting in a conference. Bro. Bellows suggested that Bro. Hemmenway become a member if he desired, which desire he expressed, and it was voted that he became a member.

It was motioned that brethren be appointed by the Conference to call on the different churches that are not yet connected with the conference, and invite them to join. The following brethren were chosen, viz., J. Hemmenway to call on the churches at Danielsonville, Abington, Conn., Fiskville, R. I., and Blackstone, Mass.; J. T. Dixon to call on the church at Exeter, R. I.; J. D. Brown to call on the churches at Rocky Brook, and South Kingston, (Brownsville); Jos. Northrop, the church at Carolina Mills; E. Bellows, the church at Central Village.

Voted, that J. Hemmenway, E. Bellows, J. D. Brown, and Jos. Northrop, be a committee to draw up a Constitution and present to the Conference at its next session. Adjourned to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock, A. M.

June 30, 10 o'clock, a. m.—Conference met as adjourned, Bro. Bellows presiding. Prayer by Bro. Hemmenway. At the call of the Chair, the clerk gave a statement of the doings of yesterday's session. The report of the committee on the Constitution was called for and read.

Voted, to accept it for discussion.

Voted, to invite brethren present, not members, to take part in the discussion of the Constitution offered, which was then read, discussed, and adopted as follows:

CONSTITUTION

Of the Rhode Island State Conference of Reformers, looking for the immediate second coming of Christ.

PREAMBLE.

The object of this Conference is, to concentrate the labors and sympathies of the Churches in this State, for the effectual spread of the truth; and to improve the moral condition of the churches.

Article I.

This Conference shall be composed of ministers, and churches represented by their delegates.

Article II.

Ministers sustaining a christian character, and churches represented by their delegates, shall be admitted to this conference by vote, and signing the Constitution.

Article III.

Churches may be entitled to delegates, in the proportion of one delegate to every ten members. Churches of less than ten members may send one delegate.

Article IV.

The officers of the Conference shall be a Moderator, Clerk, and Treasurer, each to be chosen yearly.

Article V.

Five members shall constitute a quorum to do business.

Article VI.

This Conference shall be held quarterly among the churches, as shall be deemed proper.

Article VII.

This Conference shall be in its operations, a Home Missionary Society, and invites the churches to aid it in the work, by such contributions as they are able.

Article VIII.

This Conference shall not legislate in matters of faith, nor interfere with the government of the churches: but may recommend as they shall deem prudent.

Article IX.

The order of the Conference shall be:

1st. The business.

2d. The discussion (in the spirit of love) of some Bible questions that may be deemed profitable.

3d. Meetings for "prayer and exhortation" and the "ministry of the Word."

Article X.

No Article of this Constitution shall be altered or changed, except by vote of two-thirds of the members of this Conference, at a regular meeting.

Voted, that Jos. D. Brown be treasurer under this Constitution.

Voted, that means be raised at this conference, to pay for having copies of this Constitution printed and scattered among the churches and to purchase books to keep the minutes and accounts of the conference.

Voted, that the clerk attend to having 100 copies of the Constitution printed, and scattered, and purchase books as above provided.

Voted, that when this conference adjourn at the end of this Quarterly meeting, it shall be to meet with the church in Exeter, (according to their request) on the 28th of Sept. 1859.

Voted, that a report of the Conference be sent to the "Crisis."

Adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock this P. M.

2 o'clock p. m.—Met according to adjournment. The afternoon had been set apart for religious services and ordination. There was singing and reading of Scripture, and prayer; after which Bro. Durfee preached a discourse founded on Acts 18: 28; following which a brother was publicly ordained by prayer and laying on of hands.

The business of the conference had been accomplished, and the remainder of the time till Friday night, (July 1st,) was devoted to religious meetings. On Friday the conference adjourned to meet with the church at Exeter, Sept. 28, 1859.

Bro. Hemmenway continued with the church at Carolina over the following Lord's Day.

Joseph D. Brown, Clerk.

A Great Truth.—In vain do we seek to awaken in our churches zeal for missions as a separate thing. To be genuine, it must flow from love to Christ. It is when a sense of personal communion with the Son of God is highest that we shall be most fit for missionary work, either to go ourselves or to stir up others. If we allow it to become a business of dollars and cents, we shall see no results. "Find preachers of D. Brainerd's spirit," said John Wesley, "and nothing can stand before them; but without this, what can gold or silver do?" Let gushing affection to the Lord Jesus Christ become the ruling passion, and it communicates the thrill of evangelical zeal to every member of the electric chain.—Dr. Alexander.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 10, 1859.

Diary Leaves.

Thursday, July 28th, we left Poultney for our appointment at Sandy Hill. Bro. Joseph Parry met us at Fort Edward depot, and took us to his quiet home in one of the most lovely situations that we have visited in all our travels. His residence is at the termination of a beautiful "Pine Avenue," some thirty rods in length, composed of five rows of handsome pines, forming a shaded carriage way, beside a delightful side walk between two rows of the pines. Surrounding the house are handsome forest trees bearing chesnuts, butternuts and hickory nuts; fruit trees, grapevines and flowers. Here the innocent birds carol their sweet songs at early dawn, and the whippoorwill comes near to cheer the evening hours of a happy christian family. We do not wonder that "Fannie" writes poetry.

Bro. Parry is an Englishman of fine talents, who preached in his native land some years among the Congregationalists. He has been in America about twenty-seven years. He became interested in the personal coming of Christ before Bro. Miller began to preach on the subject. About ten years since he began to see that the Bible taught that eternal life is a gift through Christ, obtained only by the righteous, and consequently the wicked must perish. After a careful examination of the subject in its length and breadth, he clearly saw the harmony of the Scriptures on this subject, and fully embraced the doctrine of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. Although he presented this great truth in a very judicious and kind manner, he was soon called in question by his brethren in the ministry, who finally excluded him from their number; not for any improper conduct, for they did not hesitate to say that they considered him a christian, but simply because he would not look through their theological spectacles when he read the Bible. He knows full well the pleasure of being separated from friends for the truth's sake, and has resolved to bear with fortitude all that a cold world and church may heap upon him. His lovely family sympathize with him, and shrink not from bearing their share of the reproach. They find Jesus more precious as other friends turn away.

We commenced our meetings Friday, P. M. in a beautiful grove, on Bro. Parry's land, and felt conscious that the Lord was pleased to meet us in our sequestered place of worship. In the evening we assembled at the school house near by, and enjoyed a profitable hour in devotion.

Saturday morning and afternoon we spent very pleasantly and profitably in the grove. Notwithstanding earnest efforts had been made to prejudice people against us and to keep them away from the meetings, a goodly number of intelligent citizens met with us and were much interested. They became satisfied that we were neither "fanatics" nor "atheists."

In the evening we went to fill our appointment at the Union (?) Church at Fort Edward, but found the doors closed against us. The reason given was, we did not belong to any "organized body." We learned that the "organized body" occupying the church were engaged in a law suit with another "organized body" occupying another house of worship. We were glad to be out of such warfare, and away from such warriors. We preferred "the good fight of faith." Bro. Parry succeeded in obtaining the Union School Hall, which was lit up about 8 1-2 o'clock, when the bell was rung, and quite a large congregation assembled and listened attentively to remarks on the creation and death of our first parents. We found the people were not in favor of having a "Union Church" occupied by one "organized body," to the exclusion of all others. We felt conscious that the Lord was on our side, and was stronger than all that could be against us.

Lord's day morning, we assembled in the grove at 9 1-2 o'clock for a love feast, and had a precious season in talking of the love of Jesus. Several came from sixteen to twenty miles to be present at this morning meeting, for the purpose of giving in their testimony in favor of the "blessed hope." It was truly a union meeting. A large congregation assembled at the usual hours of worship, and listened with the very best attention while we spoke of the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked. The truth found a welcome in many honest hearts, that will not, we trust, suffer themselves to be fettered again by any "organized body," that bolts its doors against the truth and the children of the Lord. It is comforting to see honest people give up fables and embrace the word of life. We found many warm friends at Sandy Hill, who have counted the cost, and are willing to suffer reproach for Christ's sake.

At the close of the afternoon exercises we went down into the waters of the noble Hudson and buried in baptism a venerable soldier of the cross, upwards of seventy-three years of age. I learn that others are now waiting for an opportunity to follow Christ in this ordinance.

In the evening we went to Glen's Falls and spoke to an intelligent and attentive audience on the subject of Spiritualism. This is where Mr. Walker lives, with whom we had a discussion at Sandy Hill, last spring. This anti-christian delusion has taken deep root in this place, and many seem past all hope of reformation. Spiritualism, Shakerism, Swedenborgianism, Catholicism and the doctrine of eternal misery, all rest on the same basis—the immortality of the soul. No compromise can be made with these monstrous systems of error. Every christian should gird on his armor anew, and prepare, in the strength of the Lord, for an earnest contest against this hydra-headed monster of error.

On our way back to Sandy Hill, after the meeting, while passing down a hill, the wagon broke and caused the horses to run, when we were thrown out and almost miraculously preserved from injury. It seemed as if angels were present to deliver. Monday evening we preached in the Baptist church. The truth is spreading rapidly in this section. When we left, the people were about taking steps to erect a place of worship. Pray for them.

Campmeeting.

We learn there is a good degree of interest felt in the meeting to be held at Wilbraham, commencing Monday, August 29; but we fear there will not be sufficient effort made to provide tents.

Families will find it very convenient to have a small tent of their own. The cloth can be used for domestic purposes at the close of the meeting.

Your tents should be double, at least a portion of them, and then in case we should have a shower, you will be able to keep your bedding dry.

In towns where there are several families, let them combine together and get a larger tent that will accommodate not only themselves, but their neighbors. Let all bring their own bedding, if possible.

If you come alone, one quilt and a pillow will be sufficient, which, with the straw used in the tents, will make a very comfortable and healthy bed.

Come at the beginning of the meeting, and stay till its close, and we hesitate not to say, you will find it better for your physical and spiritual health, than all the watering places in the country; and the theological student will learn more at such a meeting in one week, than a whole year in a Seminary.

Come and try it.

Brethren, let much prayer be offered for this meeting, as it will be one of deep interest to the cause of truth.

Come, determined to work for the Lord, and him alone.

Napoleon's Designs.

The world is waiting with feverish anxiety for the next great movement of Bonaparte. All seem satisfied that he has only begun to play his deep game, and that another move will soon be made. The English are evidently expecting that Napoleon may attempt to avenge the battle of Waterloo, and humble the British nation. In anticipation of such an event, the English are actively engaged in preparing their military and naval forces, lest they be taken unawares by the "giant of Europe." Napoleon's career is evidently onward, till he rises above every man, when he will "come to his end and none will help him." Evidences increase to show that he is the last supporter of the Pope, and that both are very near perdition.

The Hamilton (C. W.) Spectator published the following extract from a private letter from a gentleman in England:

"People have not much confidence in it, (the peace) and I fear we must look for very much worse troubles in Europe. The next phase will probably be revolutionary. It is strange that such men as Count Cavour, Kossuth and Garibaldi, should have been so duped by Louis Napoleon. But you see their eyes are now opened. Count Cavour resigned at once; it is said Garibaldi will not throw down his arms, and no doubt Kossuth will also give trouble. I think there can be no doubt that the deep game of Napoleon is to make the government of the Pope perfectly unbearable, and he will then say to the people and clergy of the Papal church, 'elect your own head,' and of course he will be the man."

In corroboration of this, the writer of the letter we are quoting from says:

"A very striking book has been lately published by M. About: La Question Romaine." He is a very clever man, and was sent to Rome by Louis Napoleon, who, it is understood, corrected every line of the book. He proves the weakness of the Romish government, and sums up his argument thus:—

"The head of the English Church is Queen in England; the head of the Greek Church is the Emperor at St. Petersburgh; and it must be quite evident that the head of the Western Church should be in Paris."

The Treaty of Peace.

The treaty of peace between the Emperors of France and Austria, bids fair to lead to another war. The Italians are very much exasperated at the idea of having the Pope for a president, and the Austrians as members of the Italian confederation. They are determined not to submit. A war cloud seems gathering also between England and France. Everything betokens a terrible storm near at hand that will sweep over the entire continent of Europe and extend into Asia.

A Paris correspondent says:

"A letter which I have just received from a friend at Lucca assures me that the fury in Tuscany about the return of the Grand Duke is intense. The inhabitants declare they will burn palace and fortress ere they will submit to such humiliation. Every where the portrait of Orsini is being hawked about, side by side with that of the Emperor, and curses deep and loud are heaped upon the Imperial liberator (Napoleon) of yesterday. At Milan, without the greatest precautions on the part of the French police, which were placed about in all directions, it is firmly believed he could not have escaped assassination."

"The Catholics are, of course, very generally elated to excess. Their press fairly booms with praises of the French Emperor, who thus has done for Catholicism at one stroke what its most ardent propagandists have failed in at every and all attempts."

A Turin letter of the 19th of July, in the London Times, says:—

"A letter from Bologna describes the impression made by the 'Napoleonic despatch' as 'immense and terrible.' The writer says, Austria, aided by the Pope and his Nuncio, will be within three years sole master of Italy. The general indignation is indescribable. The volunteers who are marching upon Rimini are now 3,000 strong; from here have set out other 11,000 men, between Mezzocap and other corps; we hope that to us will unite themselves all the patriots who have fought and shed their blood on Lombard plains, and we alone, with the cry of 'Evviva the valiant King Vittorio Emanuele,' we will beat the Swiss hordes and keep alive that war which it was sought to terminate with the triumph of clerical despotism."

The Pope.

It is evident that the Pope feels somewhat uneasy at his palace of blood. The prince of oppressors begins to distinguish the distant rumbling of the approaching storm that shall deluge him with a tornado of destruction. His throne can rest but a short time longer upon christian skulls and the blood of martyrs. The time is at hand, when "with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

In a circular to the archbishops, bishops, patriarchs, and primates, he says:

"Venerable Brethren.— . . The seditious movements which have recently broken out in Italy against the authority of legitimate princes, in countries nearest to the States of the Church, have invaded our provinces like the flames of a conflagration. Excited by this fatal example and by intrigues abroad, they have thrown off our paternal rule; and, in spite of their small numbers, the adherents of the revolt demand that they shall be subjected to that one of the Italian governments which, of late years, has been the adversary of the Church, of its legitimate rights, and of its sacred ministers."

He refers to Sardinia. He goes on to say:

"We exhort you, on account of your declared piety towards the Holy See, and your singular zeal for its liberty, to see to the accomplishment of the prescription which we read was formerly given by Moses to Aaron, the Sovereign Pontiff of the Hebrews (Numbers chap. 16):—'Take a censor and put fire therein from off the altar and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation and make atonement for them, for there is wrath gone out from the Lord; the plague is begun.'"

The wine cup of wrath from the Lord is about ready for "the Sovereign Pontiff." The following shows his determination never to yield, till the strong arm shall lay him low. In his circular to associates, he says:

"We will brave all perils and undergo all trials sooner than fail in any respect in our apostolic duty to do anything whatever against the sanctity of the oath by which we bound ourselves when, in spite of our unworthiness, we were raised, by God's will, to this supreme seat of the Prince of Apostles."

South America.

The "war of principles" is affecting various parts of the world. In different portions of South America, the revolutionary movement has become a serious matter. We are comforted in thinking that the Prince of peace is coming soon to end the bloody strife.

The state of things in Venezuela, S. A., is very distressing. The following from the Diario Mercantie of Puerto Cabello will give some idea of the sad condition of the citizens:—

"All the citizens sleep, or rather spend the night gun in hand. Armed bodies keep up a continual and untiring vigilance. Families are congregated in the inner town on account of the want of security in the outer town, there being no troops to guard it. The factionists, or rather the highwaymen, scattered in the woods and adjacent hiding places, threaten the city with a nocturnal invasion. Farmers have abandoned their fields and their interests through fear of being surprised and murdered. Commerce is totally paralyzed, and industrial pursuits impeded on account of every one having to attend to his own security and safety. Such is the life they lead in Puerto Cabello. And yet the Caracas journals are informed that public tranquility has been re-established in this town, and some publish telegraphic despatches announcing that the danger which threatened us has disappeared, or that the fears of the inhabitants are unfounded. The evil is in the blood. It is because banditti in the neighborhood of Puerto Cabello are sustained by the conspirators of the city and encouraged in criminal designs. They rejoice in the assassinations and depredations which they commit, and desire the ruin of honorable men, so that they may enrich themselves with their spoils."

Our Tract Column.

The Tract Fund for the West.

I think sometimes when receiving the letters on this subject, that it seems like a good prayer meeting. All have a word to say. At present there is a cessation of letters for a few days, which is all providential, as I have many unanswered, and am getting behind. I shall send you some more scraps soon, if the Lord will. I love to read these good pithy letters from those whose religion is pocket deep. They remind me of the sailor in the chapel who said, "Pass round the hat, brother; I never feel shouting happy till after I have given something." If that makes us feel happy, I trust a goodly number of the flock will be "shouting happy" ere this work is concluded.

As I have not time to bring up all the correspondence till date, I will anticipate, and send a single letter that came the other day. It is signed *. So you see we have a star among our correspondents, and this, with the V., will pass very well for one of the "star papers." Here it is.

"July 25th, 1859.

Dear Bro:—Knowing that to the hungry soul "the word of life" is the good seed which gives bread, and that to the thirsting mind it is the power which opens exhaustless fountains, I bid you God speed in this noble tract enterprise. You have the prayers of all the good, that for the life and labor of sowing, you may reap the hundred-fold harvest of crowned hopes, satisfied hearts, and God's "well done."

But while your ambition fixes on this object, and all your energies are enlisted in reaching it, there is a great work for those to do who are not employed in the brain and hand labor of writing, printing, and otherwise arranging these messengers of peace to our needy brothers and sisters; yet we can and ought to speed the progress of this good work, by putting our hands deep into our pockets, and drawing therefrom at least a little of the money which a gracious and good providence has given us. O! brethren, our prayers and our dollars are alike necessary in this enterprise. If we successfully attain the object which we so much desire, we can only hope for this through the effect of spiritual and material aid combined. Money furnishes the ink and the paper; money applies the strong hands to the crank, and gives the wheels their direction in effectual labor; money applies the steam to the engine, and gives willingness to manly toil; these combined transform each type into a messenger of truth for the famishing thousands at the West.

Come, brethren, get you up, untie your purse strings, and thrust your hands down to the bottom. You don't think of catching large fish, or making big hauls, in drawing your net along on the surface of the waters. Cast your net on the right side of the ship, and God's word is pledged that the basket which Bro. Hastings is preparing for the multitude out West shall be filled, even to the thousand. Brother and sister, here is a field of enterprise where the highest and the lowest, the richest and the poorest, may find scope for all the purest benevolence, in turning men to righteousness, knowing the while that they who labor in God's field, shall not only have a calm satisfaction in a good work, but shall add another gem in that immortal crown which shall be given to the faithful." If we would reap rich harvests of joy in the world to come, we must sow the seed in due season. This enterprise of scattering light in the West is just what we make it. The "future is the product of the present." Come, then, let us all rally to the standard of truth, with this our motto:—

> God gave us hands—one left, one right,
> The first to help ourselves, the other
> To stretch abroad in kindly might,
> And help along our needy brother.

Enclosed find $5—$2 from my sister and $3 for myself—to the cause above indicated. I wish I was able to place two ciphers at the right hand of it, and accompany the same with the cash. But though this is a small wheel in the great machine, yet it is none the less a wheel; and I expect when it is fitly joined to others larger and smaller, by the great Architect, and set in motion by the engine of God's love, it will steam out into the broad current of truth—a gospel life-boat, freighted to the water's edge with messages of peace and love; that when we have passed the shoals and quicksands in life's tempestuous sea, and heard the last sad wail of death's dark billows, with Christ for our pilot, together we may round the coast of time, and enter into the harbor of the saints' eternal rest."

*

Shine on, Bro. *, and may you at last be found among those that turn many to righteousness, and so shine as the stars forever and ever. God bless you all. Adieu. Send in your orders for tracts with or without price. "There is corn in Egypt" yet.

H. L. Hastings.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5, '59.

For the Crisis.

New Tracts.

"Will all men be saved?" We have long needed a tract on Universalism. Universalism is one extreme—eternal torment seems to be another. The pendulum swings from side to side; life and death hang like a plumb line right in the centre. Universalists have thought that when they had disproved eternal misery, after their fashion, they had proved universal salvation. But it is a great way from one side of this argument to the other. Prof. Hudson's able articles have done much to elucidate this.

I have just sent some manuscript to the printer which will make a tract of between twenty or thirty pages, entitled "Will all men be saved?" This tract is more argumentative than most that I have written. It reaches many of the common Universalist arguments, and handles them "kindly," but "without mittens." One brother who has heard it read says he wants to scatter 500 of them. This edition will cost me about 8 cents each, besides the writing and trouble. Those that wish to scatter them can, however, have them at the reduced price of $2 per hundred. It will require a large sale at this price to pay for issuing it. I shall also put them in with other tracts for the West at the same rate.

"Life Insurance."—This is a new tract which I shall issue with the above. It will be 32 mo. about 16 pages, just big enough to slip into a letter without increasing the postage, and without folding the tract. Price, about $1 per hundred. It is a pointed little tract showing men that the only true life insurance is through Christ, and showing how much better His life insurance is than all other plans and schemes for the same purpose. I trust this tract will be widely scattered. Send in the orders.

"Important Questions." 6 Nos. "Are you a Christian?" "Why not now?" "Do you pray?" "Are you pardoned?" "Are you saved?" "Are you safe?" In all, 24 pages. Price $1,50 per 100 setts. 1600 pages for $1. These tracts are regarded as well adapted to cause men to think on the subjects indicated by their titles.

Olive Leaves. 6 Nos.—Three are well known—"Little children love one another" —"My Friend," and "The one Resting Place." There are three others—"Abundant Grace," "Wondrous Love," and "Go in Peace." Price, the same as Important Questions. These tracts are so small that one or two of them can easily be enclosed in a letter without adding to the postage. They are cheap—16 pages for a cent. So you can give away four tracts for a cent, —say from ten to twenty for the price of a cigar or a plug of tobacco—from one to three hundred for the price of a pound of tea, and three or four hundred by wearing a "ribbon less" than usual, from one to two thousand for the price of a big breast-pin, such as harlots deck themselves with, and from two to three thousand for a set of ear pendants that would throw a Hottentot princess, or a wild African queen, into exctasies. Brethren and sisters, I am willing to keep you supplied with cheap tracts. Will you scatter them?

Gems.—These are some of my rhymes, printed on leaves tract size. They are as follows: No. 1. "Say, Brother, shall we meet?" No. 2. "Say, Sister, shall we meet?"—prepared to enclose in letters to friends—both alike, excepting "brother" in one is changed for "sister" in the other. No. 3. "Beyond." No. 4. "The harvest is past." No. 5. "Stand up for Jesus." No. 6. "At Rest Again." The whole six make 8 pages, tract size, and will be sold at 50 cents per 100 setts, or 62 cents, prepaid.

All who wish the above, and are unable to buy them can have them free. Scattered brethren at the West, who wish for tracts to distribute, send in your orders, and tell me how to forward them, and they shall be sent forthwith. May God bless you all.

Your Brother,

H. L. Hastings.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5th, '59.

Correspondence.

From Solomon Hale.

Bro. Grant:—It was my privilege to meet with the brethren at Poultney, Vt., on Friday evening, 29th, in the prayer meeting, at the Stone Church. I found a goodly number here engaged, heart and hand, in the work. It appeared to me that they had been taught of the Lord, each seemed to speak understandingly; the young, the old, and the middle aged, have shared richly in the blessings of the gospel of peace. Truly they have obtained like precious faith with the Apostles through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Grace and peace is being multiplied unto them through the knowledge of God and Jesus our Lord. And we heard them speak of the exceeding great and precious promises. We truly felt we were blessed, and rejoiced in having this opportunity of adding our feeble testimony. There were about seventy present; about thirty of them testified freely of the prospect before them, declaring that God for Christ's sake had forgiven their sins, and that by the grace of God they were determined to improve the blessings which were bountifully strewed in their pathway. In their supplications before the throne we could hear—"God bless Bro. Grant, for Christ's sake, for his work and labor of love among us, and be with and sustain him at Sandy Hill, and bless the truth and carry conviction to the heart of many a wanderer from God, that they may also share in those exceeding great and precious promises." We heard pleadings for Bro. Taylor, that his health might be restored, and he yet prove a blessing to many hearts. We have not found in any body of believers more of a spirit to work for God. There is such a harmony among them, that I believe God will bless them in all the christian graces, and we pray God that they maintain the same spirit that now prevails, and that their light and influence will continue to be felt by their friends and neighbors.

We have often read in the Crisis of the work that has been going on in Poultney the past winter and spring, and have felt much interest there. When we ascertained that you had been there, Bro. Grant, the Tuesday evening previous, we regretted we could not have been there to have seen you once more. We shall never forget the Sabbath we heard you preach in Newark, N. J., and afterwards in the spring of '54, at Collinsville, Ct. From that time to the present our faith and confidence has not been shaken, but rather I have by the grace of God abounded in the knowledge of the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ. My experience has been such that I can look back with pleasure upon the way in which the Lord has led me.

Where I now am we have had no preaching; occasionally we have gone to Albany, where we have heard Bro. H. F. Carpenter, and Bro. Storrs. There is quite a goodly number at Albany and a good working spirit did prevail. We have not heard from there lately. We have had some talk of sending for some good brother to come among us and help awake those who have become disinterested. We yet hope, Bro. Grant, that some immediate action may be taken, that will insure to us all here a great blessing, and prove none the less to many around us. May the Lord direct us aright in this matter.

West Troy, N. Y., July 30th.

For the Crisis.

"To Seduce, if Possible, Even the Elect."

I have frequently been astonished that any one should quote the above text to prove that it was impossible for the elect to be deceived, or "seduced." If we are placed beyond the possibility of seduction, I can see no propriety in the Savior's giving the advice that he did; neither can I see any truth in the words of the Apostle, or the express message (1 Tim. 4 : 1)—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats." I conceive it possible to be seduced unless we give heed to the admonition of the Savior; viz., "Be ye therefore wise as serpents."—Matt. 10 : 16.

Let us then obey this injunction, let it be said of us, they "will not be charmed;" as "the deaf adder that stoppeth her ears; which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely," and we shall not be likely to be seduced. The Lord has declared, "There shall not be found among you an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits; or a wizard, or a necromancer; for all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord."—Deut. 18 : 10, 20. Let us then obey orders, and we shall be able to withstand all, and overcome at last.

JNO. F. BAKER.

West Winsted, Ct.

For the Crisis.

"Is it Peace."

This is a question which we may consider with profit. Brother, doet thou know the truthfulness of David's declaration—"Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them?" Also of the prophet Isaiah—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee?"—Ps. 119 : 165; Isa. 26 : 3.

Peace is one of the fruits of the Spirit, and will not thrive in the ungodly; for "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." But the real christian is the possessor of it, because by an acquaintance with God we have the assurance of peace. Job 22 : 23. "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."—Isa. 48 : 18.

Jesus has left peace with the church, (John 14 : 27,) and in Him we may have peace, (16 : 33,) and with God through Him.—Rom. 5 : 1.

Is it peace? Examine thy heart. If it is not peace, there is something wrong. Paul has assured us that to be spiritually minded is life and peace. There can not be peace where there is disobedience. If we wish to have it constantly with us, we must be constantly obedient. To obey is better than sacrifice. Was it peace, brother, sister, friend, when you lay upon your pillow and reflected how you had been cheating your neighbor in that bargain you made with him, or taking usury from thy brother, when he was poor and you was blest with this world's goods? Was there peace when that frown was seen on thy brow, because the preacher spoke the plain truth?

Oh, no! then flee all these things; seek peace and ensue it. Commit yourself and all you have to Him who will guide you into peace. Follow peace with all men. Love the truth and obey it. Live in peace, and the God of peace shall be with you. Finally, "be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."—Phil. 4 : 6, 7.

G. L. E.

WAITING.—I have gained the victory, and Christ is holding out both hands to embrace me.—Rutherford.

For the Crisis.

DEMONS.—"The wicked DEMONS COUNTERFEITED (in working many miracles,) the souls of them who were DECEASED, and thence they were thought worthy to be celebrated with greater veneration."—Eusebius. Præp. Par. I. 5. c. 2. The above knocks another hole in the bottom of that theory which is built upon the bare assertion of Alex. Campbell, "That from the most ancient times it has been the universal belief of Greeks, of Romans, of Jews, of CHRISTIANS, that demons were the spirits or souls of the dead." Dr. Ramsey's "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion" gives facts and quotations enough to entirely overthrow the assertion. Other extracts besides those given by Ramsey may be hereafter given. Take the above as a specimen from the oldest christian historian. It is from his "Evangelical Preparation"—never translated into English. I have other testimonies which I hope to present in a work on "Spiritual Manifestations," as soon as I can find time to prepare it for the press.

H. L. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in South Windsor, Ct., July 15, Bro. LEE W. ELMORE, aged thirty-eight.

Bro. Elmore in 1846 embraced the doctrine of the second advent near, with immortality only through Christ; and since that time has adorned the doctrine of God our Savior by a well ordered christian life, and has fallen asleep in the triumphs of a christian hope. In conversation with a friend a few days before his death, he remarked, "I know not whether I shall live or die, but I do know I shall have part in the first resurrection."

Bro. Elmore was well known in his own and the surrounding towns, as an earnest and zealous defender and supporter of the views he held, and many will remember the pleasant and earnest conversations had with him in their houses, in the store, and by the wayside. His religion consisted not in word only, but in deed and truth. He seemed to consider himself as a steward of his Master in the use of his property, and there were few more worthy and faithful in its distribution. His hand was never closed to the wants of the worthy, or his counsel withheld from those seeking advice. He purchased books and tracts on the subjects of his faith, which he distributed with liberality and judiciousness.

For a number of months preceding his death he suffered severely, but bore it all with meekness and resignation, and in his dying hour was sustained by the ministration of angels. When his voice was almost gone, he inquired of the friends surrounding his bed, "Do you not see them?" and thus he sweetly fell asleep.

The funeral was attended by Eld Edwin Burnham, who in his able and happy manner presented our views on the resurrection to the great assemblage of friends convened at the house.

H. H. D.

Died, in West Killingly, Conn., July 28th, 1859, JANE HOWARD, daughter of Woodbury and Matilda Howard, aged fifteen years.

Her disease was consumption. She was a great sufferer, yet never murmured, but was perfectly resigned to her lot. Although in the bloom of youth, Jane had chosen the good part, and as death approached, she met it with calm resignation, trusting in Him who doeth all things well. She was converted about one year and a half ago, under the labors of Bro. Grant. She was taken sick about one year ago, has been confined to her bed for eight months, but the blessed hope of the gospel comforted and sustained her through her sufferings. As the day of death drew near, she spoke of hymns that she would like to have sung at her funeral, and talked of her death with perfect composure. Her faith was strong that Jesus would soon come, and that she would be among the Just in the First Resurrection. As death was laying its cold grasp upon her, she wished for the family to be called—told them she was dying, and requested them all to meet her in the kingdom of God—and then quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

Another jewel is laid away in the valley, that will soon shine in immortal beauty and glory, in the everlasting kingdom of God. Although the hearts of the afflicted bleed with sorrow, yet they have the blest assurance that she sleeps in Jesus, and that when He who is her life shall appear, then will she appear with him in glory. The funeral was at the Advent Chapel, and attended by a large audience of sympathizing friends.

J. HEMENWAY.

BRO. SAMUEL R CLARKE "fell on sleep," July 25th, 1859, aged twenty-eight years.

For some three years Bro. Clarke has suffered much from consumption, flattering himself at times that he should recover, and live to see Jesus come; yet his hopes were frustrated. He united with the church at Rocky Brook, Oct. 17th, 1858 The church have lost in him an active laborer, for until his strength gave out he was at his post laboring in the cause of Christ. Some weeks before his death, so painful were his sufferings, he feared he should murmur, but God's grace abounded toward him, enabling him to endure till the end. He died in the triumphs of faith, his last struggling words being, "Happy, Happy!" He leaves a wife and infant child; the wife mourns not as others who have no hope.

Happy art thou, far more than all the proud,
Who pleasures seek, and have, yea, scarcely sorrow know,
Their pleasures all shall end, yea, when Jehovah loud,
Shall call the sleepers forth, down, down to woe,
The pleasure seekers fall, thy joys shall just begin.

C. P. D.

Rocky Brook, August 1st, 1859.

Died, in Cambria, Mich., July 29, A. JUDSON, youngest son of John L. and Mary A. Marvin, aged two years and six months.

This little sufferer had a high fever hanging about him for some two weeks, when it was thought the measles set in, which ended his days. Bro. and Sr. Marvin, formerly of Vanburen, Onondaga Co., N.Y., mourn not as those who have no hope, for the word of promise affords them unspeakable consolation, as it declares that "the pure in heart shall see God," and that such little ones "shall come again from the land of the enemy," and there is hope in their end. May the grace of God be sufficient to sustain them in this hour of bereavement.

We endeavored to comfort the mourners from 1 Cor. 15 : 26;—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

A. N. SEYMOUR.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Persia. From Liverpool the 23d ult.

The Peace Conference would meet at Zurich in about a week. It was believed that Sardinia would not be represented at the Peace Conference.

The discontent in Europe at the terms of peace continued unabated.

The Emperor Napoleon's explanations were not by any means considered re-assuring.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe says: It is now formally announced that neither Victor Emanuel nor any responsible Minister of Sardinia has signed any paper at Villafranca, save and except the armistice, which continues to the 15th of August. Austria and Sardinia are still in a constructive state of war—no peace terms have as yet been accepted as between these two belligerents. At Zurich the three governments consent to meet, but as Count Cavour is personally a bugbear to Francis Joseph, he, of course, consented to withdraw his presence from the green baize on which the final protocols will be laid for signature.

THE STATE OF ITALY.

The Tuscan Moniteur publishes a decree by the Provisional government, enacting that representatives of the people are to be elected for the purpose of deciding by a majority of votes what the future government of the country shall be.

A Paris letter says that news had reached there that eighty-five municipalities in Tuscany had already met and proclaimed their design to offer armed resistance to the re-intrusion of the late dynasty. Sienna, Pisa, Lucca, Pistola, and Arezzo had pronounced in this direction. As for Leghorn, the commotion had become so formidable that the Gonfaliero Buonasi had to declare, in a proclamation to the townspeople, that he held himself personally responsible to them for the non-return of the Austrian Archduke.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that, in reply to the Provisional government of Tuscany, the Emperor Napoleon stated that he did not desire to force the Grand Duke upon them.

The absence of all tidings of Garibaldi's forces causes some surprise.

The French government had presented to the King of Sardinia the greater part of the floating batteries which were intended to be used in the siege of the Austrian fortresses.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times gives a report that the Treaty of Peace contains a clause preventing any intervention in Italy in future, either on the part of Austria or France.

A letter from Rome says that French troops were to be sent to Rimini and Ancona, in order to prevent a revolutionary movement.

THE PAPAL STATES.

The preservation of the Romagna for the Pope seems to be very problematical, unless he can recover it with his own troops, which the Papal Government is doing with much zeal. The troops of the Church have been assembled, and are increased daily—as some say, to meet the armed force expected from Bologna to avenge the ferocities of Perugia. Others say that they are destined to march upon the Romagna, notwithstanding the intimation said to have been given by the ambassador of France to Cardinal Antonelli, that those provinces must be regarded as lost, and that neither France nor Austria can interfere to re-conquer them. It is a positive fact that Monsignor Rella, delegate of Pesaro, is fortifying that city with barricades, cannon and earthworks.

MILAN, Thursday, July 14. The rage of the Milanese against Napoleon continued this morning. A certain army once swore terribly in Flanders, the atmosphere of Milan since yesterday morning has been particularly cerulean. Nothing but the immense respect of the Milanese for the French army has prevented a series of duels, for whatever may be the sentiments of the army in regard to the unexpected termination of the war, they will not permit the Italians to make use of abusive or injurious reflections towards their commander-in-chief.

THE DUCHIES.

Le Nord says it is quite clear that the return of the expelled rulers of Tuscany, Modena and Parma will be resisted by force, and that if England can consent to appear in a Congress, now is the time when her voice may be heard to advantage on behalf of Italy. In another article, Le Nord shows that German troops cannot with any consistency attempt to hold garrisons in the strongholds of the new Italian State of the peninsula confederacy.

The Liverpool Times of the 23d ult. has the following:

"It is really very important to know the truth of the reports about the extraordinary preparations for fitting out the Brest and Cherbourg fleets which are still so rife. Lord John Russell, it will be remembered, contradicted these reports in his place in Parliament. But it is even more confidently than ever asserted that such preparations are indeed going on—that orders have been given to build additional steam transports, to carry forty thousand men, and for the construction of gunboats of a very suspicious description. Let us hope that the subject is not being overlooked at head quarters."

A SECRET TREATY. The Marseilles correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle, July 18, says:

"I can assure you, on the most unquestionable information and authority, that besides the preliminaries of peace which were signed at Villafranca on the 11th July, a secret treaty was equally arranged and agreed on between the two Emperors. What are its terms and conditions I do not profess to know, nor do I believe they are known to any one but two or three of the most confidential advisers of Louis Napoleon; but that such treaty is in existence there can be no doubt."

Per Steamship Nova Scotia. From Liverpool 27th ult.

ITALY.

In regard to Garibaldi's position, it is said he was, on the 15th, summoned to Brescia by Gen. De la Marmora, with whom he had a long confidential interview; that he had a force of 12,000 men, which continued to increase, and that he expressed confidence that the King of Sardinia would not forsake the national cause.

A letter from Milan to the Times says that Garibaldi was contemplating a move from the Alps to the Appenines.

From Northern to Central Italy there will be a gathering of about 50,000 volunteers. In Romagna, Garibaldi's corps, joined to that of Mezzo Capo, will form an army capable of securing the Independence of Central Italy, at least against any Roman or Neapolitan force.

It is rumored that the Duke of Modena had proposed to arm 4000 Austrian troops, to enable him to enter his States; also that a division of the French army will enter Parma and Tuscany, and another corps the Roman legations, for the purpose simply of preserving order, and allowing free expression of public opinion.

The Peace.

If there were any reasonable grounds in the terms of the proposed Confederation, to inspire confidence that it will give a better future to Italy, we might afford to wait before passing judgment. But there are none, either in the character of the sovereigns, or in the logic of history. The leading fact that stands out to view, is, that the temporal sovereignty of the Pope is to be enlarged. The council is to be composed of Catholic sovereigns, and the matter is to end by their kissing his toe in Rome, and by his Holiness anointing Napoleon at Paris, with "the sacred oil."—Century.

One of the London journals has remarked that this peace is full of future wars; and that we think is true. A genuine settlement of Italy, which would put an end to all foreign control, and leave the people of its own provinces to choose their own mode of government, and their own officials, would no doubt conduce to the permanent peace of Europe; but nothing could be more unlike such a settlement than the one now agreed on. But peace is not what Napoleon III. aims at. He has various old scores to settle. Russia and Austria he has already humiliated; but with Germany and England the books of his family still show a large balance on the wrong side. When or how this balance is to be wiped off, it were useless to conjecture; but Napoleon III has now lost the power of surprising the world, and he can make war on whomsoever he pleases, without exciting the public astonishment. Of all the wars in his power, we suppose that none could be so popular in France as a war with England. Out of the 36,000,000 of Frenchmen, 35,900 000, to use a moderate figure, would rejoice at the prospect of seeing their conquering armies in London. This may or may not be the next act in the great drama, on one of whose scenes the curtain has just fallen in Italy; but the drama itself must go on. The era of purely selfish war, of war for power and glory, having been re-opened, it must be completed, through all its phases. We can only hope that Humanity may not be altogether a loser from the dreadful and revolting process.—Tribune.

The French journals hint that the proclamation of peace has not been received at Rome and Florence with that delight it should have met with, and that the announcement of the return of all the old ex governors to all their old ex-governments has not been hailed, either with that gratitude on the part of the ex-governed, which it would have been but mere common decency to have exhibited upon so joyous an occasion. They dare not say more, but the well-informed have means of knowing that the most awful storm is brewing in Rome and in Florence, in Milan, and even Turin, for the handle of the frying-pan is getting so hot that King Victor is calling on all sides for help, or he will be compelled to drop it, his fingers being already burnt, while the omelet is grizzling and fretting, burning on one side, congealing on the other, and fast becoming what the French cooks call a ratatouille du Ro Petaud, neither fit to eat, drink, or carry away in one's pocket.

The greatest embarrassment of all, however, for the moment, has its origin in this very place, and consists in the subscription already set on foot, and going on rapidly and brilliantly like wildfire, for aid in carrying on the war in Italy. Of course the subscribers are not Bonapartists—but of every other party, Legitimists, Orleanists and Republicans, none are found wanting. It was said, while the war lasted, that the Emperor was working for the Republic; they say now in Paris that the work if left half done, and that the other half must be done quickly.

The Orleanists, too, are on the alert, interest—the one element hitherto wanting to their cause, has been found in the unflinching firmness with which the Duc de Chartres persisted in disobeying orders received from Claremont, which bade him return thither at the very commencement of hostilities, and made him prefer defending the honor of his name from the suspicion of want of pluckiness to which it has been subject ever since the revolution of February. A grand meeting is to be held of the chief members of the party on the first of next month, at which it is reported that Thiers will preside to deliberate on the propriety of the attitude henceforward to be assumed by the Count de Paris, whose period of mourning having expired, becomes free to act as chef de parti, and is moreover determined so to do in spite of the ever pacific counsels of his still pacific uncles, and the request of his grandmother, who persists in viewing ever misfortune which happens to the family in the light of expiation—from which it would be regarded as rebellion to Heaven to seek to escape.

MAZZINI ON THE PEACE.—He says, after enumerating the duty of each class and section of the Italians —

"The timid and cowardly will start as an objection, the possible league between Austria and Imperial France.

It is time that the timid and cowardly be deprived of the right to counsel Italians; suffice it that their advice has already twice dragged the Italian cause to its ruin. Many more are the reasons which should determine the Italians to undertake the protest by action. Were there none other, this single one would be sufficient. Oblige Louis Napoleon completely to unmask himself and to descend another step in the road of infamy and treason by fighting by the side of Austria. Europe is tired of Bonapartism. But one more drop is wanting to make the cup overflow, and this drop, be it even blood, let Italy, twice betrayed by him, contribute.

Little indeed is needed to induce England and Germany to come into the field and say to the despot, 'Not another step further.' The engagement with Austria has revealed to those powers the real project of the European coup d'etat, and material interests unite with principles to excite resistance. Terrible symptoms of agitation manifest themselves in Paris since the peace. Even the army will become tired of being the butcher of Liberty; and when Bonaparte should intimate to his generals on a sudden to fight those populations which the day previous bad embraced them as their liberators, many might imitate the noble example of Gen. de Lux. The Swiss by thousands quit the kingdom of Naples. Hungary is ready to act, and one shout truly Italian will bring her into the field. The movement of Hungary would find an echo in Poland. It depends on us, I say it to you with certainty of truth, to recommence 1848 on a broader and more solid basis.

As to the rest, let the Italians perform their duty, come what may. Better die than be contaminated. Better succumb before brute force, protesting to God and man that we are worthy of a better destiny—that we do not merit the name of a childish people, subservient to foreign rule. Let him who believes in this, act zealously to work and regard nothing else. God will take care of him."

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

BOOKS.—We would earnestly urge those who are indebted to the office for books, to send in the amount due, as that will save much trouble and expense in writing to each individually. We trust our friends will acknowledge the reasonableness of our demand and remit at once.

New Tracts.

We purpose to issue this week two new tracts, of thirty-two pp. each;—one on the Soul, the other on the Spirit. Price 5 cts. each; postage 1 ct. 50cts. per dozen; $3.00 per hundred.

Send in the cash orders, and help scatter the truth like leaves of the forest. Now is the time to work. People are becoming more willing to read on this subject. We hope all who believe in the immortality of the soul will read these tracts with unprejudiced minds, and carefully compare them with the Bible.

Notices, &c.

CAMPMEETING at Wilbraham, August 29th.

Our annual feast of tabernacles will commence the 29th of August, on the old ground in Wilbraham, and hold one week. We hope for the best, the most successful and profitable gathering of the Lord's people that has ever been held there. The objects of the meeting, and the wishes of the committee with reference to its character, have been fully and well expressed in Bro. E. Burnham's campmeeting letter of last week.

Let us all lay aside the weights—harness for the battle in the panoply of God, and come up to certain victory. Let us all pray much and come with the fire burning in our hearts, and Wilbraham mountain will never be forgotten.

Abundant facilities for boarding and horse keeping at reasonable rates. Also tent room for those who are not otherwise provided for.

The arrangements for fare to the campmeeting are from Worcester East and from Pittsfield and North Adams West to the camp ground, at one-half fare or one fare for both ways. Also the same on the Connecticut R. R. Road from Vernon or Keene, N. H. The Western R. Road will issue tickets for the week, but those who come over the Conn. R. Road, will pay to Springfield, and from there to Wilbraham, and returning, will receive a pass from the Committee of the meeting. No charge for baggage from any point.

Let it be understood that full fare is paid one way from all points above named on the Western and Conn. R. Roads, and no charge for returning.

☞ The fare from Boston is reduced half,—the tickets being $2.50 for going and returning,—good from Aug. 29th to Sept. 5th, inclusive.

☞ Those going from Boston will obtain their tickets of Bro. GEO. T. ADAMS, 167 Hanover Street.

HIRAM MUNGER,
RANDL. E LAUD, } Committee.
GEO. T. ADAMS.

Collinsville Campmeeting.

Providence permitting, this meeting will commence Aug. 22, and continue through the week, and over the Lord's day. It will be located about three miles below Collinsville, on land of Bro. Johnson, the same occupied by us last year. Provision will be made to accommodate all who may desire, with board and horse keeping, on reasonable terms. The cars will stop at the ground. Fare from Hartford, fifty cts. It is unnecessary to say any thing in commendation of our meeting last year to those who were present—it spoke for itself. We hope for a still better one this year. Come, brethren and sisters, let us rally once more for a glorious victory! We expect a goodly number of our able ministering brethren will be present to preach the word.

S. G. MATHEWSON,
E. B. GILBERT,
SAML. JOHNSON,
S. M. AIRO,
S. POND,
W. H. PARMELEE,
B. BIGGS,
Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting.

I wish to say to the Brn., one and all, that it is probable that our proposed Advent campmeeting will be in LYNN, as is desired, if no place preferable is soon suggested; and it will commence about the first of Sept., perhaps the 5th. L. BOUTELL.

Groton, July 16.

Any suggestions about the meeting will be timely for a few days. L. B.

Ohio Conference.

The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

Come, one and all, panoplied, not like the warriors of earth, with the weapons of destruction, but having on the entire christian armor, with hearts imbued richly with the spirit of prayer, love and faith, that we may yet, if needs be, a little longer wield the sword of the Spirit, which is mighty, even to the pulling down and destruction of all earthly and oppressive dominions. Let us come thus armed, dear brothers and sisters, and our meeting will be one of profit to us all, and God will be glorified.

G. W. CHERRY,
E. R SOUTHWICK, } Committee.
P. ALLING.

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

☞ The next Quarterly Conference of Western Central Maine has been invited and will meet in South Livermore, Sept. 1st, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We hope all the ministers of the quarterly conference will be there, (and ministers from other parts of the State are cordially invited,) and as many brethren and sisters as can consistently come. Come with faith in God, ready to work in his cause for the salvation of souls. Call on Brn. Soper, Silas Timberlake, Addison Cambell, and Chs. Boothby, about one mile from North Turner Bridge. In behalf of the Conference,

L. C. WELLCOME, Mod.
I. WIGHT, Sec.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Surry, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. HEALY,
Committee, R. STARKE,
E. M'CULLOCK.

For the Crisis.

Bring your Bedding!

To all persons who will attend the campmeeting, soon to come off, I wish to say, bring your own bedding, or you will be likely to sleep cold! Unless you look out for yourself, no one will look out for you. So do not come depending on any one else for the least thing. EDWIN BURNHAM.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. J. S. White will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall,) Sunday... Aug. 14th

Bro. WM. G. MONCRIEFF will preach in East Boston, ... Aug. 14th

Providence permitting, I will preach in Rochester, N. Y., where Bro. R. W. Wilson may appoint ... Monday eve., Aug. 15th
Barre Centre ... Tuesday eve., Aug. 16th
Conesus Centre ... Saturday eve., Aug. 20th
and over the following Lord's day.

MILES GRANT.

P. S. I purpose to be at the Collinsville and Wilbraham campmeetings. M. G.

C. H. Perkins appoints to preach at Portsmouth, N H ... Sunday, Aug. 14th

Eld White appoints to be with the friends in Springfield, Mass ... Wednesday eve., Aug. 17th
Warehouse Point ... Aug. 18th
Hartford, Ct ... Aug. 19th
and remain over the 2d and 4th Sundays.

Eld. W. Shepherd appoints to preach in Bristol, Ct ... Sunday, Aug. 14th

J. H. SUTLIFFE.

H. F. Carpenter appoints to preach in Bristol, Ct ... Aug. 21st

Eld J. Hemenway will preach in Worcester ... Sunday, Aug 14th.

T W Piper will preach in
Meredith Centre ... Aug. 14th
West Ossipee ... Aug. 21st
Madison ... Sept. 4th
Sandwich ... Sept. 11th

L. D. Thompson will preach in North Springfield, Vt ... Sunday, Aug. 14th

Eld. H. Pratt will meet with the brethren in Vernon, Vt ... Aug. 14th

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Southington ... Aug. 14th
Cheshire ... Aug. 21st

S. S. BREWER.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

S. F. Hubbard—Not received.

Cash Receipts.

Mr. Crook 216, Mrs. M A. Fogg 212, G Doe 216, H P Crockett 219, 50 cts. each.

H L Bradley 229, E Oalver 229, Al. Fenn 229, E R Wormwood 226, P Simmons 225, S Wade 229, J S Eldridge 229, E B Ward 229, R Lyman 208 J S Clark 234, G H Bussel 160, V R Stone 229, H Phelps 205, C Mendenhall 240, G L Hodgden 234, C H Dagle 228, O K Gibbs 234, S F Rogers 229, C Perry 208, W Loker 227, Josiah Taylor 232, Mrs. C Tabor 221, Amos Smith 231, Em Bucklin 243,—$1 00 each.

E A Cotney 255, E J Cook 260, H T Laughton 225, Dr. D. Matthewson 218, Jos. Lewis 233, I Webster 218—$2.00 each.

Mary Cooper 229, C W. Pilgrim 230, J Myers 279,—$3.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J G Elder 9 cts, J Hemenway 9 cts, I Dimmick $1 00, T C Taylor 21 cts, R L Johnson 4 cts, W J Cabot 25 cts, J B Waite $3 00, S L Gordon 27 cts, Mrs. Sargeant 16 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem: and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $2.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A volume of the [illegible] of the present day. Price 50 cts.—postage 9 cts.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price [illegible]

Words of Warning. [illegible] single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—6 cts. single Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

FOSTER'S LETTER AND TRACT ON HELL, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

SON OF GOD, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

AN APPEAL TO PIOUS TRINITARIANS. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

WE ALSO HAVE THE FOLLOWING WORKS, PUBLISHED AND FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol, 12mo, pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity, by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price. 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 136 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by [illegible].

† The Olive Leaves are three neat four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. No. one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, Wondrous Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 8 cts.—post. 1c.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $8.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. R. Rowe, [illegible] Sumner street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Wells, [illegible] The Hope by [illegible] Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Assurance.

I stand at last in the light of God,
In the light of his smiling face,
In the light of love in my heart shed abroad,
In the light of his glorious grace.

I have toiled through the dark and dreary way,
Through the sorrows and tempests of night,
But blessing has come with the rising of day,
And the Lord is my joy and my light.

I have wept in secret before the Lord,
I have grieved o'er the sins of my soul;
I have trusted his grace, and have hoped in his word,
And his mercy hath made me whole.

I feel that the shadows are fleeing away
That have hidden my Savior's smile,
And now as his mercy appointeth my way,
May nothing my footsteps beguile.

I sing for the joy of my peaceful heart,
The joy that my God hath given—
For the childlike trust that his love doth impart,
As he makes me an heir of heaven.

Shall I mourn at the valley, dark and drear,
Along which my path has lain?
Oh, no, for the joy that I feel while here,
Most amply repay for the pain!

Shall I shrink from the shadowy vale that lies
Before me along my way?
Ah, no, for beyond that valley arise
The regions of endless day!

Take courage in God, my trembling soul,
Look boldly out in faith,
Beyond the shadows that round thee roll,
Beyond the shades of death;—

Beyond the woes of this desolate clime,
Beyond the light I now see,
There are joys that outrival the joys of time,
And, my soul, they are kept for thee.

Go forth, my heart, go bravely on,
Through shadows and doubt and gloom;
Full soon when thy pilgrimage is done,
Thou shalt gain thine endless home.

Thou shalt shine at last in a purer light
Than that which engirds thee now;
Thou shalt wear a robe transcendently bright,
And before the throne thou shalt bow.

March boldly on, my joyful soul,
Soon, soon shall thy journey end;
Swiftly thy hours of sorrow roll,
They shall bring thee to Christ, thy friend.

This heavenly peace which within thy heart,
When the trial is done doth remain,
Is the earnest rich of that better part
When thy Lord shall come again.

Soon thy woes and tears shall all be o'er,
And thy sorrows shall flee away;
Thou shalt reach the bright, eternal shore,
And shine in endless day. H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

Simplicity of Expression.

"To speak as the common people do; to think as wise men do."

At the time when Roger Ascham used these words in the preface to his Toxophilus, to excuse himself for writing in plain English, it was the custom for learned men to write their productions in the Latin tongue. All educated men were expected to write in that language, as the English was yet in a very unsettled state, and the Latin was the means of communication among the learned of all nations; whoever did not do so was considered ignorant or lazy. Men wrote for fame then, as many do now, caring little for the utility of their productions. The common people they despised, and their sole object seemed to be to gain a name for correct learning among the elite of all nations. There were some honorable exceptions, among whom was Roger Ascham, who wrote for the benefit of all. He thought if knowledge was worth anything, it was as much so to the masses as to the few. He had some practical considerations to present for the benefit of the common people, and he chose to disobey the fashion of the times and write so that they could understand him. For the time being he suffered in reputation, but posterity has requited the loss, for he contributed much towards the dignity and simplicity of our mother tongue, which was then in its first stages of formation.

Language has been given to us for the communication of ideas. By it we disclose to our fellow men our conceptions, emotions and opinions. Our impressions and perceptions of things may be stamped upon another's mind by means of painting, sculpture or gesture; but a language of words is the best means of conveying thought. Words, then, as signs of ideas, must have a settled import, in order that our language be not misunderstood. The language of social and business life is made up, in a great part, of Saxon words, whose meaning is fixed in the minds of the multitude. The speaker or writer who employs mostly these familiar words, is the most successful in gaining the popular esteem and consideration. It was on this account that the thoughts of Daniel Webster were so generally appreciated, and his sayings so universally understood. In oratory, this simplicity of style is more requisite, than in written treatises, and more in simple, elementary works, than in those of science and metaphysics. Yet, if many obscure phrases and Latin and Greek terms were exchanged for plain, intelligible English, these works would be more inviting to the public generally, and more frequently read. By this we do not mean that we should employ every colloquial [illegible], but should cultivate an easy and graceful style suited to the public [illegible].

While we should aim at simplicity of expression, we should regard the thought as pre-eminent.

"As grains of gold in the sands
Of Lydian waters shine,"

so should our thoughts shine out through all our words. It is not expected that we shall curb our imaginations, or restrain our ideality, or lessen the number of our illustrations, but that our figures shall be drawn from familiar objects, and divested of that excessive adornment which will hide the thought in the expression. Much brilliant shading and profuseness of rhetorical flourishes, often conceal a paucity of ideas or an obscurity in thought. Words and sophistry disguise the weakness of the argument. In such cases depth of thought is often wanting, but not a flow of words. If on the other hand there be a lack of words, we say with Shakspeare, "Piece out" your "imperfections with" your "thoughts."

The public speaker or the pulpit orator may often please the feelings and delight the imaginations of his audience, without convincing them of a single truth or impressing upon their minds the force of a single argument. The thread of the argument is lost in a profusion of metaphors. He displays his ability and his learning at the expense of his hearers. The contemplative mind finds no satisfaction in such a feast. It won't do to have all luxuries; we need some more substantial food. The language of the speaker should not require the hearer to exert his mind to catch the meaning of his words, for the task soon becomes irksome, and he is not profited by what he hears. To enjoy a discourse, we must easily comprehend it and understand it.

CHARLES H. PERKINS.

Selections.

"Orthodoxy" compared with Bible.

Paul, the great Apostle to the Gentiles, in his second epistle to Timothy, (4 : 2–4,) says, "Preach THE word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine, for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Every truth-loving christian may add, in the language of the dear Redeemer, "This day in this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

It is impossible to enter the temples of orthodoxy in these days of peril, and not hear its fulfillment. They are teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, and the Savior says that when they are thus employed, "In vain do they worship me." Matt. 15 : 9. Such are the orthodox at the present day. They love darkness rather than light.

The gospel sun shines brightly, but they love darkness. The light is presented to them—they are convinced of its truthful form and grandeur—but they love darkness; its effulgent glory envelops them; all around is radiant with light; they, in a measure, see its excellence, and silently wish for its pure enjoyment—but alas! alas! they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. They have a form of godliness, and are professedly the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus,—but are turned unto fables, and have heaped to themselves teachers, money-loving teachers, who preach for hire the fables they love, rather than the plain and positive word of the Lord.

Being informed that the tract entitled Divine Instruction, etc., was to be exposed in one of these professed Zions, the writer took a seat in the crowded sanctuary with pencil in hand, to transmit to paper the hallowed words of the speaker, feeling assured that truth was mighty and would stand the test, being nearly all of it the plain word of the Lord, without note or comment. The text was Luke 16 : 23, 24. The following are extracts from our notes of this sermon:

"Death is not extinction of conscious existence; who knows that it is? Have any of you been dead, and come back to tell us? Who knows? Not one! Death is the antithesis of life or happiness,—death implies being cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. Death, in its common sense meaning among community, is conscious painful separation from God."

. . . We grant that death is the antithesis of life. In harmony with this we read, in 2 Kings 20 : 1, "Thou shalt die and not live." Rom. 6 : 23,—"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Deut. 30 : 19,—"I have set before you life and death." It is not needful here to multiply passages—others could be given were it necessary.

If life is a conscious existence, then death, in order to be its antithesis, must of necessity be unconscious, or the extinction of conscious existence. It is mockery to ask sneeringly "who knows?" and the like. Do the orthodox know that it is conscious existence?

The Bible says of man, contemplating death, Ps. 146 : 3; "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Is he conscious without thoughts? Eccl. 9 : 5, 6; "The dead know not anything; the memory of them is forgotten; also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." Not know anything, having no love, hatred or envy, and yet conscious!

Again, in the 10th verse; "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave." Strange, indeed, if men are conscious then. Job 14 : 21; "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Therefore he is not conscious, or he would know all about his family, etc. Ps. 115 : 17; "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Isa. 38 : 18, 19; "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." If the righteous dead were conscious, they would of course be praising the Lord. The righteous in this life are continually praising. David says,—"Praise ye the Lord, all ye his saints. Praise ye the Lord, sing unto the Lord a new song," etc.

Again, Ps. 6 : 5; "In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" How plain and positive is the word! And yet, with a degree of triumph, men who ought to know the Scriptures, which alone are able to make wise unto salvation, ask, who knows? In shame and confusion they should hide their faces and cry, "unclean, unclean." Death, instead of implying being cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, is literally and in fact being cast there, to be burnt up root and branch.—Mal. 4 : 1. The Savior says, "as therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world." Matt. 13 : 40. What do we gather tares and put them in the fire for?—to preserve them? No, verily, but to burn them up. Whatever death may mean in the common sense way among community, whether painful separation from God, or any thing else, it matters not. To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. Isa. 8 : 20.

This infallible word says, Ps. 37 : 10–20, "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Obad. 16; "They shall be as though they had not been." After they are consumed into smoke, and are as though they had not been, are they conscious in painful separation from God? These are only a very few among the multitude of positive testimonies on this point, but we need not multiply. If they will not hear this testimony, "neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

After dwelling at length on the words destroy and perish, trying to convert them into more friendly terms, or destroy their meaning altogether, our friend proceeded as follows:

"The words destroy and perish nowhere teach annihilation; they do not teach the monstrous perversions of that dogma. All their proof texts fail to prove annihilation.

"Give us facts, not words,—we want to know facts. The wicked will live everlastingly; this is suggestive of endless remorse. Blain, one of the annihilation school, in his usual dogmatic style, says that it is impious to say blot out, etc., means eternal life in misery. The errors of the annihilationists on these subjects are past sober thought. . . . The soul is not material, as they assert, hence all the errors. All classes of men, from the refined and civilized down to the savage heathen, make a distinction between the soul and body; hence the Bible says, though man can kill the body, he cannot kill the soul."

Webster says destroy means "to kill, to annihilate, to demolish, to ruin, to lay waste." Perish means to "die, to lose life in any manner, to be destroyed." So our learned divine is again transcendently knowing—soaring higher, sinking deeper, spreading wider than ever the world-renowned Noah Webster; and also contradicting the plain word of the Lord we have before quoted, and many others. The rest of this will pass for bare assertion,—there being no shadow of proof to substantiate it. Were the eight souls saved in the ark, (1 Pet. 3 : 20), the 3,000 souls that were converted on the day of Pentecost, (Acts 2 : 41), the 276 souls in the ship with Paul, (Acts 27 : 37), all, or any part of them, disembodied immaterial souls? No, verily. But were men and women of flesh and bones. Yet our friend says that the soul is not material! What is it then? Define it, who can! Hear him again:

"The soul and spirit are one and the same, and the Bible tells us that the spirit shall return to God who gave it. . . , No subject is more plain than this. Life is not the reward of the righteous. Christ says that if we love life, we shall lose it, and if we hate it, we shall gain it. So that, if life is the reward of the righteous, then that which he gives as a reward we lose by loving, and gain by hating! What contradiction and nonsense by a dogged persistence in error."

When God created man he was perfect in organism, a perfect man—but he was not yet living; so we are told in Gen. 2 : 7, that the Lord "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Up to this time lifeless, he was yet perfect in every particular. Everything was there,—nothing additional was needed to make man perfect—but he was without life, so God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life,"—the atmosphere that we inhale now to keep us alive,—and that perfect lifeless man became a perfect living man or soul. Hence the words, (Ps. 104 : 29), "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."

So we see, when that perfect organism called man was without life, God gave it breath, and the result was, it became a living soul; and when the breath is taken away, it becomes dead, dormant as in the beginning. Hence the breath of life or spirit, when inhaled, puts the perfect organism in motion, and it becomes a living soul. To illustrate, let me take you into a machine-shop; see how perfect are the machines; every little piece up, and all in working order: but they are dormant,—they do not move, they are lifeless! Hark, hear that rushing of water! See! see! we are surrounded by a moving host,—all is life, energy and motion! We are astonished, and begin to inquire what has made the change, and we are told that the gate has been raised, and permitted the water to come rushing over the mighty water-wheel, which has revolved, and caused all this motion and life. How correctly this illustrates the point; the air is conducted into the body, the gases ignite—thereby heating the blood, which begins to circulate through all the veins.

Now all is animation—life. When the water is kept back from the water-wheel it does not revolve—all is silence again—not a piece of machinery moves; so likewise this living soul, when the great Creator takes away their breath, they die and return to their dust. Ps. 104 : 29. Like as the water when not used for the driving of the machinery returns, or is kept back, or in other words, when he breathes out his last breath, it returns to God who gave it, and the dust returns to the earth as it was. Eccl. 12 : 7. This passage embraces all mankind, both saint and sinner,—and if it means the soul, as our friend declares, it proves too much, for it makes no difference between the righteous and the wicked, the just and the unjust. All souls would then return to the same place—but he has an impassable gulf fixed between them.

Our friend labored hard to prove that life was not the reward of the righteous—and tried to mislead his hearers by confounding the present with the future life; but the inspired Paul says that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. "And this is the record that God hath given to us, eternal life, and this life is in his Son." John 5 : 11. These are facts, not our words.

One passage is as good as a thousand, so we refrain from quoting more, and leave those who disbelieve the plain word, and contradict God, to ponder well their situation. Paul has bidden us consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest we be weary and faint in our minds. Heb. 12 : 3.

Again our divine says, "If the soul is material, then the mind is material. The results of mind are thought, memory, color weight and size. Can thought be measured by the yard stick, as we measure calico? Can immateriality be defined by the square? It is opposed to reason—but it is difficult to reason with annihilationists. If mind is matter, then God is matter. If God is material, then his power is limited; then God does not exist, and creation is a fable. If God is limited, then he is an erring Being. How equally monstrous! But these are the results of logical reasoning. If the soul is material, then of necessity, as matter is never an agent, it deserves no more praise or blame than a horse or an ox. Then the final judgment is uncalled for. If the soul is material, then there is no moral government. This dogma violates in turn both morality and religion. If God's organism is material, then as God cannot cease, matter cannot cease. Then God cannot destroy matter. Matter must also have created God, and cannot die. The annihilationist's God is a material one, wood, stone, or some other substance. They are pantheists, their God is in everything, even a blade of grass should be worshiped. God cannot obliterate man! He cannot obliterate sin!"

Our friend is disposed to quibble on the word mind,—he once said it was the soul, and now says, "If the soul is material, then the mind is material." How can this be reconciled? Mind is the result of the action of the brain, and our learned friend claims it to be immortal. I have known men to change their mind, i. e., their will, intention, design, or opinion, very rapidly; sometimes two or three times in one hour. The last thing under heaven, one would think, that would be claimed for immortality! What is there about it immortal? i. e., never dying or ending; perpetual, having unlimited existence. Echo asks, what?

We have now come to our friend's monstrous doctrine. Let us calmly look at it in the light of the word of the Lord. The first thought that ever existed in the mind of any individual was by reason of the manifestation which God first made to our father Adam, when he stood in his presence, and conversed with him face to face. After this he manifested himself to Moses on Mount Sinai, Moses requested the Lord to show him his glory. Ex. 33 : 15–23.

The Lord said, "And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by: and I will take away mine hand, and thou shall see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen." Still later the announcement has been made by the apostle Paul, that Christ, of whom we have abundant testimony that he was literally raised from the dead, and that he literally ascended to heaven in person, having flesh and bones, is the express image of the Father's person. Heb. 1 : 2. If God is not a person, whence the propriety of saying Christ is the express image of his person? The reasonable conclusion is, that as Christ is a literal, organized intelligence, so his Father is as Christ—has body and parts, so also his Father has body and parts.

This is ratified by the transaction on Mount Sinai—Moses was put in the cleft of the rock, God's hand covered it till his literal person passed, then his hand was taken away, and Moses saw his back parts —therefore to deny God's personality, is to impeach Moses and Paul: for believing the positive teaching of God's word, we are called, Atheists, Infidels, Pantheists, heretics, etc. Christ says, "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?" Matt. 10 : 25.

Let us see who are the infidels, etc., trying them by the same word. The atheist tells us plainly, there is no God. The sectarian says there is one, but without body or parts, immaterial. The infidel says God does not exist anywhere. The immaterialist says he exists nowhere! Is there the difference of a single hair between them? The immaterialists only differ from the others by clothing an indivisible unextended NOTHING with the powers of a God.

One class believes in no God,—the other believes that NOTHING is God, and worships it as such. There can be no twisting away from this. All the christian philosophers that ever lived cannot extricate the immaterialist from atheism.—He cannot show the least difference between the idea presented by the word, Nothing, and the idea presented by that which is unextended, indivisible, and without body and parts, having no relation to space or time. All the philosophers in the universe could not give a better or more correct definition of NOTHING. And yet this is the modern Christian's God!

An open atheist is not so dangerous as the atheist who couches his atheistical doctrines under the head of articles and confessions of faith, creeds, etc. The first stands out in bold relief, with open colors, and boldly avows his infidelity, while the other, under the sacred garb of religion, draws into his whirlpool the multitude, who are persuaded to believe in and worship an unextended indivisible Nothing, without body or parts, deified into a God! A pious atheist is much more serviceable in building up the kingdom of darkness, than one who openly, and without any deception, avows his infidelity.

If, at death, the sectarians are to be made like their God, they will enjoy all the horrors of the dreaded annihilation. How transcendently sublime the thought of beholding an innumerable multitude of unextended nothings casting their crowns at the feet of the great infinite Nothing,—who fills all space, and yet without parts! There is no more absurdity in calling Nothing a substance, and clothing it with almighty power, than there is in making a substance out of that which is precisely the same as nothing, and imagining it to have almighty power. Therefore an immaterial God is a deified NOTHING, and all his worshipers are atheistical idolators. What is immateriality when compared with the substance advocated in the Bible? And here let me say, that some are so wise as to affirm that there is no place or locality for heaven or hell—it is all a state of mind!

The Lord says, he will cause those that love him to inherit substance.—Prov. 8 : 21. In the days of the Apostles, christians took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing they had in heaven a better and enduring substance. Heb. 10 : 34.

Our good brother Wesleyan concludes that if God is material, then he does not exist! and creation is a fable! Why thus conclude so hastily, friend? To me, creation is a glorious reality, when viewed as the work of an all-wise Being or Intelligence, possessing body and parts; considering the heavens the work of his fingers, I conclude with David, and adoringly exclaim, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handywork." Ps. 19 : 1, 7. "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

Viewed from this "stand-point," the remaining portion of our friend's immaterial ifs and thens are not worth a passing notice; we leave them therefore with the reader, and proceed to the bounds which he has laid for the Deity, saying, virtually, "Thus far, shalt thou go and no farther." He emphatically declares, "God cannot obliterate man, he CANNOT obliterate sin." Shall the clay contend with the potter? "O! man, who art thou that disputes with God?"—Rom. 9 : 20. (Marg.) Hear ye the word of the Lord with reference to those who "speak evil of the things that they understand not;"—they "shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2 : 12. "If we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins; but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall DEVOUR the adversaries."—Heb. 10 : 27, 28. "They shall be as though they had not been."—Obad. 16. Our Wesleyan friend to the contrary notwithstanding.—O Lord! "Thy WORD is truth!" We read Ps. 7 : 9; "Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." Amen; but this cannot be if they are to be forever cursing God, cursing themselves, and cursing their companions, and wailing in torment eternally. They shall be punished in the earth. "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner."—Prov. 11 : 31. No man, or set of men, will dare therefore to take them out of the earth to be recompensed.

Jesus is coming in flaming fire to punish the wicked with "everlasting destruction from his presence, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1 : 9. Man is the glory of his power, therefore the wicked cannot exist, but shall be destroyed from their own presence! as also from the presence of the Lord, who is everywhere present."—Ps. 139 : 8–12. He will also be "glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe in that day." Then will God's glory cover the heavens, and the EARTH BE FULL OF HIS PRAISE!" The wicked will be punished in the earth, but the earth, instead of being full of cursing and wailing and gnashing of teeth, will BE FULL OF HIS PRAISE; therefore the wicked will be "burnt up root and branch"—will "be as though they had not been" and as a thing of nought. Amen.

Brethren and sisters, let us not be slothful, dreamy or sleepy, but "up and doing," realizing our position as one of vast importance and intense interest.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time."

The professed church has APOSTATIZED—the friends of Jesus, who are awaiting for his return, are FEW—despised and rejected, as was the Lord! The warfare—as preparatory to the last gathering of the nations for the battle of the great day—is now a matter of fact, and fast progressing to its grand climax—the subjugation of Austria, etc. The facts of its vivid realities weekly salute our ears! The prophetic chart is fast unfolding! Soon Jesus will come! These are "bright omens of the coming day!" Lift up your heads, little flock, and rejoice. "Your redemption draweth nigh." WORK while it is called "today." Have your lamps trimmed and burning. Then shall the King say unto you, "Well done. . . . Enter into the joy of your Lord."

T. G. NEWMAN.
—Expositor.

JUDGE PARSONS.—A gentleman had been concerned in a duel; the ball of his antagonist struck his watch and his life was thus preserved. The watch was afterwards exhibited, with the ball remaining in it, in a company where Judge Parsons was present. It was observed by several that it was a valuable watch. "Yes," said Parsons, "very excellent: it has kept Time from Eternity."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Transference of Vitality.

Let parents read and ponder upon the following, if they would save the lives of their little ones:

Parents and old persons—although these latter exhibit a remarkable fondness for sleeping with children—should be careful not to permit young persons to repose in the same bed nor in the same apartment with the emaciated or aged; for the transference of vitality from the young to the old, is not a nursery tale, but a serious, and too often a fatal fact.

Children who are habitually placed in contact with the aged, however vigorous before such a disposition was made of them, become wan, sickly, contract diseases which properly belonged to persons in advanced life, and if the contact is continued, die from pure vital exhaustion. Their fresh and positive magnetism is thus absorbed by negative or non-magnetic persons, to the benefit of the latter, and the injury of the former. The life of the aged may be prolonged by these means—at the expense of the existence of the young. Many of the children who die in this city, are thus prematurely cut off. Parents should know this important fact, and at once correct the evil, if unhappily it exists in their families.

Says Dr. James Copeland: "A not uncommon cause of depressed vital power is the young sleeping with the aged. This fact, however explained, has been long remarked, and is well known to every unprejudiced observer. I have on several occasions, met with the counterpart of the following case: I was, a few years ago, consulted about a pale, sickly and thin boy, of about four or five years of age. He appeared to have no specific ailment, but there was a slow and remarkable decline of flesh and strength, and of the energy of the functions—what his mother very aptly termed a gradual blight. After inquiry into the history of the case, it came out that he had been a very robust and plethoric child up to his third year, when his grandmother, a very aged person, took him to sleep with her; that he soon afterwards lost his good looks, and that he continued to decline progressively ever since, notwithstanding medical treatment. I directed him to sleep apart from the aged parent, and prescribed gentle tonics, change of air, etc. The recovery was rapid.

"But it is not in children only that debility is induced by this mode of abstracting vital power. Young females, married to very old men suffer in a similar manner, although seldom to so great an extent; and instances have come to my knowledge where they have suspected the cause of this debilitated state. These facts are often well known to the aged themselves, who consider indulgence favorable to longevity, and thereby illustrate the selfishness which in some persons increases with their years. Every medical practitioner is well aware of the fact, and parents are generally advised not to allow their infants to sleep with aged persons."

Bowel Complaints.

This is the season of the year for dosing of children. Hot days, dry, dusty and suffocating nights, everybody tired, and sleepy—children are neglected. It is better to prevent bowel irritation than it is to cure it. You who read this, attend, and save

1. Doctor's bills.
2. Much anxiety.
3. Night watching.
4. Suffering.
5. Perhaps the lives of those dear to you.

Do not let your children, during the hot months, eat meat. More than three-fourths of the diarrheas and dysenteries are attributable to the use of animal food, connected as it is with the filthy habits of body of those who eat it.

Do not let a day go by in which your children are not washed all over in soft—not hard—water—not cold, mind, not cold, but tepid—say at a temperature of 80 degrees on going to bed, wipe them dry, and place them in bed immediately. They will fall asleep, their skins will excrete largely and naturally, and their "systems" be saved the need of carrying off by the bowels the surplus waste.

It is always to be born in mind that a diarrhea is an effort of nature to rid the system of acrid, waste matter which it has no use for.

Do not let your children be out of nights. They expend plentifully of nervous and muscular energy during the day, and to let them be up to late hours of nights is to do them great injustice. Send them to bed early.

"Early to bed, and early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

If sick, do not go to drugging them. If you need the advice of a physician get it, and tell him plainly that you want his assistance and will pay him well for it, but you want him to cure your child without medicine. Stimulate him to brighten up his hygienic knowledge. See if he does not know and cannot inform you of some natural rules for your child's recovery, such as keeping the child's skin clean and active, keeping his head cool and feet warm, keeping his bowels open by water injections, keeping solid food away from him, keeping his mind quiet, keeping company away from him, keeping his courage up, keeping the room well ventilated, and securing for him abundant sleep.

If he is "a man of parts," and understands his profession, he will assist you and your child to get well without introducing into the "little thing's" stomach, poison, which when once in, neither he nor any other physician since the days of Galen, ever knew certainly how to get out again.

There is a common prejudice against the eating of fruits and vegetables in hot weather. So far is this from being well founded, the use of them eaten at table and not between meals, is decidedly beneficial. Every family should raise garden fruits and vegetables, and in the hot months, these with the grains—and not flesh meats—should constitute the food of children, and for that matter, of adults. Were this to be the case, one half of the cases of bowel complaint would never exist.—Letter Box.

FORCING THE MIND.—The mind may be overloaded as well as the stomach. Reading too constantly, and studying too closely, is greatly injurious to the mind and nervous system. . . . Every man is born into the world with a certain amount of mental capacity which will admit of cultivation, but not of forced growth. If the mental appetite is too craving, gratify it sparingly; if too dull, make it keener by use. The forced activity of already too active minds, sends annually hundreds of mental dyspeptics into the world, who flash for one moment and go out the next.—E. B. Foote, M. D.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, who are sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly, or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above: i. e., $1, will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 206. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 25.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"I Can't Afford it."

Suppose that a certain nobleman had a number of faithful laborers working in a distant part of his estates; and also that he appointed stewards to see that his servants were provided with every necessity. And these servants toiled under a burning sun, removing rocks, thorns, and brambles; but when in the evening they asked for food, the steward turned from them and said, "Go away, I can't afford to give you anything." What might we suppose this lord would say when he became aware of the fact? It is very likely that he would command him to give an account of his stewardship and appoint his successor.

Again, let us suppose that there was a monarch, part of whose vast dominions lie contiguous to a subtle and vindictive enemy, who daily makes fierce raids over the border, laying waste the fairest and most fruitful fields, wounding, slaying or carrying into captivity the inhabitants. The king appointed a small, but loyal and well-appointed army to defend his frontiers, and carry the war into the territory of the foe, and he also appoints a commissary to see that the soldiers are clothed, housed, and victualled. Now the warfare is incessant and harassing. The enemy, active and numerous, are supplied with every creature comfort which their own country, and that of their plundered neighbor can supply. But the garments of the king's troops are torn to rags in the fierce conflict, and the worn shoes afford no protection to their bleeding feet. Their bodies are wet with the rain and their locks damp with the dews of night, for neither food nor shelter is provided, and when they ask for bread, the faithless commissary, regardless of his obligations to his master, or their distress, turns from them and says, "I can't afford it!" as if he were the lord of all, and these brave warriors his abject slaves. What will the monarch do when he hears of it, and he will most assuredly? Arrest him for being in league with the enemy, and put him to death for treason against the state.

Once more; suppose that a rich merchant, the owner of a score of ships, had a son whose wayward feet had wandered into a strange land; but having repented, his father had invited him home. The homeward-bound heir applies for assistance from one of his father's agents, who knows the young man well; but that gentleman draws himself up, buttons his pockets with puffy importance and says, "I can't afford it, sir!" How long do you suppose he would remain in the merchant's employ, when he came to know how he had treated his destitute son?

Having supposed so much, let us draw parallel cases where servants, soldiers, and children of the Maker and Ruler of the universe are thus treated and neglected by many who are but stewards of the good things of this earth, who, when appeal is made to them in behalf of the cause of God generally, or of individual destitution, pettishly and penuriously exclaim, "I can't afford it."

When under the blight of the curse, earth brought forth thorns and thistles, the ruined garden of man's heart brought forth a yet more deadly crop. Murder, with its red right hand and gory locks, came first, the blushing fruit of Adam's prolific sin, till it, far-reaching, dipped into the earth once more, taking fresh root, like the famed banyan tree, till over every land is spread its baleful shade. Then came the dreadful varieties of the same seed, envy, which is indeed the parent of murder, evil thoughts, (dialogismoi poneroi—wicked dialogues) adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies and an innumerable host of other sins, ever multiplying, ever varying. To root out these pests, God has called and appointed laborers, whose wages are in the future, to be paid when their work is done. They toil and dig with unceasing energy, all the while annoyed by the attacks of the enemy who first planted the dreadful tares. They often lack food and raiment, although their Lord has commanded his stewards to comfort his people, to clothe them, and feed them. Many, we fear, who would appear before the world as christians, build barns and hoard up money, reaping a golden harvest from their abundant crops, look on and see men of whom the earth is not worthy, labor amid poverty and sorrow, without a benevolent act to relieve one of them in his distress. They can't afford it!

To cover these humble but indefatigable laborers, the soldiers of the cross have taken the field. Their warfare is incessant, admitting of no armistice, giving and receiving no quarter to or from the foes of their King; but welcoming with a brother's love all who lay down their arms, and join their army. There is no neutral ground where the army of the covenant and Apollyon's legions may fraternize; it is, fight on, fight on. Now these men lack food and raiment; and those who have an abundance are peremptorily called upon to furnish them, and willingly, to be acceptable, for "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." And woe be to him when the day of reckoning comes, who in his avarice has said in answer to an appeal—"I can't afford it!"

How many returning prodigals are there with steps heavenward journeying back to their Father's house, through the land of alien. They have left the pleasures and gaities of this world, and are urging their passage towards that city out of sight, "whose maker and builder is God." In renouncing their old companions they forfeit their sympathy, and their fickle love gives place to scorn and persecution.—Should such an one, an heir according to the promise, joint heir with Christ, should he seek succor and comfort of you, turn not away; for remember, saith the Lord, "Inasmuch as you did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

And a change shall come when the laborer will cease his toil, and the soldier will throw off his casque to put on a crown. The wanderer shall reach his Father's house, and his rags be displaced by the robe of honor. The newly dressed and renovated earth, which once was the scene of his toil, battle, and pilgrimage, shall be given him for an everlasting inheritance. Then those who have dealt mercifully with him in his sorrow and affliction, shall reap an hundred fold; the loan to the Lord shall be repaid with heavy interest.

Who shall say, therefore, "I can't afford it," when the work of God demands a little of their money? There are thousands of souls thirsty for the truth, and perishing. Who will refuse to put his shoulder to the work? None who have a christian interest in the eternal well-being of their fellows. Every one may do something by money or his influence for the good old cause.—Preachers must be sent out and supported, tracts scattered, truths disseminated. How eager the politician or trader goes to work to further his opinions, or sell his merchandise. From the policeman to the president, from the vender of lucifer matches to the merchant prince, all are busy and anxious; and is not our salvation of more importance than transitory gain or political positions? Yea, verily! Then let us all to work, in the name of God, in good earnest, and let there not be heard among us such a narrow-souled, unworthy sentence—"I can't afford it!"

JNO. F. COTTON.

For the Crisis.

The Horrors of War.

What pen can describe, what tongue picture them? From the earliest dawn of carnage to the present day what streams of blood have flowed! The fair and verdant plains have been made scenes of maddened strife. The pure air of heaven has been polluted by sulphurous smoke. The midnight darkness illuminated by the burning villages and towns. The stillness of nature's solitudes have re-echoed to the deafening thunder of cannon, and the maddening shouts of the combatants, or the agonizing wail of the wounded and dying! Who can number the victims of war? Of a single battle, who can count the misery? Sir Walter Scott says the battle of Waterloo created in the British Empire 15,000 widows; and how many have not been named in France, and other nations engaged. It is stated that the recent battle of Magenta, has created at least 20,000 widows, and 60,000 orphans.

"Marshal McMahon, in a letter written to a friend in Paris, concerning the battle of Magenta, relates that he saw a whole regiment of the enemy destroyed to the last man, the Colonel of it embracing his colors as he fell. The causes of this wholesale butchery was McMahon's having taken the Austrians in flank, and having got possession, after a terrible fight, of the elevated railroad causeway, and placed forty cannon made on the new system, so that they completely enfiladed the dense mass of the Austrians below. One ball alone was seen to knock down between thirty and forty men."

A writer who visited the field fifteen hours after the battle of Montebello, says, "The city was almost a desert—corpses covered the approach to the town, those of the Austrians in proportion of four to one of the Allies. Everywhere I saw soldiers dead and stiff in the attitudes in which they had been struck. Bodies strewn in pools of blood, furniture broken, walls grooved by balls, doors and windows smashed, bayonets bent and twisted, etc., made a scene never to be forgotten. The cemetery was literally filled with Austrians lying among the graves." At this same battle was a young French non-commissioned officer who writes as follows:

"Our officers kept us back, for we were not numerous enough to charge upon the enemy. This was, moreover, most prudent, for this murderous fire—so fatal to the white coats—did us but little harm. Our conical balls penetrated those dense masses, while those of the Austrians whistled past our ears and respected our persons. It was the first time I had faced fire, nor was I the only one. Well, I am satisfied with myself. True, I dodged the first balls, but Henry IV., they say, did the same at the beginning of every battle. It is in fact, a physical effect, independent of the will. But this tribute paid, if you could only feel how each shot electrifies you. It is like a whip on a racer's legs. The balls whistle past you, turn up the earth around you, kill one, wound another, and you hardly notice them. You grow intoxicated, the smell of the powder mounts to your brain. The eye becomes blood-shot and its look is fixed on the enemy. There is something of all the passions in that terrible passion excited in a soldier by the sight of blood and the tumult of battle."

The "Great Battle" of Solferino, fought June 24, is stated to be the greatest known in modern history. The Austrians numbered 280,000 men, and extended over a distance of fifteen miles. The battle lasted from four in the morning till eight at night. They acknowledge a loss of 20,000 men, while the French are said to be 16,000 to 18,000.

Mr. H. J. Raymond, editor of the New York Times—writes under date of "Castiglione, Italy, July 24, 1859.

"Not less than 450,000 men have been engaged in the battle; and of these not less than 30,000 dead and disabled lie, on this bright starry night, upon the bloody field. During the early part of the day the sky was clear, and the weather hot, clouds gathered about noon, and at 5 o'clock, while the cannonading was at its height, a tremendous thunder-storm rolled up, which lasted about an hour. The cannonading was suspended, but the fight went on, and when the storm cleared up, it began again at the extreme left of the field. Over the Sardinian park rose a dense cloud of smoke, like an enormous sheaf of wheat. The sun was making a glorious setting in the west, his light had gradually departed; the vivid flashes of each discharge of the cannon gleamed through the smoke, like sharp lightning. Sometimes but one flash would be seen, then two or three, then half a dozen at once would break forth in instant succession. It was growing dark, I descended the hill, and all the way down I could hear the roar of the cannon and the clattering guns of the infantry. Before we reached Montechiaro, we met three or four carts filled with the wounded, drawn by oxen. Soon we met a one horse carriage, in which lay an officer of rank at full length, whose face wore so ghastly a look as to show plainly he was dying. We reached Montechiaro, and were told that the battle was going on in the plain before Castiglione. We pushed on and met carts loaded with the wounded. Passing on, we came upon the great procession of the wounded, which was turning down a cross street to the church, now converted into a hospital. It was the most dreadful sight I ever saw. Every kind of wound that can be inflicted was here seen. All who were able to do so, were obliged to walk; the wagons and animals at command being required for those unable to do so. Some walked, their faces covered with blood from cuts upon their heads. Many with arms shattered, hundreds with heads tied up, some with most ghastly wounds upon their faces. Some tied up their wounds; others stripped off the clothing that chafed and made them worse. One man walked along resolutely with a firm step, naked to his waist, a bullet wound upon his side, an ugly gash on his cheek, a deep bayonet thrust behind in his shoulder. Most of those walking wore a serious look, conversing but little, though they walked two and two; few of them carried on their faces any considerable expression of pain. Some were carried on mattresses on men's shoulders; these mostly were officers; nearly all so badly wounded that their recovery was impossible. One had both legs crushed by a cannon ball; another had a ball in his thigh, and was suffering intense agony. Many who were wounded in the legs were seated in chairs swung on donkeys—one being on each side; several thus carried were unconscious and seemed to be dying. Then came carts, large and small, carrying three, five, and some ten and fifteen each. A steady stream of these victims of the battle of the day poured through the town. I stood in the crowd by the side of them as the sad procession passed along, and watched it for over an hour. It was not interrupted for a moment—except now and then by a crowd of prisoners—and it continued from ten in the morning till I left the street, long after dark. Every church, every large hall, every private house in the town were taken for the use of the wounded. * * * * I looked into the church; all the seats, etc., had been removed; mattresses of hay were spread on the floor, and were filled with wounded men, in every stage of suffering and peril, lying side by side. Surgeons were dressing their wounds. Sisters of Charity, and other women, were giving them wine and other refreshments; but morning I am sure will dawn on a large proportion relieved forever from their pain. If any thing can be more horrible than a soldier's life, it is the certainty of a soldier's death."

"But the horrors of war—who can describe them? I see women to-day," says a Paris letter writer, "half mad, running about Paris to know what has become of their husbands and brothers. No private communications from the seat of war are allowed. The first a wife knows of the loss of a husband is from 'official' sources. I see, as another specimen of the horrors of war, that the Piedmontese division, engaged at Palestro, when repassing through Novarre, marched with five companies out of ten under sub officers; the others remained on the field of battle. Now this is only French suffering! What must be the Austrian tale?"

Yes, what must it be? Read the following of the newly invented guns, and then what wonder of the havoc made in battle—why wonder the Austrians were so terribly beaten? what human mind but shudders at the recital?

"THE RIFLED CANNON.—The correspondent of the London Telegraph writes of the first trial of the new cannon in war in the following style. He is speaking (June 28) of the recent battle of Solferino. 'The power of the rifled cannon is henceforth established. I will cite but one fact in support of this assertion. Gen. Desvaux saw in the distance about thirty squadrons of cavalry, consisting partly of dragoons, forming into masses, and preparing to thunder down upon the squares of Renaud's division. The danger was imminent and grave, for the French troops had their flanks compromised, and were in front of an Austrian battery, which worried them with grape. Gen. Desvaux pointed out the danger to Captain Fist, who at once established a battery of rifled cannon upon a small eminence in the plain, and fired four rounds of shells, containing forty balls, a distance of more than two thousand yards. The effect produced seemed like the work of enchantment. The captain saw in the first place that wide gaps had been made in the enemy's ranks, then all of a sudden that this terrible mass of cavalry was dispersing in every direction, utterly disordered, and without heeding orders or rallying at the word of command. Twenty thousand of the Austrian cavalry, upon whose aid every reliance had been placed, were thus rendered useless; and it was directly after this catastrophe, if I am rightly advised, that the Emperor Frances Joseph abandoned the camp, with tears of vexation and despair in his eyes.'"

But I am sick reading these items; and how short of the reality they are! Only think of it, one ball "knock down forty men!" No wonder the christian prays for men to learn war no more. No wonder we long for the "Prince of peace" to reign. "Come and reign." J. N. BERRY.

Dorchester, Mass.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Sow in faith the little seed,
Be of great results expectant,
For the harvest is decreed.
Now thou knowest not the issue,
Now thou must confide in God.
He can cause thy work to prosper,
Guiding all events for good."

For the Crisis.

Woman's Position in the Church.

No. 1.

In presenting this subject before the reader, we do not design to give our own thoughts, so much as the thoughts of others. We shall give the opinions of those writers who will be deemed persons of sound judgment, deep piety and erudition. "Pride and self-sufficiency smile at the idea of a female prophet, a female judge, a female poet, a female warrior; and yet, in truth, women have filled all these offices with credit to themselves, and with satisfaction to the public."—Author of Sacred Biography.

We will first glance at the Scriptures, which ought ever to rank the highest in authority. Turn to Judges 4: 5, and read there of a woman of great renown, a woman who had the office both of prophetess and judge. Why, among all the hosts of Israel, is she selected, and not a man, to preside over the tribes of Israel, and instruct them from the mouth of God? Behold her, as she dwells under the palm-tree, dispensing judgment to the children of Israel, as they come up to her for this purpose. Contemplate her, as she sends for Barak out of Kedesh-naphtali, and, in the strength of her divine commission, directs him how to order a battle against Sisera, captain of the host which served under king Jabin, who mightily oppressed the children of Israel. Does he spurn her from him, and, in the pride of his heart, refuse to be directed by a woman? Nay, verily! He consents to go, provided she will accompany him. What! a woman accompany a general to the battle-field? She says, "I will surely go with thee." Nevertheless, although Barak went to the battle with ten thousand men, yet Sisera fell by the hand of a woman, as Deborah had told him before. Did she, in thus exercising her power to discriminate between right and wrong, in using the gift of prophecy with which she was endowed, and in calling into action her faith and courage, and leading forth the armies of Israel to conquest, did she, I ask, overstep the bounds of womanly propriety? Did she go beyond her sphere, and bring down upon herself just rebuke and odium? If so, why does her name stand recorded with honor on the page of sacred history?

Do you say, "O this was an extraordinary case, wholly unlike any other on record?" True, it was, in some respects, but not as a prophetess. Miriam was a prophetess; Huldah was a prophetess; and in the days of Josiah the king of Israel, although Jeremiah was then living, a prophet of the Lord, yet an official deputation was sent to Huldah for counsel. Yes, there were prophetesses, as well as prophets, in olden times, and instead of this becoming more limited under the new dispensation, the dispensation of the Spirit, it was to become more extensive. Read Joel's prophecy respecting the outpouring of the Spirit in the last days; "and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy." Here the sons and the daughters are placed on an equality. Peter applies the prophecy to the wonderful manifestation of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, when the apostles were assembled for "prayer and supplication with the women." "Upon each of them" the tongue of fire descended, and with the Spirit all were filled, and with other tongues did speak to the representatives of sixteen different tribes, so that every man heard in their own language "the wonderful works of God."

It is said of Philip the Evangelist, that he "had four daughters which did prophesy." What is it to prophecy? Let Paul first speak on this question, for his authority is from heaven. "He that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." 1 Cor. 14: 3. I will now give Dr. Adam Clarke's comments on this gift: "But he that prophesieth 'has the gift of preaching.'" Dr. Clarke understood it to be the same thing as preaching. Philip the Evangelist, then, had four daughters which did preach. Dr. Whitby, in his comments on the text above quoted says, "The person who has the gift of teaching, is much more useful to the church than he is who has only the gift of tongues, because he speaks to the profit of men, viz., to their edification, by the Scriptures he expounds; to their exhortation, by what he teaches; and to their comfort, by his revelation." Now just take these comments of Dr. Whitby and place them by the side of Dr. Clarke's, on verses 4, 5, of 1 Cor.

"Praying or prophesying. Any person who engages in public acts in the worship of God, whether prayer, singing, or exhortation; for we learn from the apostle himself that (he here gives the Greek word) to prophesy, signifies to speak unto men to edification, exhortation and comfort, and this comprehends all that we understand by exhortation, or even preaching.

But every woman that prayeth, etc. Whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying, in respect to the man, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the woman. So that some women, at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification and exhortation and comfort. And this kind of prophesying or teaching was predicted by Joel 2: 28, and referred to by Peter in Acts 2: 17. And had there not been such gifts bestowed on women, the prophesy could not have had its fulfillment. The only difference marked by the apostle was, the man had his head uncovered, because he was the representative of Christ; the woman had hers covered, because she was placed, by the order of God, in a state of subjection to the man; and because it was a custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, and among the Jews an express law, that no woman should be seen abroad without a veil."

TE JUDICE.

For the Crisis.

Bible Sabbath Facts.

1. "On the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made."—Gen. 2: 2, 3.

2. When God separated the children of Israel from the other nations of the earth, he gave them the Sabbath day. Moses said, "See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath—so the people rested on the seventh day."—Ex. 16: 23. This is the first record of God requiring any man to keep the Sabbath day. We have not a single example of the patriarchs or of any man keeping the Sabbath day previous to this period, which was about twenty-five hundred years after the creation of man.

3. The Sabbath was a distinctive sign to the Israelites.—"Verily, my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is A SIGN BETWEEN ME AND YOU throughout your generations." Ex. 31: 12, 13; Ezek. 20: 12-20. "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm: therefore, the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."—Deut. 5: 15. How could it have been a distinctive sign to the Israelites, if it had been given to all nations? Other nations "did mock at HER Sabbaths."—Lam. 1: 7.

4. The Sabbath day, like other Jewish ordinances, was "a SHADOW (or type) of things to come:" even of Christ. "Let no man therefore judge you (wrote the inspired apostle) in meat, or in drink, or in respect to an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come: but the body is of Christ."—Col. 2: 16, 17. The term Sabbath signifies rest. "We which have believed (says the apostle) do enter into rest."—Heb. 4: 3. Ceasing from his own works for justification, the believer rests in Christ, "who, of God, is made unto him wisdom, righteousness, (i. e., justification) sanctification and redemption." The christian Sabbatism is not the Sabbath of a day; it is the eternal rest which remains for the true Israel of God, of which faith gives a present earnest.—Heb. 4: 9.

5. Christ, "the body," or substance, having come, the shadow has passed away. Accordingly neither Jesus Christ or his apostles ever condemned men for Sabbath breaking. Neither in the four gospels or in the apostolic epistles, do we find any command to keep the Sabbath day. The Savior himself told the healed man to take up his bed and walk, John 5: 8; which was a violation of the Mosaic law; "Take heed to yourselves and bear no burden on the Sabbath day."—Jer. 17: 21. The corresponding duty of the former keeping of the seventh day, is not keeping the first day in the same manner; it is believing on the Son of God with the heart unto righteousness. The corresponding sin to the former Sabbath breaking is unbelief. If you transfer the Sabbatical law to the first day of the week, you must take the penalty with it. Every man or woman, in this case, who does as much work on the first day of the week as to pick up a few sticks or kindle a fire, must be stoned to death.—Numbers 15: 33-36; Ex. 35: 3.

THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

"Then the same day, at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus."—John 20: 19. "And after eight days again his disciples were within."—John 20: 26. "Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them." Acts 20: 7.

These facts teach the duty of christians to meet on the first day of the week for the worship of God in the observance of divine ordinances. See also Heb. 10: 25; 1 Cor. 14: 23. That these meetings were public and free for the attendance of all persons, is evident from 1 Cor. 14: 23. All lawful means to induce men voluntarily to do so should be used. The duty of assembling on the first day of the week for social and public worship, necessarily involves the duty of separation from secular concerns, so far as such worship requires. The opinion of some, that it is sinful to attend to such concerns, on any part of the first day of the week, is sustained by no precept or example in the New Testament. I write now of positive law. What spiritual worshipers consider to be their privilege, is another question.

The voluntary suspension of the whirl of the great wheel of secular operations on the first day of the week, is, most assuredly, an excellent custom both for man and beast; but as it is never, in the New Testament, denominated the Sabbath-day, and as no requisition to abstain from either work or recreation on this day, can be found in the commandments of Jesus Christ and his inspired apostles; the charge of Sabbath breaking is unsustained by divine authority. Such charge is indeed prohibited.—Col. 2: 16; Rom. 14: 5, 6.

As the authority of the civil magistracy pertains exclusively to civil matters, all interference in religious things is usurpation. Human legislators have no more right to fix time for divine worship, than to fix the manner of it. Such usurpation has caused rivers of human blood to flow, for which the Almighty Avenger is now giving the nations the cup of blood to drink.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY GREW.

☞ A holy soul can never be reconciled to unholy practices; herein appears the imperfection of our sanctification, that we make allowances for sin, and appear to excuse this deadly evil.

Be Steadfast.

Friends! Ye who are looking for the return of the Lord of life and glory, I would say, "Be ye steadfast." If ye are weary in watching through the long dark night of sin and sorrow, for the dawning of that bright and glorious morning, which will burst forth with unequalled splendor upon your weary vision, I would say, "Be ye consistent." Consistency is one of the grand points which characterizes the daily walk and life of a christian; it is that which will enable you to surmount the difficulties which beset the christian warrior everywhere. I have sat under the preaching of the glorious gospel of life. I have seen its workings upon the human mind. I have seen the tears of penitence flow from the eyes and steal down the furrowed cheeks of the old, as thoughts of their past transgressions came vividly before their minds. Again, I have seen their countenances beam with joy, and their eyes sparkle with gladness, as the glorious truths of the gospel were held up before them, and they laid hold of the blessed hope of life and immortality, which hope reaches unto the restitution of all things, when Christ shall come and gather unto himself all those who shall be accounted worthy of eternal life as a gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I have seen those in the prime of life, when the ennobling characters of manhood were stamped upon their brows, and the warm blood coursed healthily through their veins, express their faith in the same hope, and express it plainly to the world by conforming to the requirements laid down in the blessed volume of Inspiration. I have stood upon the banks of the liquid grave, and have seen them buried beneath its surface, thereby showing to the world their faith in the death, burial and resurrection of their divine Master. I have seen the right hand of fellowship extended to them, and they grasp it eagerly as he who extended it welcomed them to the little flock of Christ, and pointed unto them the way of life,—welcomed them to the lot which they had chosen, telling them that the life of a christian was not a life of ease, a life of comfort and luxury; but pointing them to the lives of the prophets, patriarchs, martyrs, apostles and of Jesus, as an example of the one which they must lead, telling them not to look for their reward in this life; for if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable; but to bear in mind that they would be scoffed at by the vile world, by those that were working out their own destruction, by serving the arch enemy of all mankind; telling them also not to fear the scoffs and frowns of the world, but to gird on the whole armor and fight manfully the battles of the Lord, letting your weapon be truth, your helmet steadfastness, your shield virtue, and your girdle righteousness and love; and to hold fast to the word of prophecy whereunto we do well to take heed; to be faithful, loving, sacrificing, consistent, valiant, brave, and to watch and pray, and anxiously look for the appearing of the blessed Savior, who shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. And those unto whom these words of consolation were spoken, bowed their heads in silent adoration, while their inmost hearts said, "We are Christ's and his alone."

Then again the scene has changed. The pale horse and his dreaded rider has ridden into the midst of those who, but a few months since, I had seen express their faith in the love of God, and some have fallen victims to his power. I have stood upon the verge of the dark abode of the dead, and have seen lowered into the yawning abyss the forms of loved ones, while rang in my ears these words of consolation and hope,—

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

I sorrowed not, for I knew that if they were meet for Christ, he would raise them up at the last day.

I stood amidst the busy scenes of this vain world, and among its alluring pleasures. I have seen there the forms of those, that I had seen before bid [illegible] to all the vain pleasures of a fleeting world! But, alas! how soon their vows were broken; and how soon all holy resolutions vanished from their minds, and as they were found wandering down the broad road to destruction, without one thought of that life-time they had resolved to lead.

Seeing that ye make a [illegible] towards Him, "what manner of [illegible] ought ye to be in all holy [illegible] and godliness. Looking for [illegible] unto the coming of the day [illegible] the heavens being on fire [illegible] and the elements [illegible] heat. Nevertheless [illegible] promise, look for [illegible] earth, wherein [illegible] Wherefore, [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 206.

[illegible] such things, be diligent, that ye [illegible] be found of him in peace, without spot [illegible] blameless." Therefore place not yo[illegible] affections upon the allurements of [illegible] but be ye steadfast and consistent; look to [illegible] the promises contained in the holy volume. Look at the lives of the followers of Christ when he was on earth, and make them an example. Look at the faith and love of his disciples when he was taken from their midst by those who were seeking for his life, and carried away to mount Calvary; although their faith was shaken in a certain degree, see how it revived again when the blessed Savior burst the bonds of death, and came forth from the grave a victorious conqueror over that power which all mankind have fallen a victim to until the present. How they listened with holy confidence to his divine teachings before his ascension. Nothing then could shake their faith; they were firm as adamant; their love was unbounded. And would to God that all were so now.

And when the time came that he should leave this world, and go unto his Father as an intercessor between God and man, and there wait until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled, they loved him still; and as he stood upon the Mount and spake unto them for the last time, telling his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; when his countenance shone with dazzling splendor, and his garments gleamed with unequalled brilliancy, as he slowly ascended, pronouncing his blessing upon them, and was received into the heavens by legions of angels: and when the two angels spake unto them, saying, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven!" I ask, was not their faith strong?

"Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

F. F.

For the Crisis.

Why go to Campmeeting?

Some go because they can as well as not, and like to see and be seen; but chiefly to have a good time visiting with those of like motives in the pleasant groves. This will do for backsliders, who know their true position and are decided and content to remain such, and think that husks are plenty good enough to subsist on, if they can only enjoy the pleasure of a false independence, and flee the responsibility of servants; verily, they have their reward; but this will not satisfy prodigals.

Others come with a sense of their own short-comings, hungry, and panting after the peace and comfort they once enjoyed, while they have been thinking of the subject and waiting week after week, expecting to get a blessing and find their peace again at the campmeeting instead of beginning to pray before-hand and confessing their faults to the church at home, and telling their resolutions, thus coming prepared to work and get the anticipated blessing. However, such get a kind of blessing, but instead of peace, they get more and more deeply convicted, and usually go home, glad to get where they can throw off their load which has wrought out some good (if they learn better than to do so again), but they regret they have lost so much, that they might have enjoyed had they gone in working order. They have their reward.

To this class I would say that home affairs will follow you even to campmeeting, and spoil your peace, unless properly disposed of beforehand. Therefore, I think it advisable to begin to pray as soon as you perceive you are not in a salvable state, then come praying, stay praying, gain all the strength you can, go home praying, and live a persevering christian when you get there, then you may help others live.

Others go with hearts full of fire, love, and zeal, (lacking a little wisdom and knowledge with experience,) like boys going to battle, shooting first into the air then into the ground finding when they arrive at the place where the enemy is arrayed, that their strength and ammunition are gone, their sword blunted, their own ears cut off, and they have crippled each other.

So with this class, ere the meeting is half ended, they find themselves all prayed out, talked out, sung out, tired out, and worse than all the rest, out of the good Spirit. To such I would say, save your strength and don't tire yourself out hunting up a foe, but wait until one approaches and then pitch battle, with him. Keep your sword in place—the edge well set with the spirit of God, 'till you find something to encounter, and not be flourishing it in every meeting just because you can do it, for you do it at the risk of wounding yourself, and crippling others so that they are unable to fight. Now study to be quiet, as far as the wisdom, which is pure requires, and wait until you see some object, then not shoot for the sake of your own noise; but take your aim and shoot to hit the object. Then you will accomplish more with less effort, [illegible] more with fewer words, [illegible] with less strength, eat what is [illegible] without complaining, throw [illegible] the Lord would have [illegible] also feast on [illegible] feeling as well as [illegible] feasting on the King's [illegible] have gained, [illegible] time afterward.

In my advice to you, I picture a fourth class, who know what they go for, make it a subject of prayer beforehand, then go watching, know where to begin, how, and what to do. These make no display but understand how the enemy is moving in the camp, and by their wisdom (which is heavenly), defeat him on every hand. They are not so careful to display their own talent and strength, as they are to hunt up the weaker portion of the army, and try to patch up their wounds, by giving them kind words and encouraging looks, and then help them brighten up their armor, (not by exhorting and spending all their strength by taking up all the time in meeting,) but by giving them time to talk, using a little patience to wait for them; also giving them time to shake off the dust, and rub off the mould from their garments, by confessing how backward they had been.

O! I am persuaded that our efforts are fruitless, except our works are all fraught with wisdom! And yet we are all slow to learn! But may the Lord help us to profit by what we learn, and try to save others from the painful process of learning by a sad experience, some of the tedious lessons which are necessary in order to make us useful. O for a heart that's pure and holy, freed from selfish motives and slavish fears, but filled with wisdom pure, and love divine! Your sister, striving to be an overcomer,

E. S. Fenn.

For the Crisis.

The King of the North.

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to express a few thoughts, that I have long held in connection with this prophecy. We have a character called the wilful king in Daniel 11:36, who assumes to be of a superior kind, representing himself to possess all the attributes of Paul's Man of Sin. If this character is not the same man of sin that the apostle speaks of, it is as near like it as two things are apt to be alike. I do not say that it is one and the same; I leave this, and pass on to notice the attack made upon him. "At the time of the end shall the king of the South push at him; and the king of the North shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over." Now comes the question, is the wilful king "he that shall overflow and pass over?" or is he the King of the North? Surely the wilful king. The King of the South, and the King of the North, neither hinder nor put an end to the course of the wilful king as recorded; both kings make an effort, but the wilful king only stops at the stopping place. At the place where it says the King of the North shall come against him, the idea has obtained that the "he" is changed, and the wilful king is lost sight of, and that the King of the North fills out the chapter; but I think any good grammarian will see that the person does not change, that the King of the North only makes an attack. It would be a curious circumstance, if so noted a character as the wilful king should so soon be lost sight of. We have the history of his career and end in this 11th chapter of Daniel. "And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." Who is he?

That no such character has fulfilled or finished this chapter is evident, and must yet be manifested, for we see that when he does come to his end Michael shall stand up, the same angel that all along has manifested such an interest in the welfare of Daniel and his people. This is not Jesus Christ: he is never called Michael. The same Michael that told Daniel he would tell him what should befall his people in the latter days, his own nation the Hebrews, he shall stand up "for the children of thy people, (Daniel's people,) and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation; (this trouble has not been witnessed yet,) and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Thy people, the same Hebrews; these are called Daniel's people, none other in his prophecy. This wilful king is to plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain. This is in Jerusalem.—Proof, Dan. 9:16.—"I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city, Jerusalem, thy holy mountain." Isa. 66:20.—"They shall bring all your brethren to my holy mountain, Jerusalem." Ezek. 20:40; Zech. 8:3. This is sufficient to show where the holy mountain is. I know of no other place that God calls his glorious holy mountain. Here this wilful king stops. Who is he? has the Pope had any idea of stopping in Jerusalem? These few ideas I trust will do no one any harm. I do not say that the King of the North is not the Russian head; that may all be, but that he swallows up the wilful king by making an attack upon him, is to be proved by something else than the 40th verse of Daniel and onward.

Henry L. Bradley.

Bristol, Ct.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 17, 1859.

Fast.

As all our help must come from the Lord, and knowing the blessed results arising from prayer and fasting, we propose that, on Friday, Aug. 26th, we abstain from our evening meal, and spend the time in prayer for our General, Annual Campmeeting, advertised to commence at Wilbraham, Mass., August 29th, and continue one week. Also, let this meeting have a place in your daily prayers, that the most glorious results may attend it of any ever held in that consecrated spot.

Garibaldi.

This noted man, who has performed such prodigies of military valor, who is surrounded by many of Italy's noblest sons, was born in 1807, and is therefore fifty-two years of age. He is said to be of sanguine temperament, having a bright, cheerful, and benevolent look. He is very affable and intelligent, without the least approach to fierceness, or wildness. His "hair is a brown red"—"somewhat narrow about the temples, round-headed—square visaged." His eye is light gray, having a tint of the lion red. His voice is clear, sonorous and silver-toned. He is said to be very easy in his address, and is extremely popular among his soldiers, who will attempt anything required by their leader. He ever chooses the most daring position, and yet was never wounded. He has in his ranks from fifty to a hundred of the best shooters in Europe. Garibaldi is distinguished for his tall stature, lofty bearing and rather fanciful costume. It is said the Tyrolese no longer turn their rifles towards him, as they think he has made a league with the devil, who has made his body bullet proof. He is naturally a leader and king of men. He never wears any marks of distinction whatever. In time of peace he seeks retirement, and shuns applause. He is strongly attached to the interests of Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia.

It is said Garibaldi and his troops have been very improperly treated during the campaign just closed. They have been poorly supplied with arms and provisions, though they bore the brunt of the war.

What will he do with the noble sons of Italy who have joined their interests with his, resolved to have Italy free from the Papal yoke, or die in the attempt? The following item of news shows his purpose:—

"Garibaldi is now contemplating a move from the Alps to the Appenines, from Northern to Central Italy. There will be a gathering of about 50,000 volunteers in Romagna. Garibaldi's corps, joined to that of Mezzocapo, will form an army capable of securing the independence of Central Italy, at least against any Roman or Napoleonitan, or any merely Italian force.

If he carries out this plan, it will cause palpitation of heart in the pontiff at Rome. Garibaldi's presence in Central Italy will only be a signal for a general insurrection. Says a Milan correspondent of the London Times:

"The petty communities of Central Italy will soon show the world to what extent right can avail against might. It would be impossible for me or any man in the world to convey by mere words an idea, even the faintest, of the excitement of the Italian population throughout the country."

All they need now is the right leader, and they are ready to follow him to the Vatican of the Pope and burn the harlot with fire. Hatred for the Pope begins to assume active measures. The Milan correspondent goes on to say:—

"The people of Parma and Modena, of the Legations and Tuscany, are arming and organizing a diplomatic no less than a military defence. In the Duchies municipal assemblies re-attest the vote by which their territories were annexed to Sardinia, and send deputations to all the European Powers, intimating that the popular will is not to be disregarded with impunity. In Tuscany an appeal is made to the public suffrage. In the Legations a government is installed, the very first act of which is a declaration of war against the Papal government. Are those States to settle their own matters free from foreign intervention? Is the threatened restoration of their respective Sovereigns to be left to such forces as those Sovereigns may dispose of and the favor of such partisans as they may have left behind? The Duke of Modena leads, perhaps, 1,500 men into the field. The Pope musters, may be, 3,000, between Swiss and native troops. The Duchess of Parma and the Grand Duke of Tuscany have not one man under their standards. On the other hand, Mezzacapo, Garibaldi, and other condotieri muster little less than 40,000 volunteers, most of whom are, or will soon be, within the precints of the threatened provinces.

The Tuscan division, 10,000 men strong, with a reserve of several thousands, is travelling homewards, and will soon take its place on the frontiers. The whole population, besides, is mustering in the battalions of the National Guard, which is everywhere organized and actively mobilized. Private citizens and municipal bodies cheerfully supply the means for its vast armament, and, were it needed, men and money would be freely given by Piedmont, Lombardy and Liguria."

The Pope has issued a circular, in which he complains to Europe of Victor Emanuel. He says:

"Amidst all the apprehensions and anxieties occasioned by the present deplorable war, the Holy See had reason to think that it would be unmolested, after the many assurances it had received—assurances with which even the King of Piedmont had associated himself—for on the advice of the French, his ally, he refused the dictatorship which was offered him in the revolted provinces of the Pontifical States. But it is painful to state that things have turned out very differently, and facts occur every day under the eyes of the Holy See and its government which show more and more how inexcusable is the conduct of the Sardinian Cabinet towards the Holy See—conduct which clearly proves that it is intended to strip the Holy See of a part of its temporal dominions. . . . . The Holy Father protests against the violations and usurpations committed, and desires that his protest may be communicated to all the European Powers. Confident in the justice which distinguished these Powers, he feels assured that they will support him; they will not permit the success of a manifest violation of the rights of the Holy Father. He trusts that they will not hesitate to co-operate in the vindication of those rights, and to that end he invokes their assistance and protection."

The London Times, commenting on this circular, says:

"It claims all things and it recedes from nothing. It accepts no responsibility and it renounces no atom of power. It is like the cry of a weak and wounded beast of prey. It complains of the interference of stronger powers with the gratification of its instincts; but it bears no remorse for the past and no promise for the future. . . . . The Pope appears at this moment to be very sick—more sick than the Turk was even when Nicholas thought it time to take out administration to his effects. He has no strength whatever in his own body. Weak and tottering, he sometimes leans upon one strong man and sometimes upon another. Austria has held him up in the Legations, France has kept him upright at Rome, the Swiss have spread the terror of his name in the unwarlike towns. To all human foresight he seems on the brink of dissolution. . . . . It is wonderful, and at the same time pitiable, to mark the senile and impotent tenacity with which this old man clings to his right to do wrong at a moment when the whole system seems ready to perish. If France and Austria were to retire there would be an end at once and forever to the States of the Church. . . . . But so long as the French remain to protect him, he will by his ecclesiastics and his bravos, drain the country and destroy the people; and, if the French go away, the people, exasperated beyond all moderation, will probably expel him. This is the dilemma.

"The Nations were Angry." Rev. 11: 18.

Preparations for the second scene in the last bloody drama of this world's history are being developed on every side, and causing monarchs to turn pale. The people seem determined to take the work into their own hands and wait no longer for emperors to lead.

The hatred for the harlot at Rome seems to be increasing, and is too deep rooted now to be quietly removed by any more false promises, from the crowned heads sustaining that system of crime and cruelty.

Mazzini, the noted Italian revolutionist, when speaking of the peace of Villafranca, says:—

From one end of Italy to the other, one unanimous deep murmur of anger and menace must respond to the abominable news. . . . Among the wretched oppressions which weigh upon Italy, the very worst is that of the Pope. The constant protest of the population against the Papacy is a fact acknowledged and confirmed by all Europe. The insurrection of ten cities, accomplished without the shedding of one drop of blood, is a solemn declaration of the sentiment of the Roman provinces. A shriek of profound indignation against the Papacy arose in consequence of the massacre of Perugia, and to those provinces is decreed a new Slavery, while the Papal ferocity is recompensed by the promise of the Presidency of the Italian Confederation. The emancipation of Italy, the annihilation of all Austaian authority south of the Alps, the creation of a strong kingdom in Northern Italy, the engagements agreed to with the scandalously deluded representatives of the Hungarian nationality, every word written or spoken in Paris and Milan—all. all is belied in a few sentences dated from Vallegic. . . . Let the watchword be Villafranca—Rome!

The Italians ought to-day to make solemn amends for the error committed. They ought to rise, collect together, hold popular meetings, and pour forth such a protest from the very vitals of Italy against the peace of Villafranca as shall startle all Europe; they ought in every way to declare loudly, resolutely, that, unless compelled by force, they will not readmit the expelled masters; they ought to declare that they understood they were fighting to make their country free and united, that the people do not betray their programme, and that they will not cease from commotion till liberty and unity shall have been acquired. And they ought to prepare to repel force by force. . . . . Let them call the people to arms, and lead them to the barracks of the volunteers and of the Italian soldiery, shouting: "Save with us the honor of Italy!" The volunteers will repeat that shout to the commander of their columns. Are not they the leaders—Garibaldi, Mezzacapo, Rosselli, Gribotti, Medici, Cosenz, and the others—the same who, ten years ago, saved the honor of Italy in Rome and Venice? They will hardly refuse to save it to-day. And if, God avert it, they should refuse, let each volunteer of heart and influence be chief of his own nucleus. To-day, in presence of this great crisis, he is the chief who feels, and dares to perform, the duty of an Italian.

To-day exists no longer obedience except toward the Italian programme. Let each who feels the importance of the present moment, who comprehends how in these very days is to be dreaded the life or death of a people for the next quarter of a century; let all such men rise without hesitation, without waiting for the signal from the capital or from recognized chiefs; let them appeal to the multitude that it stamp the peace with infamy, the vengeance of Villafranca. According to the energy with which the populace will respond, will depend the line of our future actions. Whenever the energy of the population proceeds to action, let in brief and uniform words the national programme be promulgated: "We will have Unity, and Liberty; war for each so long as war is possible." Then let everything be under the direction of committees of war, formed by the popular manifestations, ordered for the local defence, so as, at least, if we cannot conquer, we shall protest manfully, and shall impede the movements of any invader. Wherever the elements are in superabundance, let there be militarily organized a nucleus of brave men, mobilized under the direction of the centre, which shall extend the movements in the neighborhood. Wherever there are in Italy or in exile men of influence in their native places, let them get there; let each hasten to his post. Wherever there are Italians who possess means above their necessities, wherever there are foreigners to whom Italy is the country of their affection, let them contribute what they can, and that quickly, to aid in the mobilization, the workers, the grand Protest. Subscriptions were made for the families of the volunteers—to-day the family of the volunteers is Italy. Let gifts be sent to her by the hand of whomsoever best represents her. Let gifts be sent, that Italy may be saved from dishonor and slavery.

To the centre—to the centre—with views on the South. In the centre tyranny was resisted under every aspect it could assume—civil, political, religious, foreign and domestic. Then acquiring for Italy the hesitating South, we shall obtain the most potent basis of operations which can be furnished to the national movement. . . . . The reconquest of Perugia ought to be their first step in the new life.

Rome has a heavy debt due to all Italy and to all Europe—the programme of 1849. Rome, in 1849, declared the Pope to be morally dead, and she was rebaptized, with noble actions, metropolis of Italy. Rome, degraded since then under the doctrinism of the worst of the managers of the House of Savoy; Rome, applauding the man who suffocated liberty in blood, is a spectacle so deplorable as to bring, if such were to last, skepticism into the heart of the most faithful believer.

Prospects in Europe.

The grumbling of the dissatisfied ones in Europe is like the heavy roaring of the approaching tornado. "Men may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace." The political volcano will, no doubt, soon burst forth again with redoubled fury. The despots of Europe begin to tremble before the oppressed and enraged multitudes, who have been promised liberty, but turned off with a despotic peace, to wear again the oppressor's cruel yoke. Apparently, the scenes of 1848–9 will soon be repeated with a degree of earnestness unparalleled in this world's bloody strife. Says the London Tablet, a Catholic paper:—

"Peace cannot come out of this present cessation from active war; the revolutionary spirit has been too deeply stirred, too many self loves have been hurt, and too many interests endangered. The Lombards will not submit patiently to the Piedmontese, and the Italians generally will be less disposed to a quiet life than they have ever been. Count Cavour will hardly abandon his work, and cease from plotting against the other governments of the Peninsula. A war will soon become necessary. . . . . All Italy is in revolution, and how is the revolution to be got under? Louis Napoleon has not deposed the Pope, nor has he sequestered his dominions, as was fondly hoped at first. He has not triumphed over Austria, nor has he expelled the Austrians from Italy, as he incautiously promised to do. But, after all, he has given the revolution a greater lift than any living man; and if he has quitted Italy, he only left it as an incendiary who had done its work. He has left the burning house because he found that it became too hot to hold him, but he has left the house on fire. And while the fire is still spreading, and while it is quite uncertain whether it can be subdued, it is premature to declare that he has failed. Perhaps the work may go on in his absence even better. The Papal States and Tuscany, the Duchies of Parma and Modena, may yet console Garibaldi, Kossuth and Mazzini, Palmerston, Russell and Cavour, by persistence in rebellion, and by the expulsion or the decimation of the clergy. The "great liberal party" feel that they were cowed too soon, and already begin to lift their heads and tell one another that the troubles of Italy are far from ended."

"I assure you that in the midst of revolution, of war, and of so many governments overthrown, the Pope will remain always the Pope. Providence and the history of so many centuries are my guarantee for that. What matter that the Papacy be annoyed, or even persecuted. Perhaps at this moment such persecution enters into the designs of God."

"Demons doing their last Work."

In Rev. 16:14, we learn that demons have a work to do among "the kings of the earth and of the whole world." That work is specified as follows:—"To gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." In connection with this, the Savior instructs John to say—"Behold, I come as a thief." When those who are influenced by the demons least expect it, the Lord of glory appears. Signs indicate that the day is not far off when this Scripture will be accomplished.

At a Spiritualist convention held in Plymouth, Mass., Aug. 5th, 6th and 7th, Dr. Gardner, who has recently returned from Europe, is reported to have spoken substantially as follows:—

"It might surprise most people to learn that the Emperor Napoleon was entirely governed by spirit direction. The very results that had taken place within the last three months in Europe had been predicted to him (Dr. G.) some of them many years ago, and had been a matter of history for some years. Even the peace which had so much surprised the world had been hinted at; but that was not all peace which seemed to be peace. He knew that the Emperor Napoleon owed his safety from the bullet of an assassin to the direct interposition of a spirit—that he was forewarned, and therefore forearmed. He was warned by the wife of a foreign minister at his court, who was a medium, that the attempt to assassinate him would be made on a certain day, and he was told the very place where it would be made. As he had been told, so it turned out. The failure of the attempt was a cause of wonder to the whole world, the pistol having been fired within point blank range of the Emperor. And why did the attempt fail? Because Napoleon knew it was to be made, and was prepared for it—hence the ball did not prove fatal. He would not assert positively that the Emperor had worn a coat of mail, but yet that was undoubtedly the case. He was warned by the spirit that controlled his movements, and that was the spirit of his uncle.

There were others high in authority in Europe who to-day were influenced by spirits. You could hardly enter into an intelligent circle, either in this country or in Europe, where the matter was not being investigated. In England it was confined almost exclusively to the upper circles of society. With many of the leading statesmen of England it was a matter of daily and almost hourly investigation and of serious thought. In the city of Paris it was so extensively investigated that a manufacturer of a writing machine used there by mediums had sold in two months in the city of Paris alone nearly five hundred of these machines. They might judge, therefore, of the amount of spiritual investigation from that fact, when he said that it required two mediums and a circle of ten or twelve persons for each of these machines. In Paris he had received a communication in the English tongue through a medium who knew not a word of that language."

"Who are Spiritualists?"

At the late Spiritualist Convention, held Aug. 5th, 6th, and 7th, at Plymouth, Mass., a "declaration of sentiments" was made, the leading article of which was the following:—

"We recognize as spiritualists, according to the now common use of the term, all who hold to the one fact that human spirits have a conscious personal existence after the death of their physical bodies, and can and do manifest themselves and communicate to those in the body under suitable conditions."

A committee was appointed to call a rational convention, in order, as they say, to make "a concentrated effort . . . for the purpose of spreading the facts of Spiritualism broadly before the world."

The following is from the report of their sayings and doings:—

"The phenomena of modern spiritualism, by their startling significance and world-wide diffusion, have assumed, in the opinion of this Convention, an importance worthy the earnest consideration of all rational minds, demonstrating as they do the immortality of the soul, and inaugurating a purer theology and a deeper philosophy than humanity has hitherto attained."

How pure is that theology "that denieth the Father and the Son?" See 1 John 2:22. A prominent actor in the convention is reported to have said:—

"The authority that was absolute with him was not up yonder in the sky—not in the dead past, but in his own heart. The God that spoke in his own soul was his sole authority, and he hoped the Convention would adopt the document as meaning that thus they would sweep away all external authority—all books, Bibles, Shasters, and Korans."

Another says, "that he often converses with a deceased friend of his who still rides his favorite little gray pony in the spirit land."

As this monstrous delusion advances, we see more clearly the importance of the great Bible truth—"The dead know not any thing." Were it not for the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, Spiritualism, Swedenborgianism, Shakerism, Catholicism, and the eternal misery of the wicked, would be without a foundation.

Dear reader, let us spare no effort in trying to get the glorious truths of the Bible before the people, in order that they may be rescued from the snares of the devil. Pray, exhort, circulate tracts, and show by a consistent life the reality of the christian religion. Lose no opportunity for doing good.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

To Bro. Hastings.

Dear Bro.:—I have sent you five dollars in my tracts and pamphlets, at the rate of sixteen pages for one cent, to help a little towards the $1000 you are striving to raise to spread truth in the West. As the special hard times there prevent missionaries from traveling as much as heretofore, we should send printed heralds as the next great means of effecting reforms.

If brethren East had seen, as I have by traveling, the vastness, and destitution of that field; and heard the sorrows and requests from the tongues and pens of numerous brethren, thinly scattered over it, I believe the $1000 would soon be made up. But in Paul's day, "they determined to send help to the poor saints at Jerusalem," though they only heard of their wants, as we do of those of the West as to a spiritual dearth.

Permit me to suggest to brethren who travel in the West, one plan of spreading truth by tracts "broad cast." Two years ago when traveling in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, I practised throwing out some tracts at every depot where the cars stopped, in not one in twenty of which places had our views ever been preached. I always saw them picked up with eagerness, and often sighed because I was not able to "cast more bread upon the waters."

Now seems to be a good time to remind brethren of the fact that Bro. H. Grew's tract on destruction was given to Bro. Storrs, and led to the happy change in his views on life and death—remembering and reflecting on this, they can "behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth,"—it was only a 12 and not a 16 page tract.

The Lord comfort, you my brother, and prosper your praise-worthy effort, by inclining brethren to give liberally.

Jacob Blain.

Boston, August 15th, 1859.

Extract from a Letter.

West Meriden, Ct.

"How many there are who never have heard of the truths we hold so dear. Have we done all we could to present them to our dying fellows? I seem to be fettered just now, so far as visiting the surrounding country is concerned; but here is $1, Bro. Grant, which you may appropriate to the cause as you see fit. And, brethren and sisters, it only reduces the desired sum down to nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars, so you see there are nine hundred and ninety-nine more chances as good as mine to do something for the cause; and now is the time to take hold if you wish to have a share in that good object Bro. Hemenway advocated lately in the Crisis. A little from each one would cause the tracts to fly through the country, like the down of thistles before a tornado. Help spread the truth, while the day lasts, for soon the night will come upon us, wherein no man can work. Yours, hoping soon to inherit eternal life," Wm. A. Fenn.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

"I am glad to see that Bro. Hastings is interesting himself in reference to scattering the truth in the great West. Hope he will be successful. Gladly would I lend a helping hand, but in a pecuniary point this is impossible; yet I can help scatter, if brethren who are able would furnish Bro. Hastings the means to publish matter to scatter; and, if necessary, I could help furnish a little of the matter, which is most needed in the West.

Brethren, East and West, wake up and respond to Bro. Hastings call; you are God's stewards, don't abuse your stewardship. Will you sacrifice for God's cause—do something more than to give a tithe of your overplus? Bro. H. has done much good in this line. Will you not help hold up his hands? People are so poor in this part of the West, that I have not been able to get a subscriber to the Crisis, though I have tried hard; yet people will read mine gladly—so it is with tracts."

Correspondence.

From A. F. Servis.

Bro. Grant:—Our two days meeting, held the 16th and 17th of July, was one of interest to the scattered flock in this section. Notwithstanding our meeting was held in time of harvest, which made it difficult for some to attend, and the notice being short, there was a goodly number present upon Sunday, to hear the word of life. There being no house sufficiently large or comfortable to accommodate those in expectation, we prepared a place in the grove, near Bro. Austin's house, and upon his land. When the hour for meeting arrived, it was manifest that not a few even in this vicinity were anxious to hear something more than the ordinary display of man's wisdom, which is foolishness with God. The subject in the morning was, the purpose of God in creating the world. As the several points were brought out during the discourse, and established by the plain word of the Lord, the whole congregation gave unmistakable evidence of a deep interest in the subject under investigation. To many, the doctrine of the Bible was a new thing, and some acknowledged that if the Bible was true, we, above all other denominations, have the truth. Some wept for joy, while participating prospectively in the final restoration of all that God has promised since the world began.

After public exercises were ended upon the ground, we marched in a line to a small lake, there being much water, where the writer had the satisfaction of burying, in the liquid grave, nine willing souls, who arose to walk in newness of life preparatory to enjoying eternal life in the kingdom of God. The best of order was observed during the solemn rite, and others there were, who were almost persuaded to become christians, by obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ. After the necessary refreshments provided by Bro. Austin, who with his companion and aged father, (though they have been in the faith but about a year,) are pillars in the church; we repaired to the grove, where we had a social season of conference, and, assisted by Bro. Adams, we served the little flock by breaking and passing to them an emblem of the broken body of our absent Lord, also a type of his spilt blood; in partaking of which, we felt in our hearts that it was a shadow of the Lord's death till he come.

[illegible] such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." Therefore place not your affections upon the allurements of the world, but be ye steadfast and consistent; look to the promises contained in the holy volume. Look at the lives of the followers of Christ when he was on earth, and make them an example. Look at the faith and love of his disciples when he was taken from their midst by those who were seeking for his life, and carried away to mount Calvary; although their faith was shaken in a certain degree, see how it revived again when the blessed Savior burst the bonds of death, and came forth from the grave a victorious conqueror over that power which all mankind have fallen a victim to until the present. How they listened with holy confidence to his divine teachings before his ascension. Nothing then could shake their faith; they were firm as adamant; their love was unbounded. And would to God that all were so now.

And when the time came that he should leave this world, and go unto his Father as an intercessor between God and man, and there wait until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled, they loved him still; and as he stood upon the Mount and spake unto them for the last time, telling his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; when his countenance shone with dazzling splendor, and his garments gleamed with unequalled brilliancy, as he slowly ascended, pronouncing his blessing upon them, and was received into the heavens by legions of angels: and when the two angels spake unto them, saying, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven!" I ask, was not their faith strong?

"Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

F. F.

For the Crisis.

Why go to Campmeeting?

Some go because they can as well as not, and like to see and be seen; but chiefly to have a good time visiting with those of like motives in the pleasant groves. This will do for backsliders, who know their true position and are decided and content to remain such, and think that husks are plenty good enough to subsist on, if they can only enjoy the pleasure of a false independence, and flee the responsibility of servants; verily, they have their reward; but this will not satisfy prodigals.

Others come with a sense of their own short-comings, hungry, and panting after the peace and comfort they once enjoyed, while they have been thinking of the subject and waiting week after week, expecting to get a blessing and find their peace again at the campmeeting instead of beginning to pray before-hand and confessing their faults to the church at home, and telling their resolutions, thus coming prepared to work and get the anticipated blessing. However, such get a kind of blessing, but instead of peace, they get more and more deeply convicted, and usually go home, glad to get where they can throw off their load which has wrought out some good (if they learn better than to do so again), but they regret they have lost so much, that they might have enjoyed had they gone in working order. They have their reward.

To this class I would say that home affairs will follow you even to campmeeting, and spoil your peace, unless properly disposed of beforehand. Therefore, I think it advisable to begin to pray as soon as you perceive you are not in a salvable state, then come praying, stay praying, gain all the strength you can, go home praying, and live a persevering christian when you get there, then you may help others live.

Others go with hearts full of fire, love, and zeal, (lacking a little wisdom and knowledge with experience,) like boys going to battle, shooting first into the air then into the ground finding when they arrive at the place where the enemy is arrayed, that their strength and ammunition are gone, their sword blunted, their own ears cut off, and they have crippled each other.

So with this class, ere the meeting is half ended, they find themselves all prayed out, talked out, sung out, tired out, and worse than all the rest, out of the good Spirit. To such I would say, save your strength and don't tire yourself out hunting up a foe, but wait until one approaches and then pitch battle, with him. Keep your sword in place—the edge well set with the spirit of God, 'till you find something to encounter, and not be flourishing it in every meeting just because you can do it, for you do it at the risk of wounding yourself, and crippling others so that they are unable to fight. Now study to be quiet, as far as the wisdom which is pure requires, and wait until you see some object, then not shoot for the sake of your own noise; but take sure aim and shoot to hit the object. Then you will accomplish more with less effort, convince more with fewer words, conquer more with less strength, eat what is set before you without complaining, throw off all the burdens that the Lord would have [illegible] and feeling as well as though you had been feasting on the King's meat, [illegible] also feast on what you have gained, a long time afterward.

In my advice to you, I picture a fourth class, who know what they go for, make it a subject of prayer beforehand, then go watching, know where to begin, how, and what to do. These make no display but understand how the enemy is moving in the camp, and by their wisdom (which is heavenly), defeat him on every hand. They are not so careful to display their own talent and strength, as they are to hunt up the weaker portion of the army, and try to patch up their wounds, by giving them kind words and encouraging looks, and then help them brighten up their armor, (not by exhorting and spending all their strength by taking up all the time in meeting,) but by giving them time to talk, using a little patience to wait for them; also giving them time to shake off the dust, and rub off the mould from their garments, by confessing how backward they had been.

O! I am persuaded that our efforts are fruitless, except our works are all fraught with wisdom! And yet we are all slow to learn! But may the Lord help us to profit by what we learn, and try to save others from the painful process of learning by a sad experience, some of the tedious lessons which are necessary in order to make us useful. O for a heart that's pure and holy, freed from selfish motives and slavish fears, but filled with wisdom pure, and love divine! Your sister, striving to be an overcomer,

E. S. Fenn.

For the Crisis.

The King of the North.

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to express a few thoughts, that I have long held in connection with this prophecy. We have a character called the wilful king in Daniel 11:36, who assumes to be of a superior kind, representing himself to possess all the attributes of Paul's Man of Sin. If this character is not the same man of sin that the apostle speaks of, it is as near like it as two things are apt to be alike. I do not say that it is one and the same; I leave this, and pass on to notice the attack made upon him. "At the time of the end shall the king of the South push at him; and the king of the North shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships: and he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over." Now comes the question, is the wilful king "he that shall overflow and pass over?" or is he the King of the North? Surely the wilful king. The King of the South, and the King of the North, neither hinder nor put an end to the course of the wilful king as recorded; both kings make an effort, but the wilful king only stops at the stopping place. At the place where it says the King of the North shall come against him, the idea has obtained that the "he" is changed, and the wilful king is lost sight of, and that the King of the North fills out the chapter; but I think any good grammarian will see that the person does not change, that the King of the North only makes an attack. It would be a curious circumstance, if so noted a character as the wilful king should so soon be lost sight of. We have the history of his career and end in this 11th chapter of Daniel. "And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain, yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." Who is he?

That no such character has fulfilled or finished this chapter is evident, and must yet be manifested, for we see that when he does come to his end Michael shall stand up, the same angel that all along has manifested such an interest in the welfare of Daniel and his people. This is not Jesus Christ: he is never called Michael. The same Michael that told Daniel he would tell him what should befall his people in the latter days, his own nation the Hebrews, he shall stand up "for the children of thy people, (Daniel's people,) and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation; (this trouble has not been witnessed yet,) and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Thy people, the same Hebrews; these are called Daniel's people, none other in his prophecy. This wilful king is to plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain. This is in Jerusalem.—Proof, Dan. 9:16.—"I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city, Jerusalem, thy holy mountain." Isa. 66:20.—"They shall bring all your brethren to my holy mountain, Jerusalem." Ezek. 20:40; Zech. 8:3. This is sufficient to show where the holy mountain is. I know of no other place that God calls his glorious holy mountain. Here this wilful king stops. Who is he? has the Pope had any idea of stopping in Jerusalem? These few ideas I trust will do no one any harm. I do not say that the King of the North is not the Russian head; that may all be, but that he swallows up the wilful king by making an attack upon him, is to be proved by something else than the 40th verse of Daniel and onward.

Henry L. Bradley.

Bristol, Ct.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 17, 1859.

Fast.

As all our help must come from the Lord, and knowing the blessed results arising from prayer and fasting, we propose that, on Friday, Aug. 26th, we abstain from our evening meal, and spend the time in prayer for our General, Annual Campmeeting, advertised to commence at Wilbraham, Mass., August 29th, and continue one week. Also, let this meeting have a place in your daily prayers, that the most glorious results may attend it of any ever held in that consecrated spot.

Garibaldi.

This noted man, who has performed such prodigies of military valor, who is surrounded by many of Italy's noblest sons, was born in 1807, and is therefore fifty-two years of age. He is said to be of sanguine temperament, having a bright, cheerful, and benevolent look. He is very affable and intelligent, without the least approach to fierceness, or wildness. His "hair is a brown red"—"somewhat narrow about the temples, round-headed—square visaged." His eye is light gray, having a tint of the lion red. His voice is clear, sonorous and silver-toned. He is said to be very easy in his address, and is extremely popular among his soldiers, who will attempt anything required by their leader. He ever chooses the most daring position, and yet was never wounded. He has in his ranks from fifty to a hundred of the best shooters in Europe. Garibaldi is distinguished for his tall stature, lofty bearing and rather fanciful costume. It is said the Tyrolese no longer turn their rifles towards him, as they think he has made a league with the devil, who has made his body bullet proof. He is naturally a leader and king of men. He never wears any marks of distinction whatever. In time of peace he seeks retirement, and shuns applause. He is strongly attached to the interests of Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia.

It is said Garibaldi and his troops have been very improperly treated during the campaign just closed. They have been poorly supplied with arms and provisions, though they bore the brunt of the war.

What will he do with the noble sons of Italy who have joined their interests with his, resolved to have Italy free from the Papal yoke, or die in the attempt? The following item of news shows his purpose:—

"Garibaldi is now contemplating a move from the Alps to the Appenines, from Northern to Central Italy. There will be a gathering of about 50,000 volunteers in Romagna. Garibaldi's corps, joined to that of Mezzocapo, will form an army capable of securing the independence of Central Italy, at least against any Roman or Napoleonitan, or any merely Italian force.

If he carries out this plan, it will cause palpitation of heart in the pontiff at Rome. Garibaldi's presence in Central Italy will only be a signal for a general insurrection. Says a Milan correspondent of the London Times:

"The petty communities of Central Italy will soon show the world to what extent right can avail against might. It would be impossible for me or any man in the world to convey by mere words an idea, even the faintest, of the excitement of the Italian population throughout the country."

All they need now is the right leader, and they are ready to follow him to the Vatican of the Pope and burn the harlot with fire. Hatred for the Pope begins to assume active measures. The Milan correspondent goes on to say:—

"The people of Parma and Modena, of the Legations and Tuscany, are arming and organizing a diplomatic no less than a military defence. In the Duchies municipal assemblies re-attest the vote by which their territories were annexed to Sardinia, and send deputations to all the European Powers, intimating that the popular will is not to be disregarded with impunity. In Tuscany an appeal is made to the public suffrage. In the Legations a government is installed, the very first act of which is a declaration of war against the Papal government. Are those States to settle their own matters free from foreign intervention? Is the threatened restoration of their respective Sovereigns to be left to such forces as those Sovereigns may dispose of and the favor of such partisans as they may have left behind? The Duke of Modena leads, perhaps, 1,500 men into the field. The Pope musters, may be, 3,000, between Swiss and native troops. The Duchess of Parma and the Grand Duke of Tuscany have not one man under their standards. On the other hand, Mezzacapo, Garibaldi, and other condottieri muster little less than 40,000 volunteers, most of whom are, or will soon be, within the precints of the threatened provinces.

The Tuscan division, 10,000 men strong, with a reserve of several thousands, is travelling homewards, and will soon take its place on the frontiers. The whole population, besides, is mustering in the battalions of the National Guard, which is everywhere organized and actively mobilized. Private citizens and municipal bodies cheerfully supply the means for its vast armament, and, were it needed, men and money would be freely given by Piedmont, Lombardy and Liguria."

The Pope has issued a circular, in which he complains to Europe of Victor Emanuel. He says:

"Amidst all the apprehensions and anxieties occasioned by the present deplorable war, the Holy See had reason to think that it would be unmolested, after the many assurances it had received—assurances with which even the King of Piedmont had associated himself—for on the advice of the French, his ally, he refused the dictatorship which was offered him in the revolted provinces of the Pontifical States. But it is painful to state that things have turned out very differently, and facts occur every day under the eyes of the Holy See and its government which show more and more how inexcusable is the conduct of the Sardinian Cabinet towards the Holy See—conduct which clearly proves that it is intended to strip the Holy See of a part of its temporal dominions. . . . . The Holy Father protests against the violations and usurpations committed, and desires that his protest may be communicated to all the European Powers. Confident in the justice which distinguished these Powers, he feels assured that they will support him; they will not permit the success of a manifest violation of the rights of the Holy Father. He trusts that they will not hesitate to co-operate in the vindication of those rights, and to that end he invokes their assistance and protection."

The London Times, commenting on this circular, says:

"It claims all things and it recedes from nothing. It accepts no responsibility and it renounces no atom of power. It is like the cry of a weak and wounded beast of prey. It complains of the interference of stronger powers with the gratification of its instincts; but it bears no remorse for the past and no promise for the future. . . . . The Pope appears at this moment to be very sick—more sick than the Turk was even when Nicholas thought it time to take out adminstration to his effects. He has no strength whatever in his own body. Weak and tottering, he sometimes leans upon one strong man and sometimes upon another. Austria has held him up in the Legations, France has kept him upright at Rome, the Swiss have spread the terror of his name in the unwarlike towns. To all human foresight he seems on the brink of dissolution. . . . . It is wonderful, and at the same time pitiable, to mark the senile and impotent tenacity with which this old man clings to his right to do wrong at a moment when the whole system seems ready to perish. If France and Austria were to retire there would be an end at once and forever to the States of the Church. . . . . But so long as the French remain to protect him, he will by his ecclesiastics and his bravos, drain the country and destroy the people; and, if the French go away, the people, exasperated beyond all moderation, will probably expel him. This is the dilemma.

"The Nations were Angry." Rev. 11:18.

Preparations for the second scene in the last bloody drama of this world's history are being developed on every side, and causing monarchs to turn pale. The people seem determined to take the work into their own hands and wait no longer for emperors to lead.

The hatred for the harlot at Rome seems to be increasing, and is too deep rooted now to be quietly removed by any more false promises, from the crowned heads sustaining that system of crime and cruelty.

Mazzini, the noted Italian revolutionist, when speaking of the peace of Villafranca, says:—

From one end of Italy to the other, one unanimous deep murmur of anger and menace must respond to the abominable news. . . . Among the wretched oppressions which weigh upon Italy, the very worst is that of the Pope. The constant protest of the population against the Papacy is a fact acknowledged and confirmed by all Europe. The insurrection of ten cities, accomplished without the shedding of one drop of blood, is a solemn declaration of the sentiment of the Roman provinces. A shriek of profound indignation against the Papacy arose in consquence of the massacre of Perugia, and to those provinces is decreed a new Slavery, while the Papal ferocity is recompensed by the promise of the Presidency of the Italian Confederation. The emancipation of Italy, the annihilation of all Austaian authority south of the Alps, the creation of a strong kingdom in Northern Italy, the engagements agreed to with the scandalously deluded representatives of the Hungarian nationality, every word written or spoken in Paris and Milan—all, all is belied in a few sentences dated from Vallegie. . . . Let the watchword be Villafranca—Rome!

The Italians ought to-day to make solemn amends for the error commiited. They ought to rise, collect together, hold popular meetings, and pour forth such a protest from the very vitals of Italy against the peace of Villafranca as shall startle all Europe; they ought in every way to declare loudly, resolutely, that, unless compelled by force, they will not readmit the expelled masters; they ought to declare that they understood they were fighting to make their country free and united, that the people do not betray their programme, and that they will not cease from commotion till liberty and unity shall have been acquired. And they ought to prepare to repel force by force. . . . . Let them call the people to arms, and lead them to the barracks of the volunteers and of the Italian soldiery, shouting: "Save with us the honor of Italy!" The volunteers will repeat that shout to the commander of their columns. Are not they the leaders—Garibaldi, Mezzacapo, Rosselli, Gridotti, Medici, Cosenz, and the others—the same who, ten years ago, saved the honor of Italy in Rome and Venice? They will hardly refuse to save it to-day. And if, God avert it, they should refuse, let each volunteer of heart and influence be chief of his own nucleus. To-day, in presence of this great crisis, he is the chief who feels, and dares to perform, the duty of an Italian.

To-day exists no longer obedience except toward the Italian programme. Let each who feels the importance of the present moment, who comprehends how in these very days is to be dreaded the life or death of a people for the next quarter of a century; let all such men rise without hesitation, without waiting for the signal from the capital or from recognized chiefs; let them appeal to the multitude that it stamp the peace with infamy, the vengeance of Villafranca. According to the energy with which the populace will respond, will depend the line of our future actions. Whenever the energy of the population proceeds to action, let in brief and uniform words the national programme be promulgated: "We will have Unity, and Liberty; war for each so long as war is possible." Then let everything be under the direction of committees of war, formed by the popular manifestations, ordered for the local defence, so as, at least, if we cannot conquer, we shall protest manfully, and shall impede the movements of any invader. Wherever the elements are in superabundance, let there be militarily organized a nucleus of brave men, mobilized under the direction of the centre, which shall extend the movements in the neighborhood. Wherever there are in Italy or in exile men of influence in their native places, let them get there; let each hasten to his post. Wherever there are Italians who possess means above their necessities, wherever there are foreigners to whom Italy is the country of their affection, let them contribute what they can, and that quickly, to aid in the mobilization, the workers, the grand Protest. Subscriptions were made for the families of the volunteers—to-day the family of the volunteers is Italy. Let gifts be sent to her by the hand of whomsoever best represents her. Let gifts be sent, that Italy may be saved from dishonor and slavery.

To the centre—to the centre—with views on the South. In the centre tyranny was resisted under every aspect it could assume—civil, political, religious, foreign and domestic. Then acquiring for Italy the hesitating South, we shall obtain the most potent basis of operations which can be furnished to the national movement. . . . . The reconquest of Perugia ought to be their first step in the new life.

Rome has a heavy debt due to all Italy and to all Europe—the programme of 1849. Rome, in 1849, declared the Pope to be morally dead, and she was rebaptized, with noble actions, metropolis of Italy. Rome, degraded since then under the doctrinism of the worst of the managers of the House of Savoy; Rome, applauding the man who suffocated liberty in blood, is a spectacle so deplorable as to bring, if such were to last, skepticism into the heart of the most faithful believer.

Prospects in Europe.

The grumbling of the dissatisfied ones in Europe is like the heavy roaring of the approaching tornado. "Men may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace." The political volcano will, no doubt, soon burst forth again with redoubled fury. The despots of Europe begin to tremble before the oppressed and enraged multitudes, who have been promised liberty, but turned off with a despotic peace, to wear again the oppressor's cruel yoke. Apparently, the scenes of 1848–9 will soon be repeated with a degree of earnestness unparalleled in this world's bloody strife. Says the London Tablet, a Catholic paper:—

"Peace cannot come out of this present cessation from active war; the revolutionary spirit has been too deeply stirred, too many self loves have been hurt, and too many interests endangered. The Lombards will not submit patiently to the Piedmontese, and the Italians generally will be less disposed to a quiet life than they have ever been. Count Cavour will hardly abandon his work, and cease from plotting against the other governments of the Peninsula. A war will soon become necessary. . . . . All Italy is in revolution, and how is the revolution to be got under? Louis Napoleon has not deposed the Pope, nor has he sequestered his dominions, as was fondly hoped at first. He has not triumphed over Austria, nor has he expelled the Austrians from Italy, as he incautiously promised to do. But, after all, he has given the revolution a greater lift than any living man; and if he has quitted Italy, he only left it as an incendiary who had done its work. He has left the burning house because he found that it became too hot to hold him, but he has left the house on fire. And while the fire is still spreading, and while it is quite uncertain whether it can be subdued, it is premature to declare that he has failed. Perhaps the work may go on in his absence even better. The Papal States and Tuscany, the Duchies of Parma and Modena, may yet console Garibaldi, Kossuth and Mazzini, Palmerston, Russell and Cavour, by persistence in rebellion, and by the expulsion or the decimation of the clergy. The "great liberal party" feel that they were cowed too soon, and already begin to lift their heads and tell one another that the troubles of Italy are far from ended."

"I assure you that in the midst of revolution, of war, and of so many governments overthrown, the Pope will remain always the Pope. Providence and the history of so many centuries are my guarantee for that. What matter that the Papacy be annoyed, or even persecuted. Perhaps at this moment such persecution enters into the designs of God."

"Demons doing their last Work."

In Rev. 16:14, we learn that demons have a work to do among "the kings of the earth and of the whole world." That work is specified as follows:—"To gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." In connection with this, the Savior instructs John to say—"Behold, I come as a thief." When those who are influenced by the demons least expect it, the Lord of glory appears. Signs indicate that the day is not far off when this Scripture will be accomplished.

At a Spiritualist convention held in Plymouth, Mass., Aug. 5th, 6th and 7th, Dr. Gardner, who has recently returned from Europe, is reported to have spoken substantially as follows:—

"It might surprise most people to learn that the Emperor Napoleon was entirely governed by spirit direction. The very results that had taken place within the last three months in Europe had been predicted to him (Dr. G.) some of them many years ago, and had been a matter of history for some years. Even the peace which had so much surprised the world had been hinted at; but that was not all peace which seemed to be peace. He knew that the Emperor Napoleon owed his safety from the bullet of an assassin to the direct interposition of a spirit—that he was forewarned, and therefore forearmed. He was warned by the wife of a foreign minister at his court, who was a medium, that the attempt to assassinate him would be made on a certain day, and he was told the very place where it would be made. As he had been told, so it turned out. The failure of the attempt was a cause of wonder to the whole world, the pistol having been fired within point blank range of the Emperor. And why did the attempt fail? Because Napoleon knew it was to be made, and was prepared for it—hence the ball did not prove fatal. He would not assert positively that the Emperor had worn a coat of mail, but yet that was undoubtedly the case. He was warned by the spirit that controlled his movements, and that was the spirit of his uncle.

There were others high in authority in Europe who to-day were influenced by spirits. You could hardly enter into an intelligent circle, either in this country or in Europe, where the matter was not being investigated. In England it was confined almost exclusively to the upper circles of society. With many of the leading statesmen of England it was a matter of daily and almost hourly investigation and of serious thought. In the city of Paris it was so extensively investigated that a manufacturer of a writing machine used there by mediums had sold in two months in the city of Paris alone nearly five hundred of these machines. They might judge, therefore, of the amount of spiritual investigation from that fact, when he said that it required two mediums and a circle of ten or twelve persons for each of these machines. In Paris he had received a communication in the English tongue through a medium who knew not a word of that language."

"Who are Spiritualists?"

At the late Spiritualist Convention, held Aug. 5th, 6th, and 7th, at Plymouth, Mass., a "declaration of sentiments" was made, the leading article of which was the following:—

"We recognize as spiritualists, according to the now common use of the term, all who hold to the one fact that human spirits have a conscious personal existence after the death of their physical bodies, and can and do manifest themselves and communicate to those in the body under suitable conditions."

A committee was appointed to call a rational convention, in order, as they say, to make "a concentrated effort . . . for the purpose of spreading the facts of Spiritualism broadly before the world."

The following is from the report of their sayings and doings:—

"The phenomena of modern spiritualism, by their startling significance and world-wide diffusion, have assumed, in the opinion of this Convention, an importance worthy the earnest consideration of all rational minds, demonstrating as they do the immortality of the soul, and inaugurating a purer theology and a deeper philosophy than humanity has hitherto attained."

How pure is that theology "that denieth the Father and the Son?" See 1 John 2:22. A prominent actor in the convention is reported to have said:—

"The authority that was absolute with him was not up yonder in the sky—not in the dead past, but in his own heart. The God that spoke in his own soul was his sole authority, and he hoped the Convention would adopt the document as meaning that thus they would sweep away all external authority—all books, Bibles, Shasters, and Korans."

Another says, "that he often converses with a deceased friend of his who still rides his favorite little gray pony in the spirit land."

As this monstrous delusion advances, we see more clearly the importance of the great Bible truth—"The dead know not any thing." Were it not for the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, Spiritualism, Swedenborgianism, Shakerism, Catholicism, and the eternal misery of the wicked, would be without a foundation.

Dear reader, let us spare no effort in trying to get the glorious truths of the Bible before the people, in order that they may be rescued from the snares of the devil. Pray, exhort, circulate tracts, and show by a consistent life the reality of the christian religion. Lose no opportunity for doing good.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

To Bro. Hastings.

Dear Bro.:—I have sent you five dollars in my tracts and pamphlets, at the rate of sixteen pages for one cent, to help a little towards the $1000 you are striving to raise to spread truth in the West. As the special hard times there prevent missionaries from traveling as much as heretofore, we should send printed heralds as the next great means of effecting reforms.

If brethren East had seen, as I have by traveling, the vastness, and destitution of that field; and heard the sorrows and requests from the tongues and pens of numerous brethren, thinly scattered over it, I believe the $1000 would soon be made up. But in Paul's day, "they determined to send help to the poor saints at Jerusalem," though they only heard of their wants, as we do of those of the West as to a spiritual dearth.

Permit me to suggest to brethren who travel in the West, one plan of spreading truth by tracts "broad cast." Two years ago when traveling in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, I practised throwing out some tracts at every depot where the cars stopped, in not one in twenty of which places had our views ever been preached. I always saw them picked up with eagerness, and often sighed because I was not able to "cast more bread upon the waters."

Now seems to be a good time to remind brethren of the fact that Bro. H. Grew's tract on destruction was given to Bro. Storrs, and led to the happy change in his views on life and death—remembering and reflecting on this, they can "behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth,"—it was only a 12 and not a 16 page tract.

The Lord comfort, you my brother, and prosper your praise-worthy effort, by inclining brethren to give liberally.

Jacob Blain.

Boston, August 15th, 1859.

Extract from a Letter.

West Meriden, Ct.

"How many there are who never have heard of the truths we hold so dear. Have we done all we could to present them to our dying fellows? I seem to be fettered just now, so far as visiting the surrounding country is concerned; but here is $1, Bro. Grant, which you may appropriate to the cause as you see fit. And, brethren and sisters, it only reduces the desired sum down to nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars, so you see there are nine hundred and ninety-nine more chances as good as mine to do something for the cause; and now is the time to take hold if you wish to have a share in that good object Bro. Hemenway advocated lately in the Crisis. A little from each one would cause the tracts to fly through the country, like the down of thistles before a tornado. Help spread the truth, while the day lasts, for soon the night will come upon us, wherein no man can work. Yours, hoping soon to inherit eternal life," Wm. A. Fenn.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

"I am glad to see that Bro. Hastings is interesting himself in reference to scattering the truth in the great West. Hope he will be successful. Gladly would I lend a helping hand, but in a pecuniary point this is impossible; yet I can help scatter, if brethren who are able would furnish Bro. Hastings the means to publish matter to scatter; and, if necessary, I could help furnish a little of the matter, which is most needed in the West.

Brethren, East and West, wake up and respond to Bro. Hastings call; you are God's stewards, don't abuse your stewardship. Will you sacrifice for God's cause—do something more than to give a tithe of your overplus? Bro. H. has done much good in this line. Will you not help hold up his hands? People are so poor in this part of the West, that I have not been able to get a subscriber to the Crisis, though I have tried hard; yet people will read mine gladly—so it is with tracts."

Correspondence.

From A. F. Servis.

Bro. Grant:—Our two days meeting, held the 16th and 17th of July, was one of interest to the scattered flock in this section. Notwithstanding our meeting was held in time of harvest, which made it difficult for some to attend, and the notice being short, there was a goodly number present upon Sunday, to hear the word of life. There being no house sufficiently large or comfortable to accommodate those in expectation, we prepared a place in the grove, near Bro. Austin's house, and upon his land. When the hour for meeting arrived, it was manifest that not a few even in this vicinity were anxious to hear something more than the ordinary display of man's wisdom, which is foolishness with God. The subject in the morning was, the purpose of God in creating the world. As the several points were brought out during the discourse, and established by the plain word of the Lord, the whole congregation gave unmistakable evidence of a deep interest in the subject under investigation. To many, the doctrine of the Bible was a new thing, and some acknowledged that if the Bible was true, we, above all other denominations, have the truth. Some wept for joy, while participating prospectively in the final restoration of all that God has promised since the world began.

After public exercises were ended upon the ground, we marched in a line to a small lake, there being much water, where the writer had the satisfaction of burying, in the liquid grave, nine willing souls, who arose to walk in newness of life preparatory to enjoying eternal life in the kingdom of God. The best of order was observed during the solemn rite, and others there were, who were almost persuaded to become christians, by obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ. After the necessary refreshments provided by Bro. Austin, who with his companion and aged father, (though they have been in the faith but about a year,) are pillars in the church; we repaired to the grove, where we had a social season of conference, and, assisted by Bro. Adams, we served the little flock by breaking and passing to them an emblem of the broken body of our absent Lord, also a type of his spilt blood; in partaking of which, we felt in our hearts that it was a shadow of the Lord's death till he come.

Thus ended one of the best, meeting if not the best, that has been our lot to enjoy, since we embraced the Advent faith. May the interview thus enjoyed, and the evidences connected therewith, be lasting to those who have put on Christ, in stimulating them to walk therein, until Christ shall come to be glorified in all his saints. The Lord bless, also, such as are impressed with a duty to obey the gospel, while Jesus their advocate remains but a little longer, pleading in behalf of a guilty world.

Holly, Mich., Aug. 1st.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I am stilll in the field, full of courage, warning and beseeching my fellow men to be reconciled to God, and saved in the day of my Lord's coming.

I have just returned from a grove meeting in Elliot, Me. It was a new place, with but one family of our faith; but we found an ear to hear the doctrine of the Bible. We commenced the meeting Sunday morning, and there was such an interest that we felt bound to stay still longer. Therefore we gave one appointment for Friday and Saturday evenings and over the following Sunday. And if it had not been in the hurry of haying, we should have had meetings daily, and they would have been well attended. The interest continued to increase, and the second Lord's day was one long to be remembered by many. There were probably four hundred people out to hear. The best order prevailed, with great solicitude to know what we believe. I did the best I could to rightly divide the word, so that all might be instructed in the ways of God more perfectly. A goodly number of our brethren from Portsmouth came over to the meeting and rendered essential service.

The coming of the Lord and the certainty of his soon coming, by the signs of the times, with the sleep of the dead, the resurrection therefrom, and the positive promise that the righteous, when rewarded at all, would have a "kingdom," an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, unfading,—"That the meek shall inherit the earth," urging the importance of experimental religion to be manifest in daily life, were among the things we preached to many that had ears to hear and hearts to feel. I left them hoping the seed sown might soon spring up and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

The Lord reward Brother and Sister Athorn for their sacrifice for the meeting, and may the Lord add to their number such as may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Groton, July, 1859.

From Elder W. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—While living so many hundred miles from friends of former years, so far away from ministers of "like precious faith," your paper is a welcome and refreshing messenger, as through it I hear from many of my old friends.

Since leaving the East I have seen no cause to change my faith in the great fundamental principles of the gospel, but much to establish me. I am looking with interest at the raging elements in Italy. Rome, I think, will be burnt near the Advent. Should I hear that this had been done, it would inspire feelings in my heart that nothing else could this side of the judgment. But it may be accomplished so near the end itself that the news may not reach me. How rapidly this movement may progress, I know not, nor yet how many seeming disastrous victories may yet be gained over the French and Italians; nor do we know but this flame may be temporarily suppressed; but I do feel confident that the elements are in existence which will result in an effectual outburst; and the present movement certainly looks like the thing, even if it should prove premature. This movement has commenced in the right place, as well as at the right time. Truly the children of the Bridegroom may shout, with glad hearts, "Behold he cometh!" and it almost seems that "if these should hold their peace, the stones would cry out."

We are so far down the stream of time that we should anxiously watch the fulfillment of the "jots and tittles" of prophecy. We had better be a little too hasty, than too tardy. Better be a little premature than behindhand. Our caution should not be allowed to extinguish our judgment. But it is not probable, from present appearances, that we are "hasty" or "premature." Events loom up conspicuously of thrilling magnitude, which we shall not do well to ignore; events which closely link the present time with the judgment of the great day! Student of prophecy, turn not a deaf ear to yonder clang of war, but pause and inquire if it is not pointed to by the finger of inspiration as an omen of redemption to the church. Ye saints, rejoice! Watchman, sound the alarm! Sinner, tremble! come to Christ.

Castle Rock, Minn., July 24th.

From J. H. Harding.

Bro. Grant:—I have had the privilege of reading your valuable paper, and consider it meat in due season; for I am well satisfied by the movements in the political world that the great battle will soon be fought. The nations of earth need not hope to have dominion much longer, for that "Stone" must do its destined work; and Papacy with its unhallowed influence, with them shall pass away, while the saints of God take the kingdom; but without the force of arms.

Christ is our Captain, leading us through fiery trials; but he will bring us to Beulah's peaceful plains, and his banner over us will be love. I long to be there! What transports of joy will fill our souls, as we behold our Saviour seated upon his throne, and the saints of all ages gathered before him, to part no more forever!

There is a spirit of investigation in this vicinity. In my feeble way I have occasionally addressed them. There has been so much interest, I have wished that God would send some messenger with a live coal from off his holy altar, to drop in amidst them; and methinks a fire would be kindled that would burn until Christ shall come. There are several waiting to be buried with Christ, and thus acknowledge to the world their faith in the resurrection.

Bridgewater, Vt., July 23, '59.

From Alex. McClure.

Bro. Grant:—For sixteen years I have been waiting for the coming of the Savior, and to-day I groan for the redemption of the body. I praise the Lord that his word is as a shining light; and the perfect day is near, I humbly hope, when I shall meet those dear friends with whom I have taken sweet counsel. I look back with joy to other times, when I first heard the glad news of a coming King to reign in righteousness. With what pleasure I have listened to Brn. Storrs, Himes, Miller, Weethee, and beloved brother Cook. The voices of some I have heard, are heard no more. Brn. Charles Fitch, Kent, Crawford, and others, are silent in death. The monster has them in his grasp; but Jesus is coming; they will live again; then I hope to see them, not in tears for an unbelieving world, but in immortality, in that land where no tears ever fall.—Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!

I hope my brethren will live in peace, and may the very God of peace sanctify us wholly, that we may have an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. Your brother expecting immortality in the resurrection.

Meadville, July 23d.

For the Crisis.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

This bids fair to be the best and most profitable meeting for years. Many new ones are coming to hear for themselves our general views of scripture, and signs of the times, etc. People are getting sick of this weak, unscriptural, papal, spiritual view of things. They begin to see they must believe the Bible, or be swept off the old gospel track by the muddy inundations of spiritualism. As it is now combined with the rotten theology of this age, we need the whole armor on to gain the victory over so complicated a mass of opponents, especially the sword of the Spirits which is the most useful.

Now, in view of these things, we ask our brethren to come up to battle, fully equipped; not merely to present some one-sided issue that we claim the honor of originating; this is n't the way to benefit the many, and will not be tolerated, for it is not the object of this meeting. Every effort will be made to make it a pleasant meeting. To accomplish this, we want all to feel that they can do something. Do what you can—not try to do somebody else's work.

I was on the ground yesterday, the 10th, all things were safe. Each tent's company will find things as they left them; even the tent poles are standing just as they were left. Each can have his old stand if he desires it. Boarding tents for man and beast, as usual, only better tents for strangers will be provided, so all can be sure of tent room. Be thoughtful enough to bring a blanket for yourself. Such as bring many changes of raiment and no bedding, I notice don't pray much. It is no place to visit day times and sit up nights.

Provision necessary can be had on the ground cheap, in the raw material, every day. Those boarding themselves will save the trouble of transportation, and loss, by buying what they want there. I will do what I can for the comfort of the camp of God's people. I hope to see those little lambs in different places, who have left off buying jewelry to get money to go to campmeeting. Such will surely get blessed.

P. S. My post office address is at Chicopee Falls, where it always has been. Some letters of importance have been directed to Chicopee, and failed to reach me in season.

H. Munger.

Chicopee Falls, Aug. 11th, 1859.

For the Crisis.

"Enoch Walked with God."

O blessed life! O blessed prelude to a peaceful death and a glorious immortality!

But what is it, brethren, to walk with God? It is the development of the enlightening and regenerating power of the Holy Spirit of God. It is reconciliation to the true God: reconciliation to his holy perfections, to his law, to his gospel, to his commandments, and to his providences. It is habitual sacred communion with him. It is the soul panting after the living God, as the hart panteth for the water-brook.

It is crucifying the flesh with its affections and lusts; our pride, covetousness, and vanity. It is overcoming the world by a living holy faith on the Son of God. It is walking as Jesus walked, in practical love and benevolence. It is "visiting the widow and the fatherless," and keeping "ourselves unspotted from the world." It is doing "good to all men" as we have opportunity, "especially to the household of faith." It is a life of love to God and love to man.

Dear reader, are you thus walking with God? Have you now this blessed earnest of the heavenly inheritance? Are you, by "the power of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," watching, praying, working, fighting, and overcoming? If so, the conflict will soon be ended, the victory won, and the crown given.

H. G.

Obituary Notices.

Sister Abbie Jane, daughter of Bro. Samuel Rogers of Stowe, Mass., fell asleep in Jesus, July 21st, 1859, aged twenty years and seven months.

Consumption was her fatal disease. Her sufferings in the last part of her sickness were great, but with heavenly resignation and much patience she endured, longing to be at rest. I visited her in her sickness, and always found her in a blessed state of mind. Her faculties were concentrated upon the consummation of the "blessed hope." She talked as freely about dying and the certainty of a resurrection, as any one would of a pleasure excursion of the coming week. And she would say—"no sorrow there!" "I shall meet mother! oh, yes, and all the good" "O this hope!" "we shall live again." Her faith was triumphant. The Rev. A. Morton attended the funeral. She took each of the family by the hand, faithfully warning them to be prepared to meet her in the world to come, where parting will be known no more forever. God grant the warning may be effectual, and that the comfort and consolations of the Gospel with its blessed hope may be theirs, that they may all be saved in the kingdom of God together.

L. Boutell.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Vanderbilt. From Southampton the 3d inst.

FRANCE.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says: "Although Count Collorado had an audience of the Emperor on the 28th of July, and was long closeted with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, he is not likely to leave for Zurich until the beginning of the coming week. For a time a very unfriendly feeling towards England prevailed here. The warmth of the Austrians is rapidly subsiding. The promise of the Emperor of the French to put his army and navy on a peace footing, has made a great impression on the Austrian financial world. The Count de Conneville will return here as the representative of France."

The projected reduction of the French army and navy was being discussed by the press of France and England, and there was a great diversity of opinion as to what a peace footing meant. The Gazette de France says it must be understood to comprise the ability to have 560,000 men under arms at a month's notice, and with a view to the extension of colonial possessions.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post strongly suspects that all idea of a Congress is given up, and that the affairs of Italy will be settled by France, Austria and Sardinia.

GARIBALDI'S POSITION.

The London Post says that Garibaldi has sent a circular to all the free States of Italy, in which he declares his army to be ready at any moment to continue the Italian war of independence.

Garibaldi has issued the following order, dated Louviers, July 19: "However political affairs may go, in the present circumstances it is the duty of the Italians not to lay down their arms but to swell the ranks and show Europe that, guided by the heroic Victor Emanuel, they are ready again to confront the vicissitudes of war in whatever form they may present themselves."

ITALY.

The agitation in Savoy for annexing that province to France, was assuming formidable propositions.

The Times correspondent from Rome says that there is great dissatisfaction here, and "I have no hesitation in saying that the French soldiers alone keep down a general outbreak. The Jesuits have been driven out of Faenza, Forti and Ferrara. In this last city only one hour was given them to leave, and in the others twenty-four hours.

The Bologna Gazette publishes a declaration to the effect the provinces of Romagna have shaken off the fatal yoke, never to return to it again, and that it is their wish to be annexed to Sardinia.

RUSSIA.

The Journal do St. Petersburg is authorized, in regard to the story that the neutral powers offered less favorable terms to Austria than those agreed upon at Villafranca, to state that the basis of mediation, as lately published, had not been agreed upon by the neutral powers, not even discussed, and the preliminaries of peace between the belligerents were already signed before the principle of mediation which formed the object of negotiation between neutral powers, was definitely agreed upon.

INDIA.

Aden, July 17. The disaffection among the late Company's troops is on the increase. They are in open mutiny, and have entrenched themselves in the barracks, and elected officers to command them.

The Times Calcutta correspondent, under date of June 18, says the campaign has been left to the Oude police, and the Europeans have withdrawn under cover for the rains. The rebels said to be six thousand strong—are in great distress.

LATEST.

The Times Paris correspondent says the Emperor is very anxious to satisfy the European powers of his pacific intentions, and before many days they will be invited to a Congress, where a solution of the Italian difficulties will be proposed, which will deserve support for its legal character. Prince Napoleon is said to be indefatigable in his efforts for the amicable settlement of all difficulties among the European powers. Orders have been given for disarming all ships at Brest, and for the French Admiral to haul down his flag. Indeed, what is called the Ocean Squadron has ceased to exist.

The London Times quotes a letter from Milan, which states that the extreme party is beginning to agitate, and that it is possible Venetia may rise in insurrection.

A letter from Valellise says that on hearing of the preliminaries of peace, Garibaldi offered the resignation of himself and all his officers, but the King refused them.

The Moniteur of the 28th ult., contains the announcement that the Emperor has decided that the Army and Navy shall be restored to a peace footing without the slightest delay.

ITEMS.

A Brave "Vivandiere."—Madam Cros, a vivandiere of the Foot Chasseurs, a pretty woman of 22, and the wife of one of the chasseurs, requested permission of her husband, who was in the reserve, to follow the attack, and assist the wounded at Solferino. Taking with her her keg of brandy, a canteen of water, and a package of linen and lint, she went forward into the thickest of the fight, heedless of the bullets, and dressed the wounds of many of the men, and among them that of the Cent-Garde, who was struck in the head when close to the Emperor. A short time after she saw one of the chasseurs lying on the ground, wounded in the side. She stooped down to him and gave him some water, with a few drops of brandy in it. While the man was drinking, a ball broke her little finger, smashed the glass, and killed the man. Madame Cros then proceeded to the ambulance to have her wound dressed, and while on the way saw a soldier named Riche, both of whose legs had been perforated by a ball. Being wounded herself, she could not lift the man up, but she adopted another expedient. She stooped down, and telling him to clasp both his arms round her neck, in that manner she managed to drag him to the ambulance. On the following day, Madame Cros was told by the surgeon that her finger must be amputated. "Well, then," said she, "do it at once," and the operation was effected without her uttering a word. Some rings on her middle finger which were broken by the ball, were afterwards presented to the Emperor, to whom the courageous conduct of the cantiniere was related.

The Want of Italy.—Herr Brock in his new work argues that national independence, in particular, is the great want of Italy. Germans, French and Austrians in vain have attempted to govern this country. Their government has resulted in their own misery, as well as that of the Italians. The papal sovereignty is the great obstacle to Italian unity. Herr Brock quotes Machiavelli in confirmation of this opinion. (Discorsi, Lib. i. cap. 12.) He maintains that the Italians are perfectly ripe for the abolition of the papacy. The papal government is effete. It is unable to protect itself. It flies before danger. It is incapable of reform. It does not live in the affections of the Italians, but in the bayonets of the French.

Religious Liberty in Lombardy.—The Press says: "The Governor of Milan, representing Victor Emmanuel, has proclaimed liberty of worship, reading and printing. This is no ordinary privilege. It will do more to prevent the reflux of Austrian domination and sacerdotal intolerance than treaty or army or battlements. It will give the people a taste of enjoyment which it will be almost impossible entirely to eradicate at any future time, because the longer it lasts, the more extensively and firmly it will interlace and incorporate itself with the very life of the people. What is worthy of remark in this instance is the fact that this is not a Protestant insurrection against a Roman Catholic institution, resting its right on sacred Scripture, and deriving its growth from the overthrow of Roman dogmas, but a purely civil right exacted by Roman Catholics for the use of Roman Catholics. These have demanded and vindicated it as a political necessity of national existence."

☞ A letter from the Sandwich Islands alludes to the Rev A. Thurston, the veteran missionary at Kailua, who has labored faithfully at the same station for thirty-nine years, without having left the Islands once during that period. He is over 70 years old, but a hale, robust man, with flowing white hair, and venerable beard untouched by the razor.

☞ The first American woman who ever went ashore in Japan was Mrs Bailey, wife of Captain Bailey, of Philadelphia, master of ship Mary Ellis. She was surrounded and followed by a large crowd of Japanese, but all their movements were perfectly respectful.

☞ Hon. Horace Mann, President of Antioch College, died at Yellow Springs, Ohio, Tuesday, Aug 2nd. He was in his sixty-fourth year.

Notices, &c.

☞ Bro. Edwin Burnham will commence a protracted meeting in Woodstock, New Brunswick, on Friday evening, after the second Sunday in September, and from that time will labor one month in the Provinces, as the friends may arrange.

East Kingston Campmeeting.

Tickets to this meeting may be obtained on the Boston and Maine Road at half price, from Lawrence, or from Great Falls, or from way stations between Lawrence and Great Falls.

Tickets may also be obtained for half price at Concord, N. H., to Newmarket Junction, and from Portsmouth, N. H., to the Junction, and from Manchester, N. H., to Lawrence, Mass.

The camp ground is one mile from the East Kingston station. Carriages will be in attendance on the arrival of each train.

All interested are invited to attend.

J. V. Himes, Superintendent.

Boston, Aug. 16.

For farther notice, see Crisis of July 27th.

☞ Will Bro. A. N. Seymour favor me with his address, as also that of other ministers in this State? A. F. Servis.

Holly, Mich.

The Maine (Adjourned) Conference.

We were to give the notice of this conference after being informed as to time and place. We learn that it has been decided that it will commence Sept. 15th, but the place is not yet determined. I give this notice thus early, that other meetings in the State may not be appointed so as to conflict. We shall expect a large delegation at this meeting. The place will doubtless be given next week, with the particulars.

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Richmond, Me., Aug. 5, 1859.

Notice.

The next meeting of the Grand River Quarterly Conference will be held in Jamestown, Ottawa Co., Mich., in the Stiles school house, to begin Friday, Aug. 19th, and hold over Sunday. A general attendance of brethren and friends is solicited.

O. R. L. Crozier, Sec. of Conf.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Aug. 5, '59.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, on the same ground that was occupied last year for that purpose, commencing Sept. 5th and continuing one week. Particulars hereafter.

J. C. Healy,
Committee, E. Starks,
E. M'Culloch.

CAMPMEETING at Wilbraham, August 29th.

Our annual feast of tabernacles will commence the 29th of August, on the old ground in Wilbraham, and hold one week. We hope for the best, the most successful and profitable gathering of the Lord's people that has ever been held there. The objects of the meeting, and the wishes of the committee with reference to its character, have been fully and well expressed in Bro. E. Burnham's campmeeting letter of last week.

Let us all lay aside the weights—harness for the battle in the panoply of God, and come up to certain victory. Let us all pray much and come with the fire burning in our hearts, and Wilbraham mountain will never be forgotten.

Abundant facilities for boarding and horse keeping at reasonable rates. Also tent room for those who are not otherwise provided for.

The arrangements for fare to the campmeeting are from Worcester East and from Pittsfield and North Adams West to the camp-ground, at one-half fare or one fare for both ways. Also the same on the Connecticut R. R. Road from Vernon or Keene, N. H. The Western R. Road will issue tickets for the week, but those who come over the Conn. R. Road, will pay to Springfield, and from there to Wilbraham, and returning, will receive a pass from the Committee of the meeting. No charge for baggage from any point.

Let it be understood that full fare is paid one way from all points above named on the Western and Conn. R. Roads, and no charge for returning.

☞ The fare from Boston is reduced half,—the tickets being $2.50 for going and returning,—good from Aug. 29th to Sept. 5th, inclusive.

☞ Those going from Boston will obtain their tickets of Bro. Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street.

Hiram Munger,
Randl. E. Ladd, } Committee.
Geo. T. Adams.

Collinsville Campmeeting.

Providence permitting, this meeting will commence Aug. 22, and continue through the week, and over the Lord's day. It will be located about three miles below Collinsville, on land of Bro. Johnson, the same occupied by us last year. Provision will be made to accommodate all who may desire, with board and horse keeping, on reasonable terms. The cars will stop at the ground. Fare from Hartford, fifty cts. It is unnecessary to say any thing in commendation of our meeting last year to those who were present—it spoke for itself. We hope for a still better one this year. Come, brethren and sisters, let us rally once more for a glorious victory! We expect a goodly number of our able ministering brethren will be present to preach the word.

S. G. Mathewson,
E. B. Gilbert,
Saml. Johnson,
S. M. Tairo,
S. Pond,
W. H. Parmelee,
B. Riggs,
Committee of Arrangements.

Campmeeting.

The campmeeting advertised for Lynn will be held on the old spot in Harmony Grove, Westford, to commence on Tuesday, Sept. 6th, and continue over the Sabbath.

Tickets from Boston at half price, providing fifty are taken. Particulars hereafter.

M. W. Corliss,
L. Boutell.

Ohio Conference.

The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

Come, one and all, panoplied, not like the warriors of earth, with the weapons of destruction, but having on the entire christian armor, with hearts imbued richly with the spirit of prayer, love and faith, that we may yet, if needs be, a little longer wield the sword of the Spirit, which is mighty, even to the pulling down and destruction of all earthly and oppressive dominions. Let us come thus armed, dear brothers and sisters, and our meeting will be one of profit to us all, and God will be glorified.

G. W. Cherry,
E. R. Southwick, } Committee.
P. Alling.

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

P. S. Brethren from abroad coming to this Conference either by Railroad or otherwise, will call on Brother Patridge, where further provisions will be made for their entertainment.

E. R. Southwick.

☞ The next Quarterly Conference of Western Central Maine has been invited and will meet in South Livermore, Sept. 1st, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We hope all the ministers of the quarterly conference will be there, (and ministers from other parts of the State are cordially invited,) and as many brethren and sisters as can consistently come. Come with faith in God, ready to work in his cause for the salvation of souls. Call on Brn. Soper, Silas Timberlake, Addison Cambell, and Chs. Boothby, about one mile from North Turner Bridge. In behalf of the Conference,

I. C. Wellcome, Mod.
I. Wight, Sec.

☞ Elder E. Burnham is earnestly requested to visit South Berwick, Me., and preach the word of eternal life. Gideon Dox.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. Wm. G. Moncrieff will preach in Boston (Chapman Hall)........Sunday, Aug. 21st

Bro. Edwin Burnham will preach in Danielsonville, Conn., the second Sunday in Sept.

Eld. A. Ross appoints to preach in
Poultney, Vt.......................Aug. 21st
Low Hampton, N. Y......Aug. 16th, 17th and 18th
Rutland, Vt.......................Aug. 23d
South Woodstock, Vt..........Aug. 24th and 26th
North Springfield, Vt..........Sunday, Aug. 28th
South Vernon, Vt.......................Aug. 30th

Should any of these appointments conflict with previous arrangements, please inform me by letter at Poultney.

Eld. S. W. Bishop will preach in Sutton, N. H., (school house, near Harvey Wadleigh's).............Sunday, Aug. 21st

Bro. J. K. Bellows will preach in
Pine Swamp, Ct.......................Aug. 21st
Cheshire, Mass...............Aug. 23d and 24th
North Adams, Mass.......................Aug. 28th

I will preach, if the Lord will, at
Salem, Mass.......................Aug. 21st
Portland, Me.......................Aug. 28th
J. COUCH.

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in
Goshen, Mass..................Sunday, Sept. 4th
Will attend the campmeeting at Savoy the week following.

Eld. J. Turner will preach in Worcester, (Thomas St. chapel) Sunday, Aug. 21st

Eld. John Billings will preach in Worcester the last two Sundays in August.

Bro. Philo Hawks will preach in Springfield, (Music Hall) Aug. 21st.

Bro. W. S. Campbell will meet the church in Springfield, Aug. 28th. R. E. LADD.

The Lord willing, I shall preach in Stockbridge, Vt., first Sunday in Sept. O. D. GIBSON.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach at Plymouth Hollow, Conn..........Sunday, Aug. 21st

A subject of unusual interest and importance will be presented. Brethren from abroad are invited to come.

Conesus Centre..........Saturday eve., Aug. 20th
and over the following Lord's day.
MILES GRANT.

P. S. I purpose to be at the Collinsville and Wilbraham campmeetings. M. G.

Eld. White appoints to be with the friends in
Warehouse Point.......................Aug. 18th
Hartford, Ct.......................Aug. 19th
and remain over the 3d and 4th Sundays.

H. F. Carpenter appoints to preach in Bristol, Ct.......................Aug. 21st

T W Piper will preach in
West Ossipee.......................Aug. 21st
Madison.......................Sept. 4th
Sandwich.......................Sept. 11th

By invitation, the Lord willing, I will preach the gospel as follows:—
Cheshire.......................Aug. 21st
S. S. BREWER.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

I. C. Wellcome—Balance 44 cents.

M. S. Chambers.—Will send you the tracts in a few days.

Eld. J. Hemenway's P. O. address, is Worcester, Mass.

Eld. S. W. Bishop's P. O. address is Warner, Merrimack Co., N. H.

Cash Receipts.

Mrs. E Chapman 234, $2.52.

Mrs. M M Ross 221, W Stark 221, W Kingsbury 217—50 cts. each.

H H Stoddard 225, S Manson 230, D V Corey 230, A M Cole 215, C M Smith 232, J M Howard 252, D W Johnson, 260 L Tuttle 198, I Forshee 222, Mrs. S Jennings 230, W G Ocobock 224, F Bates, Jr., 234, R E Cole 254, J N Boxwell 230, C H Wyman 226, C H Thompson 234, R R Clark 208, C Butterfield 234, D H Warren 228, N Wheeler 228, Mrs. A S Kingsbury 230, A P Hyde 215, Mrs. Margaret Lewis 230, C Platten 230—$1.00 each.

S A Macomber 205, T A Roberts 227, A Boyden 252, C O Delano 212, L S Hussey 256, H G Smiley 260—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—M Russel $1.00, J. C. Mirick 5 cts, C. M. Smith 6 cts, W. A. Fenn 10 cts, Mrs. E Chapman 18 cts, L Tuttle 10 cts, V P Simmons $1.00, R C Cole $1.00, T C Taylor 36 cts, A W Sibley 33 cts, J G Bush 27 cts, M S Chambers $1.00.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruah and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 60 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus: does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred; Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 8 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 126 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co, Chicago.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts.; postage 9 cts. 1-4 off per dozen. Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.50.

Bible [illegible] $1 ct. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

Words of Warning. 5 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We [illegible] ments so that we can furnish them at lower or lower than they can be bought at any other [illegible].

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—8 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $2.00 per hundred; 3 cents single; postage 1 cent.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance, or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $6.00 per hundred, 8 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 16 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts, cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 1c.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 67 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price. 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the const of Man; by Landest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon.—6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them; Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 126 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by [illegible] Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three neat four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. Not one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, Wondrous Love, five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 5 [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms; or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, [illegible] as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $4.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be had of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. [illegible] Seventy street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, [illegible] Harp, by Elder Himes; [illegible] Children; Satanic Delusion; [illegible] Great Controversy.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 1206.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

[illegible] Pictures of Bible Scenes.—No. 7.

BY ORRIN F. ALLEN.

THE DEATH OF ADAM.

[illegible] western sky was sinking low
The [illegible] sun, begirt with crimson clouds,
That [illegible], left behind a shining path,
[illegible] with gold, and airy isles of light.
[illegible] the loving universe,
[illegible] tinged with day's departing beam;
In quiet beauty lay the distant hills,
The [illegible] old woods and meadows green, with streams
Of liquid silver gliding on between.
All quiet was the scene, and clothed upon
With much the love of primal Paradise.
Few sounds arose to mock the silence deep,
As gently on the hours of even stole,
Save soft, perchance, an evening vesper note,
The voice of zephyr, sighed; or went abroad,
Like chimes of silver bells, the murmur sweet
From far cascade, half hid among the groves.
Green arbors, flower-entwined, were there,
That formed a cool retreat, when beamed the sun
With noon-day heat, or where the wearied form
Might rest when came the hours of even on.

A little way from this, amid a grove
Of branching lindens, rose the snowy tents,
The early home of man. Amid this scene
Of earth's sweet prime, there daily went abroad
The world's first fathers, and the patriarchs,
Whose years by centuries, and not by tens,
Were numbered.
Generations long had come
And passed in their slow round of rolling years,
Since first the human pair had sought a home
Amid these fragrant shades. Here long they'd lived
And watched the growth of life, till round them now
Their children and their children's children thronged
In families and tribes, and they to climes
Afar had sent their swarming colonies,
Which marked the bounds of empires and of states,
That flourished long in sinful lust and pride,
Till rained the Deluge, blotting out their trace
Of primal grandeur.
Changes thus the scene;
When o'er the tented home of Adam falls
The rushing wing of Death's slaying angel.
A scene that draped that distant age with gloom,
And filled the hearts of men with boding fear.

The 'customed festal day had come and gone,
When men were wont to gather round the home
Where first were spent their dawning childhood years,
And to the throng had Adam told the tale
Of life in Paradise, its scenes of love,
His oft communings with the Holy One;
And then his sin, his loss of treasured joys,
His exile life amid the world's wild wreck
Of blighted bliss. Of this, and more he spake,
And o'er his sinful fall he wept, as weeps
The mother when she mourns her first born's death;
Then slowly raising towards the skies his hands,
He prayed for pardon, breathing for his sons
A father's benison.
Slowly on his couch
He sunk, while faded from his eye the light.
A pallor strange and new crept o'er his frame
That told of death. Pale gazed upon her lord
Our mother Eve, whose heart, yet warm with love,
Was wrung anew, because of blighting sin.
With terror knelt her sons and daughters there,
Around their aged father's couch of death;
For death to them was new, scarce known before.
Slow and slower throbs the pulse of Adam—
A shudder—pause—and all is o'er—is hushed
In death's cold, solemn stillness. Sad remained
That stricken group, like marble forms of grief
That may be gazed upon in halls of art.
Not long that awful pause, for soon loud rang
The cry of woe along that throng of tents,
Whose piercing note went up in agony
To listening ears in heaven.
Burial day
Opens on space, and slow the pageant moved
Towards the tomb assigned the patriarch.
Their sighs alone were anthems chanted there,
For they had learned not then the measured flow
Of grand and solemn music, save that which
The heart gives forth in its deep agony.
Amidst a spreading plain they buried him;
Adam their father, buried him; as when
He died, the sun was low along the hills.
Above his dust they reared a pile of stones,
Unhewn and rude, to mark the sacred spot
Where slept the world's first father.
Thus began
The monster grim, far back among the years,
When time was new, to thin the ranks of men
With poisoned shafts; and through the ages since
Hath sped his arrows thick on every hand,
Till earth is strewn with clay that once did bear
The human form; was clothed upon with all
The charms that waken love, or haughty mien
That genders fear.
Yet, shall this always be?
Shall always thus the work of death go on?
No! whispers faith; no! shouts the prophet bard;
No! rings a voice from ages yet to come;
For time shall be when death no more shall crush
The torn and bleeding heart of man with grief;
But life, unending life to him shall give,
Unmeasured sense of joy and love and bliss,
While countless years roll round their festal scenes.

For the Crisis.

Paraphrase on 1st Cor., Chap. 15th.

The following paraphrase has once appeared both in the Harbinger and Advent Herald, but many who have heard it read wish to see it in the Crisis. It was copied from an old book, March 17th, 1851, by Elder Geo. Dillabaugh, at Reach, C. W., who called it a "translation," but it is too rich and gorgeous for a literal translation for the poverty-stricken original. It is properly a paraphrase. But who is the author? Can any one tell us? Bro. D. said the book was very old and worn and the title-page gone. He also promised more extracts from it. Will he give them? This is very rich. It reads like a copious stream of light and glory. D. T. T.

PARAPHRASE.

1. I publish again the joyful news which I once proclaimed among you, my christian brethren, which you then received with transport, and in the firm belief of which you now continue.

2. By your reception of which you are put into a state of salvation, if you are tenacious of the animating doctrine I delivered [illegible] would [illegible]

3. Among the first and fundamental truths then which I published among you, and of which I was convinced myself upon the best evidence, were the following: That agreeable to the predictions of the prophets, the Messiah suffered death, to rescue us from our vices.

4. That his dead body was deposited in a tomb; and that he was on the third day raised from it, agreeably to the scriptural predictions;

5. That after his resurrection he was seen by Peter, then by the twelve apostles.

6. He next exhibited himself to above five hundred christians, who were all convened together in one assembly—the greater part of whom are still living, though some of them have paid the common debt of nature.

7. He then was seen by James: afterwards, by all the apostles,

8. And last of all, as to an untimely abortive birth, he exhibited himself to me.

9. For I rank myself as the very lowest of the apostles; and indeed deem myself unworthy of that honorable name, because I once persecuted the church of God.

10. But by the divine favor I am what I am—and his favor, by which I am so singularly distinguished, was not lavished on me in vain; for I have labored more indefatigably in propagating the christian religion than all the other apostles—but I check myself—not my industry—but the favor of God, which accompanied me.

11. But it is not material whether it is I or they who are the instruments—for these are the truths you embraced.

12. Now since we all unanimously agree in proclaiming to the world the resurrection of Christ, what foundation have certain persons among you for asserting, That the resurrection of dead persons is an absurd impossibility?

13. For if the resurrection of dead persons is a thing impossible, it will follow, that Christ was never raised from the grave;

14. Consequently, if Christ was never actually raised from the grave, our preaching the Christian religion is absurd, and your belief of it is absurd;

15. And the result is, that we all of us have been publicly attesting a pious falsehood, when in the most solemn manner we declare to the world, that the Deity raised Christ from the dead—a fact, however, which never happened, if it is true, that the resurrection of dead men is, in the nature of things, absolutely an absurd impossibility;

16. For if the resurrection of dead persons is an absurdity, it will follow that Christ was never raised at all;

17. Consequently, if the dead body of Christ was never actually re-animated, your belief of Christianity is absurd and fruitless, and the weight of all your former crimes again devolves upon you;

18. And it will follow also, that those Christians, who have died in the belief of their principles, are totally lost out of the creation.

19. If all the hopes christianity really taught us to entertain were circumscribed within the narrow circle of this vain life, we christians are the most wretched of all mankind!

20. But Christ was actually raised from the tomb, and is become the first fruits of a glorious harvest of the sleeping dead.

21. For since by one man death was introduced, by another man was introduced a resurrection from death.

22. For as by Adam all the human race was subjected to mortality: so by Christ Jesus shall all the pious dead be entitled to immortality.

23. But every one in this restitution in a regular gradation is raised—Christ was the first that rose from death to immortality; the next will be the virtuous christians, at his glorious advent:

24. Subsequent to this, will be the final dissolution of this globe—which event will take place, but not till after he hath surrendered up his kingdom to God, even the supreme Father, not till after he hath totally crushed and demolished every dominion, every opposing civil power and secular sovereignty;

25. For he must retain his kingdom, until he hath brought all his adversaries prostrate at his feet.

26. The last foe he shall dethrone and annihilate is death.

27. For God hath subjected all things to his control—but when the Diety declares that he hath subjected all things under him, it is self-evident, that he himself must be excepted, who primarily invested him with this sovereign authority.

28. But when all things shall have become the subjects of his universal dominion, then shall the Son himself be subjected to HIM who originally vested him with this universal authority—that the DEITY may be all in all.

29. Otherwise, if our sleeping dust is never to be re-animated, how forlorn must be their hope, who were baptized in the firm assurance of a glorious resurrection from the dead! and upon these principles, why are persons baptized at all into the belief of the future restoration of their dead bodies to a blessed immortality?

30. And upon this scheme, how absurd is it also for us to expose ourselves to imminent dangers every hour!

31. I solemnly declare, and can pledge all my glorious hopes in our Lord Jesus Christ upon the truth of my declaration, that I am daily in the jaws of death.

32. Since, humanly speaking, I fought with brute creatures at Ephesus; what distracted folly was I guilty of to encounter this danger, if immortality is a fable! Upon these principles let us traverse a circle of every sensual pleasure to-day, for to-morrow death will put a cruel period to all our joys.

33. But be ever cautious of being deceived by those erroneous principles.

34. Exercise a just and sober reflection, and fly these fatal errors—for some among you entertain very unworthy sentiments of God—I speak it to your shame.

35. But some will ask me, How are the dead raised? in what kind of vehicles are they invested?

36. You weak infatuated man! the seed you commit to the ground is not informed with vegetable life, except it die.

37. You bury in the ground the bare seed, for example, of wheat, or some other grain; but you do not sow it in the same form in which it doth afterwards appear;

38. The supreme Creator gives it the form he pleases—to every seed its proper distinguishing form.

39. This disparity also obtains in the flesh of different animals. That of the human species is of one kind; that of brutes, of another; that of birds, different from all.

40. There are likewise celestial and terrestrial bodies; but the respective glory of one and the other is totally different.

41. There is the same dissimilitude also in tht different splendor of the sun, of the moon, and of the stars—one star also differs from another in lustre.

42. Similar to this will be the resurrection of the pious dead—it is sown corruptible; it rises incorruptible.

43. It is committed to the ground in a state of horror; it rises in glorious splendor. It is sown in contemptible weakness; it rises in immortal vigor.

44. It is sown an animal system; it rises a spiritual system—there is an animal system, and there is a spiritual system.

45. This the scriptures assert—Adam, the first man, was endowed with animal life; the second Adam, with a life-giving spirit.

46. The spiritual, however, was not first in order, but the animal; which was succeeded by the spiritual.

49. The first man was formed from the earth, a composition of inert clay; the second man is an exalted Spirit from the celestial mansions.

48. As the first man was a composition of terrene particles, such is the terrene composition of his descendants; and as the second man was of celestial extraction, such is the celestial extraction of his descendants.

46. And just as we have worn in the present state the image of our clay-formed progenitor: so we shall in a future state wear the form of our celestial Redeemer.

50. This I assert, my christian brethren, that the present animal and corporeal system cannot inherit the future kingdom of God—nor is corruptible mortality fitted to be the heir of an incorruptible existence.

51. Behold! I now discover to you an unrevealed doctrine! We shall not pay the common debt of nature; but we shall by a soft transition be changed from mortality to immortality.

52. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the clangors of the last trumpet—for a trumpet will sound—the pious dead shall then be raised incorruptible, and the christians who are then living, shall, without suffering the pangs of death, be translated into immortality.

53. For this corruptible must then be clothed with incorruption; this mortal must then be invested with immortality.

54. And when this corruptible frame is clothed with an incorruptible vehicle, and this mortal is vested with immortality; then that passage of scripture will be verified: "The tyrant death is completely vanquished."

55. O death! where is now thy fatal sting? O grave! where is now thy victorious triumphs?

56. What arms death with its envenomed sting, is vice, and what furnishes vice with its destructive power, is the law.

57. But thanks be to God, who hath given us a complete victory over these cruel foes, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58. Having therefore, these prospects, my dear Christian brethren, do you ever adhere with firm and inflexible steadiness to your christian profession; and aim at continual improvements in it, from a full persuasion that your virtuous labors under the gospel dispensation will be finally recompensed with a glorious reward.

FACT IN ELOQUENCE.—The subject of the first article in the Atlantic Monthly for September is "Eloquence," which is treated with discriminating ability. It is urged that true eloquence must have a foundation and body. It "must be grounded on the plainest narrative. Afterwards, it may warm itself until it exhales symbols of every form and color, speaks only through the most poetic forms, but, first and last, it must still be a biblical statement of fact. The orator is thereby an orator, that he keeps his feet ever on a fact. Thus only is he invincible. No gifts, no graces, no power of wit, of learning or illustration will make any amends for want of this."

Com. for the Crisis.

An Extract.

Mr. Robinson's farewell Sermon to the Pilgrim Fathers on their starting for the New World, 1620.—Hist. of Massachusetts by G. S. Barry, pp. 76, 77.

"As the time drew near, a day of public humiliation was observed,—the last that the emigrants kept with their pastor,—and on this memorable occasion Mr. Robinson discoursed to them from the words of Ezra: —'And then, at the river, by Ahavah, I proclaimed a fast, that we might humble ourselves before God, and seek of Him a right way for us, and for our children, and for all of our substance.' The catholic advice of this excellent man was worthy to be addressed to the Founders of New England.

"'We are now, ere long, to part asunder; and the Lord only knoweth whether ever I shall live to see your face again. But, whether the Lord hath appointed this or not, I charge you, before God and his blessed angels, to follow me no further than I have followed Christ; and if God should reveal anything to you by another instrument of his, be as ready to receive as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry; and I am confident that the Lord hath more light and truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. For my part I cannot but bewail the condition of the Reformed churches, who have come to a period in religion, and will go no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans, for example, cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw; and whatever part of God's will he hath further imparted to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace; and so Calvinists stick where he left them. This is a misery much to be lamented; for though they were precious shining lights in their times, God hath not revealed his whole will to them; and were they now living, they would be as ready and willing to embrace further light, as that they did receive.

"'Remember, also, your church covenant, and especially that part of it whereby you promise and covenant with God and with one another, to receive whatever light or truth shall be made known to you from his written word. But take heed what you receive for truth, and examine, compare and weigh it well with the Scriptures. It is not possible that the christian world should come so lately out of such thick anti-christian darkness, and that full perfection of knowledge should break forth at once. Shake off, too, the name of Brownists, for it is but a nickname, and a brand to make religion odious, and the professors of it to the christian world And be ready to close with the godly party of the kingdom of England, and rather study union than disunion,—how near you may, without sin, close with them, than in the least manner to effect disunion or separation.'"

O. R. FASSETT.

For the Crisis.

About Fishing.

At a certain time, our Savior came across a company of fishermen, and requested them to follow him, telling them, he would make them "fishers of men." I suppose by his using the term fishers of men, he intended that we should act as judiciously while trying to catch men, as we would when trying to catch fish.

We should think him a very poor fisherman, who, when he comes to a large school of fish, should commence throwing clubs and brick-bats at them. We have known some boys, who, after they had caught all the fish they could coax to bite at the hook, to turn around and stone the rest. This does not look quite so bad. However, it is not a mark of wisdom, or prudence, for perhaps those same boys might chance to go fishing again at the same place.

I am inclined to think we had better follow the directions given by our Savior, i. e., to go "forth as sheep in the midst of wolves,"—not wolves amidst sheep—"wise as serpents, and harmless as doves,"—not vice versa. The proverb is—"a word unto the wise . . ."

J.

For the Crisis.

THE SABBATH.—"They ('beginning from Abraham and going back to the first man,') did not, therefore, regard circumcision, nor observe the Sabbath, neither do we abstain from certain foods, nor regard other injunctions which Moses subsequently delivered to be observed in types and symbols, because such things as these do not belong to christians." Eusebius' Eccl. Hist., b. 4, ch. 4.

The above is from Eusebius, the most ancient christian historian whose writings are extant. It was written probably less than three hundred years from the death of Christ, or some 250 years after the death of the last of the Apostles. It may assist some in their historical investigations of the Sabbath question. I make no comments upon it, but present it as a matter of history, from which each can draw their own inferences.

H. L. H.

☞ God always proceeds orderly; to every thing there is a season, and a time; he never sends an unseasonable trouble, nor an unsuitable mercy; trials and comforts are always well timed. Do you believe this?

☞ A judicious silence is always better than truth spoken without charity.

Selections.

Hymn.

My God, I love thee: not because
I hope for heaven thereby;
Not because they who love thee not
Must burn eternally.

Thou, Oh my Jesus, thou didst me
Upon the cross embrace;
For me didst bear the nails and spear,
And manifold disgrace;

And griefs and torments numberless,
And sweat of agony;
E'en death itself—and all for one
Who was thine enemy.

Then why, Oh blessed Jesus Christ!
Should I not love thee well?
Not for sake of winning heaven,
Or of escaping hell;

Not with the hope of gaining aught;
Not seeking a reward;
But as thyself hast loved me,
O ever-loving Lord—

E'en so I love thee, and will love,
And in thy praise will sing,
Solely because thou art my Lord,
And my eternal King.

—St. Francis Xavier.

Forty Thousand People at a Prayer Meeting.

The Edinburgh Witness gives the subjoined account of a very remarkable prayer meeting, probably the largest ever held since the dawn of the christian era:

"A great union prayer meeting, in connection with the present remarkable movement, was held in the open air in Belfast, Ireland, on Wednesday forenoon, at half past eleven o'clock. In order to accommodate all parties, the use of the spacious grounds of the Royal Botanic Gardens was obtained for holding the meeting; and as it was well known that many persons from the surrounding country were desirous to be present, special trains of uncommon length were run by the different railway companies. Some idea of the interest felt may be imagined when we state that it is computed that no fewer than fifteen thousand individuals arrived in Belfast, and that from thirty-five to forty thousand persons in all were present at the services.

The leading streets of the town presented, during midday, a most remarkable aspect, particularly after the arrival of trains. The footways were literally thronged with well dressed and respectable looking people from the country—not passing along with the negligence and easy going of pleasure-seeking excursionists, but staid and solemn in demeanor—the younger as well as the elder; and the majority with Bibles or hymn books in their hands, as if proceeding to Sabbath services. On they passed towards the place of meeting—passed the glittering rows of gorgeous shops, and through the fashionable thoroughfares. Thus the living stream—such a stream as was never before witnessed in Belfast—poured onwards for at least two hours, along both sides of the streets.

The scene in the garden grounds is said, by the Banner of Ulster, to have been one of the most striking, as well as impressive and animating, ever witnessed in the province. The whole space within view from any point was as closely packed as it was well possible for it to be. Even the branches of the trees were taken advantage of by numbers of the junior members of the audience, as the most suitable situations for seeing and hearing; and there, while the sounds of praise were rising from the multitude below, these young worshipers were heard joining in the song of thanksgiving. Nothing of holiday levity—nothing of the thoughtless mirth of youth, was manifest among these; their attention was as marked, and their conduct as well ordered, as that of any persons in the vast assemblage. Both as regarded its magnitude, and the deep solemnity and earnest spirit that pervaded it, the meeting is said to have recalled vividly the historic days and scenes of the singing of the 'Solemn League and Covenant.'

The Rev. John Johnson, of Tullilish, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian church, presided, and he was supported by the ministers of the different Protestant denominations in and around Belfast. After prayer, the chairman read a chapter from the Holy Scriptures, and then gave out the 100th Psalm; and never before in Belfast did so many voices unite in such hearty accord in singing this favorite song of Zion. Scarcely had the first note been raised on the platform, when it was caught up by the immense assemblage, the majority of the voices combining in surprising and unexpected harmony; and as each stanza closed, the dying away of the cadence in the far distance of the throng, had an effect at once solemn and thrilling. Short addresses were delivered by ministers and converts, and also by Mr. William Dickson of Edinburgh, and Mr. Peter Drummond of Sterling. Prayers were also offered up, and verses from hymns sung. As it was impossible for the speakers on the central platform to make themselves heard by the whole of the vast multitude, clergymen and others scattered themselves among them, each forming the centre of a large congregation, which immediately gathered around, joining in devotional exercises.

At one time there were no less than twenty of these subordinate meetings, numbering from five hundred to one thousand each. Every here and there, throughout the immense multitude, while the hymn or the prayer was arising on high, persons were being struck down under a sense of deep and overpowering conviction of sin. Inside of some of these circles there could not have been fewer than twenty persons —chiefly females—apparently under the influence of spiritual visitation at the same moment; and some of them prostrate upon the sward, and others reclining upon the laps of friends. These were affected in various ways—some weeping bitterly, but silently, under a deep conviction of sin; some crying piteously for mercy; and others unable to utter a word, so thoroughly were their physical faculties in abeyance.

In many parts of the garden groups of boys and girls, who had retired from the body of the congregation, formed in the shrubbery little meetings for prayer and exhortation among themselves. Some of these were ragged little boys, who had evidently belonged to the outcast classes. One of these cases was that of a little boy, about eleven years old, who, in a very retired part of the garden, engaged in prayer, surrounded by about twenty lads of the same age and class. This lad was, it appears, neglected by his parents, and formerly obtained a scanty livelihood by hawking ballads through the streets; and the tattered garments in which he as well as his companions were arrayed on Wednesday, showed that, in that respect, their prospects in life had not much improved.

At the close of the general meeting, one of the ministers of the town, who has moved a great deal among the juvenile population, was surrounded by a large assembly of boys, who ultimately formed themselves into a procession, and marched into town, singing

'O, that will be joyful!'

Many of these children evidently belonged to the lowest classes of society. A portion of the procession, which divided from the rest, on arriving at the Pound district, ceased to sing till they had passed its dangerous precincts, and resumed their song when they passed into Townshend street. The immense concourse of people left the gardens in the most orderly manner—the majority of them evidently impressed with the conviction that it was 'good for them to have been there.' A few manufactories and other places of business were closed for the day, in order to allow the workers to join in the above services."

Ministers' Wives.

In a late number of the Recorder was an article purporting to be from a minister's wife, and though not the "cousin" addressed, I beg leave to make a brief reply.

I have been a minister's wife more than thirty years, have had a large family, a great deal of company, have often been behindhand and straightened in pecuniary matters, have had sickness, many days of continued calls, have been worried more by other people's troubles than my own; and yet we often say that few families have been happier than ours, and when we attempt to count up our blessings, "they are more than can be numbered;" and one of our greatest blessings has been, that we have had so much to do. It is true we looked upon the duties of a minister's wife somewhat differently from what the writer of that article did, otherwise we might have felt as she did.

When my husband proposed that I should become his wife, he frankly stated that he expected his life to be one of arduous toil in the service of his Lord, and that he needed some one to help him in that work; and the opening of a field of usefulness in the Church of Christ was certainly one of the motives which influenced my decision. To aid a pastor in his Christ-like work in visiting the sick and afflicted, soothing the sorrows of the widow and orphan, and giving encouragement to the various plans of benevolence, always seemed to me one of the highest and holiest privileges conferred on woman; and that opinion has gained strength by experience.

Let me say that every duty brings its own reward. If ever I have known true happiness, it has been in comforting the stricken heart. I have gone to the abode of sorrow, tried and hurried by home duties, but how satisfied have I been on my return. The expressions I had heard of love and gratitude made me understand the words,

She that hath soothed the widow's woe,
Or wiped an orphan's tear, doth know
There's something here of Heaven.

Then, while watching over the children in the parish, giving a smile here, and a word there, encouraging the Sabbath school teachers, and the mothers in the Maternal Association, the minister's wife will find that in watering others, her own soul is refreshed.

There are, to be sure, days of care and depression, when the body and mind are worn, but where is the wife, mother and housekeeper, who has them not? There is with the pastor, "a sowing in tears," if he feels his responsibility as he ought, but there is, too, a "reaping with joy." When one and another, for whom he has labored and prayed, is converted, admitted to the church, and grows strong in christian duty, there is a joy in sympathy with the angels in heaven. This is not fancy, but a blessed reality, and there are scenes for both the pastor and his wife in view of which there will be joy more elevated and satisfying than earth can give.

It is not necessary for the pastor's wife to give all her time to the parish, neither is it necessary or wise to devote all to her family. The heart enlarges, and the ability increases, by attending to a variety of duties. The exercise of benevolent feeling is healthful for body, mind and heart, and I believe there is more love and true happiness in a family where they are doing good to others, than where they make their own happiness the main object. Then the Lord is a bountiful pay-master, and if we work for him, he will overrule our own affairs for good. Sympathy is worth a great deal in this cold world, and even if the wife of a pastor cannot do a great deal, her interests in others, her approbation, her encouragement, will warm her own heart, and greatly augment her husband's usefulness. Let not a christian woman fear to enter upon the duties of a pastor's wife, for if she is faithful, according to her ability, she will receive a large reward.—Boston Recorder.

Reading for Youth.

The Singing Student.

Many years ago a student boy was seen and heard in the streets of an ancient town singing. He was a stout, plainly dressed boy, but his face was pale, and his eyes were sad and tearful. His voice was most musical, and the songs he sang were in beautiful words, and about sacred things. Every time he finished a song, he stepped to a house, and gave a gentle tap. When it was opened, he said in gentle tones:

"Please give a poor student boy a morsel of bread."

"Begone with thee! thou beggar's child," was the rough reply that met his ear, as the poor child shrank from the steps.

Thus driven from door to door, he sang his sweet songs until his body was weary and his heart sad. Scarcely able to stand, he at last turned his steps homeward. Striking his noble forehead with his hand, he said:

"I must go home to my father's house, and be content to live by the sweat of my brow." Providence has no loftier destiny for me. I have trodden out its path by aiming higher."

Just at that moment Ursula Cotta, a burgher's wife, who had heard his songs and seen him driven from a neighbor's door, felt her heart yearn with pity towards the helpless boy. She opened the door, smiled sweetly upon him, and in tones that sounded like heavenly melodies to his ears, said:

"Come in, poor boy, and refresh yourself at my table!"

Happy little singer! How he enjoyed that delicious meal. And when the good dame and her husband told him to make their house his home, his heart melted. With eyes half blinded with tears, he looked in the face of his friend, and said:

"I shall now pursue my studies without being obliged to beg my bread from grudging hands. I shall have you, sir, for a father, and your sweet Ursula for a mother. My heart will once more learn to love. I shall be happier than I can express."

After that day the singing boy studied hard and well. Years afterwards the world heard of him, for it was he who uttered his voice against Popery, and became the chief of that Reformation which gave an open Bible to the world. His name was Martin Luther.—Ex.

A Dog Story.

My oldest son was crossing the fields in the country, some distance from any dwelling, when he was pursued by a large and fierce dog belonging to the gentleman whose land he was crossing. The lad was alarmed and ran for his life. He struck into a piece of woods, and the dog gained upon him, when he looked around to see how near the creature was, and stumbling over a stone, he pitched off a precipice and broke his leg. Unable to move, and at the mercy of the beast, the poor fellow saw the dog coming down upon him, and expected to be seized and torn; when, to his surprise, the dog came near, perceived the boy was hurt, instantly wheeled about, and went off for that aid which he could not render himself. There was no one within the reach of the child's voice, and he must have perished there, or have dragged his broken limb along, and destroyed it so as to render amputation necessary, if the dog did not bring him help. He held up his leg, and it hung at a right angle, showing him plainly the nature of his misfortune, and the necessity of lying still. The dog went off to the nearest house and barked for help. Unable to arrest attention, he made another visit of sympathy to the boy, and then ran to the house, there making such demonstrations of anxiety, that the family followed him to the place where the child lay. Now observe that this dog was pursuing this boy as an enemy; but the moment he saw his enemy prostrate and in distress, his rage was turned to pity, and he flew to his relief. Here was true feeling, and the course he pursued showed good judgment. Here was a dog of heart and head.

Very few men, not all christians, help their enemies when they are down. Some do not help their friends when they fall. This dog was better than many men who claim to be good men. I do not say that he reasoned in this matter, but there is something in his conduct on this occasion that looks so much like the right kind of feeling and action, that I think it deserves to be recorded to his credit. As few dogs will read the record, I commend the example to all mankind for their imitation.—Lutheran Mag.

Good Manners.

"Will you have this seat, sir, I prefer to stand," said a fine little boy, sitting in a pew, when the church was crowded, to an old gentleman standing in the aisle.

"Thank you, my little man," said the gentleman, smiling very gratefully upon the little fellow, "and you shall sit upon my knee, if you please."

When the service closed, the gentleman inquired of him his name, and asked him, "Why did you give up your good seat?"

"Mother teaches me," said he, "never to sit when an older person is standing."

Be Kind to your Father.

Are you, young friends, kind to your father? Do you do every thing to please him? Do you run to obey him the very moment he speaks? Do you?

Be kind to thy father; for when thou wast young,
Who loved thee so fondly as he?
He caught the first accents that fell from thy tongue,
And joined in thy innocent glee.
Be kind to thy father; for now he is old,
His locks intermingled with gray,
His footsteps are feeble—once fearless and bold:
Thy father is passing away.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..............1.00
For a single copy 3 months...............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months.. 15.90
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months.22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Bro., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, who sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any town in Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States. [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 207. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1859. VOL. IX. NO. 26.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Time is Passing.

Time onward glides, nor waits for man,
Whose fleeting day is but a span;
Its march is onward night and day,
Nor lingers it for man's delay.

Each hour, and day, and month, and year,
In quick succession disappear;
The sands of life are soon run out—
They linger not for man to doubt.

Our friends are laid in death's dark shades,
While anguish keen our hearts pervades;
But time heeds not our groans and cries,—
It onward, unabated, flies.

It hurries nations to the grave,
The rich, the poor, the stout, the brave,
The infant child and man of years,
While earth is drenched with burning tears.

Time flies to reach eternity:
Then saints shall be from death set free—
Then sorrow shall forever end,
And peace through all the earth extend.

W. SHELDON.

Castle Rock, Minnesota.

For the Crisis.

Effective Faith in the Word and Power of God.

"By faith, Noah, being warned of God of all things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." For "Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth. And behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and everything that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant; and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee. Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him, so did he." But doubtless Noah's kindred and acquaintance, far and near, condemned his course; and he was probably branded as a deceiver, treated with contempt, and looked upon as an outcast by the world. Yet "Noah was a just man and perfect (margin, upright) in his generations, and Noah walked with God;" for he had faith in God's word.

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: And I will make of thee a great nation, and will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed. So Abram departed as the Lord had spoken unto him." Why was it needful that Abram, who was the father of the faithful, should leave his country and kindred, and father's house, and go to a land that he knew not of? Doubtless it was because they all condemned his course, for he would not bow to idols, but would serve the true and living God.—"And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness."

"By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." "There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil." Yet Job must be stripped of his substance, deprived of his children, and sorely diseased from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot; yet he held fast his integrity and sinned not with his lips. But his course was condemned by all who knew him; so that he exclaims with bitter lamentations, "He hath put my brethren far from me, and my acquaintance are verily estranged from me. My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me. They that dwelt in mine house, and my maids, count me for a stranger: I am an alien in their sight. I called my servant, and he gave me no answer; I entreated him with my mouth. My breath is strange to my wife, though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body. Yea, young (margin, the wicked) children despised me; I arose, and they spake against me. All my inward friends (margin, the men of my secret) abhorred me: and they whom I loved turned against me." And in addition to all this, his three professed godly friends assemble themselves together with him, and taunt him with many hard speeches, condemning his course as wrong before God, and in the sight of men; intimating that his sufferings are a just chastisement for his ungodly conduct among men. And beside these, there was a young man, Elihu by name, a man of some literary talent; whose wrath was kindled against Job because he justified himself; and said, "Great men are not always wise; neither do the aged understand judgment. Therefore I said, Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion." And Elihu also, sharply reproved, condemned, and passed sentence upon Job, the man of Uz. But notwithstanding all this, Job held fast his integrity and sinned not, nor charged God with folly; and refused to conform to, or be reconciled with, those friends until they had humbled themselves before God, brought forth fruits meet for repentance, and besought Job to make intercession to God in their behalf. Though Job was condemned by man; yet God accepted and blessed him more abundantly.

David, the man whom God had chosen for his servant, the man who was after God's own heart, was frequently driven into the most straitened circumstances through the wickedness of men, and surrounded with a multitude of enemies on every hand; yet he trusted in the Lord as his ready help and mighty deliverer out of all his distresses. Listen to his expressions of confidence in God, Ps. 118: 5–18: "I called upon the Lord in my distress; the Lord answered me, and set me in a large place. The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me? The Lord taketh my part with them that help me; therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes. All the nations compassed me about; but in the name of the Lord will I destroy them. They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about; but in the name of the Lord I will destroy them. They compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns; for in the name of the Lord I will destroy them. Thou hast thrust sore at me that I might fall; but the Lord helped me. The Lord is my strength and song and is become my salvation. The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous; the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly. The right hand of the Lord is exalted; the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly. I shall not die but live and declare the works of the Lord. The Lord hath chastened me sore; but he hath not given me over unto death." And in respect to the future he said; "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness."

The Prophet Jeremiah, though he unflinchingly continued to deliver the message of God to the people as it had been revealed to him, without the least shadow of deviation from the truth, was surrounded with enemies on every side, both civil and ecclesiastic, who assiduously sought his downfall, and mutually planned his destruction from among the people, because he had exposed their sin before God, and urged upon them a turning unto the Lord with humble contrition, and full purpose of heart. But while Jeremiah knew their wicked device against him, he trusted in the Lord to deliver him out of their hand. Read his expression of confidence in God, as expressed in chap. 20: 10–13. What special word of promise was it that sustained Jeremiah in the time of his trials? It was that promise which the Lord made, when he gave him his commission. Chap. 1: 17–19—"Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee." And the prophet was for a time delivered into their hands; and was thrust into prison, put in a dungeon and cast into the miry pit; yet he was delivered out of their hand, and saw the judgment of God executed upon those who were his enemies and persecutors.

What a spirit of bitter hatred and revengeful jealousy was raised up, and practised against the three worthy Hebrew captives, in the Babylonish captivity, whose names were Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, when their enemies sought to destroy them by casting them into the fiery furnace. And how fearlessly did they trust in God in that trying moment. See what courage they manifested when they were brought before the king to receive their sentence. Then they "answered and said to the king, oh Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, oh king. But if not, be it known unto thee, oh king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." So the sentence was executed upon them; and these servants of the Most High were cast into the burning fiery furnace. But, according to their faith, God delivered them from the power of the fire. "Then Nebuchadnezzar came near the mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, ye servants of the Most High God, come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, came forth in the midst of the fire. And the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw these men, upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them." Thus was the God of heaven honored before the king and all the people; and these servants of God were promoted in the province of Babylon. O that there were more men of like precious faith, in these last days of perilous times!

Daniel, the man who was greatly beloved, whose prayers came up with much acceptance before God; and to whom the angel Gabriel who stands in the presence of God, was sent to give him skill and understanding; even this Daniel must have his bitter enemies, who would seek his life to take it, because an excellent spirit was in him, and he had obtained favor of the king. Therefore those wicked men sought and obtained a decree, that "every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save of king Darius, shall be cast into the den of lions. Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime;" still trusting in God to deliver him. Then these men assembled, and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God. "Then answered they and said before the king, That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee oh king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day." Though the king was sore displeased with himself because of the decree, and set his heart on Daniel, and labored hard to deliver him; yet those enemies of righteousness, being moved with an angry spirit of jealousy, pressed the point, that the penalty of the decree should be executed upon the man of God to the extent of the law; that they might make sure of his life. And they brought Daniel and cast him into the den of lions. "Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee."

How calmly composed did this confiding servant of God approach this trying test; and how unflinchingly did he submit to the rigor of the law, not seeking in anywise to deliver himself from its penalty; but trusting with unshaken confidence in the faithfulness, and power of his God to protect him; when without assistance, he was like a lamb thrown into the den of lions to pass the night, or to be devoured at their will. And in the morning "the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? Then said Daniel, My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, and they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocence was found in me; and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt." "So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God." Truly God hath "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

In the land of Judea, Jesus of Nazareth, who also is the Son of God, began to preach, and to say, repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And he went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people. And the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light sprung up. And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and they which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatics, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses. He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. But when he showed the people their sins, and taught them the way of eternal life; and did many mighty works before them, giving proof that he is the Son of God: the chief priests, and rulers, and scribes condemn his course, saying, He hath a devil, and is mad; why hear ye him? Yea, and the devils themselves condemned his course, saying; Why dost thou come to torment us before the time? But his unwavering confidence in the faithfulness and Almighty power of his Father in heaven, enabled him patiently to endure the scoffs of those he sought to bless; and willingly to become the man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; that he might finish the work which his Father gave him to do. "And when the hour had come that he was to be betrayed into the hands of his enemies, he began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, my soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me."

O, how painful, how heart-rending the thought! that one professing to be his special friend; one who had received nought at his hand but blessings, and had oft been refreshed at his table, and bountifully shared of his stores: should so soon, for a paltry pittance of filthy lucre, and the favor of a corrupted priesthood, coolly and deliberately deliver his best friend into the hands of his enemies, to be exposed to shame and contempt, and to suffer a cruel death upon the cross; and as far as he could lend a hand to destroy his saving influence forever: and all this under the garb of godliness and professed friendship; giving a kiss at the last moment as a token of never-failing love. O the blackness of a treacherous, deceitful, double-minded, hypocritical man! From such may the Lord deliver us.

When Pilate the governor would set him at liberty, "for he knew that for envy they had delivered him;" the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, a murderer, and destroy Jesus, the just One. So they all say unto him, "Let him be crucified: Let him be crucified. His blood be on us, and on our children. And when he was nailed to the cross: they reviled him, wagging their heads, saying, He saved others, himself he cannot save." But he still trusted in his God and Father, and confidingly said, Father, into thy hand I commend my spirit: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. But God raised him from the dead, and glorified him with himself.

May the Lord grant that I may ever be able to follow these examples of effective faith in the word and power of God. Amen.

G. BANGS.

Danville, C. E.

For the Crisis.

The Stock overpowering the Graft.

Mr. Thomas C. Wood, of Winthrop, related to us the other day a singular instance of the stock of an apple tree overpowering a graft so much as to reproduce the former kind of fruit. The circumstances are these. A lower limb of a thrifty apple tree, in his father's orchard, was grafted with a Greening scion. It was the only limb in the tree that was grafted. In due time, it bore the usual quantity of Greening apples, say about a peck in a year. In a few years it was perceived that the qualities of these apples were changing, and in a few years more, they became exactly like those produced by the rest of the tree. The cause is probably this. The tree being vigorous—the limb grafted a lower one, and the only one of the kind, became overgrown by the stock. The new wood, deposited the year after, partaking of the quality of the original stock, began to grow up over the graft, and finally sheathed it completely, and was, in fact, the bearing part of the limb, while the Greening became a prisoner for life, shut up in the interior, and could take no part nor lot in the matter of producing fruit.—Farmer.

While reading the above, I asked myself the solemn question, can the ingrafted word, which is able to save our souls, be overcome in the same way? Says Jesus, "Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit." How shall we make the tree good, but by ingrafting with the Spirit of God? and the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: Now should this precious graft be overcome by the natural stock, so that it has no part nor lot in the matter of bearing fruit, how is it made better by grafting? Is it not the same corrupt tree, bearing the same evil fruit? Dearly beloved, shall we not destroy all the natural branches, that the graft may grow and bear fruit? Shall we not purge out the old leaven of malice and wickedness, remembering that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? M.

A Prayer for the Million.

BY DR. J. R. ORTON.

God of the mountain, God of the storm,
God of the flowers, God of the worm!
Hear us and bless us,
Forgive us, redress us!
Breathe on our spirits thy love and thy healing,
Teach us content with thy fatherly dealing—
Teach us to love thee,
To love one another, brother his brother,
And make us all free—
Free from the shackles of ancient tradition,
Free from the censure of man for his neighbor;
Help us each one to fulfill his true mission,
And show us 'tis manly, 'tis Godlike to labor!

God of the darkness, God of the sun,
God of the beautiful, God of each one!
Clothe us and feed us,
Illume us and lead us!
Show us that avarice holds us in thrall—
That the land is all thine, and thou givest to all.
Scatter our blindness;
Help us do right, all the day and the night—
To love mercy and kindness;
Aid us to conquer mistakes of the past;
Show us our future, to cheer us and arm us,
The upper, the better, the mansions thou hast;
And, God of the gravel that the grave can not harm us.

—Ia.

For the Crisis.

Spiritualism.

This delusion is accomplishing its work. Men ridicule religion, and argue against it on account of some persons being made insane thereby, and other arguments of various sorts are used in the crusade. Now if they really feel regret for evil alone, how is it they overlook so easily that caused by Spiritualism? Many otherwise happy families have been broken up by this Satanic influence, and it is no use for all the Spiritualists on earth to deny it. It is true, and everybody knows it, and so do they. This monster is an insidious foe—that fascinates its devotees, as the serpent does the fluttering bird preparatory to swallowing its victim. They may talk of "progress," till their tongues wear out, but it is only "talk." Their progress is like that of the horse on the treadmill, ever progressing, but never gaining one inch of ground. It is like to a man traveling on a journey, who in advancing two steps slipped back three—a progress backwards, that ends at a different terminus from what they calculate to reach. The goal is perdition.

What can apologists for this "jack o' lantern," say for such things as the following?

In the Supreme Court, New York, Wm. B. Coan obtained a divorce from his wife Ada L. Coan, on the ground of adultery, no answer or refutation being put in by the woman, who is well known as a trance-speaking and ballot-test medium of eminence in the spiritual world.

DISSOLUTION.—Two married couples in this city have recently dissolved co-partnership. Spiritual dissipation is the cause assigned. One couple had hardly passed the honeymoon before they became twain; the other had a family of young children. It is difficult enough to maintain harmony in a family where woman's rights have made such progress that the wife claims equal power in the domestic government, when people manage affairs by their own reason; and how much worse must it be when they put themselves under the guidance of vagrant spirits that come from unknown regions, whence nobody can tell, rapping and whispering in the ears of weak-minded women and base men all kinds of devilry?—Newburyport Herald.

If the following be true, no wonder some people are carried away by the delusion:

ANGELS DAGUERREOTYPED.—The Spiritual Telegraph contains the statement of a correspondent to the effect that on a recent occasion an artist was employed to take a daguerreotype of a corpse, which, for the purpose, was seated in a chair. The plate, on examination, was found to contain, not only the picture of the deceased, but to the astonishment of all, two other figures, a male and female, standing beside the corpse. The spiritual phase is, that two spirits standing beside the corpse were reflected, etc.

Some of the great D. D.'s speak against the "dangerous heresy" of "Millerism," and are very severe in denunciation of the truths of "unconsciousness in death" and "destruction of the wicked," and have no whisper against the hydra-headed monster,—the hundred-legged reptile of Spiritualism, that is kidnapping and devouring the members of their flock. And why? Because, may be, some "rich"—"influential" member thereof might take offence. Shame on such cowardice! How "rich" are these poor souls in faith of God? How "influential" at the mercy seat through the Savior's name? This is all the "riches" and "influence" available in the market of Jehovah.

The late Convention at Plymouth adopted a declaration of their principles, one of which repudiated the doctrine of "Free-love." Now, other bodies of Spiritualists approve, advocate, yes, and practice it. Now is it not a "hydra-headed monster"? One head speaks one thing, another opposes it. Is it not a "centipedes—" a hundred-legged reptile? See how it has crept into the "upper circles of society" in England. There is not a village, hardly neighborhood, where it has been named, that has not its believers in the doctrine. And it is, as I heard a Spiritualist remark, "working its way into society, as the auger enters the wood; slowly, perhaps, but surely." True; and who turns the auger? That is the question. Who do you suppose, reader? He is a skillful workman; has had about six thousand years practice at his work, and is perfect master of his trade; he began to work here when he persuaded Eve in the garden of Eden to take the forbidden fruit, and has been in constant practice of just such business down to to-day, when he works so hard at turning the "auger" of Spiritualism into every rank of society. If you think he is a fool, you are mistaken; he is much more dangerous than a fool, and can only be fought and overcome in one way, which is laid down in the "rules and regulations," that you shall do well to follow, found in the Book of books.

Probably most who may read the above, entertain views of it similar to myself; but perhaps this may catch the eye of some one in a chance manner, who may be favorable to Spiritualism; and if so, my friend, I pray you to reflect on your position and see if it is a safe one; and I would advise you to obey the Savior, for "there is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved."

"Fly for succor to his breast,
And he'll conduct you home."

J. N. BERRY.

Dorchester, Mass.

From "The Gift of Power."

Tendencies of the Times.

BY REV. S. H. PLATT.

There is a God in the fleeting events of the present, as well as the recorded results of the past. To learn to read his will, as written out in the characters of passing facts, is to gain possession of a running commentary upon revelation, and find duty defined and responsibility graduated upon the scale of surrounding circumstances.

What, then, are those significant circumstances of the present, which write out upon the wall of existence the great purposes of the Divine Mind?

The first leading fact that we shall notice is: 1st. The restlessness and intense activity of the times.

The day of the world's quiescence has passed away. Everything is in motion. A feverish restlessness seems to possess all classes. The peasant in his cottage, and the banker in his palace; the merchant in his counting-room, and the lawyer at the bar; the doctor in his office, and the minister in his study, all feel the excitements of the age, and all engage in the grand headlong scramble. All is bustle, confusion, strife. Woe to the lazy man! The din of Babel is in his ears; the rush of manifold activities sweeps by him; the clatter of unceasing progress confuses him.

Life is all astir. Cities spring up in a generation—towns and villages in a year—states and territories, almost before the surveyor can map them out. The quiet waters, which have only known the bark canoe, surge to the splashing of the steam paddle; the vast prairie echoes the rumble of the lightning train; the grim old forest groans out a gloomy response to the ceaseless rattle of the steam lumber mill; and the gigantic mountain frowns, as the adventurous miner digs for his precious ores.

But scarcely has the steamboat passed, before an "opposition line" is on the chase; scarcely has the train thundered by, before an engineering party passes to stake out a better route; scarcely has the saw mill begun to play before another springs to the competition task; scarcely does the miner strike his pick, before another digs his trench. Like the ocean billow, we are ever moving, and like that billow lashed by the tempest's fury, we rush, we roll, we sink, we rise, we dash, we are hurled, we know not where, we scarce know how.

Fiery, impetuous, headlong, reckless is the spirit of the age. The press groans beneath its burden day and night. The telegraph ceaselessly flashes our restless thoughts. The [illegible] power, and lightning power are the fitting emblems of the day. Thirty miles an hour for our merchandise is too slow, and we must have an air telegraph to express our goods from New York to Boston in fifteen minutes. Eleven days is too long a time to spend upon the ocean waste, and we must harness the lightning, and bid it plunge us through from Europe to America in two!

Texas and California in six years are too slow accessions to republican rule, and Central America must be taught to march to the tune of "Hail Columbia" too. The boy is a man before he leaves his "teens," the girl a lady ere she doffs her pinafore. We give ourselves no time to rest, and are proverbially lank, because we have no chance to accumulate.

The Church feels the influence, and grows restless too. Old forms must be banished!

Time-honored customs become obsolete, and progress is the watchword of every innovation. Ministries long settled have become itinerant! The Watchman and Reflector, in 1853, states that out of 190 Baptist pastors in Massachusetts during the four years ending April 1st, 1852, 170 changed places and 6 died, leaving but 14 stationary. For the same period, 61 out of 71 Baptist pastors in New Hampshire changed places and 3 died, leaving 7 stationary. Connecticut, Maine, and Rhode Island, it is believed, would present a similar table of facts.

The same fact has been remarked of other denominations in nearly all parts of the land. It is an evidence of the restlessness of the age. The danger lies in the extreme! It may lead to a temerity little short of madness in the cherished plans it has devised or endorsed. It may lead to a tampering with institutions which ought to be touched with reverence, if at all, by the hand of change. With such a spirit of commotion abroad, we need to look well to our anchorage, that it be secure.

• • • • • • •

3d. Its Recklessness and Worldliness.

Drive ahead, and never mind the consequences if an "almighty dollar" is to be gained.

Put on the steam, over open drawbridges, out of time, wrong end foremost, any way, only get through as soon as possible! Never mind the whistle, let the bell rest, throw in the fuel, drive on, drive on, through fog and mist, and ice, over broken rails, and through dangerous passes—never mind, some have gone safely, and perhaps we may; never mind, we say, put on the steam! 30, 40, 50 miles per hour. Here we go, hurrah! we'll be in time, and so goes the world!

To-day we have a grand smash up of the cars, echoed by some steamboat explosion or collision: they thrill a moment through the heart and the cheek pales, but another glance of that dollar, and away we go again, crying with all our might, more steam, more steam!

Which boat is fastest? not Which is safest? is the general inquiry. Thus we live and thus we speculate. Now in stocks, then in lands; now in physics, then in theology. Anybody is fit for anything. The salve and essence peddler makes a doctor, the gassy pettifogger makes a lawyer, the windy moralist a minister, and so we thrive!

Anybody starts a system, anybody writes a book. Anybody makes a panacea, anybody discovers a specific, either for the soul or body! Fast horses, fast boys, fast men, fast life, more steam—AND MORE STEAM—till the velocity of our life hurls us into untimely graves.

An insane worldliness seems to be the ruling spirit of the age! It stalks everywhere.

The lecturer lectures for money.
The professional man practices for money.
The teacher teaches for money.
The tradesman trades for money.
The laborer toils for money.
The politician lays his coils for money, or its equivalent, worldly honor.
The medium raps for money; and I fear, too, many preachers preach for money.

Money—MONEY—MONEY is the cry that wastes not, tires not, [illegible] eats out the piety of the church, swallows up the immortal hopes of the world, and throws the reins of an unbridled depravity into the hands of the god of this world!

If there is a dragon that needs to be chained by the angel from heaven, and cast into the bottomless pit, it is this same [illegible] one.

[illegible] The name of Bomba, by which the late king of Naples was commonly known, was given to him [illegible] throwing bombs into the [illegible] sake of destroying his subjects [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

BOSTON, AUGUST 24, 1859. WHOLE NO. 207.

Correspondence.

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

Bro. Grant:—By the assistance of our Heavenly Father we were enabled to reach our appointment at Orrington, July 17, where we found a house full of brethren and old acquaintance awaiting us. Truly we were thankful to God for the privilege after ten years absence, of standing again on the banks of old Penobscot river, to testify to the things that we believe must shortly come to pass. This has ever been a place to proclaim the truths connected with the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, since the fall of '42; and many of our ablest ministers have stood here and preached the coming kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. These are worthy of the name, dearly beloved brethren, for they have suffered for the bold stand they have taken to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. We have reason to believe that the church here have suffered more or less for want of good gospel order. This we believe ought to have been attended to in early time, by making choice of suitable deacons and Elders, together with steady preaching and the administering of the sacrament of our Lord's broken body and spilt blood, to the weak and trembling who are waiting for redemption. No one can tell how the church will prosper when she respects and properly attends to all God's commandments.

July 24th, we met with the church in Holden. This place is situated on the river, a little above the head of navigation. A very wholesome state of things prevails here, and has for years. Our stay was short with them, as we had a borrowed horse and carriage for a given time. The congregation was large for the place, and we enjoyed a very interesting meeting with them.

In Bangor we had no meeting. Visited some, and found the church, once united and prospering, all broken up and scattered. We visited Elder Damman at his new home in Sangerville. We found him on a farm trying to provide for himself and family. He preaches on Sunday, when he is not overcome with hard labors. We enjoyed much with his happy family, mingling our prayers, tears, and songs together. When we left we could but say, if some of the cattle and money was ours, how freely it would go to liberate such as have the word shut up like fire in their bones. We trust the brethren in Maine will see to that thing.

July 31st. At North Hermon. Here was a crowded house. Brethren came from Bangor, Holden and Orrington, to meet with us for the last time on the Penobscot. Elders Damman and Morrill were on the spot. After preaching the word with much freedom, we listened to some exhortations from the brethren. Closed up our meeting, shook hands, doubtless for the last time, saw the falling tear, and bade farewell until we meet on Canaan's peaceful shore! A word before we pass. We sincerely hope that every child of God in North Hermon will get together with Elder Damman, and set in order in the church the things that are wanting.

On our way down the river we put up with Bro. Walter Nichols. Also saw Elder Nason and wife. Here we learned that Elder Billings had appointed a conference for the following Saturday and Sabbath. On our return to Lincolnville found our letter had not arrived with notice; consequently no appointment was out for us. However we had three days yet. On Sunday, August 7th, a large congregation came together in the Free Baptist house. In the forenoon we preached with much freedom on the destruction of all things. In the afternoon we were called upon by Mrs. Norton to preach a funeral sermon for her son, about nineteen years of age, who died very suddenly in Boston, and was brought home and buried the day before. We spent the night and visited part of the day following among our friends. Bade them good-by, expecting to see them no more, as we were on our way to Camden to preach on the 14th.

During the week the church in Lincolnville, together with the unconverted, sent for us to preach again on the 21st. We gave consent. Went to our appointment in Camden village where there are four large meeting-houses but none for us. The hall is the only place good enough, but not half big enough. Preached twice on Sunday, also Monday and Tuesday evenings. Here the common people heard us gladly; men and women stood up out of doors in the evening to hear. There being no room in the hall for the unconverted, who want to [illegible] concerning this faith, we promised to stop one week more and preach, provided a suitable house could be obtained. But this is too much to expect, for great is Diana of the Ephesians. The common people are talking loud of having a free house, and hope they will go ahead and build one. Prudent labor here would gather a good harvest in a short time. [illegible] our meeting at Lincolnville on [illegible] will be our last in Maine. [illegible] for through the goodness of God, we have been enabled to attend all our appointments, and our health has been good. [illegible] to all the glory [illegible] together [illegible] gospel [illegible] the doors of [illegible] have yourselves from destruction.— Much good can be done here. Now is the time to see to it.

We aim to attend the campmeeting at Wilbraham, and spend a week in the woods —learn all we can, and enjoy the society of many brethren.

A word to our brethren in the West. We expect to be with you some time in September. Have patience with us, during our long absence from you; pray much for us, and be ready to take hold in reformation. There is much to be done, and no time to waste. Let every one wake up and take hold of the work anew. The work must go on in the West; we have but few preachers, therefore the church must work with us. Cheer up, for the Lord will be with us.

Camden, Me

From Elder J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—Having just published the ninth edition of Death not Life, I deem it proper to say to brethren, that I have made some important alterations in this and the eighth edition. When I wrote this work, seven years ago, I was suffering bitter persecution, and not fully realizing that it was blessed to be reviled for Christ's sake, and having a warm temperament, I very naturally used too harsh language in reproving opponents. But having been in a good school for seven years to learn the weaknesses of good, as well as bad, men, I saw, at last, that a number of expressions in my book should be changed, and also that I must cease to be condemnatory in preaching. I obtained aid from Bro. C. F. Hudson in correcting harsh terms, and other errors in my work, and think brethren need not now be afraid to offer it to any one who is willing to read on our views.

I feel more and more convinced that many of us who have been persecuted as reformers in great points of truth, have need of studying, and more fully putting in practice certain parts of our blessed Bible—such as "a soft answer turneth away wrath" —"in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves"—"the servant of the Lord should not strive,"—"avenge not yourselves,"—"who, when he was reviled, reviled not again,"—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," etc. One or two other minor points in my work a few brethren have told me were wrong in their view, which I cannot now notice, but will soon endeavor to show that they are not errors, or not such when my views are fairly understood.

I have now had printed 12,000 of this work, and the call for it continues—1000 have been scattered since last October, and about 12,000 of my five tracts—mostly in the East.

The Lord willing, I shall be at the Collinsville, and Wilbraham Campmeetings, and perhaps at Savoy—shall have all my works, and also those of Brn. Storrs. Hudson, and Grew, and the new translation of the New Testament by Sawyer.

Boston, August 20, '59.

From Reliance E. Wood.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad:—Grace, love and peace be multiplied unto you, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for the consolation wherewith he comforteth us in all our afflictions, while we look not at the things that are seen, which are temporal, but at the things that are not seen, which are eternal. Oh, how blessed to contemplate the glorious recompense of the reward, to those, who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor and immortality, which is eternal life!

I feel like pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and I know how I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to his charge unto that day. Dear children of the Lord, truly we are living in perilous times, but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. Oh, let us not be faint-hearted, but gird up the loins of our mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth us, who also will it. Victory will be ours, through our Lord Jesus Christ, when he comes; and "Signs there's no mistaking" proclaim him very near.

We look abroad in every place, in almost every class of society, and behold wickedness and crime in every form greatly on the increase; iniquity abounds more and more; and infidelity is making rapid strides through the length and breadth of the land. The infidelity of the present day, is not a system which says nothing is true, so much as a system that says everything is true; it is not that which says there is no Savior, so much as that which says there are many saviors, and many ways to peace. It is that which is so liberal that it dares not say anything is false. It is so charitable that it will allow everything to be true. It is that which [illegible] ready to [illegible] religions, as well as that of our Lord Jesus Christ, [illegible] condemns all creeds, all [illegible] to be condemned; [illegible] jealous about the feeling of others that we are afraid to say they are wrong; [illegible] that it calls a man a bigot if he dares to say, "I know my views are right." What is it but a sacrifice of truth upon the altar of a ludicrous likeness of charity? Let us beware of it, we who believe the Bible! Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way, or has he not? Oh may we be girded with truth, and look these questions fairly in the face, and give them an honest answer. From that liberality which says everybody is right, and the charity which forbids you to say anybody is wrong, the peace which is bought at the expense of truth, may the good Lord deliver us.

In the midst of these times, how comforting and cheering it is to know we are almost home. A few more days, or months, at most, will bring sweet deliverance to the tried and waiting ones. We long for his coming; we want him to come personally and literally; and I believe with all my heart he will thus come, and that very soon.

Oh, what a halo of glory hangs around the coming of Jesus! What great and precious promises are laid up in store for the righteous! Palms of victory, harps of gold, crowns of glory! Praise the Lord!

These things are worth living and striving for, worth denying self and bearing the cross daily. In view of this shall we not say—Thy kingdom come! We have loved ones buried in the earth. Oh Lord, come and raise them to eternal life; come, oh Lord, and reign; come and dwell with thy people; come and make all things new; come back to earth again.

Cheshire, Mass.

From R. Willard.

Bro. Grant:—We read with interest your excellent sheet, believing it advocates Bible truth, and as such, is invaluable in these last days of scepticism and infidelity. When I compare Bible with the new-fangled doctrines which are so fast gaining credence among us, I feel to appreciate the higher our holy religion.

I chanced to lodge a few nights since, with Dr. M—, a man of considerable reading, but having read a little too much, has become a monomaniac on Spiritualism. Through his medium, he converses with his departed wife, son, and stillborn daughter; and finds that the latter is so far advanced in physical and spiritual life, that she is already a little taller than her mother; and it would appear, that she is as conversant as any that have had the advantages of an earthly education.

He ascertains their employment to consist of such sports and entertainments as are suited to the giddy and gay of earth; that the spheres contain beasts, insects, reptiles, etc. In this belief he is most solemnly devout, and says he longs for the kind angel of death to bear him to the departed group in the heavenly spheres.

In this kind of religion, thousands are being indoctrinated, while it is defended in all society with unblushing presumption; and, after all, is it not in keeping with modern orthodoxy? I leave others to judge. I think we want a revision of doctrine, and less animal excitement. Dear brother, "preach the word!" Fraternally Yours.

Warsaw, Ind.

For the Crisis.

Come to the Campmeeting.

It will be in Westford instead of Lynn; September sixth it will begin; 'Twill be for all who love the Lord, And will be governed by his word. It will be for those who heard the cry That Jesus' coming draweth nigh; Also for those that pray and weep, Believing Saints in Jesus sleep; It is for those that look and see The wicked surely will not be; Also for all that don't believe,—To come with us, the truth receive. It is for all to come and seek To be like Christ among the meek; No party purposes have we—Come, one and all, and do be free. We urge "the faith" that's from above, Which purifies and works by love; Which good religion, makes all "one." Our motto is, "Thy kingdom come." Come, all ye pilgrims who've been through So many griefs since "forty-two." Come, all ye who in forty-four Believed that time would be no more; Come, ye, who ne'er believed in "time," And show your union to the Vine. Come from the North and from the East, Together let us have a feast; Come from the South, and from the West, We'll do for you our very best. The preachers they may not be GREAT, But we hope for truth, at any rate. We meet not for debate and strife, But battle for eternal life. Our standard will be that good old Book, But through our glasses none need look. Come, saint, come, sinner, one and all, And do attend this urgent call. Come and enjoy your gospel right, We'll walk by faith and not by sight, Our work will soon be, ever o'er, And we shall greet on Canaan's shore. L. Boutell.

Groton, Aug. 18, 1859.

☞ Who has known the bitterness of evil will shun the appearance of it.

☞ Live not upon the comforts of God, but upon the God of comforts.

Close of the Volume.

This is the last number of Vol. IX. We hope all our paying subscribers will, if possible, send the advance pay for the next Vol. soon as they can, that we may know how many copies to issue. If any are tired of our visits, and have paid to the close of this Vol., now is a proper time to discontinue; but we should feel sorry to have any of our friends leave us. On the contrary, we hope our attachment will increase till the King of kings comes, and the reign of everlasting peace begins. Let us be christians in the true sense of the word, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

No Paper Week after Next.

It is thought best to give the weary a rest, while we go up to the great feast of tabernacles at Wilbraham. Our compositors and other help in the office have been most faithful during the past year, not even stopping work during the city holidays, when almost every kind of business is suspended, even the daily papers, and have spared no pains necessary to have our paper ready for the press at the appointed hour, and to make it second to none in the neatness, taste and correctness of its mechanical execution; while, at the same time, it has been our constant effort to fill it with the best matter within our reach, so that whoever reads it with care shall rise from its perusal feeling comforted, and strengthened in the blessed hope of the gospel, with the satisfaction that his time has not been wasted that was spent in reading its columns.

We are thankful for the many good wishes and kind words received from our christian friends, and earnestly request a continued place in their prayers, that we may be guided by heavenly wisdom in the discharge of our duties. We shall do the best we can for our kind patrons, but they must not expect too much from us. We are fallible, and liable to make mistakes; hence we hope to be forgiven as we forgive, enjoying a place in the charity that "thinketh no evil."

Our Prospects.

As our family paper belongs to those who sustain it,—the church of Christ,—it is proper that they should know how we stand financially. Well, our prospects have never been better than now. Notwithstanding we have enlarged the "Crisis," during the past year, printed it on better paper, purchased new type, while many of our subscribers have been unable to pay on account of the hard times, besides a free list of over three hundred and fifty, we are still out of debt, for which we thank the Lord. For several successive weeks, our subscribers have increased five a day on an average. May the Lord bless those who, by faithful efforts, have aided so successfully in obtaining new subscribers. Do not get weary in well doing.

Send the paper occasionally to your neighbor and ask him to take it. Let us do all we can to spread the great truths of the Bible. We have but a little longer to work, and let us be in earnest.

Those who receive the "Crisis" free, sometimes express their regret that they cannot pay, seeming to feel as though they were robbing others. We hope they will dismiss at once all such feelings. We trust we shall ever have paying subscribers sufficient to supply the worthy poor with the Crisis. Our prayer is that we may never be obliged to discontinue a single paper to those who cannot pay. If any feel uneasy because they have the Crisis free, and wish to aid the cause of truth, they might do so by obtaining new subscribers. Let us all do what we can to spread light on the good news of the coming kingdom.

Affairs in Italy.

The Italian question is becoming more complex, and the prospect of a terrible revolution is daily increasing. The oppressed in Italy have come to the conclusion that the time has arrived for them to manage their own affairs, and decide for themselves who shall be their ruler; at least, they are firmly resolved to acknowledge the Pope as leader no longer. They are satisfied no compromise can be made.—are satisfied no compromise can be made. They have passed the point of toleration, and have decided that nothing less will do than utter extermination of the whole Papal system. We may soon expect to see events more startling than any in the past. A correspondent of the London Star, August 1, says:—

"Serious rumors have reached Paris this morning from Italy.

"A secret manifesto, announcing the only solution to the intricate question which has been raised by the war, is said to have been distributed throughout Lombardy. This solution purports to be the election of Garibaldi as dictator, which would immediately rally the whole of Italy beneath the banner of the only chief accepted by all Italians—the only one whose disinterested patriotism has inspired confidence in all parties. Garibaldi [illegible] which was [illegible] up [illegible] investigation of [illegible] ex-Municipality of Milan, [illegible] at the revolution[illegible] are taking in that city, seek to arrive at the solving of the problem at once, by accepting all its consequences without disguise, and thus avoiding the bloodshed and opposition which must arise from the false position in which all parties at present stand."

The following from an address of the Venetians, signed "The Venetian People," shows the popular feeling in this portion of Italy, now given into Austrian hands by the late treaty at Villafranca:—

"The fire of revolution, so destructive and often so useless, smoulders in Italy, and is ready to burst into a wide-spread conflagration; if the war, which has hitherto suppressed the fire, ceases, the only means of preventing these evils is your true and sacred oath to continue to fight for our cause in the political discussions of Europe, which will shortly decide the fate of Italy."

"It is said: Great numbers of addresses were being signed in Romagna against the return of the clerical government, and in favor of union with Sardinia. The country had resolved upon keeping up public order, and of repulsing every attack by the Swiss troops in the service of the Pope; also that regular voting should take place in expressing the wishes of the country."

The state of feeling in the Grand Duchy of Tuscany is shown by the following:—

"The result of the deliberations on the question of annexing Tuscany with Piedmont has been made known from one hundred and forty-one places, including Leghorn and Florence. The result shows 809 affirmative against 15 negative votes."

A correspondent of the London News writing from Genoa, July 29, says:—

"The plot thickens. Every day the situation becomes more critical. At this moment universal attention is anxiously directed towards the Duchies and Legations, where the time is now arrived for putting the firmness of the people to the test."

It is said that a species of convention has been entered into between Tuscany, Modena, Parma and the Legations, "for their mutual defense, and 30,000 men are under arms, part of whom are to be detached to protect the Legations against the Pontifical troops, and part are to be concentrated at Modena, apprehensive of an attack from Duke Francis V."

The Pope has caused several of the inhabitants of Perugia to be tried before a council of war, for their resistance against his troops during their bloody massacre of innocent people in that place, and condemned them to death.

The Pope returns the following answer to Napoleon, in answer to his propositions recently sent to Rome:

Pius IX. thanks the Emperor of the French for the interest which he unceasingly displays for the Holy See and the Pope. He regards as an instance of the Emperor's filial devotion the proposition relative to the honorary presidency of a confederation or Italian league, and he would not refuse that post without having the most ample information respecting the engagements which would result from it, and the relations which would exist between him and the various Italian sovereigns. When he has procured such information, he will be enabled to see whether the Catholic interests permit him to accept it. And in that case the pacification of Italy and the return of its rebellious provinces will naturally have to precede the establishment of that confederation and of the honorary presidency."

The London Tablet, a leading Catholic paper, says of Bonaparte:—

"He has kindled the flames of revolution in Modena, Parma, Tuscany and the States of the Church; he has robbed Austria of Lombardy, and handed it over to the excommunicated schismatic of Sardinia. And after all this he is praised by Catholics. Why? Because he has consented that Austria should keep what he could not wrest from her. Because he has agreed that the sovereigns of Tuscany and Modena shall resume their own. Because he has put forward (upon paper) the scheme of an Italian Federation of which the Pope is to have the honorary Presidency. But the Italian sovereigns have not yet recovered their rights; the Italian Confederation is not yet formed; and the Pope has not yet accepted the honorary Presidency. Tuscany is in revolution, Parma is in revolution, Modena is in Revolution, and Romagna is in revolution. Before order is restored, and before authority resumes its sway, no mortal knows what crimes, what convulsions, what disasters, and what horrors may be witnessed."

Pago-Protestantism.

The following is from a popular work of 427 pp., entitled, "Philosophy of Health." By L. B. Coles, M. D.

"The Creator has given us these bodies to be our habitation—a dwelling adapted to our highest comfort and welfare. Our individual identity does not consist in the body. The body is not the man. The man is really an invisible being; and the body is the house in which he lives. The eye is no part of the man; it is only the window of the house through which he looks out upon the world. The ear is no part of the man; it is only the earthly medium through which sound is conveyed to the dweller within. When the house decays, he will live elsewhere. [Phil. of Health, p. 218.

Peace footing of the French Army.—We learn that Napoleon has decided to reduce his army to a "peace footing." What does he mean by a "peace footing?" Let the Gazette de France answer; "The peace footing is an organization capable of receiving 600,000 men." What, then must be the [illegible] footing [illegible]

The following [illegible] Dr. Hatch, husband of Mrs. Cora Hatch, the noted trance-speaking medium, will give some idea of the moral influence of Spiritualism. The Dr. does not charge Mrs. Hatch with any thing impure, but shows very clearly the general tendency of this great anti-christian, and anti-Bible movement. The Dr. has had a most favorable and conspicuous standpoint of observation, and is prepared to speak from evidence founded on facts. He says:—

"The most damning iniquities are everywhere perpetrated in Spiritual circles, a very small per centage of which ever comes to public attention. I care not whether it be Spiritual or mundane, the facts exist, and should demand the attention and just condemnation of an intelligent community. Look at the iniquities which have been committed within the past two weeks in this city, and that too by Spiritual mediums who claim to be controlled by angels. It is worse than useless to talk to the Spiritualist against this condition of things, for those who occupy the highest position among them, are aiding and abetting in all classes of iniquities which prevail amongst them. The abrogation of marriage, bigamy, accompanied by robbery, theft, rapes, are all chargeable to Spiritualism. I most solemnly affirm that I do not believe that there has, during the past five hundred years, arisen any class of people who were guilty of so great a variety of crimes and indecencies as the Spiritualists of America.

"For a long time I was swallowed up in its whirlpool of excitement, and comparatively paid but little attention to its evils, believing that much good might result from the openings of the avenues of Spiritual intercourse. But during the past eight months I have devoted my attention to a critical investigation of its moral, social and religious bearing, and I stand appalled before the revelations of its awful and damning realities, and would flee from its influence as I would from the miasma which would destroy both soul and body. Spiritualism and prostitution, with a rejection of Christianity, are twin sisters, which every where go hand in hand. With but little inquiry, I have been able to count up over 70 mediums, most of whom have wholly abandoned their conjugal relations, others living with their paramours called 'affinities,' others in promiscuous adultery, and still others exchanged partners. Old men and women, who have passed the meridian of life, are not unfrequently the victims of this hallucination. Many of the mediums lose all sense of moral obligations, and yield to whatever influence may for the time be brought to bear upon them. Their pledges, the integrity of their oaths are no more reliable than the shifting breezes of the whirlwind, for they are made to yield to the powers which for the time control them."

INDEX TO VOLUME IX.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A heavenly house......1
A constant miracle......4
A mother's influence......6
An apt reply......6
A child's logic......6
Acts 18: 45......11
A singular anagram......11
Another swarm of Be's......13
A word to the indifferent......15
A name......17
A chapter of experience......18
Amalgamation......21
A chapter on doubtings......24
Abounding grace......28
Acknowledgement......30
A retrospect......30
A little child......37
A worldly element......40
Anecdotes of the Bible......52
A wife's influence......63
A reviewer......64
A word to those who seek, etc......64
A truth aptly presented......64
A vegetarian congregation......67
A voice from "the gulf"......70
A general conference......70
A disgraceful fraud......71
A suggestion......78
A few of many reasons, etc......80
An appeal to R—, D. D......82
A letter to a medical student......86
A brave Vivandiere......89
An Extract......100
About fishing......100

Be busy......8
Beware of the leaven......9
Bible facts......13
Bro. Cotton's Tract......19
Brief Expositions......25, 29, 35, 38, 43, 47, 60
Brotherhood......29
Buffalo......29
Baptism......30
Brethren, pray for us......30
Beautiful error......32
Bible order......39
Born again......50
Be of good cheer......53
Books and Tracts......78
Bible Sabbath facts......97
Be steadfast......97

Correction......8
Charity......4, 14, 26, 30, 44, 53
Christian warfare......9
Christian peace......9
Church order......9
Christ the christian's all......12
Coming events......38
"Crisis"......40
Cause in the West......44
Christian principle......44
" brotherhood......46
Capital sermon......60
Campmeeting......62
Christ's second coming......70
Contentment......73
Conscience......88
Christ in his saints......93
Come to the campmeeting......102

Determination......2
Debt and Grace......10, 38, 53
Discussion of human destiny......41, 45, 49, 53, 57, 61, 65, 69, 73, 77, 81, 85, 89
Daylight before sunrise......37, 48
David......49
Death......46
Deeds......59
Description of Garibaldi......71
Don't be too hasty......84
Dream of to-morrow......89
Demons......95
Do not give them up......83

Excitement in Rome......10
Exeter......19
Earthly fame vs. heavenly gain......32
Every man's autobiography......40
Effect of the christian's hope......51
Evil suggestions......56
Eschatology......55
Explanation......58
Edward Irving......63
Extract from a letter from H. Grew......83
Epitome of Ills. Annual Conf......86
Extract from a letter......90
Exposition of [illegible]......[illegible]
Enoch walked with God......[illegible]
Effective faith in the word and power of God......101
Experience......104

Faith......11
[illegible]......[illegible]
Fables of Infidelity......23, 43, 67, 83
[illegible]......[illegible]
Future punishment......[illegible]
[illegible]......[illegible]
Faith in trials......[illegible]
Flesh and blood......[illegible]
Forty thousand at a prayer meeting......104
Fault finders......67

God unchangeable......7, 44
God's providence......1
" ways mysterious......[illegible]
God is love......[illegible]
Good prayer meetings......[illegible]
Go, preach......[illegible]

Holiness......1
How to study the Bible......1
Holiness to the Lord......[illegible]
Heresy hunting at fault......[illegible]
Honey taken from the Be's......[illegible]
Here and there......[illegible]
Handling the word of God deceitfully......[illegible]
Home missions......[illegible]
History......[illegible]
How to read with profit......[illegible]
Humility before God......[illegible]
Honest......[illegible]

Is it ignorance?......[illegible]
Is everybody God?......[illegible]
Idolatry......[illegible]
It looks dark......[illegible]
Is silence enjoined on woman in the church?......[illegible]
I can't......[illegible]
Is Christ the very eternal God?......[illegible]
Immaterial......[illegible]
Is it peace?......[illegible]
I can't afford it......[illegible]
Illustrations of human nature......[illegible]

John Randolph's mother......[illegible]
Justice and mercy......[illegible]
Jesus wept......[illegible]
John 8: 13......[illegible]
Jacob and Esau......[illegible]
Jewish doctors......[illegible]
Judge Parsons......[illegible]

Keep it before the people......[illegible]
Kicking......[illegible]

Letters illustrative......1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, [illegible]

Lending to the Lord......[illegible]
Labors in the West......[illegible]
Lo here......[illegible]
Lost and gain......[illegible]
Let em......[illegible]
Living souls......[illegible]
Love......[illegible]
Love one another......[illegible]
Light in darkness......[illegible]
Literal fulfilment of prophecy......30, 36, 37, [illegible], 70, 74, 77, 84, [illegible]

Living by the moment......[illegible]
Let us pray......[illegible]
Louis Napoleon......[illegible]

My two witnesses......[illegible]
Music......[illegible]
My labors east......[illegible]
Man......[illegible]
Man indulge in poison......[illegible]
Manner of procedure......[illegible]
Money......[illegible]
Material and immaterial......[illegible]
My wife is the cause of it......[illegible]
Ministers' wives......[illegible]
Misquoting scripture......[illegible]
Motive for devotion......[illegible]
Music healthful......[illegible]
Non-immortality of the soul......[illegible]
Noble thoughts......[illegible]
Not orphans......[illegible]
Notice......[illegible]
New tracts......[illegible]

One verse......[illegible]
On communion......[illegible]
Origin of the word eravat......[illegible]
On coming to Christ......[illegible]
On secret societies......[illegible]
On regeneration......[illegible]
Orthodoxy compared with the Bible......[illegible]

Preaching like "Old Hundred"......[illegible]
Prayer......[illegible]
Prophecy......9, 22, [illegible]
Public prayer......[illegible]
Preaching upon popular proverbs......[illegible]
Power of faith......[illegible]
Pray for all men......[illegible]
Presumption not faith......[illegible]
Progress of the strife......[illegible]
Pen pictures......64, 68, 72, 84, [illegible]
Pleasant words......[illegible]
Possibilities of the future......[illegible]
Privileges of the saints......[illegible]
Prayer of Hollenbeck......[illegible]
Persecution......[illegible]
Pagan and Papal Rome......[illegible]
Piety and the Lord's coming......[illegible]
Paraphrase on 1 Cor. 15......100
Passing away......[illegible]
Prayer......[illegible]
Passing events......[illegible]

Queries for H. Pratt......[illegible]
Question......[illegible]
Query......[illegible]
Query......[illegible]
Quarterly Conf. at Hardin......[illegible]

Religion......[illegible]
Rome as it was, etc......[illegible]
Ruins of time......[illegible]
Receipt for making every day happy......[illegible]
Regeneration......[illegible]
Reply to H. Pratt......[illegible]
Reply to Bro. Taylor......[illegible]
Reminiscences......[illegible]
Reply to L. Beach's question......[illegible]
R. I. Conf......[illegible]
Rest......[illegible]
Report of Maine Conf......[illegible]
Report of R. I. Conf......[illegible]
Religious liberty in Lombardy......[illegible]
Reading sermons......[illegible]
Reply to Bro. S......[illegible]

Strong vs. Hudson......[illegible]
Slander......[illegible]
State conference......[illegible]
Spiritualism......[illegible]
Swearing......[illegible]
Speaking well of others......[illegible]
Suffering and reigning......[illegible]
Self righteousness......[illegible]
Spirit of Christ......[illegible]
Submission to God......[illegible]
Self-examination......[illegible]
Science or faith......[illegible]
Seeing him as he is......[illegible]
Speak ye comfortably......[illegible]
Sunday thoughts......[illegible]
Saved from going to heaven......[illegible]
Sins exposed......[illegible]
Simplicity of dress......[illegible]
Salvation of infants......[illegible]
Sound advice to young men......[illegible]
Swarm of Be's out West......[illegible]
Simplicity of expression......[illegible]
Sprays of wisdom......[illegible]

The best of all is, etc......[illegible]
Time......[illegible]
Thoughts on temptation......[illegible]
The Trinity......[illegible]
Turkish crescent......[illegible]
The cause in the West......[illegible]
" new volume......[illegible]
" great question......[illegible]
" church of Christ......[illegible]
" worldling's God......[illegible]
" symbols......[illegible]
" staple error......[illegible]
" time is short......[illegible]
" Advent......[illegible]
Theory and practice......[illegible]
Tracts......[illegible]
The forest trees......[illegible]
" christian soldier......[illegible]
Thoughts of our Savior......[illegible]
The forerunner......[illegible]
" Crisis' improved form......[illegible]
" man whom the printer delights to honor......[illegible]
" Holy Ghost......[illegible]
" resurrection......[illegible]
" buried dead......[illegible]
" christian warfare......[illegible]
" sacred records......[illegible]
" Rights of Wrong......[illegible]
" family altar......[illegible]
" light of the world......[illegible]
" burning-heart experience......[illegible]
Telescope's views of scripture......[illegible]
Travels and labors......[illegible]
The night of adversity......[illegible]
Thoughts of the kingdom......[illegible]
The one baptism......[illegible]
" rest......[illegible]
" working of leaven......[illegible]
That trial......[illegible]
The French Empire......[illegible]
" nature of death......[illegible]
" separation......[illegible]
To Bro. Cook......[illegible]
Travels......[illegible]
The great controversy......[illegible]
" good fight......[illegible]
" state of saints......[illegible]
" Bible......[illegible]
" simplicity of Christ......[illegible]
" Voice of the Church......[illegible]
" christian's life......[illegible]
" thief on the cross......[illegible]
To friends in Western New York......[illegible]
The Mormons......[illegible]
" world's [illegible]......[illegible]
" predicted destruction of Rome......[illegible]
" revival in England......[illegible]
" mission of the kings......[illegible]
" cross......[illegible]
" table [illegible]......[illegible]
Take no thought for the morrow......[illegible]
The Sabbath [illegible]......[illegible]
" false prophet......[illegible]
" Word......[illegible]
To the [illegible]......[illegible]
The divinity of Christ......[illegible]
[illegible]......[illegible]
Terrible [illegible] on the plains......[illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 24, 1859.

Correspondence.

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

BRO. GRANT:—By the assistance of our Heavenly Father we were enabled to reach our appointment at Orrington, July 17, where we found a house full of brethren and old acquaintance awaiting us. Truly we were thankful to God for the privilege, after ten years absence, of standing again on the banks of old Penobscot river, to testify to the things that we believe must shortly come to pass. This has ever been a place to proclaim the truths connected with the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, since the fall of '42; and many of our ablest ministers have stood here and preached the coming kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. These are worthy of the name, dearly beloved brethren, for they have suffered for the bold stand they have taken to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. We have reason to believe that the church here have suffered more or less for want of good gospel order. This we believe ought to have been attended to in early time, by making choice of suitable deacons and Elders, together with steady preaching and the administering of the sacrament of our Lord's broken body and spilt blood, to the weak and trembling who are waiting for redemption. No one can tell how the church will prosper when she respects and properly attends to all God's commandments.

July 24th, we met with the church in Holden. This place is situated on the river, a little above the head of navigation. A very wholesome state of things prevails here, and has for years. Our stay was short with them, as we had a borrowed horse and carriage for a given time. The congregation was large for the place, and we enjoyed a very interesting meeting with them.

In Bangor we had no meeting. Visited some, and found the church, once united and prospering, all broken up and scattered. We visited Elder Damman at his new home in Sangerville. We found him on a farm trying to provide for himself and family. He preaches on Sunday, when he is not overcome with hard labors. We enjoyed much with his happy family, mingling our prayers, tears, and songs together. When we left we could but say, if some of the cattle and money was ours, how freely it would go to liberate such as have the word shut up like fire in their bones. We trust the brethren in Maine will see to that thing.

July 31st. At North Hermon. Here was a crowded house. Brethren came from Bangor, Holden and Orrington, to meet with us for the last time on the Penobscot. Elders Damman and Morrill were on the spot. After preaching the word with much freedom, we listened to some exhortations from the brethren. Closed up our meeting, shook hands, doubtless for the last time, saw the falling tear, and bade farewell until we meet on Canaan's peaceful shore! A word before we pass. We sincerely hope that every child of God in North Hermon will act together with Elder Damman, and set in order in the church the things that are wanting.

On our way down the river we put up with Bro. Walter Nichols. Also saw Elder Nason and wife. Here we learned that Elder Billings had appointed a conference for the following Saturday and Sabbath. On our return to Lincolnville found our letter had not arrived with notice; consequently no appointment was out for us. However we had three days yet. On Sunday, August 7th, a large congregation came together in the Free Baptist house. In the forenoon we preached with much freedom on the destruction of all things. In the afternoon we were called upon by Mrs. Norton to preach a funeral sermon for her son, about nineteen years of age, who died very suddenly in Boston, and was brought home and buried the day before. We spent the night and visited part of the day following among our friends. Bade them good-by, expecting to see them no more, as we were on our way to Camden to preach on the 14th.

During the week the church in Lincolnville, together with the unconverted, sent for us to preach again on the 21st. We gave consent. Went to our appointment in Camden village where there are four large meeting houses but none for us. The hall is the only place good enough, but not half big enough. Preached twice on Sunday, also Monday and Tuesday evenings. Here the common people heard us gladly; men and women stood up out of doors in the evening to hear. There being no room in the hall for the unconverted, who want to hear more concerning this faith, we promised to stop one week more, and preach, provided a suitable house could be obtained. But this is too much to expect, for great is Diana of the Ephesians. The common people need talking loud of having a free house, and hope they will go ahead and build one. Prudent labor here would gather a good harvest in a short time. [illegible] our meeting at Lincolnville on [illegible] will be our last in Maine. [illegible] through the goodness of God, we have been enabled to [illegible] and our health has been good. [illegible] to all the glory [illegible]. We expect [illegible] [...] together in [...] of [...] save yourselves from destruction.—Much good can be done here. Now is the time to see to it.

We aim to attend the campmeeting at Wilbraham, and spend a week in the woods—learn all we can, and enjoy the society of many brethren.

A word to our brethren in the West. We expect to be with you some time in September. Have patience with us, during our long absence from you; pray much for us, and be ready to take hold in reformation. There is much to be done, and no time to waste. Let every one wake up and take hold of the work anew. The work must go on in the West; we have but few preachers, therefore the church must work with us. Cheer up, for the Lord will be with us.

Camden, Me

From Elder J. Blain.

BRO. GRANT:—Having just published the ninth edition of Death not Life, I deem it proper to say to brethren, that I have made some important alterations in this and the eighth edition. When I wrote this work, seven years ago, I was suffering bitter persecution, and not fully realizing that it was blessed to be reviled for Christ's sake, and having a warm temperament, I very naturally used too harsh language in reproving opponents. But having been in a good school for seven years to learn the weaknesses of good, as well as bad, men, I saw, at last, that a number of expressions in my book should be changed, and also that I must cease to be condemnatory in preaching. I obtained aid from Bro. C. F. Hudson in correcting harsh terms, and other errors in my work, and think brethren need not now be afraid to offer it to any one who is willing to read on our views.

I feel more and more convinced that many of us who have been persecuted as reformers in great points of truth, have need of studying, and more fully putting in practice certain parts of our blessed Bible—such as "a soft answer turneth away wrath" —"in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves"—"the servant of the Lord should not strive,"—"avenge not yourselves,"—"who, when he was reviled, reviled not again,"—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," etc. One or two other minor points in my work a few brethren have told me were wrong in their view, which I cannot now notice, but will soon endeavor to show that they are not errors, or not such when my views are fairly understood.

I have now had printed 12,000 of this work, and the call for it continues—1000 have been scattered since last October, and about 12,000 of my five tracts—mostly in the East.

The Lord willing, I shall be at the Collinsville, and Wilbraham Campmeetings, and perhaps at Savoy—shall have all my works, and also those of Bro. Storrs, Hudson, and Grew, and the new translation of the New Testament by Sawyer.

Boston, August 20, '59.

From Reliance E. Wood.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad:—Grace, love and peace be multiplied unto you, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for the consolation wherewith he comforteth us in all our afflictions, while we look not at the things that are seen, which are temporal, but at the things that are not seen, which are eternal. Oh, how blessed to contemplate the glorious recompense of the reward, to those, who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor and immortality, which is eternal life!

I feel like pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and I know how I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to his charge unto that day. Dear children of the Lord, truly we are living in perilous times, but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. Oh, let us not be faint-hearted, but gird up the loins of our mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth us, who also will it. Victory will be ours, through our Lord Jesus Christ, when he comes; and "Signs there's no mistaking" proclaim him very near.

We look abroad in every place, in almost every class of society, and behold wickedness and crime in every form greatly on the increase; iniquity abounds more and more; and infidelity is making rapid strides through the length and breadth of the land. The infidelity of the present day, is not a system which says nothing is true, so much as a system that says everything is true; it is not that which says there is no Savior, so much as that which says there are many saviors, and many ways to peace. It is that which is so liberal that it dares not say anything is false. It is so charitable that it will allow everything to be true. It is that which stands ready to honor other religions, as well as that of our Lord Jesus Christ, to class them all together and hope well of all who profess them. It will make [...] all creeds, all [...] to [...] be condemned; [...] lous about the feeling of others that we are [...] to say they are wrong; [...] that it calls a man a bigot if he dares to say, "I know my views are right." What is it but a sacrifice of truth upon the altar of a ludicrous likeness of charity? Let us beware of it, we who believe the Bible! Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way, or has he not? Oh may we be girded with truth, and look these questions fairly in the face, and give them an honest answer. From that liberality which says everybody is right, and the charity which forbids you to say anybody is wrong, the peace which is bought at the expense of truth, may the good Lord deliver us.

In the midst of these times, how comforting and cheering it is to know we are almost home. A few more days, or months, at most, will bring sweet deliverance to the tried and waiting ones. We long for his coming; we want him to come personally and literally; and I believe with all my heart he will thus come, and that very soon.

Oh, what a halo of glory hangs around the coming of Jesus! What great and precious promises are laid up in store for the righteous! Palms of victory, harps of gold, crowns of glory! Praise the Lord!

These things are worth living and striving for, worth denying self and bearing the cross daily. In view of this shall we not say—Thy kingdom come! We have loved ones buried in the earth. Oh Lord, come and raise them to eternal life; come, oh Lord, and reign; come and dwell with thy people; come and make all things new; come back to earth again.

Cheshire, Mass.

From R. Willard.

BRO. GRANT:—We read with interest your excellent sheet, believing it advocates Bible truth, and as such, is invaluable in these last days of scepticism and infidelity. When I compare Bible with the new-fangled doctrines which are so fast gaining credence among us, I feel to appreciate the higher our holy religion.

I chanced to lodge a few nights since, with Dr. M—, a man of considerable reading, but having read a little too much, has become a monomaniac on Spiritualism. Through his medium, he converses with his departed wife, son, and stillborn daughter; and finds that the latter is so far advanced in physical and spiritual life, that she is already a little taller than her mother; and it would appear, that she is as conversant as any that have had the advantages of an earthly education.

He ascertains their employment to consist of such sports and entertainments as are suited to the giddy and gay of earth; that the spheres contain beasts, insects, reptiles, etc. In this belief he is most solemnly devout, and says he longs for the kind angel of death to bear him to the departed group in the heavenly spheres.

In this kind of religion, thousands are being indoctrinated, while it is defended in all society with unblushing presumption; and, after all, is it not in keeping with modern orthodoxy? I leave others to judge. I think we want a revision of doctrine, and less animal excitement. Dear brother, "preach the word!" Fraternally Yours.

Warsaw, Ind.

For the Crisis.

Come to the Campmeeting.

It will be in Westford instead of Lynn; September sixth it will begin; 'Twill be for all who love the Lord, And will be governed by his word. It will be for those who heard the cry That Jesus' coming draweth nigh; Also for those that pray and weep, Believing Saints in Jesus sleep; It is for those that look and see The wicked surely will not be; Also for all that don't believe,—To come with us, the truth receive. It is for all to come and seek To be like Christ among the meek; No party purposes have we—Come, one and all, and do be free. We urge "the faith" that's from above, Which purifies and works by love; Which good religion, makes all "one." Our motto is, "Thy kingdom come." Come, all ye pilgrims who've been through So many griefs since "forty-two." Come, all ye who in forty-four Believed that time would be no more; Come, ye, who ne'er believed in "time," And show your union to the Vine. Come from the North and from the East, Together let us have a feast; Come from the South, and from the West, We'll do for you our very best. The preachers they may not be GREAT, But we hope for truth, at any rate. We meet not for debate and strife, But battle for eternal life. Our standard will be that good old Book, But through our glasses none need look. Come, saint, come, sinner, one and all, And do attend this urgent call. Come and enjoy your gospel right, We'll walk by faith and not by sight, Our work will soon be, ever o'er, And we shall greet on Canaan's shore. L. BOUTELL.

Groton, Aug. 18, 1859.

☞ Who has known the bitterness of evil will shun the appearance of it.

☞ Live not upon the comforts of God, but upon the God of comforts.

Close of the Volume.

This is the last number of Vol. IX. We hope all our paying subscribers will, if possible, send the advance pay for the next Vol. soon as they can, that we may know how many copies to issue. If any are tired of our visits, and have paid to the close of this Vol., now is a proper time to discontinue; but we should feel sorry to have any of our friends leave us. On the contrary, we hope our attachment will increase till the King of kings comes, and the reign of everlasting peace begins. Let us be christians in the true sense of the word, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

No Paper Week after Next.

It is thought best to give the weary a rest, while we go up to the great feast of tabernacles at Wilbraham. Our compositors and other help in the office have been most faithful during the past year, not even stopping work during the city holidays, when almost every kind of business is suspended, even the daily papers, and have spared no pains necessary to have our paper ready for the press at the appointed hour, and to make it second to none in the neatness, taste and correctness of its mechanical execution; while, at the same time, it has been our constant effort to fill it with the best matter within our reach, so that whoever reads it with care shall rise from its perusal feeling comforted, and strengthened in the blessed hope of the gospel, with the satisfaction that his time has not been wasted that was spent in reading its columns.

We are thankful for the many good wishes and kind words received from our christian friends, and earnestly request a continued place in their prayers, that we may be guided by heavenly wisdom in the discharge of our duties. We shall do the best we can for our kind patrons, but they must not expect too much from us. We are fallible, and liable to make mistakes; hence we hope to be forgiven as we forgive, enjoying a place in the charity that "thinketh no evil."

Our Prospects.

As our family paper belongs to those who sustain it,—the church of Christ,—it is proper that they should know how we stand financially. Well, our prospects have never been better than now. Notwithstanding we have enlarged the "Crisis," during the past year, printed it on better paper, purchased new type, while many of our subscribers have been unable to pay on account of the hard times, besides a free list of over three hundred and fifty, we are still out of debt, for which we thank the Lord. For several successive weeks, our subscribers have increased five a day on an average. May the Lord bless those who, by faithful efforts, have aided so successfully in obtaining new subscribers. Do not get weary in well doing.

Send the paper occasionally to your neighbor and ask him to take it. Let us do all we can to spread the great truths of the Bible. We have but a little longer to work, and let us be in earnest.

Those who receive the "Crisis" free, sometimes express their regret that they cannot pay, seeming to feel as though they were robbing others. We hope they will dismiss at once all such feelings. We trust we shall ever have paying subscribers sufficient to supply the worthy poor with the Crisis. Our prayer is that we may never be obliged to discontinue a single paper to those who cannot pay. If any feel uneasy because they have the Crisis free, and wish to aid the cause of truth, they might do so by obtaining new subscribers. Let us all do what we can to spread light on the good news of the coming kingdom.

Affairs in Italy.

The Italian question is becoming more complex, and the prospect of a terrible revolution is daily increasing. The oppressed in Italy have come to the conclusion that the time has arrived for them to manage their own affairs, and decide for themselves who shall be their ruler; at least, they are firmly resolved to acknowledge the Pope as leader no longer. They are satisfied no compromise can be made.—are satisfied no compromise can be made. They have passed the point of toleration, and have decided that nothing less will do than utter extermination of the whole Papal system. We may soon expect to see events more startling than any in the past. A correspondent of the London Star, August 1, says:—

"Serious rumors have reached Paris this morning from Italy.

"A secret manifesto, announcing the only solution to the intricate question which has been raised by the war, is said to have been distributed throughout Lombardy. This solution purports to be the election of Garibaldi as dictator, which would immediately rally the whole of Italy beneath the banner of the only chief accepted by all Italians—the only one whose disinterested patriotism has inspired confidence in all parties. [illegible] Garibaldi has had no [illegible] in the affair [...] which was [...] investigation of [...] one of the [...] of the ex-Municipality [of] Milan, [...] at the revolution[ary] [...] are taking in that city, seek to arrive at the solving of the problem at once, by accepting all its consequences without disguise, and thus avoiding the bloodshed and opposition which must arise from the false position in which all parties at present stand."

The following from an address of the Venetians, signed "The Venetian People," shows the popular feeling in this portion of Italy, now given into Austrian hands by the late treaty at Villafranca:—

"The fire of revolution, so destructive and often so useless, smoulders in Italy, and is ready to burst into a wide-spread conflagration; if the war, which has hitherto suppressed the fire, ceases, the only means of preventing these evils is your true and sacred oath to continue to fight for our cause in the political discussions of Europe, which will shortly decide the fate of Italy."

"It is said: Great numbers of addresses were being signed in Romagna against the return of the clerical government, and in favor of union with Sardinia. The country had resolved upon keeping up public order, and of repulsing every attack by the Swiss troops in the service of the Pope; also that regular voting should take place in expressing the wishes of the country."

The state of feeling in the Grand Duchy of Tuscany is shown by the following:—

"The result of the deliberations on the question of annexing Tuscany with Piedmont has been made known from one hundred and forty-one places, including Leghorn and Florence. The result shows 809 affirmative against 15 negative votes."

A correspondent of the London News writing from Genoa, July 29, says:—

"The plot thickens. Every day the situation becomes more critical. At this moment universal attention is anxiously directed towards the Duchies and Legations, where the time is now arrived for putting the firmness of the people to the test."

It is said that a species of convention has been entered into between Tuscany, Modena, Parma and the Legations, "for their mutual defense, and 30,000 men are under arms, part of whom are to be detached to protect the Legations against the Pontifical troops, and part are to be concentrated at Modena, apprehensive of an attack from Duke Francis V."

The Pope has caused several of the inhabitants of Perugia to be tried before a council of war, for their resistance against his troops during their bloody massacre of innocent people in that place, and condemned them to death.

The Pope returns the following answer to Napoleon, in answer to his propositions recently sent to Rome:

Pius IX. thanks the Emperor of the French for the interest which he unceasingly displays for the Holy See and the Pope. He regards as an instance of the Emperor's filial devotion the proposition relative to the honorary presidency of a confederation or Italian league, and he would not refuse that post without having the most ample information respecting the engagements which would result from it, and the relations which would exist between him and the various Italian sovereigns. When he has procured such information, he will be enabled to see whether the Catholic interests permit him to accept it. And in that case the pacification of Italy and the return of its rebellious provinces will naturally have to precede the establishment of that confederation and of the honorary presidency."

The London Tablet, a leading Catholic paper, says of Bonaparte:—

"He has kindled the flames of revolution in Modena, Parma, Tuscany and the States of the Church; he has robbed Austria of Lombardy, and handed it over to the excommunicated schismatic of Sardinia. And after all this he is praised by Catholics. Why? Because he has consented that Austria should keep what he could not wrest from her. Because he has agreed that the sovereigns of Tuscany and Modena shall resume their own. Because he has put forward (upon paper) the scheme of an Italian Federation of which the Pope is to have the honarary Presidency. But the Italian sovereigns have not yet recovered their rights; the Italian Confederation is not yet formed; and the Pope has not yet accepted the honorary Presidency. Tuscany is in revolution, Parma is in revolution, Modena is in Revolution, and Romagna is in revolution. Before order is restored, and before authority resumes its sway, no mortal knows what crimes, what convulsions, what disasters, and what horrors may be witnessed."

Pago-Protestantism.

The following is from a popular work of 427 pp., entitled, "Philosophy of Health." By L. B. Coles, M. D.

"The Creator has given us these bodies to be our habitation—a dwelling adapted to our highest comfort and welfare. Our individual identity does not consist in the body. The body is not the man. The man is really an invisible being; and the body is the house in which he lives. The eye is no part of the man; it is only the window of the house through which he looks out upon the world. The ear is no part of the man; it is only the earthly medium through which sound is conveyed to the dweller within. When the house decays, he will live elsewhere. [Phil. of Health, p. 213.

PEACE FOOTING OF THE FRENCH ARMY.—We learn that Napoleon has decided to reduce his army to a "peace footing." What does he mean by a "peace footing"? Let the Gazette de France answer; "The peace footing is an organization capable of receiving 600,000 men." What, then must be the war footing [illegible]

Spiritualism.

The following from Dr. Hatch, the husband of Mrs. Cora L. V. Hatch, the noted trance-speaking medium, will give some idea of the moral influence of Spiritualism. The Dr. does not charge Mrs. Hatch with any thing impure, but shows very clearly the general tendency of this great anti-christian, and anti-Bible movement. The Dr. has had a most favorable and conspicuous standpoint of observation, and is prepared to speak from evidence founded on facts. He says:—

"The most damning iniquities are everywhere perpetrated in Spiritual circles, a very small per centage of which ever comes to public attention. I care not whether it be Spiritual or mundane, the FACTS exist, and should demand the attention and just condemnation of an intelligent community. Look at the iniquities which have been committed within the past two weeks in this city, and that too by Spiritual mediums who claim to be controlled by angels. It is worse than useless to talk to the Spiritualist against this condition of things, for those who occupy the highest position among them, are aiding and abetting in all classes of iniquities which prevail amongst them. The abrogation of marriage, bigamy, accompanied by robbery, theft, rapes, are all chargeable to Spiritualism. I most solemnly affirm that I do not believe that there has, during the past five hundred years, arisen any class of people who were guilty of so great a variety of crimes and indecencies as the Spiritualists of America.

"For a long time I was swallowed up in its whirlpool of excitement, and comparatively paid but little attention to its evils, believing that much good might result from the openings of the avenues of Spiritual intercourse. But during the past eight months I have devoted my attention to a critical investigation of its moral, social and religious bearing, and I stand appalled before the revelations of its awful and damning realities, and would flee from its influence as I would from the miasma which would destroy both soul and body. Spiritualism and prostitution, with a rejection of Christianity, are twin sisters, which every where go hand in hand. With but little inquiry, I have been able to count up over 70 mediums, most of whom have wholly abandoned their conjugal relations, others living with their paramours called 'affinities,' others in promiscuous adultery, and still others exchanged partners. Old men and women, who have passed the meridian of life, are not unfrequently the victims of this hallucination. Many of the mediums lose all sense of moral obligations, and yield to whatever influence may for the time be brought to bear upon them. Their pledges, the integrity of their oaths are no more reliable than the shifting breezes of the whirlwind, for they are made to yield to the powers which for the time control them."

INDEX TO VOLUME IX.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A heavenly house....1
A constant miracle....4
A mother's influence....6
An apt reply....6
A child's logic....8
Acts 18: 46....21
A singular anagram....11
Another swarm of Be's....18
A word to the indifferent....15
A name....17
A chapter of experience....38
Amalgamation....21
A chapter on doubtings....24
Abounding grace....28
Acknowledgement....30
A retrospect....30
A little child....37
A worldly element....40
Anecdotes of the Bible....52
A wife's influence....52
A reviewer....54
A word to those who seek, etc....44
A truth aptly presented....64
A vegetarian congregation....67
A voice from "the gulf"....70
A general conference....70
A disgraceful fraud....71
A suggestion....78
A few of many reasons, etc....80
An appeal to E——, D. D....92
A letter to a medical student....85
A brave Vivandiere....98
An Extract....100
About fishing....100

Be busy....8
Beware of the leaven....9
Bible facts....13
Bro. Cotton's Tract....19
Brief Expositions....25, 29, 35, 39, 43, 47, 60
Brotherhood....29
Buffalo....29
Baptism....30
Brethren, pray for us....30
Beautiful error....33
Bible order....39
Born again....50
Be of good cheer....52
Books and Tracts....78
Bible Sabbath facts....97
Be steadfast....97

Correction....3
Charity....4, 14, 26, 30, 44, 52
Christian warfare....9
Christian peace....6
Church order....5
Christ the christian's all....12
Coming events....38
"Crisis"....40
Cause in the West....44
Christian principle....44
" brotherhood....46
Capital sermon....60
Campmeeting....62
Christ's second coming....70
Contentment....78
Conscience....88
Christ in his saints....93
Come to the campmeeting....102

Determination....8
Debt and Grace....10, 38, 52
Discussion of human destiny..41, 45, 49, 53, 57, 61, 65, 69, 73, 77, 81, 85, 89
Daylight before sunrise....37, 45
David....49
Death....46
Deeds....59
Description of Garibaldi....71
Don't be too hasty....84
Dream of to-morrow....89
Demons....95
Do not give them up....23

Excitement in Rome....10
Exeter....19
Earthly fame vs. heavenly gain....32
Every man's autobiography....40
Effect of the christian's hope....51
Evil suggestions....56
Eschatology....56
Explanation....58
Edward Irving....63
Extract from a letter from H. Grew....83
Epitome of Ills. Annual Conf....89
Extract from a letter....90
Exposition of 1 Pet. 3: 18-20....98
Enoch walked with God....99
Effective faith in the word and power of God....101
Experience....104
Faith....11
[illegible]....28
Fables of Infidelity....33, 43, 67, 33
[illegible]....36
Forgiveness....34
Future punishment....81, 82
[illegible]....104
Faith in trials....87
[illegible]....44
[illegible]....56
Folly....60
[illegible]....68
[illegible]....71
[illegible]....72
[illegible]....76
[illegible]
Flesh and blood....[illegible]
Forty thousand at a prayer meeting....100
Fault finders....67

God unchangeable....7, 44
God's providence....1
" ways mysterious....[illegible]
God is love....[illegible]
Good prayer meeting....[illegible]
Go, preach....[illegible]

Holiness....1
How to study the Bible....1
Holiness to the Lord....13
Heresy hunting at fault....[illegible]
Honey taken from the Be's....[illegible]
Here and there....[illegible]
Handling the word of God deceitfully....[illegible]
Home missions....[illegible]
[illegible]
How to read with profit....[illegible]
Humility before God....[illegible]
Home....[illegible]

Is it ignorance?....[illegible]
Is everybody God?....[illegible]
[illegible]
Idolatry....[illegible]
It looks dark....[illegible]
Is silence enjoined on women in the church?....[illegible]
I can't....[illegible]
Is Christ the very eternal God?....[illegible]
Immaterial....[illegible]
Is it peace?....[illegible]
I can't afford it....[illegible]
Illustrations of human nature....[illegible]

John Randolph's mother....1
Justice and mercy....[illegible]
Jesus wept....[illegible]
John 8: 12....[illegible]
Jacob and Esau....[illegible]
Jewish doctors....[illegible]
Judge Parsons....[illegible]

Keep it before the people....[illegible]
Kicking....[illegible]

Letters illustrative....1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 23, 33, 44, 41, 45
Lending to the Lord....[illegible]
Labors in the West....[illegible]
Lo here....[illegible]
Lo there....[illegible]
Letters....[illegible]
Living soul....[illegible]
Love....[illegible]
Love one another....[illegible]
Light in darkness....[illegible]
Literal fulfillment of prophecy....30, 36, 37, 55, 60, 68, 70, 74, 77, 84, [illegible]
Living by the moment....[illegible]
Let us pray....[illegible]
Louis Napoleon....[illegible]

My two witnesses....1
Music....1
My labors east....[illegible]
Man....[illegible]
Man indulge in poison....[illegible]
Manner of procedure....[illegible]
Money....[illegible]
Material and immaterial....[illegible]
My wife is the cause of it....[illegible]
Ministers' wives....[illegible]
Misquoting scripture....[illegible]
Motive for devotion....[illegible]
Music healthful....[illegible]
Non-immortality of the soul....[illegible]
Noble thoughts....[illegible]
Not orphans....[illegible]
Notice....[illegible]
New tracts....[illegible]

One verse....[illegible]
On communion....[illegible]
Origin of the word cravat....[illegible]
On coming to Christ....77
On secret societies....[illegible]
On regeneration....[illegible]
Orthodoxy compared with the Bible....[illegible]

Preaching like "Old Hundred."....[illegible]
Prayer....[illegible]
Prophecy....9, 22, 29, [illegible]
Public prayer....[illegible]
Preaching upon popular proverbs....[illegible]
Power of faith....[illegible]
Pray for all men....[illegible]
Presumption not faith....[illegible]
Progress of the strife....[illegible]
Pen pictures....64, 66, 72, 84, [illegible]
Pleasant words....[illegible]
Possibilities of the future....[illegible]
Privileges of the saints....[illegible]
Prayer of Hollenbeck....[illegible]
Persecution....[illegible]
Pagan and Papal Rome....[illegible]
Piety and the Lord's coming....[illegible]
Paraphrase on 1 Cor. 15....100
Passing away....[illegible]
Prayer....[illegible]
Passing events....[illegible]

Queries for H. Pratt....[illegible]
Question....[illegible]
Query....[illegible]
Query....[illegible]
Quarterly Conf. at Hardin....[illegible]

Religion....1
Rome as it was, etc....1
Ruins of time....1
Receipt for making every day happy....[illegible]
Regeneration....[illegible]
Reply to H. Pratt....[illegible]
Reply to Bro. Taylor....[illegible]
Reminiscences....[illegible]
Reply to L. Beach's question....[illegible]
R. I. Conf....[illegible]
Rest....[illegible]
Report of Maine Conf....[illegible]
Report of R. I. Conf....[illegible]
Religious liberty in Lombardy....[illegible]
Reading sermons....[illegible]
Reply to Bro. S....[illegible]

Strong vs. Hudson....1
Slander....1
State conference....1
Spiritualism....6, 101
Swearing....[illegible]
Speaking well of others....[illegible]
Suffering and reigning....[illegible]
Self righteousness....[illegible]
Spirit of Christ....[illegible]
Submission to God....[illegible]
Self-examination....[illegible]
Science or faith....[illegible]
Seeing him as he is....[illegible]
Speak ye comfortably....[illegible]
Sunday thoughts....[illegible]
Saved from going to heaven....[illegible]
Sins exposed....[illegible]
Simplicity of dress....[illegible]
Salvation of infants....[illegible]
Sound advice to young men....[illegible]
Swarm of Be's out West....[illegible]
Simplicity of expression....[illegible]
Sprays of wisdom....104

The best of all is, etc....1
Time....1
Thoughts on temptation....1
The Trinity....1
Turkish crescent....[illegible]
The cause in the West....[illegible]
" new volume....[illegible]
" great question....[illegible]
" church of Christ....[illegible]
" worldling's God....[illegible]
" symbols....7, 25, 52, 65, 71
" staple error....7
" time is short....7
" Advent....[illegible]
Theory and practice....[illegible]
Tracts....[illegible]
The forest trees....[illegible]
" christian soldier....[illegible]
Thoughts of our Savior....[illegible]
The forerunner....[illegible]
" Crisis' improved form....17
" man whom the printer delights to honor....17
" Holy Ghost....[illegible]
" resurrection....[illegible]
" buried dead....[illegible]
" christian warfare....[illegible]
" sacred records....[illegible]
" Rights of Wrong....[illegible]
" family altar....[illegible]
" light of the world....[illegible]
" burning-heart experience....[illegible]
Telescopic views of scripture....[illegible]
Travels and labors....[illegible]
The night of adversity....[illegible]
Thoughts of the kingdom....[illegible]
The one baptism....[illegible]
" rest....[illegible]
" working of leaven....[illegible]
That trial....[illegible]
The French Empire....[illegible]
" nature of death....37, 41
" separation....[illegible]
To Bro. Cook....[illegible]
Travels....[illegible]
The great controversy....[illegible]
" good fight....44
" state of souls....44
" Bible....44
" simplicity of Christ....45
" voice of the Church....[illegible]
" christian's life....[illegible]
" thief on the cross....[illegible]
To friends in Western New York....[illegible]
The Mormons....[illegible]
" [illegible]
" predicted destruction of Rome....[illegible]
" revival in England....[illegible]
" mission of the kings....[illegible]
" cross....[illegible]
" Bible [illegible]....[illegible]
Take no thought for the morrow....[illegible]
The Book of [illegible]....[illegible]
" false prophet....[illegible]
" West....[illegible]
To the ministry....[illegible]
The divinity of Christ....[illegible]
[illegible]....67
Terrible suffering on the plains....71
[illegible]....72

" tract fund [illegible]....74, 86, 96, [illegible]
" [illegible]....[illegible]
" [illegible]....[illegible]
Tracts for the [illegible]....[illegible]
Tracts....[illegible]
The great [illegible]....[illegible]
" campmeetings....[illegible]
" Apostles' twelve thrones....[illegible]
" earth [illegible]....[illegible]
True divinity of the Son....[illegible]
The truths we advocate....[illegible]
" nations are angry....[illegible]
" [illegible] of war....97
" [illegible]....[illegible]
" Sabbath....102
" Golden Rule....[illegible]
Tobacco, [illegible], the stock....[illegible]
The [illegible] of the north....[illegible]
Tendencies of the times....101
The stock overpowering the graft....101
" glorious prospect....104
" [illegible] Home....104
" [illegible] of love....104
To [illegible]....104

Unconscious [illegible]....[illegible]

Verily I say unto thee....30

Words of wisdom....17
What amusements are lawful....20
What hath God wrought!....20
What must I do to be saved?....[illegible]
Watchfulness....[illegible]
Who is wrong?....50
When education begins....[illegible]
Words of Jesus....[illegible]
What Jesus did for me....[illegible]
Who is right?....65
What of the night?....[illegible]
Work should end with life....[illegible]
Words of Christ....[illegible]
Waiting....[illegible]
Woman's position in the church....97, 104
Why go to campmeeting?....[illegible]
Wilbraham campmeeting....[illegible]

Ye are the light of the world....82

LETTERS.

J T Dixon 5, E J C 8, B G Bellows 9, J Blain 11, J T Ongley 11, M Howard 12, L L Howard 12, E Miller 12, G Russell 12, D D Chaffee 13, Bro. B—— 13, I C Wellcome 13, M L Pratt 13, Bro. S—— 15, J Baker 15, W Pratt 15, P Tandy 20, W Pratt 20, M P L 20, H F Carpenter 23, O D Gibson 23, L M Collins 24, L H 24, F Douglas 25, I Damman 27, J B Dodge 27, A R Seymour 27, J Wilson 27, G W Chisman 27, L A D 31, J E Stevens 31, J H Jacobs 31, F Woodward 31, P S W Davo 31, F Douglas 31, J T Ongley 31, N Colburn 35, J Blain 35, E Shaw 35, B Spaulding 38, E E York 38, [illegible] Mabey 39, M S Brown 39, J A Kennedy 39, L L Leach 39, C Goodrich 39, B G Getchell 46, B J Spaulding 50, L L Leach 50, Peter Aké 50, E Bellows 55, D Kinsman 55, G W Sennis 55, G Dillabaugh 71, A F Servis 71, J Wilson 71, M P Lamprey 75, W S C 75, J Blain 79, D R and M S Mansfield 79, W Sheldon 82, B Spaulding 82, S F Mathews 82, Y Higgins 82, J Gregory 82, E Garland 82, P Alling 91, Julia Dodge 91, M Batchelor 91, E O Allen 91, S Hale 96, J Blain 96, W A Fenn 98, W Sheldon 98, 99, A F Servis 98, L Boutell 99, J H Harding 99, A McClure 99, Reliance K Wood 102, R Willard 102, J Blain 102, D. R. and M. S. Mansfield 103.

EDITORIAL.

A new tract....2
A suggestion....6
A worthy example....10
Avoid it....14
Absurdities of modern theology....42
Adulteration of food....50
A card....51
Advice to the oppressed....86
Armageddon....74
Above every other man....86
Ancona....90
Affairs in Italy....102

Be short....6
Battle of Magenta....62, 70
Breath of life....78
Books....95

Church in Boston....34
Christ's second coming....70
Catholics and the war....74
Campmeeting....94
Close of the volume....102

Day of publishing....2
Discussion at Newburyport....6
Discussion....6, 14, 22, 30
Diary Leaves....14, 66, 94
Discussion at Lewiston....84
Distribution of tracts....84
Demons doing their last work....98

Extra numbers....2
Erratum....2
Encouraging....10
Eternal misery of hell....14
England and France....14
European war....18
European war....46
Errata....58
Emphatic Diaglott....62

Fictitious names....2
Future life....18
Fables of infidelity....22
Feeling in Tuscany....78
France and England....90
Fast....94

Garibaldi....98
Great movement....74

Hungarians and the war....62

Interesting discussion....42
In the day....62
Improvement....70

Jewish officers in the French army....86

Kossuth's proclamation....90

Matt. 18: 10....6
My priest forbids it....14
Many thanks....34
Many shall run to and fro....62
Make her desolate....66

News....2
New Bedford....34
New tracts....95
Napoleon's designs....94
No paper week after next....102

Our heading....2
Our position and purpose....2
O, what waste!....26
Oswego city, N. Y....34
Our prospects....102

Portland Conf....2
Prayer meetings....10, 34
Poultney....10, 38, 58, 86, 90
Prepare war....10
Pauline theology....10
Protestantism in Europe....14
Putnam, Ct....22
Progress....22
Personality....70
Peace....90
Prospects in Europe....98
Practical Spiritualism....18
Pago-Protestantism....102
Peace footing of the French army....102

Quoting Scripture....10
Question....6
Query....30, 55, 82

Rome....48, 82
Religious aspect of the war....74

Salutatory....2
Sayings of the fathers....6
Stagnation of business....14
State of Europe....22
Strange times....42
State of affairs in Europe....54
Spiritualism....86
South America....94
Spiritualism....102

The grand conspiracy....6
" speechless guest....6
" "Voice"....6
" late revival....14
" deadly calm....14
Turkish perplexities....14
The Spirit...22, 26, 30, 34, 38, 42, 46, 50, 54, 58, 62, 66.
" rights of wrong....22
" tendencies of the war....70
" storm increases....78
" battle of Solferino....82
" beast that was, etc....86
" massacre at Perugia....90
" treaty of peace....94
" nations were angry....98
" [illegible]....74
" pope....94

Valuable books....6

Will children obtain immortality?....6
Why not seen before?....10
Wayside gleanings....26
War inevitable....38
Write plainly....50
War clouds....50
War news....54
Who are Spiritualists?....[illegible]

POETRY.

Alone in the dark world....[illegible]
All's for the best....[illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible]....[illegible]
[illegible]....[illegible]
[illegible] between time and eternity....[illegible]

Deliverance will come....[illegible]
Death....15
[illegible]....[illegible]
Evening hymn....80

God [illegible] for the sorrow....28
God is love....61
Go, labor on....17

Home....17
Hope of deliverance....40
Home....49
Hymn....100
Hattie....13

Increase our faith....28
Immortality....29
I [illegible]....72
I would not live alway....77

[illegible]....72
Keep on [illegible]....36

Lines....4
Languishing Zion....9
Lead me to the Rock....12
Lights and shades....12
Love your enemies....60
Lines on the death of a friend's child....64
Light ahead....66
Lines....76
Lines on the death of a brother....104

Morning....44
Marriage....[illegible]
My birth-place....60
My Bible....76
Morning Hymn....80
My pilgrimage....88
Music of ocean....93
Memento....[illegible]
Mad river....104

On the death of Lucy Wentworth....25
O, who would seek?....29
On the death of Mrs. M. Paine....40

Passing away....49
" "....88
Pen pictures of Bible scenes....92, 100

Return of Spring....26
Returning Spring....60

Stick together....16
Stand up for Jesus....20
Sacred love....68

The good we might do....4
The christian's warfare....5
Tread the thorns down....7
The shining shore....8
" law of love....8
" christian mother bereft....11
" good wife....13
Trial of faith....20
The wise shall understand....21
" land of rest....32
" christian's faith....33
Thou wilt come again....36
The storm....37
" stream of life....40
" minister's chastening....40
'Tis sweet to be at rest....44
The gift of God....44
" land of rest....48
" christian's hope realized....52
" return of the blue-bird....64
" groaning creation....64
To the Crisis....65
The beautiful world....69
" blessed hope....72
" better land....73
Trust in Christ....77
The Eliot school trouble....84
" voyage of life....85
Time is passing....101
Truth and freedom....104

What is earth?....20

Your redemption draweth nigh....60

HYGIENE.

An important fact....73

Breathing damp air....16
Bowel complaints....96

Cure of bronchitis....16
Cultivation of the voice....72
Consumption....80
Cholera....88

Dangers of spring....48

Eating between meals....24
Exercising....32
Education of the lungs....40
Eye sight....40

Fruits as food....32
Fever and ague, and its cure....48
Forcing the mind....96

Heart disease....56
How to sleep well....56
How to enjoy health....64
Hot bread....88
How often we are renewed....104

Important information....88

Loss of voice....88
Loose bowels....104

Mental labor....24
Music in a sick room....72

Object of eating....48

Sleeping together....48
Spring diseases....56
Summer sours....72

Twenty reasons for dropping tobacco....8
The effects of tobacco....80
Transference of vitality....96

Uses of ice....64
Useful family receipts....104

Walking and pure air....24
Woman in the garden....56
Water cure....72
Ways of shortening life....80

READING FOR YOUTH.

A child and her teacher....20
A word about microscopes....28
An item for boys....28
A beautiful incident....44
About ants....52
An intemperate father....60
A word to boys and girls....68
A childlike spirit....84
A cracked commandment....92
Are you kind to your mother?....92
A dog story....100
A lesson from the birds....44

Be kind....12
Be kind to your father....100

Christ....36

Did he get in?....92

Forgiveness....52

Good manners....100

How to overcome evil....86

Ill manners at home....12

Morning prayer....84

Obedience....84

Politeness....52
Prayer....60
Planting a crop for God....60

Story of a cow....28

The almond blossom....12
" bird in the snow....20
" wasp and the bee....36
" one leaf....36
" a boy that obeyed God....44
" little boy and his mother....60
" prayer of faith....60
" tolling bell....68
To the young....68
The boy who conquered....76
The singing student....100

When the angry passions rise....60
Young Samuel's call....92

OBITUARY.

Rebecca Woolworth 3, Lorinda H Beals 3, Eld. D E Moulton 3, Sarah A Tyler 7, Enoch Merrill 7, Lucinda D Tyler 7, William Ainsworth 7, Chas. H Porter 7, Laura A Crowley 11, Mary Palmer 11, John W Duke 11, Mary A Greg 11, Mrs. Amos Kingsbury 15, Richard Bean 15, Wm. S Griffin 15, Henry Knox 19, Lucy E Currier [illegible] Stanley 42, [illegible] Walker 42, [illegible] A True 43, [illegible] Arnold 43, Albert W George 43, [illegible] Buxton 47, Hannah Bragg 47, [illegible] Wagner 51, John Wakeman 51, [illegible] H Dunn 51, Nancy Kirk 51, [illegible] 55, Lydia [illegible] Pinkham 55, Widow B [illegible] 55, [illegible] 59, Susannah H Raymond 79, Anne E Raymond 79, Lambert A Pelton 79, Alice S Seavey 79, Chas. W Putcher 83, Children of Jos. T. Howland 83, Maria M Smith 87, Mina Stone 87, Eddie Leathe 87, Leo W Almard 95, [illegible] Howard 95, [illegible] B Clark 95, A Judson Marvin 95, Abbie J Rogers 99, Charlotte M Needham 103.

MARRIAGES.

Clark H Morgan—Lizzie C McFall 3, Jos. Ramsey—Augusta H Piper 31, Burton French—Eliza O Davis 31, C H Fosdick—Harriet Dana 39, Chas. M Matthews—Frances E Morgan 67, Warren P Morgan—Maria Miles 67, Henry A Waugh—Lovina A Milliken 67.

☞ "Pen Pictures" in last week's issue should have been No. 5 instead of "7," and should have preceded "No. 6."

Obituary Notices.

Died in Westford, Ia., July 26th, 1859, Sister Charlotte M., wife of Bro. B. C. Needham, aged thirty-seven years.

Bro. and Sr. N. were formerly from Addison, Vt., and having embraced the christian religion in their youthful days, continued to live a consistent christian life until the Spring of 1855, when they learned in De Kalb, Illinois, (having removed to Ill. some seven years previous,) from the lips of our beloved and faithful Bro. S. Chapman, the glorious principles of the blessed hope, and the evidence of the speedy consummation of the same, which they heartily embraced. In the Spring of '56, they came to this place, where they still maintained their integrity in relation to those glorious principles. Our dear Sister fell calmly asleep in Jesus, leaving her companion and a christian daughter, in charge of a sweet, little sister of two days old, and also two sons, to mourn the loss of one of the most patient companions and mothers any family ever lost. She was severly attacked last March with a lung fever, since which time she suffered greatly from an affection of the lungs and other consumptive complaints. As we stood by her bed side, and saw her grappling with the monster death, we were constrained to exclaim—What desolation disease and death make in the earth! But thank God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! The tempter's cruel power will soon be broken; death shall soon be destroyed, and God's little ones shall speedily come forth again to a blessed immortality.

A funeral discourse was given by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

O weeping group! with mournful tread,
With streaming eye and drooping head,
Enter your sad and lonely home,
So desolate and gloomy grown,
Since death, with cold, relentless hand,
Has torn one from your household band!

A cherished form has left your door,
A form that ne'er will shade it more;
An eye is closed that always smiled
Upon you with affection mild;
A voice is hushed that used to greet—
A mother's heart has ceased to beat.

But see! beyond the falling tears
A beam of glorious light appears.
It gently beckons you away
From sorrow's dark and gloomy way,
And points the heart with grief o'erborne,
Unto the resurrection morn!

H. H. Janes.

Pittsford, Butler Co., Iowa.

Herald please copy.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamer Saxonia from Southampton the 14th.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says the Sardinian Minister of Foreign Affairs had declared to Count Reiset, the French Commissioner, that Sardinia could not accede to the wishes of France so far as to make efforts to have the Grand Duke recalled, and that it would be preposterous to expect Piedmont to do so, contrary to the wishes and interests of Italy.

The Paris Constitutionnel of Wednesday has an article from M. de Cassagnac, entitled "Ingratitude of Italy," in which the Italians are reminded of the immense obstacles which beset the empire at the beginning of the war, but which were faced and surmounted by his single will, and he reminds Italy of these obstacles. He continues to show, if need be, the enormity of forgetfulness.

If the Emperor persisted, it would, he says, have cost tedious sieges, fresh battles, new loans, immediate war on the Rhine, troubles in Central Italy, insurrections in Hungary and elsewhere, which it would have been necessary to permit and even to encourage. In a word, it would have cost the abandonment of the principles of order, and the adoption of revolutionary principles, agitation renewed for the present, without speaking of a possible reverse of fortune. The article concludes with the following menace: "Italy must know well that if the powerful hand which is extended for a moment over it is withdrawn, neither the fine speeches of the English Parliament nor the sterile sympathies of the liberal party in Europe would hinder Austria from dominating again Italy, and this time from Turin to Messina."

It is again stated that Piedmont formally declines entering the Italian Confederacy if Austria forms a part of it.

The Times Vienna correspondence says the Prussian note of the 23 of August, will probably put an end to the discussion between Austria and Prussia, as it is pretty clearly proved that the Emperor Napoleon made a statement at Villafranca which was not perfectly correct.

The Journal de St. Petersburg also declares itself empowered to state that not only were no bases for a mediation agreed to, but not even discussed.

Two Days Later.—Per steamship Asia.

It is reported that an attempt had been made to poison Garibaldi.

It is said France is intriguing to restore the Grand Dukes.

The Zurich Conference will assemble on the 8th inst.

A bill, creating a Naval Reserve of 30,000 men, was [illegible] through the [illegible]

[illegible] Great Britain [illegible] August [illegible] 15th.

The [illegible] of the [illegible] of August [illegible]

"Many volunteers from Piedmont, and still more from Genoa, hasten to swell the ranks of the 30,000 combatants which the 'allied States of Central Italy' have already under arms. Strange to say, the Italians begin to put their trust in the sword, in spite of the fearful odds with which the two framers of the Peace of Villafranca may choose to enforce their stipulations. 'With 50,000 bayonets,' they say, 'our rights will appear tolerably clear to Europe; with 100,000 they will seem clearer; with 150,000 they will appear most clear.' Up to 50,000 the bayonets will shortly muster, and they will follow the lead of a man of firm and even temper—Garibaldi."

FOUR DAYS LATER.

The Congress of Zurich met on the 8th, according to previous announcement; but nothing had transpired of its proceedings thus far. Sardinia was represented there.

The Emperor Napoleon was on a visit to the camp at Chalons, witnessing the maneuvers of the troops.

The Paris Constitutionnel ascribes the proposed fortification of Antwerp to the influence of England, who, foreseeing war with France, wishes to provide herself with an intrenched camp in Belgium.

The number of troops from Italy to march through Paris on the 14th, is 70,000. The procession will last seven hours.

GERMANY.

The relations between Austria and Prussia almost assume the dimensions of a regular rupture, and were regarded as dangerous to the smaller German States, which were already looking towards France for protection.

The Opinione of Turin says 50,000 French troops will remain in Italy, provisionally, owing to the dangerous state of some of the provinces.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE WAR.

The Emperor Louis Napoleon publicly expresses to the Austrian Envoy at his Court his regret that the two governments are not on better terms—which leads to mutual armaments—January 1, 1859.

Events growing daily more threatening, it is announced that England has sent Lord Cowley on a peace mission to Vienna, February 22.

The announcement is made that a Peace Congress will be held, March 19.

All hopes of peace are quenched by the news that Austria has insisted upon the disarmament of Sardinia alone, as a condition precedent to any peace negotiations. April 8.

Austrian and Sardinian forces having assembled in the neighborhood of the Ticino, Count Gyulai forwards a peremptory summons to the King of Sardinia to disarm within three days on penalty of war, April 22

Victor Emmanuel having returned an indignant refusal, is invested with dictatorial powers. April 23

Lord Malmesbury issues a final proposition for negotiation—which is accepted by Austria and rejected by France—April 25.

French troops begin to land at Genoa, April 25.

Tuscany throws off its governments and declares for Victor Emmanuel, April 25

The Austrian army, in three divisions, crossed the Ticino, April 29

A detachment of Austrians, in attempting to cross the Po at Frassinetto, is repulsed by the Sardinians, May 3.

Louis Napoleon leaves Paris, May 10, reaches Genoa on the 12th, and joins the army on the 14th.

The battle of Montebello is fought between the outposts of the two armies, the French, under Gen. Forey, compelling the Austrians to withdraw, May 20.

Garibaldi, at the head of 6000 Italian volunteers, crosses the Ticino, May, 23.

Garibaldi fights his way into the city of Como, May 27

The battle of Palestro is fought by about 12,000 Sardinians under their King, and 20,000 Austrians under Gen. Zobel—the latter withdrawing—May 30.

The battle of Magenta is fought, in which 100,000 allies under Gen. McMahon rout 120,000 Austrians under Gen. Gyulai, June 4th

The Emperor Napoleon and King Victor Emmanuel enter Milan, June 8.

The battle of Melegnano is fought, the Austrians under Benedick being driven from their position by the allies under D'Hilliers, June 9

The battle of Solferino is fought, under the command of the two Emperors, by nearly 400,000 troops, the Austrians being compelled to retire, June 24.

The Sardinians begin to invest the fortress of Peschiera, June 28.

The allies cross the Mincio, June 30.

The French Emperor takes up his headquarters at Valliggio, on the east bank of the Mincio, July 3.

The armistice between the belligerents, to last till Aug 15th, is signed July 8th.

Peace between the two Emperors agreed upon, July 11.

☞ A letter from Jerusalem announces that the cupola of the Holy Sepulchre is falling to ruins. A subscription has been opened to repair it.

☞ The population of the United States increases one million a year, or two thousand every day.

Notices, &c.

☞ Bro. Edwin Burnham will commence a protracted meeting in Woodstock, New Brunswick, on Friday evening, after the second Sunday in September, and from that time will labor one month in the Provinces, as the friends may arrange.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for the next session of our State conference, it becomes my duty to make the inquiry, Where shall our next conference be holden? Will brethren who may desire the meeting convened with them, please inform me at their earliest convenience, that I may be able to fix on the time and place, and give seasonable notice.

Should there be a choice in regard to the time of the meeting, please name it; but the usual time is the early part of October.

T. M. Preble,
Clerk of Conference.

East Weare, Aug. 20, 1859.

Notice.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will preach in Reading, Mich., on Friday, Sept. 9th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. A. N. Seymour will make arrangements as will best suit the people.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will preach in Dayton, Mich., Sept. 18th. Buchanan, Mich., Sept. 25th.

Notice.

The conference in Warren Co., Ill., must be deferred. We will give timely notice [illegible] Others [illegible]

[illegible]

The Maine (Adjourned) Conference [illegible] Will meet in Yarmouth, [illegible] at 2 o'clock, P. M. with Bro. York's church, and continue over the Sabbath. Come, brethren, let us make one more rally, unitedly, and bring the forces into the field, and fight earnestly the battles of the Lord. Come, let party feelings and personal interests be merged in the one united, determined, active effort to go on in God's strength in this work. Come! all who can. Let some one of the brethren come from every place, if they can, and if not, let letters be sent to Bro. E. R. York, or to me, expressive of your interest and determination. Send pledges, or statements of promise to put in your mites to make up a sum to send the gospel every where we can. Come, praying that God may bless the effort, and give us wisdom and grace. Let those who stay at home pray also, that this may be an important meeting for the cause in all parts of Maine. Those who have no money can pray, and God can hear.

Passengers coming on the Grand Trunk R. R., will stop at Yarmouth Junction, 1-2 a mile from Bro. York's. Come the first day if you can, but come!

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Richmond, Me., Aug. 17, 1859.

Campmeeting.

There will be a Second Advent Campmeeting in Harmony Grove, Westford, Mass., upon the old spot, to commence on Tuesday, Sept. 6, '59, and continue over the Sabbath. This is a delightful location, convenient, and within five minutes' walk from Centre Depot. The object of this meeting is the saving of men by the preaching of the gospel in its adaptation to the present state of the world. We hope to see a rally of the scattered flock that shall come to this meeting full of love, faith and zeal, to work in the Lord's vineyard. Let them that are able, help the poor to this feast. Those who wish, can provide their own board, and bring their whole family with little expense. Bring tents and bedding. Tents and board will be provided on the ground, for all who wish, on reasonable terms.

The Rail Road Company have promised to transport from Boston to this meeting and back, for half price, providing fifty persons come from that vicinity.

Let all be awake and prepare for the meeting.

L. Boutell, Groton,
M. W. Corliss, Lowell,
J. D. Brown, Providence,
Josiah Voss, Westford,
Committee.

Savoy Campmeeting.

This meeting will be holden on land owned by Noah Mirick, about three miles north of Savoy Hollow, commencing Sept. 5th, and continuing over the following Lord's day. We invite all to come and labor for the salvation of souls. Board and horse keeping will be furnished on reasonable terms.

E. Healy,
Committee, R. Starks,
E. M'Culloch.

☞ The Lord willing there will be a public union prayer meeting held in Holden, Me., Saturday, Sept. 17th, at half-past nine, A. M. Preaching on the day following.

Israel Damman.

CAMPMEETING

at Wilbraham, August 29th.

Our annual feast of tabernacles will commence the 29th of August, on the old ground in Wilbraham, and hold one week. We hope for the best, the most successful and profitable gathering of the Lord's people that has ever been held there. The objects of the meeting, and the wishes of the committee with reference to its character, have been fully and well expressed in Bro. E. Burnham's campmeeting letter of last week.

Let us all lay aside the weights—harness for the battle in the panoply of God, and come up to certain victory. Let us all pray much and come with the fire burning in our hearts, and Wilbraham mountain will never be forgotten.

Abundant facilities for boarding and horse keeping at reasonable rates. Also tent room for those who are not otherwise provided for.

The arrangements for fare to the campmeeting are from Worcester East and from Pittsfield and North Adams West to the camp-ground, at one-half fare or one fare for both ways. Also the same on the Connecticut R. R. Road from Vernon or Keene, N. H. The Western R. Road will issue tickets for the week, but those who come over the Conn. R. Road, will pay to Springfield, and from there to Wilbraham, and returning, will receive a pass from the Committee of the meeting. No charge for baggage from any point.

Let it be understood that full fare is paid one way from all points above named on the Western and Conn. R. Roads, and no charge for returning.

☞ The fare from Boston is reduced half,—the tickets being $2.50 for going and returning,—good from Aug. 29th to Sept. 5th, inclusive.

☞ Those going from Boston will obtain their tickets of Bro. Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street.

Hiram Munger,
Randl. E. Ladd, } Committee.
Geo. T. Adams.

Ohio Conference.

The Third Annual Conference of the churches in Ohio will be held at Marysville, Union Co., commencing at one o'clock P. M. on Thursday the 8th Sept., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministers and lay brethren of this and adjoining states are affectionately invited to attend. It is hoped that all the churches of Ohio will be represented. The brethren of Marysville and vicinity will see that adequate provisions are made for the accommodation of all who can make it convenient to attend; and as the committee think they ought not to be further burdened, take the liberty of recommending the several churches to provide their delegates with traveling expenses. The place is accessible in different directions by Rail Road.

Come, one and all, panoplied, not like the warriors of earth, with the weapons of destruction, but having on the entire christian armor, with hearts imbued richly with the spirit of prayer, love and faith, that we may yet, if needs be, a little longer wield the sword of the Spirit, which is mighty, even to the pulling down and destruction of all earthly and oppressive dominions. Let us come thus armed, dear brothers and sisters, and our meeting will be one of profit to us all, and God will be glorified.

G. W. Ohbery,
E. R. Southwick, } Committee.
P. Alling.

Norwalk, O., July 20, 1859.

P. S. Brethren from abroad coming to this Conference either by Railroad or otherwise, will call on Brother Patridge, where further provisions will be made for their entertainment.

E. R. Southwick.

☞ The next Quarterly Conference of Western Central Maine has been invited and will meet in South Livermore, Sept. 1st, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We hope all the ministers of the quarterly conference will be there, (and ministers from other parts of the State are cordially invited,) and as many brothers and sisters as can consistently come. Come with faith in God, ready to work in his cause for the salvation of souls. [illegible] Silas Timberlake, Addison [illegible]

Appointments.

[illegible] Church.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. J. P. Cook will preach in Boston (Chapman Hall)....Sunday, Aug. 28th

R. V. Lyon appoints to preach in Abington, Ct.,....Aug. 28th
Scotland, Ct., (at Bro. Rider's)....Aug. 29th
Mansfield, Ct., (at Bro. Abbie's)....Aug. 30th
Southbridge, Mass., (school house) Sept. 7th
Axe Factory, Ct., (Sunday, 10 1-2 A. M.)....Sept. 11th

Eld. M. Chandler will preach in Danielsonville, Ct.,....Aug. 28th

J. K. Bellows will preach in Savoy, Mass., Aug. 30th and 31st, and Sept. 1st, as Bro. Mirick may arrange.
Plainfield Pond, Mass.,....Sept. 4th

Providence permitting, I will be at Springfield, Sunday, Aug. 28th. Shall attend the campmeeting at Savoy.

Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 18th and 25th, and during the intervening week.

H. Pratt.

Bro. Edwin Burnham will preach in Danielsonville, Conn, the second Sunday in Sept.

Eld. A. Ross appoints to preach in
South Woodstock, Vt....Aug. 25th and 26th
North Springfield, Vt....Sunday, Aug. 28th
South Vernon, Vt....Aug. 30th

Bro. J. K. Bellows will preach in
North Adams, Mass....Aug. 28th

I will preach, if the Lord will, at
Portland, Me....Aug. 28th
J. COUCH.

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in
Goshen, Mass....Sunday, Sept. 4th
Will attend the campmeeting at Savoy the week following.

Bro. W. S. Campbell will meet the church in Springfield, Aug. 28th. R. E. LADD.

The Lord willing, I shall preach in Stockbridge, Vt., first Sunday in Sept. O. D. GIBSON.

T W Piper will preach in
Madison....Sept. 4th
Sandwich....Sept. 11th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Eld. J. Hemenway's P. O. address, is Worcester, Mass.

My address is Boston, Mass., care of J. P. Jewett & Co. C. F. Hudson.

Cash Receipts.

G Humphrey 208 $1.24, L Ring 208 80 cts., E Skillens 208, 24cts., Geo. Henry, for Collinsville Brn. 204 $7.50, Bro. Greaves 230, 99cts.

Al. Allen 208, Ap. Moore 208—50 cts. each.

G R Baker 234, C W Brewster 226, M Marshall 230, D S Lyons 224, M Webber 208, Jos. Davis 208, J Marshall 208, L Osgood 208, J Whitton 208, C W Martin 237, H Brown 244, Wm. L Kelly 216, T R Winn 193, E Grinnell 234, E Sanderson 224, W Sterling 200, M S Grinnell 234, N J Winchell 230, M D Richardson 208, G H Waterhouse 221, B E Wetherbee 226, L B Watkins 223, C H Hopkins 234, G S Gates 230, J E Lloyd 212, S Butts 230, S Follansbee 225,—$1.00 each.

J Daman 214, T Williams 182, R W Wilson 239, C Vanderbeck 246, V R Matthews 268, T G Newman 253, C Kimball 242, D Woodside 230,—$2.00 each.

For books and tracts—O D Gibson $2.00, I C Wellcome $5.00, E R York $6.10, J P Lougee 24 cts., A Harrington $1,00, T Williams 12cts., J W Everson $1.06, B Perham 32 cts., E Phelps $1.00, J Buswell 12 cts., G W Rathburn 11cts., T White 15cts, W L Stroud 36cts B Greaves 51cts., C H Hopkins 50cts., W Harriman 15cts.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruah and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus: does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single, $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred; Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 50 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 10 [illegible] 2 cts.

The Rights of Women, or [illegible]

[illegible]

We [illegible] it necessary [illegible] the number [illegible]

Life and [illegible] Margaret [illegible] connected [illegible] by [illegible] postage [illegible]

The [illegible] or Christ the [illegible] the Scriptures, and [illegible] day. Every one should [illegible] per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. [illegible] ing incidents [illegible] Price 40 cents [illegible]

Foster's Lectures [illegible] $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 [illegible]

Son of God, by H. Grew. [illegible] single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance, or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. [illegible]—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $3.00 per hundred, 3 cts. single. Postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following Works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

1.–The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a History of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 Vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.–The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.–Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 18mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—pos. 8 cts.

4.–The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.–Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.–Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.–Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hund.—post. 2c.

8.–The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 18mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1–Church not in Darkness; 2–The Three Worlds; 3–The Last Days; 4–Plain Truths, by Hastings. 5–Noah, his Age and Ours; 6–Desire of all Nations; 7–It is Done; by John Cumming. 8–A Voice of Warning; 9–New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10–*Ancient Landmarks; 11–State of the Dead; by Milton. 12–Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1–Future Punishment; by Grew. 2–Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3–Outline of the scope of Man; by Lenfest. 4–Key of Truth; 5–Man's Future State; by Sheldon. –6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1–The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2–The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1–Olive Leaves, separate; 2–Ancient Landmarks separate; 3–Forty Questions on Immortality. 4–Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us receive them. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much as [illegible] cents worth, as packages of tracts [illegible] ounces or more go cheaper than [illegible] Those who buy books to sell will receive [illegible] liberal discount. The poor can have them, [illegible] sending stamps to pay the postage [illegible] free, poor also.

Address [illegible]

For sale also by [illegible] W. Young, 138 William street N. Y.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated [illegible] The [illegible] contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the [illegible] by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church [illegible] ry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning [illegible] Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are [illegible] that can be separated for [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another [illegible] Resting Place; three, My Father [illegible] Love; five, Abundant Grace [illegible] Hastings. Just the thing [illegible] classes of saints and sinners [illegible]

Glad Tidings: or Bible [illegible] and sin are to end in the [illegible] struction of wicked [illegible] ment. All texts on Future [illegible] and arranged. By [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms [illegible] God the Father, the Kingdom of [illegible] of the Lord Jesus Christ [illegible] as it was in [illegible] Preble. Price [illegible] 10 cts. single [illegible]

☞ The [illegible] of our agent in [illegible] Summer [illegible]

" tract fund again.........74, 86, 90, 94
" pattern [illegible]...........
" fourth.......................
Tracts for the West............
Tracts.........................
The great controversy..........
" campmeetings.................
" Apostles' twelve thrones.....
" earth [illegible]............
True divinity of the Son.......
The truths we advocate.........
" nations are angry............
" horrors of war...............97
" [illegible].................
" Sabbath......................100
" Golden Rule..................
To believe, if possible, the elect..
The [illegible] of the north...
Tendencies of the times........101
The stock overpowering the graft..
" glorious prospect............104
" object of "Sweet Home".......104
" true test of love............104
To live........................104
Unconscious faithfulness.......
Verily I say unto thee.........30
Words of wisdom................17
What amendments are needful....20
What hath God wrought!.........20
What must I do to be saved?....22
Watchfulness...................
Who is wrong?..................50
When education begins..........56
Words of Jesus.................60
What Jesus did for us..........60
Who is right?..................65
What of the night?.............65
Work should end with life......75
Words of Christ................78
Waiting........................95
Woman's position in the church.....97, 104
Why go to campmeeting?.........98
Wilbraham campmeeting..........99
Ye are the light of the world..82

LETTERS.

J T Dixon 5, E J C 5, R G Bailey 7, J Blain 11, J T Ongley 11, M Howard 12, L L Howard 12, E Miller 12, G Russell 12, D D Chaffee 13, Bro. R—— 13, I C Wellcome 13, M L Pratt 15, Bro. S—— 15, J Baker 15, W Pratt 15, P Tandy 20, W Pratt 20, M P L 20, H F Carpenter 23, O D Gibson 23, L M Collins 24, L H 24, F Douglas 25, I Damman 27, J B Dodge 27, A N Seymour 27, J Wilson 27, G W Chisman 27, L A D 31, J E Stevens 31, J H Jacobs 31, P Woodward 31, P S W Davo 31, F Douglas 31, J T Ongley 31, N Colburn 35, J Blain 35, E Shaw 35, B Spaulding 38, E E York 38, S B Mabey 39, M S Brown 39, J A Kennedy 39, L L Leach 39, C Goodrich 39, B G Getchell 46, B J Spaulding 50, L L Leach 50, Peter Axe 50, E Kellows 55, D Kinsman 58, G W Bemis 58, G Dillabaugh 71, A F Servis 71, J Wilson 71, M P Lamprey 75, W S C 75, J Blain 79, D R and M S Mansfield 79, W Sheldon 82, B Spaulding 82, S F Mathews 82, Y Higgins 82, J Gregory 82, E Garland 82, P Alling 91, Julia Dodge 91, M Batcheler 91, E O Allen 91, S Hale 95, J Blain 96, W A Fenn 98, W Sheldon 98, 99, A F Servis 98, I, Boutell 99, J H Harding 99, A McClure 99, Reliance E Wood 102, R Willard 102, J Blain 102, D. R. and M. S. Mansfield 102.

EDITORIAL.

A new tract......................2
A suggestion.....................6
A worthy example.................10
Avoid it.........................14
Absurdities of modern theology...42
Adulteration of food.............50
A card...........................51
Advice to the oppressed..........66
Armageddon.......................74
Above every other man............86
Ancona...........................90
Affairs in Italy.................102
Be short.........................2
Battle of Magenta................62, 70
Breath of life...................78
Books............................
Church in Boston.................34
Christ's second coming...........70
Catholics and the war............74
Campmeeting.....................94
Close of the volume..............102
Day of publishing................2
Discussion at Newburyport........6
Discussion...............6, 14, 22, 30
Diary Leaves.............14, 66, 94
Discussion at Lewiston...........34
Distribution of tracts...........54
Demons doing their last work.....98
Extra numbers....................2
Erratum..........................2
Encouraging......................10
Eternal misery of hell...........14
England and France...............14
European war.....................18
European war.....................46
Errata...........................58
Emphatic Diaglott................62
Fictitious names.................2
Future life......................18
Fables of infidelity.............22
Feeling in Tuscany...............78
France and England...............90
Fast.............................98
Garibaldi........................98
Great movement...................74
Hungarians and the war...........62
Interesting discussion...........42
In the day.......................62
Improvement......................70
Jewish officers in the French army....86
Kossuth's proclamation...........90
Matt. 18: 10.....................6
My priest forbids it.............14
Many thanks......................34
Many shall run to and fro........62
Make her desolate................66
News.............................2
New Bedford......................34
New tracts.......................95
Napoleon's designs...............94
No paper week after next.........102
Our heading......................2
Our position and purpose.........2
O, what waste!...................26
Oswego city, N. Y................54
Our prospects....................102
Portland Conf....................2
Prayer meetings..............10, 34
Poultney.............10, 38, 58, 86, 90
Prepare war......................10
Pauline theology.................10
Protestantism in Europe..........14
Putnam, Ct.......................22
Progress.........................22
Personality......................70
Peace............................90
Prospects in Europe..............98
Practical Spiritualism...........18
Pago-Protestantism...............102
Peace footing of the French army.....102
Quoting Scripture................10
Question.........................6
Query........................30, 42, 62
Rome.........................46, 82
Religious aspect of the war......74
Salutatory.......................2
Sayings of the fathers...........6
Stagnation of business...........14
State of Europe..................22
Strange times....................42
State of affairs in Europe.......54
Spiritualism.....................86
South America....................94
Spiritualism.....................102
The grand conspiracy.............2
" speechless guest...............6
" "Voice"........................6
" late revival...................14
" deadly calm....................14
Turkish perplexities.............14
The Spirit...22, 26, 30, 34, 38, 42, 46, 50, 54, 58, 62, 66.
" rights of wrong................22
" tendencies of the war..........70
" storm increases................78
" battle of Solferino.............82
" beast that was, etc............86
" massacre at Perugia............90
" treaty of peace................94
" nations were angry.............98
" [illegible]....................74
" pope...........................94
Valuable books...................6
Will children obtain immortality?....6
Why not seen before?.............10
Wayside gleanings................26
War inevitable...................38
Write plainly.....................50
War clouds.......................74
War news.........................82
Who are Spiritualists?...........98

POETRY.

Alone in this dark world.........34
All's for the best...............
Awake and sing...................45
A letter in verse................
A thanksgiving...................
A Christmas [illegible]..........62
Amidst [illegible]...............
Also [illegible].................
A [illegible]....................
Contrast between time and eternity....
Come quickly.....................41
Courage one another..............
Come, Lord.......................
Deliverance will come!...........64
Death............................15
Early hopes......................54
Evening hymn.....................80
God provideth for the morrow.....28
God is love......................61
Go, labor on.....................17
Home.............................17
Hope of deliverance..............40
Home.............................49
Hymn.............................100
Hattie...........................18
Increase our faith...............28
Immortality......................29
[illegible]......................72
I would not live alway...........77
Jesus is [illegible].............72
Keep cool........................36
Lines............................4
Languishing Zion.................9
Lead me to the Rock..............12
Lights and shades................12
Love your enemies................20
Lines on the death of a friend's child,....64
Light ahead,.....................80
Lines,...........................76
Lines on the death of a brother,........104
Morning,.........................44
Mercies,.........................58
My birth-place,..................60
My Bible,........................76
Morning Hymn,....................80
My pilgrimage,...................88
Music of ocean,..................93
Memento,.........................49
Mad river,.......................104
On the death of Lucy Wentworth,..25
O, who would seek?...............29
On the death of Mrs. M. Paine,...40
Passing away,....................49
" "..............................88
Pen pictures of Bible scenes,....92, 100
Return of Spring,................26
Returning Spring,................60
Stick together,..................16
Stand up for Jesus,..............20
Sacred love,.....................68
The good we might do,............4
The christian's warfare,.........5
Tread the thorns down,...........7
The shining shore,...............8
" law of love,...................8
" christian mother bereft,.......11
" good wife,.....................13
Trial of faith,..................20
The wise shall understand,.......21
" land of rest,..................32
" christian's faith,.............33
Thou wilt come again,............36
The storm,.......................37
" stream of life,................40
" minister's chastening,.........40
'Tis sweet to be at rest,........44
The gift of God,.................44
" land of rest,..................44
" christian's hope realized,......52
" return of the blue-bird,.......64
" groaning creation,.............64
To the Crisis,...................65
The beautiful world,.............69
" blessed hope,..................72
" better land,...................73
Trust in Christ,.................77
The Eliot school trouble,........85
" voyage of life,................88
Time is passing,.................101
Truth and freedom,...............104
What is earth?...................30
Your redemption draweth nigh.....60

HYGIENE.

An important fact,...............72
Breathing damp air,..............16
Bowel complaints,................96
Cure of bronchitis,..............16
Cultivation of the voice,........72
Consumption,.....................80
Cholera,.........................88
Dangers of spring,...............48
Eating between meals,............24
Exercising,......................32
Education of the lungs,..........40
Eye sight,.......................40
Fruits as food,..................32
Fever and ague, and its cure,....48
Forcing the mind,................96
Heart disease,...................56
How to sleep well,...............56
How to enjoy health,.............64
Hot bread,.......................88
How often we are renewed,........104
Important information,...........88
Loss of voice,...................88
Loose bowels,....................104
Mental labor,....................24
Music in a sick room,............72
Object of eating,................48
Sleeping together,...............48
Spring diseases,.................56
Summer sours,....................72
Twenty reasons for dropping tobacco,....8
The effects of tobacco,..........80
Transference of vitality,........96
Uses of ice,.....................64
Useful family receipts,..........104
Walking and pure air,............24
Women in the garden,.............56
Water cure,......................72
Ways of shortening life,.........80

READING FOR YOUTH.

A child and her teacher,.........20
A word about microscopes,........28
An item for boys,................28
A beautiful incident,............44
About ants,......................52
An intemperate father,...........60
A word to boys and girls,........68
A childlike spirit,..............84
A cracked commandment,...........92
Are you kind to your mother?.....92
A dog story,.....................100
A lesson from the birds,.........44
Be kind,.........................12
Be kind to your father,..........100
Christ,..........................36
Did he get in?...................92
Forgiveness,.....................52
Good manners,....................100
How to overcome evil,............86
Ill manners at home,.............12
Morning prayer,..................84
Obedience,.......................24
Politeness,......................52
Prayer,..........................60
Planting a crop for God,.........60
Story of a cow,..................24
The almond blossom,..............12
" bird in the snow,..............20
" wasp and the bee,..............36
" one leaf,......................36
" a boy that obeyed God,.........44
" little boy and his mother,.....60
" prayer of faith,...............60
" tolling bell,..................68
To the young,....................68
The boy who conquered,...........76
The singing student,.............100
When the angry passions rise,....60
Young Samuel's call,.............92

OBITUARY.

Rebecca Woolworth 3, Lorinda H Beals 3, Eld. D E Moulton 3, Sarah A Fyler 7, Enoch Merrill 7, Lucinda D Tyler 7, William Ainsworth 7, Chas. H Porter 7, Laura A Crowley 11, Mary Paine 11, John W Dyke 11, Mary A Gray 11, Mrs. Amos Kingsbury 15, Richard Bean 15, Wm. S Griffin 15, Henry Knox 19, Lucy E Currier 23, Sam. Raymond 23, Children of Morris Day 23, M P Baker 27, A W Reynolds 27, Mary E Wormwood 31, Emma S Jordan 35, Albert L Hatchett 35, Bainbridge 39, Mariah A Raymond 39, Betsey [illegible] 39, Ephraim Walker 42, Sarah A True 43, Melville Arnold 43, Albert W George 43, E L Buxton 47, Hannah Briggs 47, J D Wagner 51, John Wakeman 51, George H Dunn 51, Nancy Kirk 51, [illegible] 55, Lydia P Pinkham 55, Widow B Lloyd 55, Sarah J Foster 59, Susannah H Raymond 79, Anne E Raymond 79, Lambert A Felton 79, Alice S Seavey 79, Chas. W Perkins 83, Children of Jos. T Howland 83, Maria M Smith 87, Miss Stone 87, Eddie Leathe 87, Lee W Elmore 95, Jane Howard 95, Sami. B Clark 95, A Judson Marvin 95, Abbie J Rogers 99, Charlotte M Needham 103.

MARRIAGES.

Clark H Morgan—Lizzie C McFall 3, Jos. Ramsey—Augusta H Piper 31, Burton French—Eliza C Davis 31, C H Fostick—Harriet Dana 39, Chas. M Matthews—Frances E Morgan 67, Warren P Morgan—Maria Miles 67, Henry A Waugh—Lovina A Milliken 67.

☞ "Pen Pictures" in last week's issue should have been No. 5 instead of "7," and should have preceded "No. 6."

Obituary Notices.

Died in Westford, Ia., July 26th, 1859, Sister Charlotte M., wife of Bro. B. C. Needham, aged thirty-seven years.

Bro. and Sr. N. were formerly from Addison, Vt., and having embraced the christian religion in their youthful days, continued to live a consistent christian life until the Spring of 1855, when they learned in De Kalb, Illinois, (having removed to Ill. some seven years previous,) from the lips of our beloved and faithful Bro. S. Chapman, the glorious principles of the blessed hope, and the evidence of the speedy consummation of the same, which they heartily embraced. In the Spring of '56, they came to this place, where they still maintained their integrity in relation to those glorious principles. Our dear Sister fell calmly asleep in Jesus, leaving her companion and a christian daughter, in charge of a sweet little sister of two days old, and also two sons, to mourn the loss of one of the most patient companions and mothers any family ever lost. She was severly attacked last March with a lung fever, since which time she suffered greatly from an affection of the lungs and other consumptive complaints. As we stood by her bed side, and saw her grappling with the monster death, we were constrained to exclaim—What desolation disease and death make in the earth! But thank God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! The tempter's cruel power will soon be broken; death shall soon be destroyed, and God's little ones shall speedily come forth again to a blessed immortality.

A funeral discourse was given by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

O weeping group! with mournful tread,
With streaming eye and drooping head,
Enter your sad and lonely home,
So desolate and gloomy grown,
Since death, with cold, relentless hand,
Has torn one from your household band!

A cherished form has left your door,
A form that ne'er will shade it more;
An eye is closed that always smiled
Upon you with affection mild;
A voice is hushed that used to greet—
A mother's heart has ceased to beat.

But see! beyond the falling tears
A beam of glorious light appears.
It gently beckons you away
From sorrow's dark and gloomy way,
And points the heart with grief o'erborne,
Unto the resurrection morn!

H. H. Janes.

Pittsford, Butler Co., Iowa.

Herald please copy.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamer Saxonia from Southampton the 14th.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says the Sardinian Minister of Foreign Affairs had declared to Count Reiset, the French Commissioner, that Sardinia could not accede to the wishes of France so far as to make efforts to have the Grand Duke recalled, and that it would be preposterous to expect Piedmont to do so, contrary to the wishes and interests of Italy.

The Paris Constitutionnel of Wednesday has an article from M. de Cassagnac, entitled "Ingratitude of Italy," in which the Italians are reminded of the immense obstacles which beset the empire at the beginning of the war, but which were faced and surmounted by his single will, and he reminds Italy of these obstacles. He continues to show, if need be, the enormity of forgetfulness.

If the Emperor persisted, it would, he says, have cost tedious sieges, fresh battles, new loans, immediate war on the Rhine, troubles in Central Italy, insurrections in Hungary and elsewhere, which it would have been necessary to permit and even to encourage. In a word, it would have cost the abandonment of the principles of order, and the adoption of revolutionary principles, agitation renewed for the present, without speaking of a possible reverse of fortune. The article concludes with the following menace: "Italy must know well that if the powerful hand which is extended for a moment over it is withdrawn, neither the fine speeches of the English Parliament nor the sterile sympathies of the liberal party in Europe would hinder Austria from dominating again Italy, and this time from Turin to Messina."

It is again stated that Piedmont formally declines entering the Italian Confederacy if Austria forms a part of it.

The Times Vienna correspondence says the Prussian note of the 23 of August, will probably put an end to the discussion between Austria and Prussia, as it is pretty clearly proved that the Emperor Napoleon made a statement at Villafranca which was not perfectly correct.

The Journal de St. Petersburg also declares itself empowered to state that not only were no bases for a mediation agreed to, but not even discussed.

Two Days Later.—Per steamship Asia.

It is reported that an attempt had been made to poison Garibaldi.

It is said France is intriguing to restore the Grand Dukes.

The Zurich Conference will assemble on the 5th inst.

A bill, creating a Naval Reserve of 30,000 men, was progressing through the House of Commons.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says the difficulties raised by the war are very complicated. [illegible] in Southern German [illegible] up by the [illegible] by August 18th.

The Times correspondent in his letter of August [illegible] says:

"Many volunteers from Piedmont, and still more from Genoa, hasten to swell the ranks of the 30,000 combatants which the 'allied States of Central Italy' have already under arms. Strange to say, the Italians begin to put their trust in the sword, in spite of the fearful odds with which the two framers of the Peace of Villafranca may choose to enforce their ultimatum. 'With 50,000 bayonets,' they say, 'our rights will appear tolerably clear to Europe; with 100,000 they will seem clearer; with 150,000 they will appear most clear.' Up to 50,000 the bayonets will shortly muster, and they will follow the lead of a man of firm and even temper—Garibaldi."

FOUR DAYS LATER.

The Congress of Zurich met on the 8th, according to previous announcement; but nothing had transpired of its proceedings thus far. Sardinia was represented there.

The Emperor Napoleon was on a visit to the camp at Chalons, witnessing the maneuvers of the troops.

The Paris Constitutionnel ascribes the proposed fortification of Antwerp to the influence of England, who, foreseeing war with France, wishes to provide herself with an intrenched camp in Belgium.

The number of troops from Italy to march through Paris on the 14th, is 70,000. The procession will last seven hours.

GERMANY.

The relations between Austria and Prussia almost assume the dimensions of a regular rupture, and were regarded as dangerous to the smaller German States, which were already looking towards France for protection.

The Opinione of Turin says 50,000 French troops will remain in Italy, provisionally, owing to the dangerous state of some of the provinces.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE WAR.

The Emperor Louis Napoleon publicly expresses to the Austrian Envoy at his Court his regret that the two governments are not on better terms—which leads to mutual armaments—January 1, 1859.

Events growing daily more threatening, it is announced that England has sent Lord Cowley on a peace mission to Vienna, February 22.

The announcement is made that a Peace Congress will be held, March 19.

All hopes of peace are quenched by the news that Austria has insisted upon the disarmament of Sardinia alone, as a condition precedent to any peace negotiations. April 8.

Austrian and Sardinian forces having assembled in the neighborhood of the Ticino, Count Gyulai forwards a peremptory summons to the King of Sardinia to disarm within three days on penalty of war, April 22

Victor Emmanuel having returned an indignant refusal, is invested with dictatorial powers. April 23

Lord Malmesbury issues a final proposition for negotiation—which is accepted by Austria and rejected by France—April 25.

French troops begin to land at Genoa, April 25.

Tuscany throws off its governments and declares for Victor Emmanuel, April 25

The Austrian army, in three divisions, crossed the Ticino, April 29

A detachment of Austrians, in attempting to cross the Po at Frassinetto, is repulsed by the Sardinians, May 3.

Louis Napoleon leaves Paris, May 10, reaches Genoa on the 12th, and joins the army on the 14th.

The battle of Montebello is fought between the outposts of the two armies, the French, under Gen. Forey, compelling the Austrians to withdraw, May 20.

Garibaldi, at the head of 6000 Italian volunteers, crosses the Ticino, May, 23.

Garibaldi fights his way into the city of Como, May 27

The battle of Palestro is fought by about 12,000 Sardinians under their King, and 20,000 Austrians under Gen. Zobel—the latter withdrawing—May 30.

The battle of Magenta is fought, in which 100,000 allies under Gen. McMahon rout 120,000 Austrians under Gen. Gyulai, June 4th

The Emperor Napoleon and King Victor Emmanuel enter Milan, June 8.

The battle of Melegnano is fought, the Austrians under Benedick being driven from their position by the allies under D'Hilliers, June 9

The battle of Solferino is fought, under the command of the two Emperors, by nearly 400,000 troops, the Austrians being compelled to retire, June 24.

The Sardinians begin to invest the fortress of Peschiera, June 28.

The allies cross the Mincio, June 30.

The French Emperor takes up his headquarters at Valliggio, on the east bank of the Mincio, July 3.

The armistice between the belligerents, to last till Aug 15th, is signed July 8th.

Peace between the two Emperors agreed upon, July 11.

☞ A letter from Jerusalem announces that the cupola of the Holy Sepulchre is falling to ruins. A subscription has been opened to repair it.

☞ The population of the United States increases one million a year, or two thousand every day.

Notices, &c.

☞ Bro. Edwin Burnham will commence a protracted meeting in Woodstock, New Brunswick, on Friday evening, after the second Sunday in September, and from that time will labor one month in the Provinces, as the friends may arrange.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for the next session of our State conference, it becomes my duty to make the inquiry, Where shall our next conference be holden? Will brethren who may desire the meeting convened with them, please inform me at their earliest convenience, that I may be able to fix on the time and place, and give seasonable notice.

Should there be a choice in regard to the time of the meeting, please name it; but the usual time is the early part of October.

T. M. Preble,
Clerk of Conference.

East Weare, Aug. 20, 1859.

Notice.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will preach in Reading, Mich., on Friday, Sept. 9th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. A. N. Seymour will make arrangements as will best suit the people.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will preach in Dayton, Mich., Sept. 18th. Buchanan, Mich., Sept. 25th.

Notice

The conference in Warren Co., Ill., must be deferred. We will give them timely notice through the "Crisis." Others West must have patience, and soon we trust to be among them.

My P. O. address until Sept. 15th is Fiskdale, Mass.

Walter Pratt.

The Maine (Adjourned) Conference

Will meet in Yarmouth, Sept. 15th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. with Bro. York's church, and continue over the Sabbath. Come, brethren, let us make one more rally, unitedly, and bring the forces into the field, and fight earnestly the battles of the Lord. Come; let party feelings and sectional interests be merged in the one united, determined, active effort to "go on" in God's strength in this work. Come, all who can. Let some one of the brethren come from every place, if they can, and if not, let letters be sent to Bro. R. R. York, or to me, expressive of your interest and determinations. Send pledges, or statements of promise to put in your mites to make up a sum to send the gospel every where we can. Come, praying that God may bless the effort, and give us wisdom and grace. Let those who stay at home pray also, that this may be an important meeting for the cause in all parts of Maine. Those who have no money can pray, and God can hear.

Passengers coming on the Grand Trunk R. R., will stop at Yarmouth Junction, 1-2 a mile from Bro. York's. Come the first day if you can, but come!

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Richmond, Me., Aug. 17, 1859.

Campmeeting.

There will be a Second Advent Campmeeting in Harmony Grove, Westford, Mass., upon the old spot, to commence on Tuesday, Sept. 6, '59, and continue over the Sabbath. This is a delightful location, convenient, and within five minutes' walk from Centre Depot. The object of this meeting is the saving of men by the preaching of the gospel in its adaptation to the present state of the world. We hope to see a rally of the scattered flock that shall come to this meeting full of love, faith and zeal, to work in the Lord's vineyard. Let them that are able, help the poor to this feast. Those who wish, can provide their own board, and bring their whole family with little expense. Bring tents and bedding. Tents and board will be provided on the ground, for all who wish, on reasonable terms.

The Rail Road Company have promised to transport from Boston to this meeting and back, for half price, providing fifty persons come from that vicinity.

Let all be awake and prepare for the meeting.

L. Boutell, Groton,
M. W. Corliss, Lowell,
J. D. Brown, Providence,
Josiah Vose, Westford,
Committee.

Savoy Campmeeting.

This meeting will be holden on land owned by Noah Mirick, about three miles north of Savoy Hollow, commencing Sept. 5th, and continuing over the following Lord's day. We invite all to come and labor for the salvation of souls. Board and horse keeping will be furnished on reasonable terms.

Committee, E. Healy, R. Stark, E. M'Culloch.

☞ The Lord willing there will be a public union prayer meeting held in Holden, Me., Saturday, Sept. 17th, at half-past nine, A. M. Preaching on the day following.

Israel Damman.

CAMPMEETING at Wilbraham, August 29th.

Our annual feast of tabernacles will commence the 29th of August, on the old ground in Wilbraham, and hold one week. We hope for the best, the most successful and profitable gathering of the Lord's people that has ever been held there. The objects of the meeting, and the wishes of the committee with reference to its character, have been fully and well expressed in Bro. E. Burnham's campmeeting letter of last week.

Let us all lay aside the weights—harness for the battle in the panoply of God, and come up to certain victory. Let us all pray much and come with the fire burning in our hearts, and Wilbraham mountain will never be forgotten.

Abundant facilities for boarding and horse keeping at reasonable rates. Also tent room for those who are not otherwise provided for.

The arrangements for fare to the campmeeting are from Worcester East and from Pittsfield and North Adams West to the camp-ground, at one-half fare or one fare for both ways. Also the same on the Connecticut R. R. Road from Vernon or Keene, N. H. The Western R. Road will issue tickets for the week, but those who come over the Conn. R. Road, will pay to Springfield, and from there to Wilbraham, and returning, will receive a pass from the Committee of the meeting. No charge for baggage from any point.

Let it be understood that full fare is paid one way from all points above named on the Western and Conn. R. Roads, and no charge for returning.

☞ The fare from Boston is reduced half,—the tickets being $2.50 for going and returning,—good from Aug. 29th to Sept. 5th, inclusive.

☞ Those going from Boston will obtain their tickets of Bro. Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street.

Hiram Munger,
Randl. E. Laud,
Geo. T. Adams.
} Committee.

Ohio Conference.

